EDUCATION IN REVIEW

All Citizens Are Urged to Join in Taking Stock Of Their Local Schools This Week

By BENJAMIN FINE

This is American Education Week and throughout the nation an estimated 20,000,000 parents and other interested citizens—an all-time record—are expected to attend "open school" sessions.

Established by joint action of the American Legion and the National Education Association, American Education Week is designed to inform the public of the accomplishments and needs of the schools, and at the same time to win the cooperation and support of the public in meeting these needs. Besides the Legion and the N. E. A., the sponsors of the project include the United States Office of Education and the National Congress of Parents and Teachers.

This year interest in the public schools is especially great, partly because of the "growing pains" the schools now suffer and partly as a result of the "grass roots" movement sponsored by the National Citizens Commission for the Public Schools. Eight thousand citizens' committees for the public schools are now active. Fifty committees a week are being formed, all concerned with the needs of the schools and their problems.

According to James F. O'Neil, director of publications for the American Legion and editor of the Legion magazine, the program developed because of a desire to alert veterans and the American public generally to the important role our schools assume in the building of citizenship. However, Mr. O'Neil said, the schools should be the concern of all citizens, veterans and non-veterans alike, every day in the year, not merely during one week."

Questions for Parents

The National Education Association suggests that parents themselves should analyze their own attitudes toward the schools. The question then becomes, "What am I doing to help make better schools?" rather than, "What are the schools doing to help my child?" This ten-point checklist for parents is suggested by the N. E. A.:

(1) Are you an active member of a Parent-Teachers Association, or citizens' committee?

(2) Are you acquainted with your children's teachers?

(3) Have you visited school within the past six months?

(4) Do you know the average class size in your local schools?

(5) Do you know the approximate range and average salary of teachers in your community?

(6) Do you know the per-pupil cost of your schools?

(7) Can you name a major improvement about to be introduced into your schools?

(8) Can you name at least one problem for which no solution is in sight?

(9) Are you a member of the education committee of any organization?

(10) Do you read regularly at least one magazine that deals with schools and school programs?

As the N. E. A. observes, the public school is an investment in free democratic government. This fall an estimated 32,000,000 children are enrolled in our public, private and parochial schools. One million teachers meet in 200,000 school buildings. We spend $220,000,000 a year for instructional tools and books, while the total operating cost for the public schools has soared above $6,000,000,000. We are spending close to $1,500,000,000 a year for new buildings.

Promise to the Future

But over and above the material value, the schools are of inestimable importance because within them are molded the attitudes, desires, loyalties and goals of our future voters and potential leaders.

Thus the influential groups sponsoring American Education Week hope that all citizens, whether or not they have children in the classroom at the present time, protect their stake by visiting schools. Their own interests are involved in the questions of whether the school is bringing out the greatest potentialities of each student, whether the school teaches the student to get along with others, to be economically self-sufficient and to be zealous in performing his civic duties.

According to Dr. William G. Carr, executive secretary of the National Education Association, the 20,000,000 men and women who will visit the schools this week should give attention to five factors that go to make a sound school system—teachers, teaching materials, school health program, buildings and administration.

Dr. Carr lists the values to be found in the good school as follows:

The Teachers—Able and devoted teachers can make up for many other lacks of any school system. Poor teaching is encouraged by overcrowded classrooms and excessive teaching loads. Any class that exceeds thirty in size is unlikely to receive instruction as good as can be provided. A good teacher is one who stimulates every student to do the best work he is capable of, whose teaching methods are adapted to the maturity and ability of his students. He not only is equipped for teaching by good professional preparation but keeps in touch with new developments in his field. When competent teachers with professional salaries are at work under good conditions, the first and basic test of a good school has been met.

Teaching Materials—The quality and variety of teaching materials should be noted. The poorest schools will use only textbooks, often published many years ago. But in the good school, besides textbooks that are plentiful and up to date, there will be a supply of suitable films and records. There will be art supplies, musical equipment, carpentry tools—materials to develop the skills and talents of all the pupils.

School Health Program—Of concern to every parent are the health services of the school his child attends. Some schools actually endanger the health of children. Parents should ask these questions as they visit the schools this week, and any week of the year: Are the health examinations thorough and regularly scheduled? Are the services of a school nurse available? Is the school's cafeteria well supervised, well lighted, quiet and attractive? Is there physical education not just for the "team" but for all the children? Are teachers and pupils encouraged to remain at home when they are sick, without overemphasis on "perfect" attendance records?

Quality of the Building—A good building does not assure a good school, but it helps to produce one. Any school that has not been designed for that purpose is almost certain to be a poor school. Little better are those which are nothing but a series of uniform rectangular boxes joined together by dismal corridors. Many communities have let school buildings deteriorate year after year or have tried to get by with fewer buildings than were really needed. The school should provide adequate lighting, proper ventilation and a pleasant atmosphere.

Good Administration—In most American communities the schools are the responsibility of a local board of education, chosen by the citizens of the community. Most of these boards render magnificent public service, often with little evidence of gratitude from either the public or the teachers. Parents should find out the attitudes and policies of the board directing their school. A good school board lays down the general policy for the schools and holds the superintendent and his staff responsible for carrying out its policies. It finds out the kind of school program the community needs and wants. It employs teachers on the basis of their professional qualifications. Such responsible administration provides a firm foundation for effective public schools.

If the citizens of each community would evaluate their schools on a sound, professional basis, many educational leaders are convinced, the necessary changes would take place soon enough. They might discover, too, that the difference in cost between a good school and a poor one is relatively small. As Dr. Carr observes, a dollar a year per pupil for additional teaching materials will add little to the school budget, but it may make a tremendous difference in the quality of classroom instruction. A community that really believes in the value of good schools in a democracy, he feels, will find the necessary funds to establish and maintain a good system of education.

EXPECTS NEGRO COLLEGES TO BECOME MIXED SAYS CLEMENTS

Should Supreme Court Ruling Hit Schools In Southern States

NEW YORK—Should the United States Supreme Court declare racial segregation in education unconstitutional, only the top-ranking private Negro colleges may expect to survive as inter-racial institutions, it was predicted here by Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president of Atlanta University.

"Within the next 10 to 15 years we expect most of the really good colleges which now, because of the laws of the states in which they operate, limit their students to persons of the Negro group, to become inter-racial institutions," Dr. Clement said, "but I do not anticipate that more than 5 to 10 per cent of enrollment in these colleges will be white students."

During this same period, Dr Clement added that he did not expect the Negro enrollment in the previously "white" colleges should be greater than 5 per cent.

Dr. Clement spoke at the second session of the United Negro College Forum, "The Changing Pattern", held recently at the Cospmopolitan Club. With Ambrose D. Caliver, assistant to the United States Commissioner of Education, Dr. Clement sought to analyze the place of the private Negro college in the changing educa-

COLLEGES TEACH CULTURE

Do the students in our colored colleges wish to be branded as revolutionary Communists and as learning at college ways and means for destroying their country's form of government "by force and violence?"

Also, do the students of any of our colored colleges wish to hazard their eyes, ears, noses and throats in farcases with minions of the law?

If the students in our colored colleges want either or both of these things to happen to them, they need only to emulate the students of a Georgia university who recently "played heck" in their town, celebrating before a football game. They trampled patrons of a theater, causing some to be sent to a hospital. They finally showed their contempt for law and order by staging a sit-down-strike in the middle of the town's street, thus snarling traffic for a considerably long time.

What we contend is that if any of the students in our colored colleges get it into their heads that they have got as much "right" as the white folk to have the kind of "fun" these Georgia boys had a few weeks ago, they can be assured in advance they are going to be branded as Communists and get plenty head-whippings besides.

There are ever so many "joys" of college life in white colleges that should be shunned by students of colored colleges if they would enhance the reputation of their race for being an orderly and polite people.

We note that President Gore of Florida A&M University recently delivered a lecture on the timely subject "Colleges Teach Culture." Certainly the behavior of the white students in Georgia did not indicate the participants had acquired any culture. What it showed was that the group are revolutionaries and very probably could easily be taken in by the "Reds."

Students in our colored colleges, we trust and believe, are made of sterner stuff. But even so, many of them need to ponder all of the implications of an address delivered by a university president on the subject: "Colleges Teach Cluture."

Yes, colleges should teach culture. And come to think about it, that is exactly what some did, in former generations, even more than they do at present.

tion pattern of the South.

The first Negro educator to be elected to the Board of Education in Atlanta, Georgia since 1871, Dr. Clement said that "those who fear that removal of racial barriers in the public schools will result in an immediate over-running of hitherto white schools by Negro students, should remember that urban patterns of residence and the school districting which follows this pattern will operate against any immediate large inter-mixture of the races."

The private Negro colleges will be called upon to serve members of this racial group for a good many years to come, Dr. Clement concluded, because of geographical accessibility, church affiliations, and family tradition and ties.

Mr. Caliver, a government specialist in the field of higher education for Negroes, held that Negroes in the states maintaining separate schools lag far behind the national norm and behind white students in these states.

He predicted that it will take many years to close the "wide gap between the education of Negroes and that of whites in the South. However, said Mr. Caliver, to attempt to do so on a separate but equal basis will cost many more billions of dollars a year than are now being spent.

The Forum was sponsored by the New York City clubs of 11 Eastern women's colleges, the New York City branch of the American Association of University Women and the United Negro College Fund. The final session, "The Community Faces Itself"—a discussion of the efforts of anti-tension teams to eliminate racial pejudice and patterns of segregation—will be held November 18, also at the Cosmopolitan Club.

Interrogators at the Forum were:

Mildred McAfee Horton, president of the National Social Welfare Assembly and former head of the WAVES.

Mark A. McCloskey, director of the Bureau of Community Education of the New York City Board of Higher Education.

Margaret Lewisohn, chairman of the board of trustees of the Public Education Association.

Kenneth B. Clark, associate professor of Psychology at City College, New York and co-founder of the Northside Center for Child Development.

CONGRESSMAN COACHES HIS PROTEGE.—Congressman Jeffrey P. Hillelson, right, of Missouri's fourth district announced this week that he has obtained employment at the nation's capitol for Charles P. Carter, left, 20-year-old Independence, Mo., boy. Carter is the son of Charles J. Carter, 222 East Lexington, Independence, Young Carter started work at the capitol on July 1. He went to Washington to attend Howard university, where he has enrolled as a sophomore in the engineering school. He is pursuing a career in civil engineering and hopes to remain in Washington long enough to receive his bachelor's degree which will take approximately two and a half years. Carter attends the university during the morning and reports at the capitol at 5 o'clock in the afternoon for three or four hours' work a day. Dr. Myers Predicts End Of Segregation In Colleges

BY GEORGE M. COLEMAN

ATLANTA, Ga. — (SNS) —

A New York University professor ..... who openly predicts the approaching end to segregation in schools of higher learning — hypothetically surmised yesterday that many presidents and professors of Negro colleges have abandoned fights for race equality in order to hold their jobs and have placed themselves at a great social distance from their students.

Dr. Alonzo F. Myers, professor of Education and chairman of the Department of Higher Education at New York University, held a Morehouse College audience spellbound for nearly an hour while he drew a picture of what he felt was the situation existing in most Negro colleges, based on personal visits and statistics.

PRAISES, CONDEMNS

Myers, blunt in his theories, and readily offering examples to be challenged by opposing forces, praised certain elements in Negro institutions and openly condemned others. He attempted to draw logical motivating pictures of reasons for unhappy situations, and declared:

"We are approaching the end of segregation in schools of higher learning. Presently this school (Morehouse) will not be a college for Negroes, but just a college."

Lauding the trend which he said would lead the way to abolishing situations which hindered progressive education for Negroes in general, Myers asserted, "It's high time we stopped having a dual system" in education.

He set up the following theories, which he said were developed after visiting many colleges, and which might not be completely true:

1. That colleges for Negroes are faced with a problem of educating students who have not been given the opportunity of first class studies. These students, who he said have been "short changed in their basic studies" were fruits of an uneven situation.

2. That enrollment in Negro colleges, in most cases is on the increase while it has fallen off in white institutions. Myers based this on the expanse of Negro business and the present economic ability of Negro parents to send their children to college.

MORE OPPORTUNITY

He asserted that increased Negro business gave the graduate far more opportunities than was possible before, even opening up new courses in Negro institutions.

The professor said he believed that "Negro parents as a whole will sacrifice, more for their children's education than white parents."

This pattern is slowly making it possible for a Negro to be judged by his ability rather than by color, Myers said, "which is all I think Negroes have ever asked for."

However, Myers's speech was not all praise for Negroes. He said there was a trend in Negro colleges for teachers to be more authoritative than in white schools.

However, he said this was found mainly in public colleges where there was an administrative feeling "to please white people."

He gave as an example an unnamed religiously benefitted college which required the faculty and students to assembly every Sunday afternoon, "not to worship normally, but to worship on display."

Myers said the apparent idea was to show white people passing by a display of Negro students singing hymns, which he felt was good for religion, but was done to catch the eye of a rich white possible donor, who might say to himself, "If they are that Godly they certainly deserve some of my dough."

"There is always the awareness of what the white group will think," Myers declared, and asserted that often presidents and professors in state schools found themselves involved in a situation where the college must be run in a way that "the white group will approve."

"Too often," Myers said a Negro professor has to ask himself, "Will I keep this job and sell my own people down the river, or will I keep my self respect and lose my job?"

In most such cases, he said, the school board consists of white people, with the president simply a figure head, and some "white politician," who never comes near the campus actually running things. In these cases teachers cannot teach much about segregation or the NAACP, he said.

Myers related instances of situations on colleges he said he had visited. He did not name the schools, other than Arkansas State College which he declared "has one of the finest student unions I have seen anywhere."

"SOCIAL DISTANCE"

He had observed he felt there was greater "social distance between a Negro professor and his student" than other colleges. Myers described a meeting at a public college he attended in which a chaplain, directing student affairs explained the school's policy in which "every teacher was expected to be a detective."

Students breaking school rules were to be punished severely, and the idea met the approval of all but one teacher whose thought to help, rather than completely condemn was turned down.

"No voice was raised in sympathy," Myers declared. He later declared he did not know that this was typical of all Negro schools, but that he had seen it in practice in many instances.

MAYS PRAISED

Myers praised President Benjamin Mays for breaking up a 30-year old "shabby thing" in which he said the Southern Association had crippled Negro schools by accrediting them without even bothering to inspect their facilities. Mays' action along with others including himself had brought a new era in which all Negro colleges were to be revaluated, Myers declared.

A dark point in the picture, he declared was this "shabby thing" had been done with the "full agreement of presidents of many Negro colleges."

Problems of the Public Schools Out Where The Little Red Schoolhouse Still Exists

By BENJAMIN FINE

DEADWOOD-LEAD, S. D., Oct. 31—The little red school house, on the way out in most places in the country, is very much alive here. And it is a major issue in the vigorous campaign now under way to improve the schooling received by the children in this state.

South Dakota's 7,500 teachers, principals, superintendents and supervisors had a busman's holiday this week. They took a vacation from their classrooms to attend a series of stock-taking meetings held in the three major districts of the state.

In speaking with scores of teachers and administrators in various parts of the state, from Aberdeen to the twin communities of Deadwood and Lead, in the heart of the Black Hills gold-mining region, this writer found evidence that the plight of the public schools is still hard. Here, as elsewhere, citizens give fine moral support to their schools—but when it comes to financial assistance, the "let George do it" philosophy all too often prevails.

Search for Solutions

At regional meetings in Aberdeen, Mitchell and Deadwood-Lead, the 7,000 members of the South Dakota Education Association thrashed out their problems in general sessions, panel discussions and round-table programs. The teachers were serious in their deliberations; they wanted to find ways of assuring the 122,000 elementary and high school children a decent education.

The major problems as presented here are these:

(1) School District Reorganization. Unquestionably, the issue of school reorganization is one of the most controversial and important problems now confronting the state. The little red school house is the center of the controversy. Wide-open spaces, sparsely populated, make the problem acute. Local pride and a desire to keep farm taxes to a minimum complicate the issue.

In an address to the teachers at each of the three district meetings, Dr. D. W. Thieszen, president of the South Dakota Education Association, hammered away at the importance of school district reorganization. The public school structure of the state, he pointed out, consists of a vast and cumbersome number of school districts.

Although this form of organization was well adapted to the early period of the state's settlement, the rapidly changing economic scheme has left it far behind. Attempts to change the structure, he said, are meeting with passive resistance on the part of many citizens, and at least unconcern on the part of many teachers.

"Tax Hideouts"

South Dakota today has 3,390 school districts, each manned by its own school board. Yet one of every four of these school districts operates no school. Dr. Thieszen explained that these non-school districts were "tax hideouts." By maintaining the fiction of a going school district, the school board can exist at little or no expense. The few children in the district may be sent to neighboring communities.

Thus, if the school board sends five children to the neighboring district, and pays $125 a year tuition for each, it gets away with a total of $625 a year in school taxes—while the neighboring town, with more children and poorer taxable property, may have to pay $6,000 or more in school taxes. Attempts to remedy this situation have met with continuous opposition.

The South Dakota schools are not only small but altogether inefficient in terms of modern educational concepts, the educators held. Of the 276 four-year high schools in the state, 108 have fifty or fewer pupils, while another 127 have no more than 100. Thus, 235 of the 276 high schools in the state have 100 or fewer students. The United States Office of Education and other educational groups maintain that an efficient high school cannot be operated with fewer than 300 pupils.

Moreover, the educators here pointed out, about 3,000 elementary schools are in the one- or two-teacher little red school house class.

(2) State Aid. Among the states, South Dakota ranks forty-sixth from the standpoint of the amount of state aid to local school districts. The educators warned that this was already having an adverse effect on the quality of the schools and would continue to do so until the situation was corrected.

At the recent biennial session of the State Legislature the South Dakota Education Association sought $10,000,000 in state aid for the schools over the two-year period 1953-55. Since the total public school budget in the state is estimated at $66,000,000 for the next two years, this would amount to state support of less than 10 per cent. Educators generally urge that the state provide up to 40 per cent for school aid. Some states, such as Delaware, give nearly 100 per cent support; New York State provides about 35 per cent.

However, the Legislature slashed the request to $2,000,000 a year. With this amount, and with the existing inequalities in school districting, the quality of education in the state will remain low for some time to come, unless the situation is drastically changed, the educators warned.

(3) Real Estate Assessment. Nearly 75 per cent of all school tax money comes from real estate in South Dakota. The educators insist that this tax base must be changed, that it be broadened so that the schools can receive more funds from general taxes.

This week the Legislative Research Council is meeting in the capital city of Pierre. The school groups of the state have joined together to present their case for a better deal for the schools.

Dr. Dwight D. Miller, Superintendent of Schools in Watertown, presented the problem dealing with educational aspects of assessment and taxation. He represented the South Dakota Education Association, the Associated School Boards of South Dakota, the South Dakota Committee for Education and the State Department of Public Instruction.

(4) Teacher Qualifications. South Dakota still permits teachers to enter the classroom with only one year of college training. Many teachers, it was brought out, have no more than a high school education, and have been frozen into the school system. They received their positions right after World War II, when any kind of teacher was accepted.

Practice Restricted

Dr. Harold S. Freeman, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, told the teachers that he was clamping down on the issuance of further emergency certificates. He said too many of these certificates are already in existence in the state, and he promised to do everything within the power of his office to help raise teaching standards.

But, realistically, the educators recognize that there is a definite shortage of qualified teachers for classrooms. Many teachers desert the state to get higher salaries or better working conditions elsewhere. As a result, the teacher shortage is growing worse instead of better. Standards cannot be raised until an adequate supply of competent teachers is available. This is a problem that is causing furrowed brows on the part of the educators responsible for the administration of the state school program.

(5) Low Teachers' Salaries. The salary schedule for teachers is generally conceded to be far too low if properly trained teachers are to be induced to enter the classroom. The average rural teacher gets $2,000 a year, while the elementary teacher in the urban areas gets from $2,000 to $3,000. The high school teacher is not much better paid, getting from $3,000 to $4,000 a year, with a select few getting as high as $5,000.

Students Shun Teaching

As a result, the bright high school students turn away from teaching. They are not interested in joining a profession that pays such inferior salaries. Many of the teachers in this state fall into the category recently mentioned by Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr., when he expressed "shock" that messenger boys in his department received more than some teachers were getting in various parts of the country.

What is the answer? South Dakota is not unique in its school problem. This writer, in recent visits to other Midwestern states, has noted that the problems faced by South Dakota are to a large extent duplicated elsewhere. The reliance on property taxes has hurt the schools in many communities. Low teachers' salaries have kept out the superior student. Unwillingness to scrap outmoded school districts has brought about an antiquated, outmoded classroom unit.

In the South Dakota rural areas the elementary teacher has an average of eleven pupils, the high school teacher twelve. These are far from efficient or effective conditions. What is needed, the educators recognize, is a new financial program for this, and indeed for other states, for the support of the public schools.

Negro Educators Stand Out At NYU Leader Workshop

NEW YORK — (ANP) — Negro educators, academicians and other professionals made outstanding contributions at the New York University 1953 Summer Workshop in Educational Leadership recently held at the New Lincoln School. Some 300 students were registered from 22 states.

Noted in attendance were eight tan teachers from Baltimore, Md. They were: S. W. Beasley, Mazie E. Johnson, Inez Johnson, Jeeannette Johnson, H. Jordan, Sarah Mason, Lillian Reid and Louise Wing.

Other parts of the country also were represented.

Julia Davis, St. Louis; Manuel Brown, Washington and Estella Evans, Columbia, S. C.

From Virginia came Hollis Williams, Chatam, and Marion E. Snyder, elementary supervisor of Pittsylvania county, were the registrants.

William H. Creecy, principal of White Oak school, Chowan County, N. C.; James W. McKay, teacher in Fayetteville, N. C., City schools; Frances Smith of Miami, Fla.; Richard Robinson, teacher, Volusia county, Fla. system; Andrew E. Johnson, Thomaston, Ga. public schools;

Director of Public Relations Wilton C. Scott of Savannah State college, and Vernon A. Daniel, Tuskegee Institute, Ala.

Arthur Hartmuller, supervising principal of Stony Point, N. Y. Schools and Welliard Smith, elementary principal in Tenafly, N. J. were among Eastern registrants in the workshop.

Jesse O. Thomas Plans Program to Aid College Students Choose Careers

By ALICE A. DUNNIGAN

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (ANP) —A number of southern colleges have this year planned to initiate a program whereby students might be briefed on job opportunities available in various fields, and on how these jobs might be obtained.

The idea originated with Jesse O. Thomas, a retired government employe and an authority in social work. During the 42 years of his working life, Thomas has observed many new job opportunities now being opened to Negroes to which students are not always aware. To alert them on these new opportunities, instruct them on type of qualifications needed, and to inform them how to go about obtaining such employment, Thomas will visit a number of colleges holding thee-day job clinics for those interested in new adventures.

His first step will be to address the entire student body in the main auditorium of the institution, giving an over-all outlook on the employment situation.

Then he will speak to groups of students who may be iterested in the program objectives of some of the organizations which afford job opportunities, and to relate skills that would qualify them for favorable consideration.

On the third day he will hold conferences with individual students with respect to their vocational choices and methods of obtaining employment in these specialized fields.

Thomas claims that he is familiar with approximately 40,000 different job classifications in both government and private industry, and has at least 1,000 titles and job descriptions.

Such "career clinics," will not only give students an over-all picture of employment demands and trends of Negroes into private industry, he said, but they will encourage students of sociology, economics and political science to exploit job opportunitities in fields other than the traditional ones.

Thomas claims that he is not going into this new venture because of any financial need. Declaring that he has been gainfully and continuously employed every hour for 42 years without one day sick leave, he said:

"I have been sufficently judicious in the allocation of my buying power that unless some misfortune should over-take me I can maintain my present standard of living for, the remainder of my life if I never work again".

The only reason for this plan, he said, is "to continue an active participating existence, and to be helpful to young people.

Thomas was educated at Tuskegee Institute.

He served for five years as field secretary of Tuskegee with headquarters in Rochester, N. Y.

During World War I, he was employed with the U. S. Department of Labor, Lates he became southern field director of the National Urban league and established headquarters in Atlanta, Ga.

He became the first colored person employed by the American Red Cross in an administrative position on the policy-making level. Some 560 colored people were sent overseas during World War II as a part of the Red Cross' recreational personnel in different theatres of military operation, upon Thomas' recommendation.

From 1941 to 1943 he was employed as senior promotional specialist in the war bond division of the U. S. Treasury.

When he approached the automatic retirement age of the American Red Cross, he resigned to accept a position with the Office of Price Stabilization as information specialist. He stayed with this organization until it was terminated this year.

Dr. Milligan new director of the DAD

NEWARK

Dr. John P. Milligan, superintendent of schools in Atlantic City, was appointed last week to succeed the late Joseph L. Bustard as assistant state education commissioner in charge of the Division Against Discrimination.

The announcement was made in Trenton by State Education Commissioner Raubinger on Friday.

Several civil rights, intercultural, human relations, and labor organizations had recommended Harold A. Hatt, deputy director of the DAD and acting director since Bustard's death, for the post.

Raubinger said that Dr. Milligan, both as a teacher and school administrator, has demonstrated a special interest in civil rights.

He accepted an invitation last July to advise school officials in St. Louis on problems of segregation in their public schools.

Dr. Milligan is a former chairman of the education division of the National Conference of Christian and Jews, while he was superintendent of schools in Glen Ridge from 1946 to 1950.

A native of Cape Charles, Va., he is a graduate of Dickinson college and holds the master's and doctor's degrees from Rutgers university.

Colleges and Universities In U. S. Beset by Financial Difficulties

Tuition Rates At Record High

By BENJAMIN FINE
Special From The New York Times to The Courier-Journal

New York, June 23.—Nearly half of all the independent institutions of higher education in the United States are in financial difficulty, unable to balance their budgets. Financial problems beset the colleges and universities to a greater extent than ever before.

Although tuition rates have risen to a record high for both public and private colleges, inflationary costs and slackening enrollment have put higher education through an academic wringer.

Unfortunately, the student is the one who will suffer most. The cost of going—including room and board—has increased by 70 per cent in the past 10 years. Worthy students, educators fear, are being frozen out of college by the high cost.

Study Is Made

A study of 810 American colleges and universities of all types in every state, conducted by The New York Times, shows deep concern over their financial situation, which is expected to get worse before it starts getting better.

To meet growing deficits, colleges are now engaged in extensive fund-raising campaigns for an aggregate of $1,150,000,000. In some instances the money is sought to build much-needed dormitories or laboratories; in others the funds are earmarked for instructional deficits or increases in faculty salaries.

But the public is not responding as readily as it did in past years. Eighty-two per cent of the college heads report that it is harder to raise money now than it was a year ago—or 10 years ago. Sources of major contributions are listed as alumni, general subscriptions, business and industry, and foundations.

The question of increased tuition fees weighs upon college officials. In 1942-43 the average annual fee in the public colleges was $91. In 1952-53 it is $128 and in 1953-54 it will be $134—a 46 per cent increase in 11 years.

Tuition rates in private colleges have risen even higher. In 1942-43 the fee was $266, in 1952-53 it is $446, and in 1953-54 it is estimated it will be $461—a 71 per cent increase.

Reasons Are Listed

The averages do not tell the whole story. Many of the better-name institutions now charge $700 to $900 for tuition. It is not unusual for the leading women's colleges to charge $1,800 to $2,200, their figures including board and room, as well as tuition.

Four reasons are listed for the higher tuition fees: higher operating expenses, faculty- and administrative-salary increases, decrease in enrollment, and capital improvements.

The average rate for room and board has increased, too. In September students attending a private college or university can expect to pay $170 for his room and $375 for board—about a 60 per cent increase in 10 years. Those going to public institutions will pay an average of $125 for room and $344 for board.

Moreover, the total annual cost has gone up in both public and private institutions.

In 1942-43 the student could attend a public college for about $450 a year. In September it will be nearer $700. During the same period, the cost of attending a private college has mounted from $715 to $1,132.

The study indicates that there are still places in the United States where students can get a college education at the relatively low cost range of $500 to $1,000.

Fund Drives Organized

In answer to the question, "Do you think that an increase in tuition fees will keep out worthy students?" 64 per cent of the public and 60 per cent of the private colleges answered "Yes."

One hopeful sign cited by educators is the increased interest in college support that comes from business and industry. Corporations are now giving more money.

In several states independent liberal-arts colleges have organized co-operative-fund campaigns. With the aid of a grant from the Ford Foundation, a central agency, headed by a group of business leaders, has been formed to focus attention on the pressing needs of the liberal-arts institutions. For the most part these colleges have been hardest hit.

A danger exists that the services and standards of the colleges may be curtailed under financial pressures. Some institutions report that insufficient operating income has forced academic retrenchments. Twelve per cent of the public and 18 per cent of the independent colleges told The Times that they had curtailed facilities for students.

Shortage of Teachers Alarming, N.E.A. Told

By BENJAMIN FINE
Special to The New York Times and The Courier-Journal

Miami Beach, July 1.—With the nation's public-school attendance growing at the rate of 1,000,000 a year, the country faces a severe teacher shortage that has already reached alarming proportions, 7,000 educators attending the National Education Association's 91st annual convention heard here today.

In the major address delivered before the N.E.A.'s general assembly tonight, Mrs. Sarah C. Caldwell, president of the N.E.A., said that teachers are now leaving the profession at the rate of 100,000 a year. She estimated that 10,000 teachers are needed at once to eliminate overcrowding, another 10,000 to modernize the school program, and 20,000 to meet the needs of additional children entering classrooms.

Fears Shortage Will Continue

Of the 140,000 teachers needed this September, fewer than 40,000 are trained for teaching. When schools reopen after the summer holiday, there will be a shortage of 100,000 teachers. Mrs. Caldwell predicted that this shortage will continue, unless steps are taken at once to increase the number attending teacher-training institutions. Within five years the nation will have a shortage of 500,000 adequately trained teachers.

Both Mrs. Caldwell and Dr. William G. Carr, executive secretary of the N.E.A. warned that if the nation permits this teacher shortage to continue, the public school system in the United States is threatened with deterioration if not ultimate collapse.

Although classrooms will not close—inadequately prepared teachers will be employed—the long-range results will be extremely harmful, the educators pointed out. The damage will be felt a generation from now, in the form of children with a lower level of preparation.

These immediate steps, designed to maintain the quality of the schools and lessen the dangers of the teacher shortage, were outlined by Mrs. Caldwell and Dr. Carr:

1. Improve the quality of teacher preparation and training.
2. Increase the efforts to get more teachers through a sustained teacher-recruitment program.
3. Higher salaries for teachers.
4. Better working conditions for teachers.
5. Better public relations between schools and the community.

NEW FINANCE PLAN URGED FOR SCHOOLS

Federal Giving of 10 Per Cent and 40 Per Cent From States to Communities Is Proposed

By BENJAMIN FINE
Special to The New York Times.

MIAMI BEACH, July 2—To meet the urgent school needs of today, the Federal Government should contribute 10 per cent of the school operating expenses, or a minimum of $600,000,000 annually, key educators declared today.

More than 7,000 teachers, superintendents and other educators are attending the ninety-first annual convention of the National Education Association, at which major issues facing education in the United States are under consideration. The association, with an affiliated membership of 950,000 teachers, will close its week-long sessions tomorrow evening when Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr., addresses the general assembly.

In calling for Federal aid for education, Prof. Eugene S. Lawler of Florida State University and Dr. Francis G. Cornell of the University of Illinois, reported that the country was spending less proportionately for public schools now than in 1940. At present they brought out, the schools spend $5,500,000,000 a year for the operating expenses of the elementary and high schools, or about 1.8 per cent of the national income. In 1940, the country spent about 2.5 per cent of its income for the public schools.

Financing Formula Proposed

To provide the schools with the type of program essential in an atomic age, it will be necessary to spend a minimum of $7,500,000,000 annually, an immediate increase of $2,000,000,000, Dr. Cornell declared. The proposal was made that the expense of operating the public schools be based on this formula: 50 per cent of the funds to come from the local communities, 40 per cent from the states and 10 per cent from the Federal Government.

Many communities still oppose teaching about the United Nations and UNESCO, a panel discussion, held by the association in connection with its Committee on International Relations and the Educational Policies Commission, brought out. Although UNESCO is a controversial subject in some school systems, teachers were urged to present a factual, unbiased picture of this unit in the classrooms.

One of the speakers, Msgr. Frederick G. Hochwalt, secretary general of the National Catholic Educational Association, said a constructive discussion of the place that the United Nations and UNESCO had in the life of this nation was valuable.

Another speaker, Dr. Howard E. Wilson, executive associate of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, proposed that Unesco be taken out of the State Department and transferred to the new Health, Education and Welfare Department. This might tend to lessen the "politics" surrounding Unesco and permit freer discussion in the schools, he said.

Thirty resolutions were presented to the delegates this afternoon by the association's Committee on Resolutions. The teachers will vote upon these resolutions tomorrow morning.

Dr. Dowell Still Honored In Retirement

By C. M. Stanley
Editor, The Alabama Journal

Montgomery Advertiser

DR. SPRIGHT DOWELL on August 31 will retire from the presidency of Mercer University at Macon, Georgia, after serving in that office for 25 years. He was 75 years old last Jan. 2, and at that time tendered his resignation. The trustees immediately named him president emeritus, voted him a salary for life of $5,000 a year and a home on the University campus as long as he lives. P. 3B

Stanley

The School of Education building on the Mercer campus is named in honor of Dr. Dowell, and a community banquet was recently given with Dr. Dowell and Mrs. Dowell, the former Camille Early, as the guests of honor. Sun. 6-28-53

DR. DOWELL made a great reputation at Mercer. When he took charge in 1928 groceries were delivered to the dining hall C.O.D. When he leaves he will have added $3,000,000 to the endowment fund, about a million dollars worth of new buildings and enormously increased enrollment and prestige for the Baptist institution.

While he has made such a success in Georgia, Dr. Dowell got his start as a teacher in Alabama and his contacts with education and school service in this state are far reaching. They culminated in his election as president of the Alabama Polytechnic Institute at Auburn in 1920 where he served for eight years until called to Mercer. He has doctor's degrees from the University of Alabama, from Howard College, and from Baylor University in Texas.

Montgomery, Ala.

PROBABLY NO EDUCATOR in Alabama ever served more widely or knew personally more people than Spright Dowell. Here is a chronology showing the positions he held before leaving the state:

In 1898 shortly after his graduation from Wake Forest in his native North Carolina he became principal of the elementary school at Shelby, Alabama, serving two years. In 1900 he became principal of the Columbiana high school in Shelby county were he served for six years.

Next we find him in 1906 as superintendent of schools at East Lake, then a Birmingham suburb, for three years; then principal of the Barrett school in Birmingham from 1909 to 1913.

From that school he moved to Montgomery as chief clerk in the state Department of Education from 1913 to 1915. Then for two years he became director of teacher training in the state Department of Education.

In 1917 his work was recognized by Governor Charles Henderson by appointment as state superintendent of education to fill a vacancy, and in 1919 was elected to a full term in this office. The term was broken, however, by his election in 1920 to the presidency of Auburn where he served until 1928, the year of his removal to Macon.

MANY STORIES are told of Dr. Dowell, for he had ups and downs through most of his life. The friendships he formed were always warm and lasting. His autobiography bearing the title "Columbus Roberts" was published some time ago and is a revealing account of his experiences. All of his years and months at Auburn were not entirely happy, but all who came in contact with him admired his sincerity, learning and traits of frugality.

As he severs the ties that have so long bound him to Mercer much personal material is being printed about him, all of which indicates the high regard in which he is held in Georgia. The current issue of "The Mercerian," official school publication, tells some stories about him.

WHEN HE WAS FOURTEEN in 1892 his Baptist preacher father took him to Raleigh and bought him an overcoat and suit with short pants and put him on the train for college, telling him from that time on he had to stand on his own feet. Sophomores met the train to greet freshmen, and they had a lot of fun with "mama's little boy in short pants."

A senior took him in tow, however, became "Kitty's" friend and had the satisfaction of seeing his protege win the freshman oratorical medal when the time came. Years later that senior student friend became Dr. Dowell's predecessor as President of Mercer. His name was Rufus Washington Weaver.

DR. DOWELL WAS ALWAYS tireless physically and mentally. While at Columbiana, Alabama, he played shorstop on a semi-pro baseball team. In a notable game between Columbiana and Sylacauga the score was 4 to 3 in favor of Columbiana in the last half of the ninth inning. Sylacauga got three men on base with two out. We read in the Mercerian:

"The clean-up batter knocked a high one right into the wind and into the sun. When Spright the shortstop scampered back and somehow managed to hold on to the ball, they gave him the keys to the city."

THERE IS ALSO A STORY that he wanted to study law but was too young to be admitted to the bar in his home state, and came over to Birmingham where he read law for a year in a lawyer's office, took the examination and was admitted to the bar in Alabama.

One time, we are told, Spright's father caught him and his brother smoking cigarettes behind the barn. They expected a "whaling," but the father called them before him and surprised them by saying:

"Boys, I have called you in to apologize to you. I have been setting the wrong example before you. I will never smoke again if you will promise me not to smoke until you are grown men." In his later years Dr. Dowell used to take a few puffs on an after-dinner cigar at the meeting of his club once a month.

HERE IS A PARAGRAPH from the Mercerian account that should be of special interest to Dr. Dowell's Alabama friends:

"When Dr. Dowell was president of Alabama Polytechnic Institute he was hurrying, by bus as usual, to a commencement engagement. When the conveyance was in a frightful wreck, passersby hustled the other passengers off to a hospital, but they left the 'dead man' lying by the roadside. A compassionate farmer and his wife came down and carried the 'dead man' to the morgue. But when they examined him his heart was still beating! You can never count Spright Dowell out! He holds to his purposes as tenaciously as he held to life when they thought he was dead. He just won't quit!"

Dr. Bryant To Advisory Committee On Education

HOUSTON — Dr. I. B. Bryant, principal of the Booker T. Washington High school of Houston has just been appointed a member of the National Advisory Committee on the Education of Negroes. The appointment was made by thee Honorable Earl J. McGrath, U.S. Commissioner of Education. It was announced by Mr. McGrath from the Office of Education of the Federal Security Agency Washington D. C.

The appointment was made in the recommendation of officers of the American Teachers Association. Members of this Comitter are sought because of outstanding ability, experience, and educational statesmanship.

The Committee is interracial and has been operating for over 20 years with a rotating membership.

It's purposes have been therefold:

1. To give the office of Education advice and counsel with respect to special problems of Negroes.

2. To serve as liason representatives in interpreting the neds of Negroes to the office.

3. To communicate the plans and programs of the office to those especially concerned with education of Negroes.

IT IS UITE likely though that in view of changing conditions, the Committee may now consider the need to broaden the scope of its interests, Mr. MCrath has announced.

FRIENDS OF EDUCATION are pleased that his honor and distinction have come to Dr. Bryant who is making such splendid contributions to education and education research.

Protest Patterson's Blast At West Coast

SAN FRANCISCO—A group o prominent California citizens last week protested a statement by Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of Tuskegee university, that few Negro students attend West Coast colleges.

Patterson, who also heads the United Negro College Fund, made his charge during a meeting of a group here last week. More than 30 presidents of Negro colleges attended the session.

The Californians challenged a printed report of Patterson's remarks which appeared in the Call-Bulletin, a Hearst daily.

According to the paper, Patterson said:

"Here in California where a good secondary education is almost forced on a child, too, few Negroes go to public supported colleges and universities.

"There are two reasons for this. First, most of California Negroes are recent migrants from the South. Their children do not think in terms of college because the parents are oftimes almost illiterate.

"Secondly, employment opportunities for college trained Negroes, even here, are limited. A Negro child feels a college education will not be much help to him after he takes a janitor's job."

In a signed letter sent to the Call-Bulletin, the protesting citizens asserted that Patterson's statement "is in utter contradiction of the facts." They added:

"The junior college and state college enrollment throughout the state of California have, in all probability, a higher ratio of Negro students than could be found in any other state in the Union.

"As regards the job situation it is conceded that California is no 'Utopia,' but the opportunities for employment in California today are far superior in every way than Dr. Patterson's conclusions.

"Aside from the semi-skilled and skilled positions open to Negroes industry, state, county and municipal civil service are sufficient incentives to more Negro youth today to aspire for a college education."

San Franciscoans signing the letter were Dr. William McKinley Thomas, a member of the housing authority; Atty. Terry A. Francois, Dr. B. Henderson, former member of the re-development agency; Dr. Carlton B. Goodlett, co-publisher of the Sun-Reporter; the Rev. William Turner, minister of the Community Baptist church: Jefferson A. Beaver, vice-president of Trans-Bay Federal Savings and Loan association; Dr. Zuretti Goosby, dentist, Rev. F. D. Haynes, pastor of Third Baptist church, and Atty. R. J. Reynolds, president of the San Francisco NAACP.

Hutcherson Named To School Board

LYNCHBURG, Va. —(ANP)— A Negro was appointed last week to serve on the city school board of Lynchburg. He is Carl B. Hutcherson, funeral director and civic leader, and may be the first Negro to hold a position on the school board.

Hutcherson is not only a successful mortician and popular resident of the city, but he has been very active in civic affairs.

He was chosen to fill out the unexpired term of the Rev. Harry A. Fifield, who resigned because he is moving from the city. The term expires June 30.

Councilman J. Heath Lewis nominated Hutcherson and the move was seconded by Corham B. Walker, jr. The vote confirming Hutcherson was unanimous.

Are Negro Teachers Martyrs To Integration?

By OLIVER C. COX
In The Nation

(Editor's Note: Dr. Cox is professor of sociology at Lincoln University and the author of "Caste, Class, and Race.")

THE ABOLITION of segregation in the public schools and colleges of Missouri is now being debated in the legislature. Recently the House Public Schools Committee reported favorably a bill to eliminate segregation in the public schools, and the House has passed and sent to the Senate one stipulating that any qualified citizen shall be admitted "to any state-supported institution of higher learning without regard to race, color, or religion."

Although many white individuals and organizations are supporting this legislation, Negroes are naturally at the forefront of the movement. The whites have relied upon two principal arguments: that the bi-racial system increases costs, and that racial segregation in the schools has no moral sanction. Negroes have insisted not only that their self-respect as American citizens has been injured but that their right to acquire the national culture has been illegally abridged.

For Negro teachers, however, the issue is complicated by the possible effect of integration upon their chances of employment. "If segregation is abolished," some legislators are reported to have said, "all the colored teachers now employed in the public school system will have to be discharged from their positions, and Lincoln University for Negroes may be closed as an economy measure." In neighboring Kansas, the Topeka Daily Capital disclosed a few weeks ago, school boards in the ten leading cities have already begun to "purge" Negro teachers on the ground that they "would not be welcome" in mixed schools.

SOME NEGRO spokesmen consider this threat relatively trivial. In fact, one Negro newspaper asked recently: "Is that too great a sacrifice to pay for integration and a beginning toward real democratic living? . . . We cannot have our cake and eat it too." But while some selfless champions of democracy may think their employment and that of others are as nothing compared to the achievement of integration, this position seems to me in general unsound. Freedom to work is at least as sacred as the right to non-discrimination in education.

Indeed, education itself will have a decreasing value if the occasion to employ it is increasingly limited. One sometimes hears it said that Negro teachers "should prefer to dig ditches" rather than endure the disadvantages of segregated schools. But what about discrimination in the ditches? In the early nineteen thirties I saw Negroes fighting to the death on the streets of Chicago for an opportunity to work as laborers on paving jobs. It is unnecessary to multiply examples of the daily struggle of Negroes to secure their right to work. Moreover, the confidence to some individuals that they can always find another job is irrelevant, for the problem is not personal but social.

IF NEGRO teachers must face unemployment as the price of the abolition of discrimination in education, the bargain is unacceptable. The integration of the elementary schools may, it is true, call for a reduction of plant and teaching staff, but in that case both Negro and white teachers should be released on some non-discriminatory basis, such as length of service or academic qualifications. And now is the time to insist upon this. To discharge only Negro teachers would be a most unconscionable act of racial discrimination. It would not only shatter the life organization of many families but darken the prospects of every Negro youth now planning to become a teacher.

While the abolition of segregation in the educational system of Missouri has already been too long delayed, it should not now be carried out so recklessly as to cause undue economic and educational hardship. Far from being a barrier to integration, an insistence that provision be made for the employment of Negro teachers is an indispensable test of the sincerity of the integration procedure. Anti-segregation legislation is important, but its proponents must remember that their real purpose is to enhance the welfare of a people.

THE FUTURE of Lincoln University is a more complex question. Located within 50 miles of the Univesity of Missouri, some may say it should be closed in the interest of ecenomy. This reasoning, however, could also be applied to the University of Missouri, since there are great universities only a few hours away in Illinois. Missouri, of course, will not be closed — for reasons more important than economic considerations. And so, too, there are other than economic factors to be weighed when the question of closing Lincoln is broached.

In a non-segregated school system forces may come into play to increase both the size and the usefulness of Lincoln University. The proportion of white to colored students at Lincoln will be the opposite of that at Missouri, and each should make its contribution to the development of a unified nation. In these times the public interest demands that the quality of instruction at Lincoln be improved and that white students in the community be encouraged to go there. There is an increasing need for the interracial education of white Americans.

NEGROES WHO conceive of themselves not as hangers-on of our American culture but as meriting a place in its creative heart will not treat lightly the fate of their scholars. To admit in connection with integration that it is impossible to eat one's cake and have it too is to consent to the elimination of Negroes from college teaching or at least to their existence by sufferance on the periphery of sympathetic white faculties. The racial consequences of this would be manifestly regressive. Moreover, colleges for Negroes have such significance for Negro youth that their closing could result in a net cultural loss to the race.

Since "integration at any price" may work against the interests of colored people, Negro leaders, in their laudable struggle for the abolition of segregation in education, should perhaps curb their zeal for democracy and their anticipation of martyrdom lest they find themselves taking one step forward and two back.

Separate Schools Bad For Both Races—Psychiatrist

NEW YORK — Segregated schools are bad for both colored and white children, giving the whites a false sense of superiority and retarding the academic progress of the colored, Dr. Frederick Wertham, head of New York's LaFarge clinic, declared on Walter White's weekly radio broadcast last week.

"Equal facilities cannot exist if you put any group in separate schools," Dr. Wertham said. "Their academic progress is not due to better facilities . . . They get an incentive to learn which they previously had to a much less extent."

Hits Superiority Myth

In response to a question from Mr. White, Dr. Wertham said: "In my mind segregation — wherever it is—is very bad for white children. It gives them an illusion that they are better than other children and later on they will find out they are not better."

Dr. Wertham presented expert testimony as to the adverse effects of segregation at the trial of the suit brought by NAACP attorneys to end segregation in the public schools of New Castle, Del.

He concluded the interview with Mr. White by expressing the hope that the U.S. Supreme Court, which is now considering this and other school segregation cases, will take the results of these studies into consideration.

Aid Asked For Negro Education

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Rep. Charles E. Bennett of Florida is asking Congress to provide funds to build schools for Negroes and Indians.

He has introduced a bill under which the federal government would reimburse states for construction costs of schools attended by either Negroes or Indians. He submitted similar bills to the last two Congresses.

He told a reporter that the purpose of the bill is to equalize educational facilities between the Negro and the White, primarily in the South, although it would affect all sections.

"It is the only way," he said, "that the South can finance a program which would bring about an immediate equalization of school facilities."

Under the Bennett plan, grants would be made to the states for school construction based on the number of Negro or Indian children in attendance.

He said his bill has nothing to do with segregation. But he did point out that the Supreme court has ruled that the states must provide equal educational opportunities for all, and that the South is not able to do this without federal help.

Bennett explained that his bill would apply to all schools to be built, whether or not they are segreated, and that institutions with only one Negro or Indian student would benefit to that extent.

Bennett said he had included Indians in the bill because the government had "pushed them back" on reservations but had made the states provide for their education. He said the Indian children have a "terrible" educational problem."

Fears Segregation End

Alabaman Urges Education Via TV

MONTGOMERY, Ala. —(AP)— An Alabama legislator proposed Thursday establishment of a state-owned television system to carry public school work directly into homes if the courts ban segregated schools.

Rep. Sam N. Engelhardt, Jr., of Macon county, where the famed Negro college, Tuskegee Institute, is located, outlined his proposal on a visit to the state capital.

Negroes outnumber Whites about four to one in his county.

"There would be no problem of segregation if instruction were beamed directly into homes," he said, "and it might help to put some of the burden of education on the parents where it belongs.

"Of course, provision would have to be made for TV school reception cen state for the ilies who cou television sets.

The Federa ati
Commission ha d five TV channels to Alaban for educational purposes.

Engelhardt, commenting on lawsuits pending before the United States Supreme Court which seek to knock out segregation in public schools, previously said he would sponsor a bill during this year's legislature to take the state out of the school business altogether if segregation is abolished.

The legislator said he is mentioning the television idea "only to give educators something to think about," and will go ahead as planned with the other bill.

This measure, which has already been drawn up, proposes to replace the present segregated system with privately operated classrooms, financed with state, county and city funds but free from government control.

As to converting the school system to television, Engelhardt said his plan probably would offer the most economical way to handle a non-segregated school program without causing violence between the races.

"There are quite a few southerners who just aren't going to let the Supreme court tell them how to operate their schools," he said. "The racial problem is a delicate one in the south and it just can't be worked out by a Supreme court directive."

EDUCATION CHIEF QUITS OVER CUTS

McGrath Declares Budget Acts 'Indefensible'

By STERLING F. GREEN

WASHINGTON, April 22 (AP)—The commissioner of education, Earl J. McGrath, resigned today saying he could not condone "indefensible" budget cuts which "reduce the quality of education of American children."

Instead of testifying before a senate committee, as scheduled, to defend the Office of Education budget — which he said he saw in final form only yesterday—McGrath marched to the White House with a letter of resignation and protest. He did not see President Eisenhower.

Then the angry educator personally carried carbon copies to press association and newspaper offices and went home—out of a $14,800 a year job.

The letter told Eisenhower that budget slashes already have "markedly damaged the morale of a highly competent professional staff," and the proposed new budget will "further damage" the federal program supporting education.

McGrath informed the President he could "not in good conscience be a party to carrying out such a policy," and wrote:

"I therefore submit my resignation at this time in order not to have to undergo the embarrassment of trying to defend before the Senate Appropriations Committee at 11 a.m. today a budget which I consider indefensible."

He sent copies of his letter to Secretary of Welfare Hobby and to Sen. Bridges (R-N.H.), chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

The proposed budget for education in the fiscal year starting next July 1 was not made public. McGrath gave reporters an example which he said was typical—a four million dollar, or 24 per cent, slash in the $18,400,000 item which former President Truman proposed for vocational education.

Later the Appropriations Committee supplied additional figures on the Office of Education budget. They showed that the Truman request for veterans' educational services was $292,000; the Eisenhower revision asked $92,000.

For "salaries and expenses," Truman asked $3,250,000 and Eisenhower $2,926,000. For payments to school districts, Truman requested 70 million dollars and Eisenhower $66,500,000.

No funds were requested, in either budget, for school construction, which accounted for 195 million dollars in the current budget.

What The People Say

WAKE UP COLLEGES!

Dear Mr. Editor:

We were delighted to read your editorial comment of June 6 on "Our Colleges and the Industrialization of the South." As one former college president has said, we are at last coming to grips with one of the basic issues of education. This is particularly true in the light of the economic revolution that is going on in this part of the country.

Sad to say, some of our "leading educators" appear to be only slightly aware or interested in the consequences of these decisive social developments. For example, at the very time when Hampton and Tuskegee should be becoming major technical and scientific institutions — and we mean major in terms of America — they appear to be converting themselves into institutions for general education and teacher training. There is some holding on to the old manual training, pre-atomic age instruction, but the gap between Tuskegee and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology is greater now than it was twenty years ago.

Our traditional liberal arts colleges of the type of Fisk, Talladega and Morehouse had better wake up, too. It is quite possible by means of sponsored research for such institutions to (1) participate in the scientific research that is preparing the way for many of these new industries; (2) enlarge their facilities and staffs by means of these lucrative research contracts; and (3) provide handsome fellowships for their top students and excellent paying jobs for their graduates, who would have a "know how" that they could not get otherwise.

Powerful newspapers like yours can do a great deal of good by throwing their influence behind the current effort to bring the education of Negro Americans into the main stream of American life.

Sincerely yours,
L. D. Reddick
Atlanta University

INTEGRATION UP NORTH

The advocates of integration, all up and down the line in education—from the kindergarten to the university, should stick to their original theory as to the effect of integration on the jobs of colored school teachers.

Originally they theorized that only the "bum teachers" would lose their jobs; that colored children would be better off with white teachers, from top to bottom; and all the colored teachers who would lose out would, by the loss of their jobs prove thereby that they didn't have any business teaching school, in the first place.

The latest theory that is being spouted, not by teachers themselves but by unemployed educators, is that you will not know the difference when integration goes into effect; that by time integration in school teaching becomes a fact there will be fair employment practices in all other occupations and persons let out as teachers will get just as good, and in many instances BETTER, jobs than they have as teachers. This may come to pass, but for the immediate present, it would be good for all interested parties to scan the letter that the superintendent of Topeka, Kansas has written to colored teachers, ONLY of that city. As printed in the Topeka, Kansas PLAINDEALER Superintendent Wendell Godwin has sent letters to six colored teachers in which he says:

"Due to the present uncertainty about enrollment next year in schools for Negro children, it is not possible at this time to offer you employment for next year. If the Supreme Court should rule that segregation in the elementary grades is unconstitutional, our Board will proceed on the assumption that the majority of the people in Topeka will not want to employ Negro teachers next year for white children. It is necessary for me to inform you now that your services will not be needed next year. This is in compliance with the continuing contract law. . . . I am sending letters of this kind to only those teachers of Negro schools who have been employed during the last year or two. It is presumed that, even though segregation should be declared unconstitutional, we would have need for some schools for Negro children and we would retain our Negro teachers to teach them.

"I think I understand that all of you must be under considerable strain, and I sympathize with the uncertainties and inconveniences which you must experience during the period of adjustment. I believe that whatever happens will ultimately turn out to be best for everybody concerned."

N.Y. Adopts Law Aimed At Racial Superiority Myth

ALBANY, N. Y.—(NNPA)—Governor Thomas E. Dewey last Wednesday signed a bill which makes it an unfair educational practice for institutions of high learning to accept any endowment or gift of money conditioned on the teaching of any doctrine of racial superiority.

In a memorandum announcing his approval of the measure, the Governor said he was "fully in accord with the purpose of the proposal. He also said the legislation had "the wholehearted endorsement of the Association of Colleges and Universities of the State of New York.

THE MEASURE outlaws situations which arose in recent years in some southern states where large gifts were offered to small colleges on the condition that they would teach the doctrine of "white supremacy" in their classes.

Sponsors of the bill in the legislature were two Manhattan Democrats— Assemblyman Hulan E. Jack of Harlem and Senator Joseph Zaretzki.

Governor Dewey pointed out that the new law would be a section of the education law that could be enforced only if a protest is made by a person seeking admission to a college or university. He proposed amending it next year to permit the state to act without waiting for an individual protest.

The Jack - Zaretzki law amends a 1948 statute which made it an "unfair educational practice" for an institution of higher learning to discriminate in admission policies based on race, religion, color or national origin.

'WITCH HUNTS' HELD HURTING COLLEGES

B'nai B'rith Speakers Assert Fears Impose Conformity on Students, Blight Freedom

By IRVING SPIEGEL

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MONTICELLO, N. Y., May 27—Two leaders of B'nai B'rith said here today that "witch hunts" in the nation's schools were resulting in a "crisis of faith" on college campuses throughout the country. Both also asserted that these investigations were endangering our democratic ideals and principles.

The warnings were sounded by Samuel Markle of Larchmont, N. Y., lawyer and newly elected president of District 1 of B'nai B'rith, embracing a membership of some hundred thousand in New York, New England and eastern Canada, and Rabbi Arthur Lelyveld, national director of the Hillel Foundations. The Hillel Foundations, a major agency of B'nai B'rith, are composed of Jewish clubs in 205 colleges and universities, and are devoted to formulating religious and cultural programs among Jewish college youth.

The addresses by Mr. Markle and Rabbi Lelyveld were delivered in the final sessions of the four-day, 101st annual convention of District One, which was attended by more than 1,200 delegates.

Says 'Actions Corrode Minds'

Mr. Markle asserted that "it is an ill omen when a man elected head of an agency administering the colleges of the greatest city in the world applauds witchhunts and shows his distrust of those colleges." He added that this "is the kind of soil in which professional bigots flourish, and such actions corrode the hearts and the minds the reputation of many sincere, loyal and devoted Americans."

His statement was an obvious reference to the recent election of Joseph B. Cavallaro as chairman of the Board of Higher Education in New York and Mr. Cavallaro's subsequent statement. Following his election to that post, Mr. Cavallaro said that the Congressional committees, headed by Senator Joseph R. McCarthy, Senator William E. Jenner and Representative Harold K. Velde, Republicans of Wisconsin, Indiana and Illinois, respectively, had done "a good job" in investigating subversion in education and that the school board should complete the task.

Mr. Markle declared that "positive measures must be taken to preserve that freedom of thought and inquiry in our schools which is necessary to perpetuate and strengthen American democracy."

At the same time, Rabbi Lelyveld warned that "our agencies of religious education" as well as the colleges themselves "confront no challenge greater than the contemporary crisis of faith among college students."

State Board of Regents Praised

Mr. Markle, in pointing to the progress that had been achieved in eliminating racial and religious barriers to college admissions, praised the New York State Board of Regents for undertaking a study of discriminatory practices by medical schools in the state. He expressed hope that the Board of Regents' report would result in full equality of educational opportunity for citizens of the state regardless of race or religion.

Rabby Lelyveld noted that there is a "mounting hunger" among college youth "for valid purposes beyond self, for conviction to which they may dedicate their lives." He added that college youths "are tragically caught between the millstone of this need and the crushing load of caution which today's fear-generated trend to conformity imposes upon them."

The Hillel Foundations director contrasted the American student of a generation ago who was "vocal, frequently rebellious, usually concerned about life patterns and philosophies of conduct" to today's student who "is inclined to 'play it safe.'"

Still further, Rabbi Lelyveld said that today's student was "silent, cautious, and too often disappointingly indifferent to anything but his own needs."

He declared that there was a need for "young people * * * for whom the welfare of mankind becomes a higher value than the protection of self."

Gumbs Is Elected Prexy of School

ST. LOUIS—Philip N. Gumbs, June, 1952, graduate of the Lincoln University School of Law, here, was just been elected a member of the Matawan-Clifford School District in New Jersey. The school district has a population of 10,000, of which about 500 are colored.

Frank Mitchell Gets Board Job Uncle Held

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (ANP)—Frank W. Mitchell Sr., general manager of the St. Louis Argus, last week was appointed a member of the Missouri board of education.

Gov. Phil M. Donnelly appointed Mitchell, to fulfill an unexpired term created by the death of C. E. Mitchell, publisher of the Argus and uncle of Frank Mitchell.

Named To School Board

BALTIMORE, Md. — (ANP) — Dr. Irene Diggs, professor of sociology and anthropology, Morgan State College, last week was appointed to the Women's Committee of the Baltimore Museum of Art.

Wake Up, Governor Murray!

Governor Murray, who awoke last week to suggest it would be unlawful for Negro teachers to teach white children in Oklahoma, unquestionably does not read the Black Dispatch closely, for we just a few weeks ago in these columns reported a Negro girl is already teaching white girls nursing art in the Oklahoma University School of Nursing, out on 13th street in Oklahoma City.

And this suggestion also by the governor that Negro teachers stand to lose their professional opportunity as instructors in the state schools if the Supreme Court of the United States outlaws segregation does not make sense in Chinese.

Of course, if it is true, Negro teachers have better scholastic qualifications than whites in this state, the governor has nothing to fall back upon, for his surmise, but the fact of race prejudice, which immediately imposed the thought of a state FEPC law. This law could be invoked in defense of the white children, for if Negro teachers have better scholastic preparation to teach than white instructors, it would be a crime against the white child to permit these alleged inferior teachers to teach white children, in addition to inflicting themselves upon black children.

We are, of course, inclined to feel there may be some measure of truth in the charge that Negro teachers have prepared themselves to teach more substantially than white teachers, for the state superintendent of schools of North Carolina told this writer some fifteen years ago, during a survey made in his state it was discovered that Negro teachers in his state had more training and school work than the whites. We marveled at this, but when we learn the same situation exists in Oklahoma, we, of course, immediately recall the information we secured down in North Carolina.

Our notion, however, is that the governor's sudden assertion that Negro teachers have superior training to whites, yet stand a chance to lose their jobs in an integrated program, is nothing more than an eleventh hour attempt to scare Negro teachers. It is strange and unseemly solicitude that suddenly gushes forth at this time for the black teachers for whom state government has had calloused and marble-hearted disregard since statehood.

The fact that a Negro teacher is instructing in the nursing school out on 13th street as a result of integration, at a higher salary than she perhaps ever received before, nullifies and destroys completely the presumptions, notions and ideas of Governor Murray as to what will happen. Then, too, integration is coming at the right time. Statistics show that thousands of whites who for many years depended upon teaching as a profession, have now graduated into other fields in our rapidly expanding industrial establishment. War work snatched thousands upon thousands of white men and women up higher in the labor brackets, and they will never return to the teaching profession.

Today there is an urgent demand for teachers everywhere, and California, where integration has taken place already, exposes the lush opportunities awaiting the Negro teachers just as soon as Dixiecrat ideologies can be swept out of our social fabric here in the United States.

This idea of the state giving aid to private schools is a two-way track. We doubt seriously if the state will have a right to contribute tax funds to private schools to which Negroes cannot attend. We suspect what is being talked boldly about in South Carolina and Georgia, and hinted by Governor Murray in his talk about a special call of the legislature to deal with questions that would arise if the Supreme Court rules out segregation in the schools, will run into rough constitutional sledding when state government starts issuing out money to private white schools.

Of course the argument made by the governor about the cost of segregated schools is correct. This is the argument this publication and the NAACP has always made in opposition to jim crow. We are happy to know the governor, and we presume the legislature, are awakening to this fact. The mathematical conclusion that two and two make four is no more convincing than the proposition that two schools are twice as expensive as one. Statistics compiled regarding separate schools prove that it requires a higher per capita cost to maintain separate schools than white. The governor is not contributing anything new to our thinking when he raises the question of the unconscienable cost of separate schools.

We are not so sure the governor has aptly guaged the situation as it will develop down in Little Dixie when and if the Supreme Court declares against segregation. The governor seems to feel that some private schools will be opened down that way, and it is these schools that will want state support.

But we have news for the governor. We recall it was down at Berwyn several years ago when we made a political address out at the consolidated school, we ran into one of those old mountaineers, who the governor probably has in mind, and with whom we rode a distance of about five miles, while he cursed, railed, and roared because his daughter had to walk each day away from the Negro school right across from his house and go to Berwyn to school. We have never in our life seen a more positive supporter of integration than that old white man with whom he rode one evening in the Arbuckle mountains.

The folk who are going to talk about private schools in the event of the outlawing of our dual school system in Oklahoma are more noisy than numerous, and surely the Supreme Court of the United States is not going to permit state government to escape from the decision by doing in a roundabout way what the courts have said it cannot do.

Negro Speech Clinic Is a Worthy Project

It is astonishing that until six months ago there was no place in the entire South where a Negro child with a speech or hearing handicap might obtain the necessary instruction to make him a useful person in the community. Those afflicted became permanent wards of the taxpayers, if they survived.

Two years ago six young Atlanta matrons decided to do something about it. Since there were no Negro teachers qualified for the work in the United States, they raised $1,795 and with $800 from the state sent Mrs. Irene Asbury to the Central Institute for the Deaf at St. Louis, Mo., for instruction.

She began teaching 23 children last October in classrooms provided by Atlanta University. However, the need is so great and the possibilities for good so tremendous that it is apparent that only a beginning has been made. To take care of the need, these young matrons, with the aid of the Junior League, have organized a project known as Preschool Negro Speech Clinic, Inc.

They have undertaken to raise $20,000 to keep the program going for two more years and to expand it. They hope by that time that it will have more than proved its value and that it will be supported either by the Community Chest or the regular school system thereafter.

We urge Atlantans to give liberal support to this undertaking. It is an investment in humanity and in the city's future. We commend the public-spirited young women, including Mrs. DeJongh Franklin, Mrs. Arthur L. Harris, Mrs. Cecil Alexander Jr., Mrs. John J. Eagan, Mrs. Charles Massell and Mrs. Walter Bloom for their recognition of a need and for taking the initiative in doing something about it.

Eight Retiring Teachers And Supervisor Feted

Eight teachers and a supervisor who have just retired were luncheon guests of the Louisville Board of Education yesterday.

Each received a certificate of merit from Walter H. Girdler, Jr., board president. Six other retiring teachers were unable to attend the luncheon. State law requires teachers to retire at 70.

The retiring supervisor is Miss Mary Gale Cawthon, who has headed the household-arts program in the public schools since 1935. She began her career as a teacher at the old Columbia School in 1902.

Others at the luncheon were:

Miss Maude E. Adams, John C. Strother School. She has been a teacher 45 years. She plans to enjoy her church work at 23d and Broadway Baptist Church, visit her three nephews, and "do all the many things I've never had time for before."

W. F. Bradbury, Louisville Male and Girls High, who has taught there 48 years. He has no plans.

Mrs. Lillian B. Bush, Booker T. Washington School, a teacher for 47 years. "I'll miss my children," she said, but she will enjoy resting.

Miss Grace Gordon, George Rogers Clark School, a teacher 46 years. "I'll miss my doll babies a lot, but I guess I'll find some others," she said. She is a kindergarten teacher. She plans a trip to Florida soon.

Miss Elizabeth Hannan, Ellen C. Semple School, a teacher 46 years. She will work in her flower garden and do volunteer work for various groups, including the Association for Childhood Education, the Council for Retarded Children, and the Association for the Education of Children under 6.

Mrs. Elizabeth Naumann, Longfellow School, a teacher 48 years. She plans to travel. First she'll go to Florida, then to South Carolina to visit a nephew.

Miss Carrie B. Pate, Booker T. Washington School, a teacher 51 years. "I plan to do all the good I can, in all the ways I can, wherever I can, and for whomever I can," she said.

Robert V. Tallman, J. M. Atherton High, a teacher 33 years He taught 30 years at Louisville Male High. He has already started to work as a real-estate salesman.

Others retiring, but who were not at the luncheon, are Miss Margaret Frazier and Miss Cordelia Smith, both of Atherton; W. F. Lockett, Parkland Junior High; Mrs. M. Lyda Sanders, Central High; Miss Virginia R. Schaeffer, Victor H. Engelhard School, and Mrs. Lucretia B. Woods, Madison Junior High.

They will also receive certificates.

Elect Brown Vice Prexy Of Schools

Sidney P. Brown, prominent Chicago lawyer and civic leader, Wednesday became the first Negro elected as vice president of the Board of Education. His term will run until June, 1954.

William B. Traynor was reelected president of the board at the same meeting.

Brown, 59, of 851 Drexel square, has been a member of the board since 1945. He is the senior partner in the law firm of Brown, Brown, Cyrus and Greene, 417 E. 47th st.

He is married to Mrs. Vivian Mason Brown and is the father of three children. A daughter, Mrs. Donna Bradion is in Switzerland. A daughter-in-law is a real estate broker in the city. Brown's brother, Oscar, and the other son.

Judges Continue Race Balance

Dr. Butcher and Dr. Kirks Are Appointed To School Board; Faulkner Retained

By Joseph Paull
Post Reporter

The judges of District Court yesterday appointed two educators an da lawyer to the Board of Education.

They are:

Dr. Margaret Just Butcher, 40, of 1712 16th st. nw., who replaces Mrs. Velma G. Williams.

Dr. Rowland F. Kirks, 39, of 2001 16th st. nw., who replaces Albert E. Steinem.

Robert R. Faulkner, 60, of 1007 Taylor st. ne., who has been on the school board since July 31, 1952.

The appointments are all for three-year terms. They are effective July 1.

From the selections made, it was apparent the judges were continuing their practice of balancing the board from the standpoint of sex and race. Mrs. Butcher, like Mrs. Williams, is a Negro.

Dr. Butcher, mother of a 14-year-old daughter at Dunbar High School, has 12 years of teaching experience on the college level, and has taught in public secondary schools.

At present she is associate professor of English at Howard University, although during the summer she is teaching at Southern Texas University in Houston. Her husband, James W. Butcher, is assistant professor in the drama department at Howard.

Dr. Butcher's father, Everett Just, was a famed zoologist noted for his research on cell structure.

Among other achievements, Dr. Butcher was the first woman lecturer of professorial rank under the Fulbright program. She lectured at three Universities in France.

She is active in civic affairs, including parent-teach groups, Americans for Democratic Action, and the American Council on Education. She also was discussion leader in the June, 1952, conference on Education. She also was a State Department American Council on Educational Conference on Orientation Programs, and for the Attorney General's Citizenship Conference in 1951 and 1952.

DR. KIRKS FAULKNER DR. BUTCHER

. . . appointed for three-year terms to Board of Education

Mrs. Butcher's qualifications disclosed by the judges contained a notation that she was cleared by the FBI for the Attorney General's citizenship conference.

Faulkner's statement since he joined the board of education often placed him in the limelight.

Last October, he shocked the city by warning that "public schools are going socialistic." He listed the school lunch program, compulsory physical education, school medical and dental clinics and play rooms as evidence. He said these were "things that parents should be doing."

After that, several citizen groups called for his resignation.

Last month, Faulkner said proposed allocation of funds for a neducational TV station in the District would be a "waste of public money on a fantasy."

Faulkner, a graduate of George Washington Law School in 1919, is a member of the District and American Bar Association, the American Judicature Society, University Club, Columbia Historical Society and Michigan Park Citizens Association, and was elected to the first Citizens Advisory Council here.

His two daughters attended public schools here and two grandchildren are now in local public schools.

Dr. Kirkke is president of National University here. He holds degrees of A.B., LL.B., M.P.L., S.J.D.. an dLL.D., and is a graduate of the Dale Carnegie Institute of Effective Speaking.

He was named to the school board in June, 1952, at first said he would accept the post, but then declined after he was made head of the Alien Property Office of the Justice Department.

On June 8, he told reporters that he kknew the board of education "is not the most peaceful body."

He added:

"There appears to be a lot of wasted time in elementary education. A lot of the things that we did on Saturday as extra-curricular work khas been embodied in the educational system."

Kiks is a member of the District and American Bar Associations, the Junior Board of Commerce. Kappa Alpha Alumni Association, Society of the Sons of the American Revolution. the Aerican Legion, Scottish Rite Masons, the Kiwanis, and the Washington Board of Trade.

School Post To Dr. Butcher

WASHINGTON

Dr. Margaret Just Butcher, associate professor of English at Howard University was appointed by the judges of the District Court to succeed Mrs. Velma Williams on the Board of Education.

Appointed along with Dr. Butcher for three-year terms beginning July 1 were Dr. Rowland F. Kirks and Robert R. Faulkner who has been the "rookie" member of the board since July 31, 1952.

Other minority members of the board are Wesley S. Williams and Col. West A. Hamilton.

Dr. Butcher is at present teaching summer school at Texas Southern university. A member of the national advisory council to the Federal Civil Defense Administration, she recently wrote a series of articles on civil defense for the AFRO.

Father Howard Prof.

Daughter of the late Dr. Ernest E. Just who taught at Howard for 34 years and Mrs. Ethel

DR. M. J. BUTCHER

Highwarden Just, who was the first colored woman graduate of Ohio State university, she is married to James W. Butcher, assistant professor of drama at Howard.

They have one daughter, Sheryl, who is a Dunbar high school student.

Dr. Butcher is a graduate of Emerson College and Boston University both in Boston, Mass. She has taught at Virginia Union University, and Miner Teachers college as well as at Howard.

She was the only woman in a group of 11 designated by the State Department as a Fulbright Lecturer in France in 1949.

Dr. Butcher holds membership in the American Association of University Women, the American Association of University Professors, is vice president of the Washington College Club and is a member of the Pi Lambda Theta, national honor society in education and the Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority.

Clements Calls Win Aid to U. S.

By JOE RICKENBAKER

The recent election of a Negro to a public office in Georgia has given the free nations "something concrete" on which to base their faith in the United States as a leader of the free world, Dr. Rufus E. Clements, president of Atlanta University said here Monday.

Dr. Rufus Clements

Dr. Clements, who returned last week from Europe where he was a delegate to the World Confederation of Organizations of the Teaching Profession, told the Atlanta Rotary Club that his election to the Atlanta board of education was closely observed throughout the world and has served to increase confidence in the United States by the other nations.

The first Negro to be elected to such a post since the days of reconstruction, Dr. Clements used his election as an example of the close watch being kept on the United States and warned that "we must be careful in our domestic affairs."

Dr. Clements, who divided his month in Europe between France and England, also warned that the situation in France would grow worse and Communist infiltration was great.

BLAMES TAX BURDEN

Be blamed current strikes and strong Communist gains in France on unequal distribution of the tax burden, rising cost of living compared to a low wage scale and the temperament of the French people.

The tax setup in France, Dr. Clements said, placed the burden on the average wage earner and hardly touched the farmer and the very rich. Also the French wage scale begins at 24 cents an hour and remains stable while the cost of living has more than doubled in the last few years.

"As a result," the educator said, "communism has grown in postwar France and the Communists will continue to disrupt affairs."

OPPOSITE IN ENGLAND

While he expressed fear that the United States will get little co-operation from France, Dr. Clements said the opposite is true of England.

The English economy is much better than in recent years, he reported, and the people have a feeling of strong kinship with the United States.

The English political situation is similar to that of the United States, Dr. Clements said, in that regardless of party membership partisan politics is not placed before national security and progress.

Elected— Dr. J. Wel by Broaddus Central State College trustee and pastor of the Dayton, Ohio, Tabernacle Baptist Church was recently elected to the Dayton Board of Education. He ran third in a field of eight candidates.

Mrs. Butcher Defends 'Protest Groups'

Mrs. Margaret J. Butcher, new member of the Board of Education and Howard University teacher yesterday defended a person's "right to associate" with protest groups, with ideas and books, and with individuals.

Speaking before the Washington Ethical Society at the YWCA, she emphasized the importance of protest groups as "protective measures for the individual in times of hysteria."

Respect for the individual's "right to espouse himself to ideas, even those contrary to traditional American principles" has made American democracy, she said, "the dynamic, fluid, constantly aspiring system that it is."

Clement Says His Election Marks A 'New Day In South'

Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president, Atlanta University, hailed his election to the Atlanta Board of Education as a "victory for Negro and white citizens, working together for a new day in the South."

In winning over J. H. Landers for the 3rd Ward position on the Board of Education, Dr. Clement declared "I think that my election will mark a period of improved relations here in our section that transcends all political significance and that it will give deep spiritual lift to all the fair-minded people in the nation."

Dr. Clement polled 23,282 votes to 14,625 for Dr. Landers who had enjoyed 26-years tenure on the board.

Negro and white voters of the city joined forces to give Dr. Clement the Board of Education seat. He joined C. W. Ervin, treasurer of Paine College, Augusta, in becoming the second Georgia Negro to win an election for an Education Board post. Ervin won in a ward race.

The huge turnout for the Atlanta University president came only two days after he had been challenged in the election because of alleged left-wing sympathies. The Atlanta City Executive Committee voted him the right to run by a 5-4 margin.

Charges had been made that the House Un-American Activities Committee had listed the A. U. president because of past membership in the Southern Conference For Human Welfare and other liberal organization.

Atlantans apparently believed Dr. Clement and rallied to his standard at the ballot box. He ran only behind Mayor William B. Hartsfield in the popularity column.

The complete text of Dr. Clement's statement follows:

"I want to thank the citizens of Atlanta for the confidence which they have shown in me by electing me to public office. I assure them that I shall attempt so to conduct myself that there will never be the slightest regret at the choice that they have made. It is a victory for all the people. Negro and white citizens, working together for a new day in the South have decided that I was qualified for the office I sought. I think that my election will mark a period of improved relations here in our section, that it transcends all political significance and that it will give a deep spiritual lift to all fair-minded people in the nation."

ELECTION IN ATLANTA

By electing Dr. Rufus E. Clement to the Board of Education the citizens of Atlanta, Ga., have taken a noteworthy step. Dr. Clement, president of Atlanta University, is the first Negro to be elected to public office in that Southern city since reconstruction days.

Several of the circumstances surrounding this election are significant because they serve to illustrate how far along enlightened thought in the South actually is. Foremost of these is that Dr. Clement had wide support among the white voters in his victory over J. H. Landers. Secondly, the fact that Mr. Landers had been an incumbent member of the Board of Education for twenty-five years, and was therefore a solidly entrenched opponent, testifies to the confidence the voters had in the ability of Dr. Clement.

Dr. Clement had this to say about the election: "It isn't a personal victory. It's a victory for the people." It is indeed a real victory for the people when citizens forget prejudice and vote with the sole objective of naming the best candidate. It is indeed a victory for the people when men look beyond the color or race of their neighbors and value them for their qualities as individuals.

Negro Elected To Atlanta School Board

By The Associated Press

ATLANTA — A Negro won election to the Atlanta board of education Wednesday in a city primary that brought re-election of Mayor William B. Hartsfield to a fifth term.

Dr. Rufus G. Clement, Negro president of Atlanta University, defeated his white opponent J. H. Lander, a school board member for 26 years. The vote was Clement 22,142, Landers 13,800.

It was the first time since reconstruction days that a Negro had sought a post on the board. The primary set other precedents. Two Negroes were elected to the 16-member city executive committee, which governs elections.

In addition the Democratic label was omitted from the primary for the first time. Instead it was a city primary that avoided complications the might arise from the fact that a large number of electors voted Republican in the 1952 general election.

Hartsfield's opponent in the mayor's race, Charlie Brown, former Fulton county commissioner, issued a statement attributing Hartsfield's margin to the "Negro bloc vote."

The vote: Hartsfield 32,253, Brown 24,114.

Bradshaw elected to Richmond school board

RICHMOND

Booker T. Bradshaw, president-treasurer of Virginia Mutual Life insurance company, has been elected a member of the Richmond school board effective Sept. 1, and becomes first of his race to serve on the board since Reconstruction.

Mr. Bradshaw, elected unanimously by City Council Monday night, will fill a vacancy created by the resignation of Mrs. Henry W. Decker, local liberal. The vote was 7-0, with Mayor Haddock and Councilman Randolph W. Church absent.

A Notable Appointment Is Made In Richmond

THE CITY Council of Richmond, in deciding to add BOOKER T. BRADSHAW to the school board of the Old Dominion's capital, has taken a notable step and made a highly suitable choice.

Mr. BRADSHAW, an experienced head of a leading insurance company, is a man with a deep interest in a wide variety of community affairs. He becomes the first Negro ever to hold such a position in Richmond, so far as can be determined.

Newport News took the leadership in naming a Negro to the school board, selecting Dr. C. WALDO SCOTT, a leading young physician, for the honor. In most of the state's urban centers the colored school population constitutes roughly one-third of the total. The administration of welfare and educational agencies in our political sub-divisions is surely a field in which at least minimal representation should be afforded a segment of the population which looms so large in the public school picture. But only two of our cities in the commonwealth have met the responsibility.

MR. BRADSHAW

Norfolk has had several opportunities within the past decade especially, to fill vacancies with qualified Negroes, but the members of its City Council have each time forfeited the chance to do elementary justice to its major minority citizenry. The reasons advanced on each such occasion as to why "the time is not ripe," have not been convincing.

The long years of educational discrimination are now catching up with the South generally. Many troublesome problems facing school administrations might have been more pleasantly adjusted had southern politicians given the Negro a chance to have school board representation, and availed themselves of the viewpoints and suggestions of such minority members. These problems continue and may even be accentuated in the near future. Cities which do not follow the example of Richmond and Newport News will be short-sighted.

Ex-St. Louisan Elected To Va. School Board

RICHMOND, Va.—A native St. Louisan elected to the school board here last week became the first Negro to serve on the body since Reconstruction Days.

Booker T. Bradshaw, an insurance official and civic leader, was named to serve an unexpired term on the Richmond school board early last week following a 7 to 0 vote of the City Council. His election became a mere formality after the Council indicated two weeks ago that Bradshaw would be supported for the position. His term will run until June 30, 1956.

Bradshaw is president and treasurer of the Virginia Mutual Benefit Life Insurance Company. He is a member of the National Negro Insurance Association, a trustee of Virginia Union University and a past president of the Virginia Trade Association.

The University of Illinois graduate is also a member of the board of directors and the executive committee of the Consolidated Bank and Trust Company.

A Richmond newspaper while editorially calling Bradshaw's appointment "good news," indicated that the move was also in the interest of continued school segregation in the South.

The Richmond Times-Dispatch said in an editorial:

"The appointment of qualified Negroes to school boards is not only desirable in itself, but it should serve an extremely useful purpose, if and when the United States Supreme Court, late this year or early in 1954, directs every community in the land to provide equal public school facilities for the two races, as the price of continued separation of white and colored children in the schools.

"If almost all school boards after such a decision, continue to be composed of white persons, it is going to be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to convince the cours thatt the Negroes are getting equal consideration. If, on the other hand,, competent and experienced Negroes, such as Mr. Bradshaw, are appointed to these boards, the sincere desire of the whites to equalize will be much more apparent and convincing."

Bradshaw is the youngest son of Mrs. P. M. Bradshaw and the late M. H. Bradshaw, who, during his lifetime, was very active in church and civic organizations.

The school board official is married to Mrs. Emma Forrester Bradshaw and the father of one child, Booker T. Bradshaw, Jr.

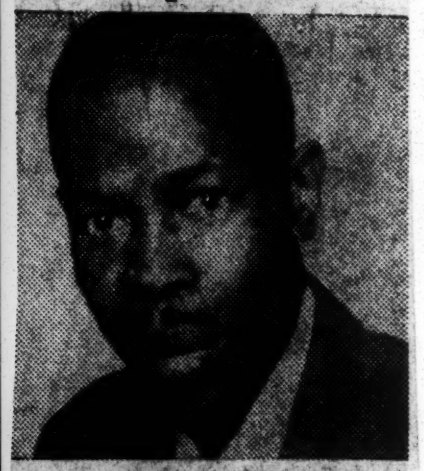
Ido Movement Names Negro To Top Post



W. EUGENE SIMMONS
... from Esperanto to Ido

CHICAGO—The International Language (Ido) movement in the United States has named a Negro to a responsible position, according to an announcement by the World Language Institute.

The appointee to the position of assistant director of the institute is W. Eugene Simmons of Charleston and Summerville, S. C.

Mr. Simmons has long been a proponent of the international language, having at one time been identified with the "Esperantists" and also "Interlinguists." A few years ago, however, he joined the "Ido" ("Reformed Esperanto") movement.

MR. SIMMONS has translated into the Ido language many classical works from English and Spanish. He has written (in Ido) a short biography of the late great Dr. George W. Carver, which will appear in a forthcoming edition of the Swedish World Language Review, which is published in Stockholm.

The forty-five year-old ex-newsman will be in charge of field work among Ido adherents, representing all races. He is the founder of United Neighbors International, a friendship organization which has rendered yeoman service in obtaining help in the United States for many of Europe's war ("Brown Babies") orphans.

His address is Box 371, Summerville, S. C.

HONORARY twenty-year service keys were presented to O. W. Epps, McKenney, itinerant agriculture instructor and H. D. Brown, vocational agriculture instructor in Charles City. An honorary ten-year service key was presented to E. T. Latimore, vocational agriculture instructor of Middlesex.

The outgoing president, R. A. Bracey, itinerant agriculture instructor, delivered an address on the association's work during the past two years and other talks were made by C. B. Jeter and W. W. Craighead, area and district supervisor, respectively, both of the Virginia State Board of Education. Harry L. Robinson, E. L. Morse, and R. A. Bracey reported as delegates to the last American Vocational Association's Convention held in Boston, Mass.

The body also voted to send five delegates to Chicago, Ill. this Fall to represent them at the National Convention of the American Vocational Association.

Alabama Negro College Group Meets On Campus Here Tuesday

The Alabama Association of Negro Colleges held its one-day session at the Alabama State College on Tuesday with Dr. J. C. Blair, director of the Division of Negro Education, Alabama State Department of Education, as the chairman.

A coffee hour with Miss Edith L. Gibson, dean of women at the host institution, preceeded the opening session at 9 a.m. which featured a panel on the theme for the meeting, "Some Major Challenges and Opportunities of Administrative Leadership in the Negro Colleges of Alabama." Chairman for the panel was Dr. C. G. Gomillion, dean of students at Tuskegee Institute. Representatives of the administrative staffs of each college of the state participated. Dr. H. Councill Trenholm gave some summary observations.

Felicitations for the college were extended by Dr. J. Garrick Hardy, dean of freshmen. Dr. W. E. Anderson, dean of instruction at the local institution, is the secretary of the group and Dean O. B. Edwards of Oakwood College at Huntsville is treasurer.

Other institutions holding membership in the organization include Talladega College, Birmingham Baptist College, Selma University, Alabama A&M College, Lomax-Hannon College, Miles College and Stillman College.

School Principals Association Hears Dr. H. Council Trenholm

TUSKEGEE INSTITUTE, Ala., Jan. 22 — In a luncheon meeting of the Executive Committee of the Alabama Association of School Principals held here recently, Dr. H. Council Trenholm, President, Alabama State College, Montgomery, Alabama, addressed the group on "Our Professional Mission."

He opened by quoting President-elect Dwight D. Eisenhower in his farwell speech to his job and his colleagues at Columbia University. "We have the task to preach with conviction and teach with integrity."

Dr. Trenholm said, "As principals, we have an obligation to see and to foresee." He stated that as leaders, the principals should stand on the hill and see and seek what is best for those whom they would lead.

Mrs. Laura N. Jones, principal, Chambliss Children's House served as chairman for the host committee. She was assisted by Dr. A. J. Davis, Dean of the School of Education, Tuskegee Institute, and Dr. I. A. Derbigny, representing Tuskegee Institute. Mr. Leon Kennedy, principal of the Wenoah High School and President of the Alabama Association of School Principals, presided both at the business session and the luncheon meeting.

This represents the first meeting of this group on the Tuskegee Institute campus, and many courtesies were extended them during their brief stay. At the luncheon, each guest was presented a special souvenir made in the Division of Ceramics.

Consultants for the session were: Mr. E. Paul Jones, director of the Division of Negro Education, Jefferson County; Mr. Charles A. Brown, principal, Brighton High School, and Dr. Alonzo J. Davis.

The Executive Committee of the Alabama Association of School Principals consists of the following: Mr. Leon Kennedy, president; Mr. Bryant Foster, vice president; Mr. C. W. Orr, research secretary; Mr. A. R. Stickney, secretary - treasurer; Mr. J. T. Gains, parliamentarian.

Emma W. Winfield Is AAUW Member

LOS ANGELES, Calif., May 2[illegible] —Emma Watson Winfield, who formerly lived in Montgomery and was active in the religious and cultural life of this city was recently accepted as a member in the American Association of University Women, AAUW, with affiliation in the Imperial Valley Chapter of California.

She also holds membership in the YWCA and serves as advisor to a Y-Teen Group.

Mrs. Winfield received the Bachelor of Science Degree and Master of Science Degree in Education during the summers of 1947 and 1949 from the Alabama State College, respectively, and furthered her studies at Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill. the summer of 1950.

She also taught in several of the public schools in this city.

AMERICAN COLLEGES PUBLIC RELATIONS ASSOCIATION

Negroes P. 3 Attended Ga. Feb. 10-6-53

FOR THE FIRST TIME IN HISTORY Negroes participated freely in the meeting of the Fifth District of the American Colleges Public Relations Association. The district meeting was held at the University of Tennessee and at Farragut Hotel, Knoxville, October 1-3. Even though one or two race college and university publicists have attended district meetings and have been, in regular attendance at national meets, last week's sessions marked the first time that such attendance has been by invitation. The Fifth District of the Association comprises Florida, Georgia, Tennessee, Alabama and South Carolina. Among those attending the sessions were William Crump, public relations director at Savannah State College; Charles Trout, public relations director, Tuskegee Institute; Mrs. Mabel Crooks and Mrs. Helen Rose, Tennessee A. and I. University, and J. E. Bebder, public relations director, Knoxville College.

Librarians Refuse Bid From Miami

CHICAGO (ANP) — The American Library association, meeting in Chicago, Feb. 2-7, turned down a bid by Miami Beach, Fla., to hold its 1954 annual meeting there because the southern city would not guarantee its facilities to all delegates to the meeting, regardless of race.

Instead, the librarians will hold their 1954 meeting i n Minneapolis, Minn., where all members will be free to use all the facilities of the city.

Although the association had tentatively agreed to meet in Miami Beach at first, it did not make a final decision until it had received a report from the Miami Beach Convention Bureau on accommodations on a non-biased policy.

The questions to be settled were housing in hotels and transportation within the Miami Beach area. The Miami Beach hotel bureau reported that several of its hotels were willing to serve colored members, but not all of them.

College Administrators Debate Their Problems, Including Finance and Academic Freedom

By BENJAMIN FINE

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 10—Five hundred college presidents, deans and top-level administrators attending the thirty-ninth annual convention of the Association of American Colleges, composed of nearly 800 accredited liberal arts colleges and universities—virtually every such institution in the United States—considered various problems this week ranging from academic freedom to the inflationary costs of operating a college. Several of the association's spokesmen, for the first time to the knowledge of this reporter, expressed serious concern as to the ability of the privately controlled, independent liberal arts colleges to compete successfully with Government-supported municipal, state and land-grant institutions.

Last week in these columns a case study was presented of the financial problems confronting a more or less typical independent institution—Brown University. It was brought out here that the financial difficulties that colleges everywhere face are similar to those at Brown. There is no easy answer to the problems—the spiraling cost of operating and maintaining a college, the need for higher salaries for faculty members and the inability to raise still further the already record-high tuition rates.

However, the educators did hear an encouraging report on what is turning out to be an extremely important development in higher education—the formation of cooperative organizations in twenty-five states and two regions, New England and the Upper Tennessee Valley.

These state and regional groups—including as many colleges as Pennsylvania's thirty-five, or as few as Virginia's five—are banded together to approach private business for funds. In a sense, the groups are organized on the principle that has been utilized by the United Negro College Fund. President F. D. Patterson of Tuskegee Institute gave a report on this project, which is receiving nation-wide attention.

More than 350 colleges are already in the united-group program, and the number is steadily growing. Representatives from twelve of the twenty-seven cooperative organizations reported to the convention that they had seen about 1,550 concerns and had received gifts totaling $750,000 from 500 of them—an average of one out of three, which must be rated in any fund raiser's book as an excellent average.

This is just a beginning. Those sponsoring the cooperative approach to industrial donations were confident that within five years a minimum of $25,000,000 annually will be raised through this method. It must be remembered that this is over and beyond the amount that the colleges receive from other sources. The joint program does not replace the appeals being made by the colleges—it merely supplements them.

In the opinion of President Frank H. Sparks of Wabash College, chairman of the association's Commission on Colleges and Industry, the cooperative projects will presently reach into almost every state in the Union. Although the details have not yet been announced, it is known that the Ford Foundation is ready to support the movement by helping to set up a national clearing house for the state and regional college groups.

But finances were not the only problem that the college officials thrashed out. The question of academic freedom received attention. While the sessions were taking place, the newspapers carried reports of the forthcoming investigation of American colleges and universities by the House Committee on Un-American Activities. The educators were not disturbed at this move. They insisted that they had nothing to hide. Any investigation, if freely and impartially undertaken, would show the general public the high level upon which the academic world operates, the college leaders stressed.

The essence of the association's stand is expressed in this statement by its Commission on Academic Freedom and Academic Tenure:

"The American college was created by a free society for the higher education of its young men and women and the search for truth. While it holds to the spirit of free inquiry as a precondition of its work, it also views itself as none other than a part of that American society which gave it birth and which it now exists to help preserve * * *. The colleges are fully aware of their stake in the preservation of a free society and recognize their responsibility to protect its ideals against any and all movements to subvert them."

Another issue, raised at times in the past, came before the educators again—that is, who is to control the education of teachers, the liberal arts colleges or the schools of education and teachers' colleges?

It was brought out that the conflict is over teacher certification on the elementary and high school level. The liberal arts professors feel that they have been too much, if not entirely, excluded. Schools of education were founded by those who believed that training for teachers should be more extensive and systematic than that available in colleges of arts and sciences.

Effects of Controversy

Much harm has been done to the educational profession because of this controversy. In the past, participants have spent much of their time in bitter criticism of one another's faults, which has blinded them to one another's accomplishments. In the words of Dean Marten Ten Hoor of the University of Alabama:

"They have fought one another in Legislatures and often made partisans of its members, with bad results for education. They have confused the public. They have made partisans, and sometimes cynics, of their students."

Currently, however, much is going on which seems to be leading toward a settlement. In a number of universities the faculties of the school of education and of the college of arts and sciences are cooperating in the professional training of prospective teachers. To a greater extent than in the past, national organizations of liberal arts teachers are conducting systematic studies of their problems from the point of view of their colleagues in teachers' colleges.

Indeed, several institutions have created graduate fellowship programs in education, leading to certification. The candidates must be graduates of liberal arts colleges who need not have had professional education courses. Educators here were hopeful that this truce will lead before long to a lasting settlement of the controversy.

Stress on Unity

The importance of unity within the educational profession was stressed by one of the keynote speakers, President Francis E. Corkery of Gonzaga University. Only as a strongly united people, he said, can we hope to win our struggle for freedom. He warned against anything that would divide the nation at this crucial time. He deplored the speech made by President James B. Conant of Harvard last April, in which the growth of the private schools was cited as a threat to American unity and democracy.

The Harvard statement, said Dr. Corkery, is not only contrary to fact, but also is itself essentially divisive and unfortunate. America has grown to greatness and has become the stronghold of freedom and the hope of the free world, he said, under the influence of a dual, not a monolithic single system of education.

Various other educational problems were considered during the three-day sessions. Reports were presented on problems of minority groups, on liberal education, on the arts, on international cultural relations and on public relations. Few final solutions were obtained, but the college leaders meeting together had an opportunity to exchange views, discuss mutual problems and suggest means to improve critical conditions.

Educators Would Halt Sports Plan

SAN FRANCISCO, — (INS) — Negro educators meeting in San Francisco decided Saturday to ask private Negro colleges and universities to eliminate subsidies to athletes and to "de-emphasize" sports programs.

The decision was announced by Dr. Frederick D. Patterson, president of the United Negro College fund, a money-raising organization which helps support 31 colleges and universities.

Doctor Patterson's announcement followed a meeting of the group's executive committee which includes 28 college presidents.

He said the college presidents feel that students are exploited when schools have intensive athletic programs, adding:

"We feel that athletic scholarships should be eliminated. All athletes who get scholarships should receive them on the same basis as other students."

College athletic programs, Doctor Patterson said, should be broadened to include more students and the objective should be improving health, not winning games.

Executive Director W. J. Trent, Jr., reported to the committee that the UNCF collected $1,375,000 last year to aid the education of 25,000 students in member colleges. He said the goal this year will be $1,500,000—approximately 10 percent of the operating expenses of the schools.

South's Deans Consider Plan To Hold Talent

LSU Educator Urges $90 Millions Be Used For Financial Aid

TUSKEGEE, Ala., Nov. 22 (AP)—A 90-million dollar plan to keep the nation's teaching talent from moving into higher paid professions was outlined here today at the conference of Deans of Southern Graduate Schools.

Dr. Richard J. Russell, dean of the graduate school at Louisiana State University, told deans from 50 other southern institutions that education is big business, but "woefully underpaid."

He said some 10,000 college administrators and permanent faculty members should be granted an across-the-board annual raise of $5,000.

To go along with that, Dr. Russell said, some 1,000 "distinguished professorships" at $40,000 each should be set up to keep top educators in the nation's colleges.

Dr. Roger P. McCutcheon, dean of Tulane's Graduate School, spoke on "The American scholar."

The two-day meeting, devoted to staffing graduate programs with men of vision and competence, will conclude tomorrow.

Southern Deans Talk Fund Needs For Education

TUSKEGEE, Ala., Nov. 23 (AP)—Ways to add $90,000,000 to the nation's annual education budget were discussed here today by deans from 50 Southern colleges.

Dr. Richard J. Russell, president of the Conference of Deans of Southern Graduate Schools, called for the increase yesterday at the opening of the conference. He said the money is necessary to keep top educators from going into higher paid professions.

Members at the concluding session today heard a report on the graduate fellowship program at Oak Ridge Institute.

Dr. John Hope Franklin, professor of history at Howard University, outlined how the ideal of respect for the individual has played a part in the nation's history.

Must Use Our Weapons Wisely

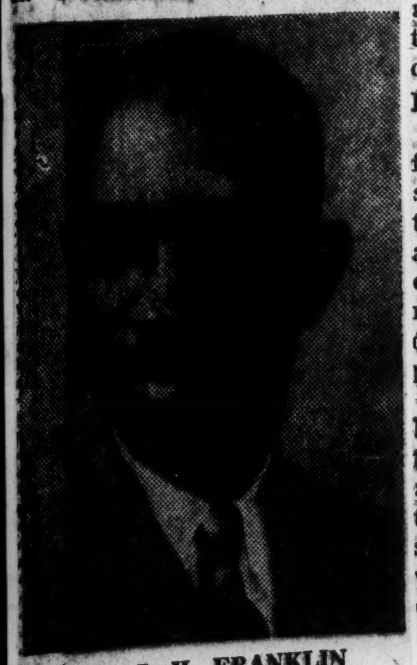
The Nation Faces A Crisis In Education

EDITOR'S NOTE: Following are excerpts from an interest-grasping, probing address entitled "The Current Crisis In Education and Freedom," delivered by Dr. John Hope Franklin, of Atlanta university, at a conference of educators in Memphis.

By Dr. John Hope Franklin, Ph. D.

The nature and scope of the educative process in a democracy has been a continuing problem since the beginning of the English colonial experiment in the New World.

Indeed, the value of education in a community faced with the practical problems of existence has been open to serious question, from time to time, throughout this nation's history.



DR. J. H. FRANKLIN

When one of the early sponsors of College of William and Mary emphasized the importance of supporting the institution in order to teach ministers who would help in saving the souls of the colonists, the attorney general had a reply that all to frequently represented the sentiment of his contemporaries:

DAMN THE SOULS'

"Damn the souls," he retorted, "raise tobacco."

This point of view did not always prevail. But the most that the enthusiastic supporters of education could hope for was to keep those institutions alive that had as their main purpose the training of a relatively small, select group of intellectual and religious leaders of the colonists.

As our country grew, the problem of education not only remained unsolved but became more complex, as our political institutions multiplied and became powerful and, ironically enough, as political power was confided to a larger and larger segment of the population.

INCLINED TO DRAG FEET

While our well-meaning, but frequently confused citizens have seldom challenged the importance of reading, vriting and arithmetic they are, at times, inclined to drag their feet when moving toward the endorsement of other aspects of the educational program...

Recently, for example, a member of the Board of education of the District of Columbia seriously attacked the health and recreational program of the public schools as unnecessary frills! It was as if he was saying: "How can one make a living learning to brush his teeth or learning how to swim?

...Such attitudes lead to the most merciless attacks on teachers and professors.

NOT AN APOLOGY

...One must hasten to the conclusion that this is an apology for whatever Philistinism there is among some educators or for unsound educational practices. Our profession has its share of them, just as every other profession. There is on defense for them, and we make our lot infinitely harder and we incite merciless attacks on our vulnerability, if we attempt to defend them.

...Without such support our educational institutions would have long since become mere superfluous decorations or, worse, tools of selfish, ill-meaning groups.

CRISIS SERIOUS

...We believe in the necessity and importance of a highly educated citizenry, but there exist, even among many who subscribe to this view in a democracy, the absence of a firm, unalterable conviction of the efficacy and value of education.

This has, in turn, created an ambivalence in the national regard for learning in this country ...The crisis is serious to the point of endangering our free institutions. It has made it almost impossible for schools and colleges to promote our own well-being and to improve our own social order.

The growth of local and national organizations devoted to the destructive criticism of the nation's schools and colleges has been one of the most significant educational (or anti-educational) developments of recent years. There are the Minute Women of the USA, the Friends of the Public schools, the National Council of American Education, the National Association of Pro-American and the Conferences of American Small Business organizations, among others.

A CHIEF POINT OF ATTACK

...These groups make textbooks one of their chief points of attack. They need not have special knowledge of history or its purpose to insist that a widely accepted textbook is filled with anti- and un-American doctrines...

In attacking Magruder's "American Government" one critic, in order to show that it was pro-communist, said that the book contained the statement, "The United States and the Soviet Union are equals fighting for world leadership."

The real statement was, "The U. S. and the Soviet Union, the two most powerful allies in World War II, are now rivals for world leadership."

IT'S BAD PRACTICE

The burning of even bad books is a past time of totalitarianism.

Another point of attack by such groups is what they call communist infiltration in schools. A sensational example is what the Committee of Ten did in Scarsdale, N. Y., where one of the best educational programs in the country flourishes. The group almost succeeded in terrorizing and intimidating the community with empty and unfounded charges that teachers consorted with communists, invited them to address their clases and school assembly...

PROBES SHOULD BE FAIR

One other group must mentioned. It is the official investigative bodies that make periodic inquiries into our educational institutions and kindred organizations ... No responsible citizen could deny the importance of sober constrictive inquires on the part of the custodians of the nation's welfare. They have a right to know about the activities of our schools and colleges and the persons responsible for them.

At the same time it must be conceded that such inquires should be based on sound understanding of the nature and function of educational institutions and place of education in a democratic society.

BLEAK TASK

...The results of the activities of individuals, organizations and official investigating groups have been unfortunate for our schools and colleges and one shrinks from the bleak task of speculating on what will be the effect of such activities in the future.

...This then constitutes the current crisis in the education and freedom: The attacks on our schools and colleges, which seem to be increasing, are depriving them of their freedom, without which they cannot successfully engage in the educative process.

CANNOT YIELD

...We who are engaged in the task of educating young Americans cannot yield to the hysteria and panic that will destroy what we are trying to do.

...We are, I think, justified in forming ourselves into a kind of counter-intellectual vigilante in order to save ourselves from those who would destroy us. Naturally, we shall not employ their methods of book burning, strict censorship, distortion and lying. It would not become us.

Furthermore, we have a stronger weapon, which we learned, by many years of experience, to use most effectively.

We have sanity, truth, and a strong faith in sheer strength of freedom and democracy.

The fearless use of these weapons can overcome the current crisis in education and freedom and will move man closer to his dream of peace at home and abroad, and good will toward men everywhere.

Educators ask end of racial listing

WASHINGTON — (NNPA)— The conference of land-grant college presidents last Wednesday was told that two asterisks are put beside the names of colored colleges in a directory of colleges and universities published annually by the United State Office of Education.

The statement was made by Dr. R. B. Atwood, president of South Carolina State college, who added that the asterisks denote that students attending the colleges so marked are predominantly colored.

Pointing out inconsistencies, he said Howard university is marked with two asterisks, although it has more white students than any other "colored" institution while Lincoln university, Central State of Ohio and Wilberforce are not so marked because they are located in states where racial segregation is not maintained.

Called Confusing

He also pointed out that Brandels university in Waltham, Mass., maintained and attended by Jews, has no identifying symbol.

In view of rapidly changing social pattern in education throughout the country, Dr. Atwood said, racial identification of predominant students at a school is "confusing, incorrect and perhaps injurious."

Dr. Atwood offered, and the conference adopted, a resolution calling upon the U. S. Office of Education to discontinue the use of symbols in the directory to designate schools with predominantly colored students.

Farmers Made Progress During Past Twenty Years

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA)—Viewed in terms of themselves, the colored farmer has made some progress over the 20-year period from 1930 to 1950, but relatively has lost ground, Ernest E. Neal of Tuskegee Institute told the morning session of Conference of Presidents of Land-Grant Colleges last Wednesday.

TENNESSEE VALLEY

In his report as director of the Land-Grant Colleges -Tennessee Valley Authority Cooperative study, Mr. Neal said this was true in spite of the fact that more prosperity has come to the farmer in the Tennessee Valley in the last decade than at any period of history.

The study was made of the "Effects of Social and Economic Changes upon the Rural Negro Population in the Tennessee Valley Region" under a two-year contract entered into by the Conference of Presidents of Land-Grant Colleges, with the TVA.

Seven of the land-grant colleges in the Tennessee Valley cooperated in the study. They were Alabama A and M College, Fort Valley, (Ga) State Colleges, Alcorn A and M (Mississippi) College, Virginia State College, Kentucky State College, Tennessee A and I State University, and North Carolina A and T State College.

LIVING STANDARDS

The findings of the study show that the amount of farm land and the size of farms have increased, cotton and single row-crop productions have received less emphasis resulting in crop diversification, and farm operators have a higher standard of living.

Another finding was that the rural colored population is decreasing at a rate faster than the white; and the rural inhabitants of the valley are leaving the farms for cities and non-farm areas at an increasing rate.

"Non-white farmer operators declined from 30 per cent of all operators in 1929 to 23 per cent of all operators in 1949, a percentage less of 7," the report stated adding:

"The percent of all farm land in non-white farms declined from 17 per cent to 12 per cent, or a loss of 5 per cent. The percent of total income from the sale of farm products decreased from 24 to 17 per cent on non white farms or a loss of 7 per cent.

WHITE FARM OPERATORS

"North Carolina was the only state in the region where Negro farm operators were on par with whites on averages farm income. In fact, the North Carolina Negro farm operator averaged $87 more than the average white farm operator."

As a result of the amazing growth demonstrated by liaison representatives of the participating colleges and the significance of the findings, TVA made a special grant to finance a regional conference held at Tuskegee Institute last June 27, 28 and 29.

LAND GRANT COLLEGES

The subject of this regional conference was "The Utilization of Social Science Research in Teacher Training at the Negro Land Grant Colleges in the Tennessee Valley Region."

Mr. Neal reported that a three year plan of work was developed to implement the TVA Land Grant College Social Studies project. The first year will be devoted to organizing a committee from the areas of teacher education, agricultural education, home economics and the social sciences.

The second year of the project will be concerned with the utilization of the research materials in the classrooms, and the third year with an evaluation of this educational experiment.

LOCAL PROBLEMS

Mr. Neal reported that TVA has provided funds to finance two more regional conferences and visits to the cooperating colleges to assist on local problems. The visits will be made by J. H. Daves of TVA.

Dr. E. Franklin Frazier, head of the sociology department at Howard University, reported on the social studies projects. Following Mr. Neal's report, remarks were made by Dr. Lawrence L. Durisch and Richard Niehoff, both of TVA. A discussion of the report was led by Dr. W. K. Payne of Savannah (Georgia) State College.

Officers elected for the 1953—54 term were: Dr. Robert P. Daniel, president of Virginia State College, president; Dr. B. C. Turner, president of South Carolina State College, vice president; Dr. B. C. Turner, president of South Carolina State College, vice president; Dr. R. B. Atwood, president of Kentucky State, secretary; Dr. C. V. Troup, president of Fort Valley (Georgia) State, assistant secretary, and Dr. Felton G. Clark, president of Southern University, treasurer.

Three new members of the executive committee elected were President G. L. Harrison of Langston, President S. D. Scruggs of Lincoln (Missouri), and President Rufus E. Clement of Atlanta University.

PUBLISHED YEARLY

Dr. Atwood told the conference that two astericks are put besides the name of colored colleges listed in a directory of colleges and universities published yearly by the United States Office of Education.

These asterisks denote that the students attending the colleges so marked are predominantly colored.

RACIAL SEGREGATION

Pointing out inconsistencies, he said Howard University is marked with two asterisks, although it has more white students than any other "colored" institution while Lincoln University, Central State of Ohio, and Wilberforce are not so marked because they are located in states where racial segregation is not maintained.

He also pointed out that Brandeis University in Waltham, Massachuestts— maintained and attended by News— has no identifying symbol.

In view of the rapidly changing social pattern in education throughout the country, Dr. Atwood said, racial identification of predominant students at a school is "confusing, incorrect and perhaps injurious."

Dr. Atwood offered and the conference adopted, a resolution calling upon the Office of Education to discontinue the use of symbols in the directory to designate schools with predominantly colored students.

Dr. Daniel explained to the conference arrangements for a special leadership conference audio-visual education in which the land grant college presidents accepted an invitation to participate last year.

The conference will be held in an audio-visual education building being constructed at Virginia State, probably in the latter part of February. The building will be named for the late Dr. Luther Foster, who preceded Dr. Daniel as president of Virginia State.

Dr. Daniel said white institutions have been having such conferences for several years, but the colored colleges were never invited to participate in such training.

As a consequence, he said, he got in touch with Teaching Film Custodian Inc., an affiliate of the Motion Picture Producers Association of America and his proposal for an audio-visual education conference at Virginia State was accepted.

The land-grant college presidents approved Dr. Atwood to be their representative at the inauguration of Dr. Luther Foster as president of Tuskegee Institute.

The afternoon session last Wednesday was held at the School of Engineering at Howard University. Dean L. K. Downing of the Howard School of Engineering acted as moderator of a panel discussion on "Needs and Problems in the Fields of Engineering Education and Employment of Negroes."

Participating in the discussion were James C. Evans, civilian assistant to the Secretary of Defense, who spoke on "Opportunities in the Teaching profession;" Benson Dutton, director of the division of engineering at Tennessee State, "Types of Training Programs Best Suited to Meet the Opportunities;" J. H. Daves, TVA, "Opportunity in TVA and Other Government Projects," and Julian A. Thomas, of the National Urban League, "Employment Trends and Next Steps."

The general discussion was led by Dr. Scruggs.

The land-grant college presidents were the guests at a dinner session last Wednesday evening of Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, president of Howard University and his administrative staff, in the Trustees' Dining Room at Howard.

DEPENDENT UPON FACILITIES:

College presidents favor engineering restrictions

WASHINGTON (NNPA)— The Conference of Presidents of Land-Grant Colleges, in their closing session last Thursday, went on record favoring engineering education only where adequate physical facilities, equipment, and properly qualified teachers are available.

The question of whether such training should be given at the land-grant colleges was raised earlier in the three-day annual meeting of the land-grant college presidents.

All sessions, except one, were held in a conference room at the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. One of the afternoon sessions was held in the Engineering Building at Howard University.

Seek Co-operation

In a set of resolutions, adopted before the meeting ended, the conference asked for the co-operation of secondary school administrators, state departments of educaton and other groups in establishing a program for adequate preparationn of prospective engineering students.

Howard university is the only colored institution in the country with an accredited school of engineering Eight of the land-grant colleges offer engineering courses.

The resolutions also proposed that the land-grant colleges reevaluate their technical education programs to distinguish any courses which may be offered for craftsmen, technicians or engineers, and that clear distinctions be made for programs in industrial education, industrial arts, mechanic arts, trades and industries, and engineering.

Also adopted was a resolution calling upon the United States Office of Education to stop using symbols to indicate the colored land - grant colleges in its annual directory of institutions of higher education in this country.

The conference also went on record as commending "the positive position" taken by President Eisenhower in supporting an enlarged program of international exchange scholarships "that may relate educational exchanges to fields of practical experience as well as academic study."

State Negro Educators to Gather Here

More than 250 Florida Negro public school supervisors and principals will gather in Miami Thursday and Friday for their annual conference on education.

The Dade County Principals' Council will be host to the educators who come from school systems throughout the state. Theme of the conference is "Dade County Works Cooperatively for Child Development."

This is the 21st annual state conference. In previous years it was held at Florida A and M College in Tallahassee but the group this year decided on a "study tour" to keep abreast of educational trends throughout Florida.

The conference's first session will be from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Thursday in the School Administration building. Friday the visitors will tour George W. Carver and Booker T. Washington schools in the morning and meet at the administration building in the afternoon.

Mrs. Alma Brooks, principal of Bunche Park Elementary, is president of the host principals' council.

425 From 17 States At Meet

COLUMBIA, S. C.—Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune, president-emeritus, Bethune-Cookman college, Daytona Beach, Fla., and distinguished leader, led a list of featured speakers who addressed a conference on "Youth and Racial Unity Through Educational Opportunity," held at Allen university here Dec. 29-31.

The confab was sponsored by 425 persons from 17 Southern and border states and the District of Columbia, headed by Dr. H. D. Bollinger, secretary, Department of College and University Life, Board of Education, Methodist Church, Nashville, Tenn. Sponsors include students of faculty members from 162 Southern colleges and universities.

Ben Binkley, a graduate of Vanderbilt university, now a theology student at Emory university, Ga., is conference chairman.

Other speakers were: Dr. Albert E. Barnett, Professor of New Testament, Emory, university, Ga.; Dr. Herman H. Long, director Race Relations, department, American Missionary association, Fisk university, Nashville, Tenn.; President J. W. Marshall, Wayland Baptist college, Plainview, Texas; and Aubrey Williams, editor and publisher of Southern Farm and Home, Montgomery, Ala.

Chairmen of the four conference commissions are: Miss Patricia Smathers, Student Berea college, Ky.; Miss Wiletta Moore, student assistant to the president of Philander Smith college, Little Rock, Ark.; Carl Schowengerdt, president Methodist Youth of Mo., Senior Central college, Fayette, Mo.; Grady H. Donald, president Inter-Seminary Movement, Student American Baptist Theological Seminary, Nashville, Tenn.

Others who served on the conference commissions include: Paul Franke, Birmingham Southern; Molly O'Steen, University of Alabama; Mary E. Weaver, Talladega, Ala.; Dan Byron Dobbs, University of Arkansas; Oliver N. Green, Morris Brown, Ga.; David P. McMullin, College of the Bible, Ky.; Richard Avant, Morgan State, Md.; Darnell C. McCauley, Livingstone, N. C.; Samuel Thomson, Virginia State.

Also: Ed White, Oklahoma A and M; Barbara Loadholt, Columbia; John J. Duffy, University of S. C.; Robert Ewing, University of Tenn. Law School; Leonard Weeks, North Texas State; Barbara O'Cele Thompson, Texas Southern university.

Southwide Youth Group Asks End Of School Segregation

U. S. State Officials Called On To Halt Educational Jimcrow

COLUMBIA, S. C. — (INS) — Federal and State officials were called on Wednesday to "act immediately to eliminate segregation in education."

The plea was contained in a resolution adopted by delegates to a southwide conference on youth and racial integration at Allen University in Columbia.

The resolution will be sent to the President and attorney general of the United States and "to governors of all states which have compulsory segregation laws in education."

The petition, which was adopted at the close of a two-day session attended by delegates from colleges throughout the south, read:

"Wheeras there are before the Supreme Court of the United States cases pending on the constitutionality of enforced segregated education in Delaware, Kansas, South Carolina, the District of Columbia and Virginia;

"Whereas the decision rendered by the court will have great bearing upon the very existence of democracy within the boundary of the United States, which must stand today as the Democratic stronghold in the world;

"Whereas we, as youth, will be vitally affected by this decision;

"Whereas equal opportunities which are fundamental to a Democratic society can not exist in a segregated system;

"Whereas a segregated system is founded upon undemocratic laws which are an antithesis to the substance and spirit of our constitution, we delegates...attending the southwide conference on youth and racial integration through educational opportunities convened at Columbia do hereby petition that you act immediately to eliminate segregation in education."

1000 Negro educators attend Mobile parley

MOBILE, Ala., April 10—(AP)—C. W. Hayes, director of Negro public schools at Birmingham, will address the final night session of the Alabama branch of the National Congress of Colored Parents and Teachers tonight.

Departmental reports of various aspects of public school education were heard by more than 1000 Negro educators and school workers attending the convention yesterday.

A fish fry at the Mobile County training school at Plateau will entertain the group tonight.

A memorial service and committee reports will conclude the assembly tomorrow morning.

Parents, Teachers Resolve Legislative Session Needed Regardless Of High Court

BILOXI, Miss. (Special) — Some 200 delegates representing 63,351 members of the Mississippi Congress of Parents and Teachers passed a resolution Wednesday requesting Governor Hugh White to call a special session of the Mississippi Legislature whether or not the United States Supreme Court hands down a decision on the segragation issue.

The delegates, in concluding sessions of a two day meeting here, also endorsed a resolution introduced by Hendrix Dawson of Jackson, director of defense for Mississippi, to support the present program of civil defense in the state.

Dr. Hart Douglas, director of the College of Education of the University of Colorado, in the principle address of the convention, reminded the delegates that all aspects of children's growth must be considered.

"We must keep an eye on the individual," he said. "You cannot teach a class because the class doesn't have a nervous system." He decried a lack of vertical ties between age groups in a tiered society.

Dr. Douglas also added that the beginnings of decay in Western civilization similar to those in ancient Rome were apparent, and urged that such decay be halted with schools that ft the needs of children.

J. E. Baxter, assistant superintendent of Meridian's city schools; S. A. Brasfield, of the State Department of Education; Dr. Patty Dowell, of Mississippi Southern College; J. M. Ewing, legislative chairman of the Mississippi Educaton Association; Marguerite Jenkins, president of the Mississippi Department of Classroom Teachers; Edward Khayat, Jackson county supervisor; Dr. Willaim G. McCain, member of the Jackson city school board, and two youngsters, Lucy Whitten and Hodding Carter III, members of the Greenville High school senior class, answered questions on education. Mrs. Ralph Hester of Jackson served as moderator.

The two Greenville students set the audience on its ears with the reminder that children do not want sarcasm and that they are eager for a system which will turn out well-rounded citizens.

Brasfield listed health education, citizenship education and communication as the real essentials of education. He asserted the elementery schools of the state were 20 years ahead of the high schools.

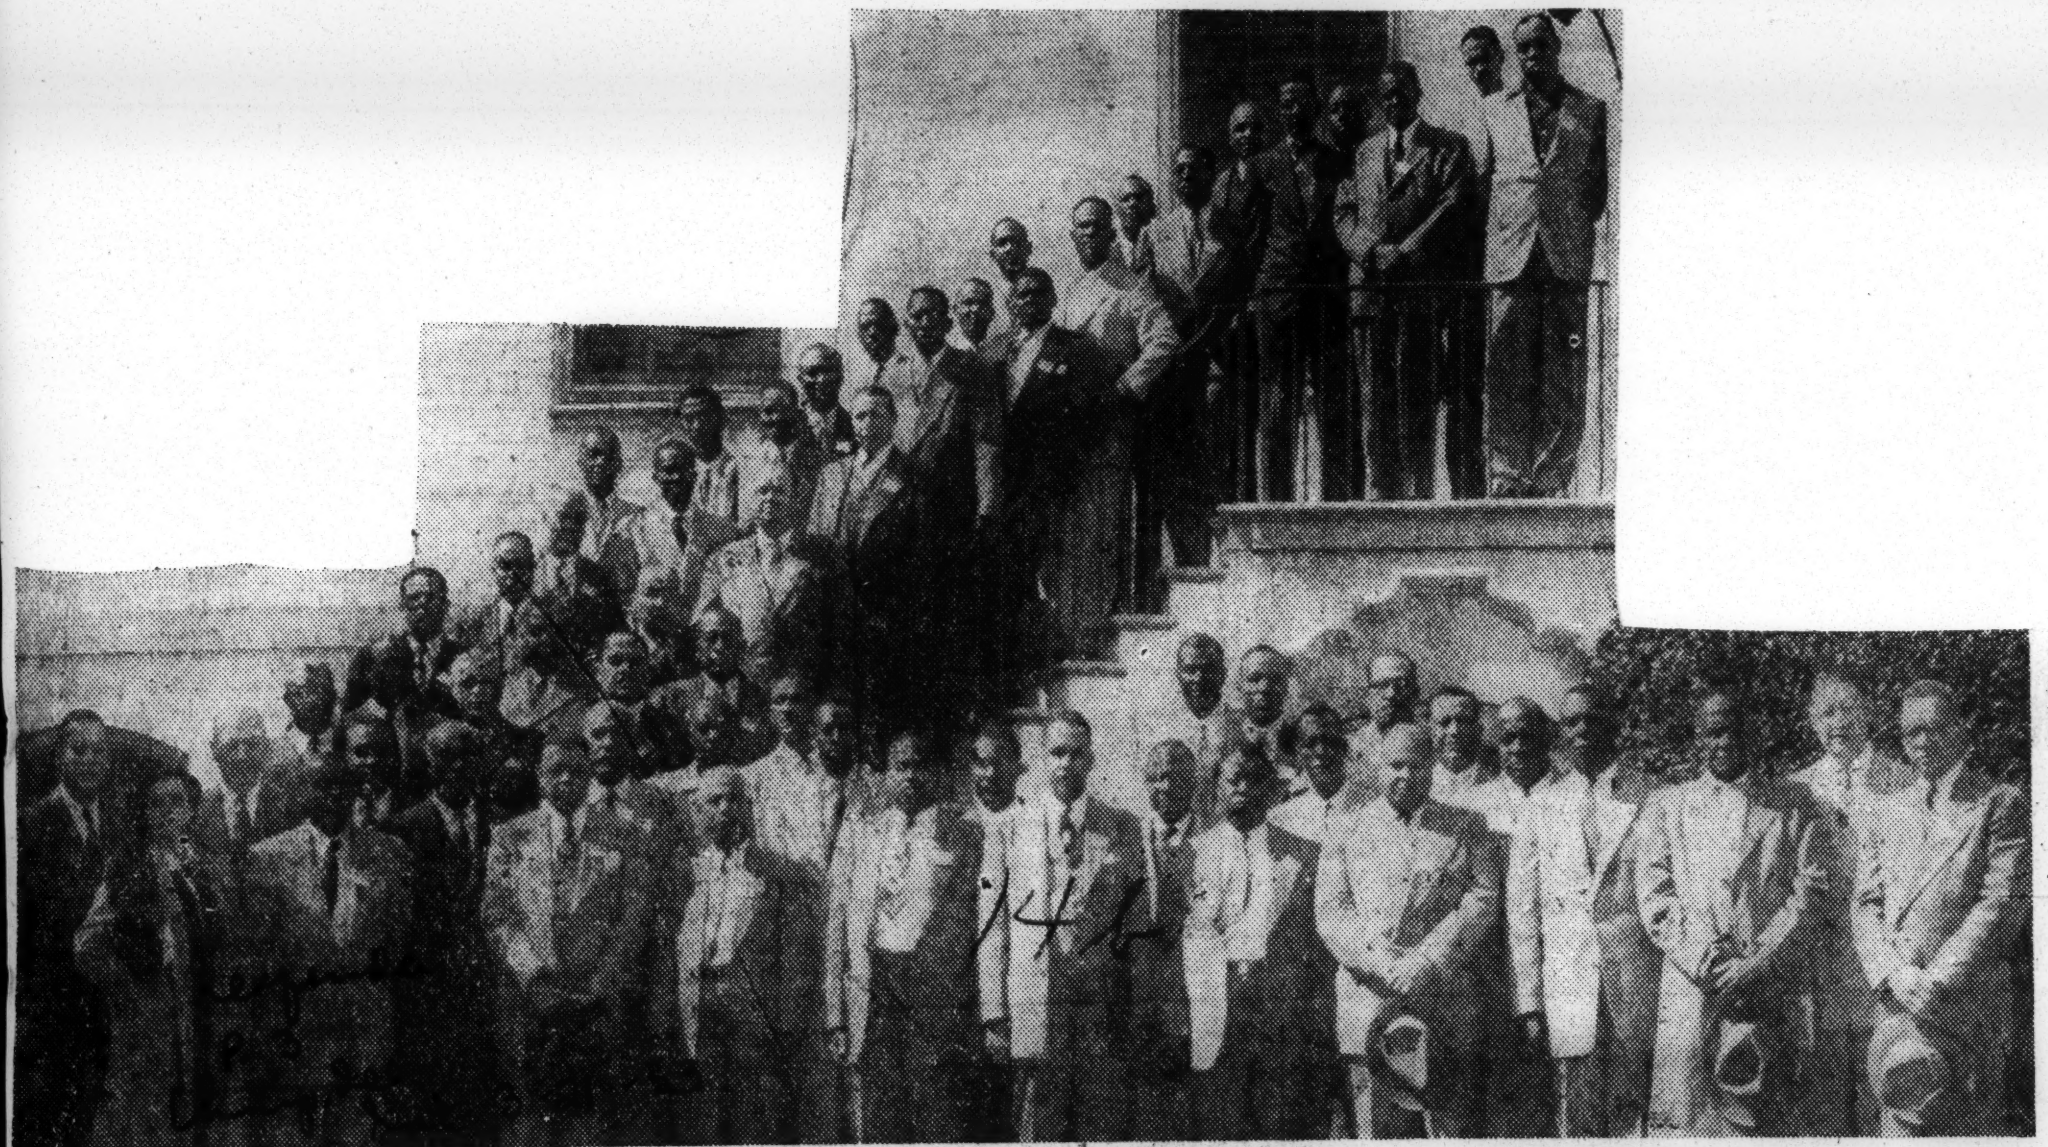
Other questions to the panel included the possibility of the passage of the proposed program of the legislative recess study committee, acceleration of the brilliant child, federal aid to education, problems on equalization, and what the school districts can do for themselves.

White has said repeatedly he would not call the lawmakers into session before the high court rules on the constitutionality of providing separate schools for Negroes and whites. The issue is pending before the court now.

Tomorrow the governor meets with the entire membership of the 18-man legislative committee that drafted the equalization program with a view toward final polishing of the measure.

When the committe turned the final draft of its report over to the governor it urged an immediate session for enactment of the equalization program.

DILLARD UNIVERSITY'S WORKSHOP FOR HIGH SCHOOL PRINCIPALS



WORKSHOP FOR PRINCIPALS — More than 60 educators from nine states attend Dillard University's Workshop for High School Principals. Meeting was fourth in a series of five such conferences held on the university campus in New Orleans. Coming from Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Tennessee, Texas, Florida, Georgia, Alabama and Oklahoma, the principals had as consultants: Dr. W. G. Brink, specialist in secondary education, Northwestern university; Colonel Campbell C. Johnson,, assistant to the director of Selective Service, Washington, D. C.; Dr. Charles H. Thompson, dean of the graduate school, Howard university; Dr. Ellsworth Tompkins, specialist for high schools, U. S. Office of Education.

Educators Hold Annual Meeting

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Dr. Willa B. Player, vice president of Bennett college, Greensboro, N.C. and Dean B. A. Quarles, of Dillard university, New Orleans, will participate in a panel discussion on "In-Service Training of Faculty Members," at the 10th annual institute for higher education, here July 28-30th.

Other members of the panel will be Dr. Virgil C. Eady, dean of Emory Junior college, Oxford, Ga.; Dr. LeRoy A. Martin, president of Tennessee Wesleyan college, Athens, Tenn., and Dr. Lewis B. Van Winkle, dean of McKendree college, Lebanon, Ill.

Among the other participants on the institute program will be, Dr. J. Leonard Farmer, of Huston-Tillotson college, Austin, Texas, and D-r. James S. Thomas, associate secretary of the Methodist board of education.

LAND GRANT COLLEGES CONFERENCE

Future Of The Negro Land Grant Colleges

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C.

THE CONFERENCE OF Presidents of Land Grant Colleges held an interesting three-day annual session here last week with the vision before them of a Supreme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in public education.

The member colleges of the conference are the state-supported institutions maintained for colored students n the seventeen states of the South which have dual school systems.

The original land-grant colleges were established for white students in pursuance of the First Morrill Act of 1862, giving public lands to the states and territories to endow colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts.

MR. LAUTIER

The colored land-grant colleges were the result of compromise over the issue of separate schools. In 1890 the Congress passed the Second Morrill Act giving a portion of the proceeds from the sale of public lands for the more complete endowment and support of the land-grant colleges.

The Second Morrill Act provided that "no money shall be paid under this act to any state or territory for the support and maintenance of a college where a distinction of race or color is made in the admission of students, but the establishment and maintenance of such colleges separately for white and colored students shall be held to be a compliance with the provisions of this act if the funds received in such State or Territory be equitably divided."

Ths provision was undoubtedly a sanction by the Federal Government of racial segregation through state action.

THE COLORED LAND-GRANT colleges have filled a role in the education of colored people in the South, despite the meager support they have been given by the states and the inequitable distribution of Federal funds between them and the "white" land-grant colleges. They have taught a great many colored people how to read and write. They have trained teachers and craftsmen. The future of these colleges now hangs in the balance.

Thanks to the Supreme Court and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, state universities are now open to the graduate and professional level in every state of the country except South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi.

RACIAL SEGREGATION IN ELEMENTARY and high schools is challenged in five school segregation cases which are to be argued a second time before the Supreme Court Dec. 7. If the high court should rule that racial segregation in public schools is unconstitutional, the whole system of segregated education, from the kindergarten to the graduate and professional level, is doomed.

In such circumstances, colored land-grant colleges face a dim future. But they need not be liquidated. Statesmanship on the part of educators can find for them a useful place in a field of wholly unsegregated education.

But the colored land-grant college must not be used to short circuit any mandate of the Supreme Court outlawing segregation in publicly supported institutions. For that reason, it would be unwise for these institutions to seek to duplicate the work of the "white" land-grant colleges and state-supported universities by offering the same courses that the undergraduate colleges are offering and adding graduate and professional schools.

DR. ROBERT P. DANIEL, PRESIDENT of Virginia State, and Dr. G. L. Harrison, president of Langston University, apparently recognize that such an effort would not succeed. Dr. Daniel revealed that he is quietly working with state-supported institutions in his state to get colored students seeking graduate or professional educafion not offered at his school admitted to the "white" state-supported institutions in Virginia.

These are hopesful signs that the presidents of the colored land-grant colleges are aware of social changes in the field of education and the need for specialization of their schools in the field of unsegregated education which is bound to come.

What Should Presidents Of Negro Colleges Do?

Should They Expand Technical Training Or Urge Attendance at 'White' Schools?

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA)—The Conference of Presidents of Land Grant Colleges, in their closing session last Thursday, went on record as favoring engineering education only where adequate physical facilities, equipment, and properly qualified teachers are available.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA)—Presidents of colored land-grant colleges are divided in their opinions as to whether they should inaugurate technical training programs, expand existing ones, or urge students desiring such training to apply for admission to "white" state-supported universities.

This division was disclosed at the opening session of the Conference of Presidents of Land Grant Colleges held in a conference room of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare last Tuesday.

Under decisions of the United States Supreme Court in the Sipuel-Fisher, Sweatt and McLaurin cases, colored students must be admitted to the "white" state-supported university if the courses they desire to take are not offered at the corresponding colored institution, or if the course offered at the colored institution is not equal to that afforded white students at the "white" state university.

Howard university is the only colored school with an accredited school of engineering. Engineering courses are offered at eight of the colored land-grant colleges and they have a total enrollment between 700 and 800 students, representing about six-tenths of one per cent of the engineering students in the United States.

The division of opinion arose after J. M. Marteena, dean of the school of engineering at North Carolina Agricultural and Technical College, addressed the land-grant college presidents on the subject, "Programs and Resources in Engineering Education in the Colleges for Negroes."

No New Schools

Dr. Marteena pointed out that no new engineering schools are planned in any of the colored land-grant colleges.

His conclusion was that more emphasis is needed on guidance if the colored colleges are expected to turn out more engineers.

As a result of his survey, he said, he found very little interest in expansion of facilities for teaching engineering. He said the colleges probably do not have enough funds to support what they already are doing and are not likely to get all they need for engineering programs of their own.

Dr. Marteena also pointed out that there is a shortage of basic offerings to support engineering courses in college, a shortage of sufficiently trained faculty personnel, and inadequacies in buildings and equipment.

May Train Technicians

It was suggested that the colleges might build up technical institutes, which would not produce engineers but engineering technicians wanted by industry in a ratio of about six to one engineer.

Dr. Robert P. Daniel, president of Virginia State college, said there is no way to develop a school of engineering at Petersburg, Va., in the time it ought to be done.

As a consequence, he said he has pressed for admission of qualified colored students wanting engineering to Virginia Polytechnic Institute, where there was one colored student admitted this year.

White schools are developing on a regional basis, Dr. Daniel asserted, and are not competing to have the biggest schools. With Virginia State located between Howard university and North Carolina A. and T., he said he proposed to do the same thing by getting state aid for students who wished to attend either Howard or A. and T.

Dr. Daniel revealed that the state of Virginia is now giving scholarship aid to Virginia students who wish to attend A. and T.

Dr. Felton G. Clark, president of Southern university, said that the Baton Rouge, La., institution does not have the facilities for teaching engineering. He posed the question of whether it would not be better to ask state boards of education to develop some good technical high schools rather than attempt to offer engineering courses at the land-grant schools.

Langston Has No Plans

Dr. George L. Harrison, president of Langston university, said his school had no plans for developing engineering courses because colored students in Oklahoma can go to the University of Oklahoma or Oklahoma A. and M. college.

He explained that the State Board of Regents for Higher Education has the responsibility for determining curriculum offerings and have said that no state school can offer any courses without approval of the board a year in advance.

If a student attends Langston one semester and wants to transfer to the University of Oklahoma, Dr. Langston said, he can do so, if there is any difference in the

Dr. J. F. Drake, president of the Alabama A. and M. college, said he has appropriated money for construction and equipment of trade schools, which means the colleges will have to do something."

He added that the equipment in the Alabama land-grant colleges is beter than that in the trade schools in the land-grant schools have got to move into some phase of technical training program," he said.

Alabama is one of the few states which have not yet complied with Supreme Court decisions and opened the doors of their graduate and professional schools to colored students.

sity, said: "What is very definitely needed is to see that there is a clear understanding of what the different areas are and, whatever label under which we are carrying on a program, let us try to see to it that it comes up to acceptable standards."

The panel discussion of Dr. Martens's address was led by F. J. [illegible], director of the division of technical science at West Virginia State college.

Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president of Atlanta university, an associate member, and president of the conference, presided at the opening session.

At the afternoon session last Tuesday, Dr. John Lovell Jr., and D Anne Cooke, both of Howard university, discussed "Offerings of the College Repertory Players," and Dr. T. S. Williams, dean of the School of Veterinary Medicine at Tuskegee institute, discussed the offerings of his school.

Dr. Henry H. Armsby, chief for engineering education, United States Office of Education, addressed the conference on "Cooperative Engineering Education Programs." The discussion of his address was led by Dr. A. V. Boswell, vice president of Tennessee A. and I. college.

UNDER INTEGRATED SYSTEM:

Land-grant colleges may face an uncertain future

By LOUIS LAUTIER
For the NNPA News Service

The Conference of Presidents of Land Grant Colleges held an interesting three-day annual session here last week with the vision before them of a supreme court decision outlawing racial segregation in public education.

The member colleges of the conference are the state-supported institutions maintained for colored students in the 17 states of the South which have dual school systems.

The colored land grant colleges were the result of compromise over the issue of separate schools. In 1890 Congress passed the second Morrill Act giving a portion of the proceeds from the sale of public lands for the more complete endowment and support of the land grant colleges.

Morrill Provisions

The second Morrill Act provided that "no money shall be paid under this act to any state or territory for the support and maintenance of a college where a distinction of race or color is made in the admission of students, but the establishment and maintenance of such colleges separately for white and colored students shall be held to be a compliance with the provisions of this act if the funds received in such state or territory be equitably divided."

The colored land-grant colleges have filled a role in the education of colored people in the South, despite the meager support they have been given by the states and the inequitable distribution of federal funds between them and the "white" land-grant colleges.

The future of these colleges now hangs in the balance. Thanks to the supreme court and the NAACP, state universities are now open on the graduate and professional level in every state of the country except South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi.

Face Dim Future

If the high court should rule that racial segregation in public schools is unconstitutional, the whole system of segregated education, from the kindergarten to the graduate and professional level, is doomed.

In such circumstance, colored land-grant colleges face a dim future. But they need not be liquidated. Statesmanship on the part of educators can find for them a useful place in a field of wholly unsegregated education.

DEANS, REGISTRARS DISCUSS INTEGRATION:

Good Colleges To Survive; Poor Ones Have To Go

14 b

By SHIRLEY KYLE

BALTIMORE

Only "good" colleges and schools will survive the present era of integration.

This is the general opinion of the 89 college deans and registrars throughout the country who met last week at Morgan State College for the 27th annual conference of the National Association of Collegiate Deans and Registrars.

The conference started Wednesday morning and went into its final business session at 2:30 Friday afternoon in Hurt Gymnasium. Its theme was "Education and its Promise for the Future."

Dr. Ira DeA. Reid, professor of social science at Haverford College, told the delegates that "poor" colleges must go.

Speaking at a public session of the conference, Wednesday evening, he stated that the changes in American education today are not based on race and equality, but on the principle of quality.

Raise College Standards

Dean Paul E. Collins of LeMoyne College, president of the association, stressed the need for colleges and schools to raise their standards.

"New positions and wealth are opening up for our graduates today," he said in his opening address to the delegates Wednesday afternoon.

"We hope not only to duplicate the white schools and to integrate them, but to find a permanent place in education for our schools," he asserted.

Integration Cheaper

The deans say that the high price of education will drop when schools are integrated. "The states are spending too much money on segregation," they claim.

Agreeing with Dr. Reid and Dean Collins, they feel that schools that fail to meet the educational standards will go out of business. Many of the poorer schools may be reconverted into welfare institutions and resorts, they said.

New Officers

The new slate of officers elected on Friday included:

Registrar Edward Wilson, Morgan State College, president; Dean R. A. Carter, Alamba A. and M. College, first vice-president; Registrar C. D. NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF PERSONNEL DEANS AND ADVISERS TO MEN AND WOMEN IN NEGRO INSTITUTIONS

College Deans Set For Parley

PETERSBURG, Va. — Over 100 personnel deans are expected to attend the annual conference of the Association of Deans of Women and Advisers to Girls and the National Association of Personnel Deans and Advisers to Men in Negro Institutions to be held this year at Virginia State College.

The conference, using as its theme "New Horizons in Effective Living," will meet from April 1-3. Dr. Ann A. Hedgeman of the Federal Security Agency is slated to give the first major address at the first general session.

Among other persons who will address the conference or who will serve as leaders and consultants will be Mrs. Mary Riley, counselor for women, Florida A. and M. College; Dean Emma O. Gray; dean of Women, Paine College; Mrs. Thomasina Norford, Minority Groups Division, Department of Labor; C. J. Dunn, dean of Students, Alabama State College, and Miss Louise M. Latham, dean of Women, North Carolina College at Durham.

DEANS MEET — More than 60 personnel deans attended the annual meeting of the Association of Deans of Women and Advisers to Girls and the National Association of Personnel Deans and Advisers to Men held at Virginia State college, Petersburg, recently. Personnel deans are shown with Dr. R. P. Daniel, center, president of the college.

Men And Women College Deans In Three-Day Va. State Session

PETERSBURG, Va. — More than 60 personnel deans attended the annual meeting of the Association of Deans of Women and advisers to Girls in Colored Schools and the National Association of Personnel Deans and Advisers to Men in Colored Educational Institutions held here at Virginia State college, April 1-3.

The first general session convened at 9 a.m. on April 2 with Dr. Sadie Yancey of Howard university presiding.

Mrs. Hedgeman Speaks

Dr. Ann Arnold Hedgeman, of the Federal Security Agency, delivered the main address, stressing importance of the conference theme, "New Horizons in Effective Living."

The conference offered workshops in four areas: Moral and Relgious, Cultural—Group Living, Vocational, and Civic.

Among those who participated in the workshops were Mrs. Thomasina Norford of the Department of Labor; Dr. Margaret Adams of Shaw University; Mr. Wiley A. Hall, executive secretary, Richmond Urban League and Mrs. Mary Riley of Florida A. and M. College.

Public Session

At the public general session on Thursday night, April 2, Mr. W. H. Gamble, dean of men, North Carolina A. and T. college, presided.

This assembly was greeted by Dr. J. H. Jonnston, dean of Virginia State college. Mr. C. Johnson Dunn, president of the Association of Deans of Men responded: and Miss Louise Latham, president of the Association of Deans of Women, delivered the main address.

The public meeting was followed by a social hour in Branch Hall Recreation Room sponsored by the Greek letter organizations of Virginia State College.

Reports From Workshops

The highlights of the Friday morning session were: (1) the reports from the workshops and (2) a Student Panel which presented clearly and effectively views on "Student Expectations of Aids in Effective Living."

Three seniors and one sophomore participated: Miss Vivian Verdell, Miss Felicia Lowndermon, Isacc Peterson and Samuel Thompson, all of Virginia State college.

The final conference session was an All Association Banquet at which Dean Valletta H. Bell presided. Mr. Samuel A. Madden was toastmaster. The main address at the banquet was delivered by Dr. Robert P. Daniel, president of Virginia State college.

TSU Dean Named NAPB President

HOUSTON — Dr. James Sprott, dean of men, Texas Southern university, was elected to head the National Association of Personnel Deans for the 1953-54 school year. He was elected in the organization's annual meeting last month at Virginia State college, Petersburg, Virginia.

According to Dr. Sprott the purpose of the NAPD is to provide an opportunity for learning new techniques and methods for bettering the social, cultural, and economic development of college men.

This year's topic was "New Horizons of Effective Living" with emphasis on selecting and training youth for future occupations.

Mrs. Thomasina Norford, a U. S. Department of Labor consultant on minority group problems, and Mrs. Anna Hedgeman, executive assistant to the director of federal security agent, were special conference consultants.

C. M. Hoard, Lincoln university (Mo.) was elected vice president; R. S. Turner, Allen university, secretary; and William Nicks, Morehouse, treasurer.

Next year's meeting will be at Howard university in Washington, D. C.

P-TA Elects Fla. Woman

PRINCESS ANNE, Md. (ANP) Mrs. Mayme Williams of Miami, Fla., was elected president of the National Congress of Colored Parents and Teachers at its twenty-seventh annual convention.

Elected with Mrs. Williams were Mrs. Odessa McKinney, Alabama, vice president; Miss Jeanette Chase, Maryland, secretary; Mrs. Ethel Tight, Georgia, assistant secretary; L. A. Toney, West Virginia, treasurer. Some 306 delegates, representing 160,000 members in nineteen states and the District of Columbia, attended the meeting.

The National Education Association, Washington, D. C., has announced the retirement of Dr. Willard E. Givens, (right, seated) its executive secretary since 1935. Dr. Givens will be succeeded August 1 by Dr. William G. Carr, NEA associate secretary for the past eleven years. Dr. Carr is seen, at the left, conferring with Dr. Givens and Moss H. Kendrix, NEA assistant in public relations.

A well known educator, Dr. Carr has been with the NEA since 1929. A native Californian, the executive secretary elect holds A. B., A. M., and Ph. D. degrees from Stanford University. He will continue policies initiated by Dr. Givens to assure the full participation of Negro teachers in the program of the NEA.

Dr. Givens, NEA Head Retires

Washington, D. C.—The National Education Association last week announced the appointment of Dr. William G. Carr, the NEA associate secretary, as successor to Dr. Willard E. Givens, who will retire August 1 after 18 years as NEA executive secretary.

Elect Ramcee Prexy To Top NEA Position

Detroit, Mich.—The National Education Association elected Dr. George W. Gore, Jr., president of Florida A. and M. College, Tallahassee, one of its eleven national vice-presidents during the closing session of its 90th annual convention and 31st delegate assembly in Detroit last week.

Dr. Gore, who is a life member of the NEA, has been active in the association for several years. His election as a vice-president of the 95-year-old professional association marked the first time that a Negro had tried for a national post in the organization. He was unopposed in his candidacy.

Several Negro educators have, however, served the NEA in positions on major standing committees and commissions. Dr. John W. Davis, president, West Virginia State College, Institute, is retiring chairman of the association's National Commission for the Defense of Democracy of Education through Education. This commission's reports and findings were prominent in the recent convention.

Dr. Ralph W. Bunche, of United Nations fame, is a member of the NEA's important Educational Policies Commission, while Dr. R. E. Clement, Atlanta University president, serves on the association's standing committee on International Relations. A large number of Negroes carried participating roles in the 1952 convention.

TO NEA MEETING: Mrs. Gladys Noel Bates, of this City, who left by plane Saturday to attend a Meeting of the National Education Association meeting this week in Washington, D. C.

City Keeps Its Promise On Fair Play

MIAMI BEACH, Fla.—The city of Miami turned down the National Education Association's convention to avoid the accommodation of Negroes in its hotels.

The city of Miami Beach accepted the ninety-first annual convention of these educators with the promise of full integration, and it kept its promise.

Among the approximately 8,000 delegates, alternates and their friends who attended the convention in Miami Beach last week, about 200 were Negroes, who were accommodated in some of the finest hotels in this ultra-fashionable resort center.

IN THIS city's five miles of fabulous ocean-front hotels, which have no counterpart nor comparison in the world, Negro educators last week were occupying some of the choice rooms and suites, and their hosts bent backwards in efforts to make the hospitality complete.

It was the first time in many a year that this national organization was holding a convention in a Southern city. The Negro delegates told this writer that no other city where the convention has been held in recent years has showered them with so much hospitality.

The Negroes, men, women and children, were welcome in the swimming pools, dining rooms and cocktail lounges of the hotels.

AS IN THE North, the Negro delegates participated in the diversified discussions at meetings. Some of them took parts as consultants in many educational group meetings.

Most of the Negro delegates came from the South, however. It seems that the Northern ones were skeptical of the accommodations promised far in advance.

Among the scores of Negro delegates I met were Leslie J. White from Texas, Edna M. Calhoun from Jacksonville, Mrs. Sallie W. Artice from Virginia, accompanied by these other Virginians, Mrs. Helen C. Thomas, Mrs. Beulah S. Jones and William L. Jones.

From Baltimore, Md., I saw Mrs. Lorinee M. Dennis and Miss Osceola Savage; from Texas, R. S. Austin, president of the Colored Texas State Association (Tyler); from Montgomery, Ala., Mr. and Mrs. Jerome Morris and daughter, Lileta.

MOSS KENDRICKS, staff member with NEA in Washington, D. C., was present. So was Dr. George W. Gore Jr., president of Florida A. and M. College, also Dr. W. T. Wiggins of Pensacola, Fla.

From Virginia, also, came Mrs. Marie T. Boyd, Alexandria; Mrs. Irma B. Thompson, Newport News, and Mrs. Dorothy Jones Harris, Clarksville.

Texas also sent W. D. Thompson, Prairie View.

North Carolina was represented by Evelyn Spencer, Winston-Salem, and Laura Harper of the same city and H. D. Cooper, representing the Teachers Association and principal of Robert L. Vann High School of Ahoskie, N. C.

FLORIDA WAS well represented by several delegates. Among the most distinguished ones was Dr. William Stewart, president of Edward Waters College.

Other Texas delegates were Mrs. Frankie Moore and Mrs. James White, both from Houston. From Tennessee came, as Dr. Edward K. Weaver of Florida delegates. G. W. Brooks (Clarksville), C. C. Bond (Lexington), and A. L. Robinson, also Mrs. M. S. Tharpe and Mrs. Martha Shields of Madison.

Washington, D. C., also sent Mrs. E. R. Welch; Kansas, Mrs. Arieta Mabiley and Mrs. Arvesine Fowler. Florida also sent

Black Dispatch

Mrs. Gladys Dobson and State Delegation Bring Convention to State Next Year

Oklahoma City, Okla.

OKLAHOMA AWARDED FOUR-POINT CITATION

14b P.O

Mrs. Gladys Dobson, president of the Oklahoma Congress of Colored Parents and Teachers, has just returned from the 27th annual session of the National Congress which convened in Princess Ann, Maryland, from the 21st through the 24th of June. Sessions were held on the beautiful campus of Maryland State College.

From the pre-convention meeting held June 21st, until the close of the meeting was progressively interesting and informative. Among the most outstanding speakers to appear were Mrs. J. S. Morgan, retiring president; Dr. Jno. T. Williams, president of Maryland State College; Judge William H. Hastie, U. S. Court of Appeals and Gov. Theo R. McKeldin of the State of Maryland.

At the beginning of the meeting Mrs. Dobson was named chairman of the Time and Place Committee and was also an active member of the National Board of Managers.

Oklahoma was awarded a certificate for the Four Point Participation Program and also received one for being the only state in the entire national group to reach it's magazine quota.

As a result of the appealing speech by the president before the congress and the work of her committee, Oklahoma was named host for the 1954 sessions, it will be held at Langston university. The opening date will be the third Sunday in June thru Wednesday of the same week.

Other Oklahoma delegates attending were: Rev. J. T. Abram, president of the Oklahoma City council; Mrs. Calvin Glover, president of the D. H. S. Association, Oklahoma City; Mrs. Maggie Graves, chairman of the membership committee, McAlester; and Mr. W. A. Dobson, former state treasurer of the P. T. A.; and Mr. Jewel Dickerson, McAlester.

Enroute home, the McAlester group visited in the Chespeake Bay area, the Naval Academy at Annapolis, then to Washington, D. C. for a day and overnight stay; over the Pennsylvania Turnpike to Pittsburgh, from here to Springfield and Columbus, Ohio, stopping a day to visit in St. Louis.

Rev. J. T. Abram left early to attend he National B. T. U. congress in Brooklyn, N. Y. and Mrs. Glover visited friends in New York City.

Newly elected officers are: Mrs. Chas. Williams, of Florida, president; Mrs. Odessa McKinney, Alabama, vice pres.; Miss Jeanetta Chase, Maryland, secretary; Mrs. W. E. Knight, Georgia, assistant secretary, and Mrs. L. A. Toney, West Virginia, treasurer.

ATLANTA LEADERS ON SECONDARY SCHOOL PROGRAM

Education's Role in the Advancing South

Many high school and college educators from Georgia will attend the anual meeting of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools Tuesday through Friday in Memphis, Tenn. The association, which deals with school accreditation, has its home offices in Atlanta.

Theme of the meeting is "Education's Role in the Advancing South."

Dr. William Henry Shaw, superintendent of schools in Muscogee County, and President Irvine S. Ingram of West Georgia College are on the association's executive committee.

PAUL D. WEST, Fulton County school superintendent, is a member of the committee on resolutions, and Dean Thomas Mahler of the Atlanta Division of the University of Georgia, is on the committee on necrology.

Dean Ernest C. Colwell of Emory University will serve as moderator for one of the major programs during which better curricular coordination between high school and college will be discussed.

Panel participants will be President Henry King Stanford of Georgia State College for Women, and Dr. John I. Goodlad of Emory University. Dr. Colwell also will address the Junior College Association on Moral and Spiritual Values in Education.

R. W. Stephens will speak at the session of the commission on secondary schools on the question of in-service teacher training. He is Atlanta's Grady High School principal. The principal of Columbus High School, R. B. Carson, will appear on a panel discussion of improvements in administrative practices in secondary schools.

Dean Lloyd Chapin of Georgia Institute of Technology will report to the commission on colleges and universities on off-campus college programs being conducted in southern states.

Dr. William Pressly of Atlanta will speak to the Southern Association of College and University Registrars. He is president of the Westminster Schools.

DR. CATHERINE SIMS of Agnes Scott College will address the Southern Association of Colleges for Women. Dr. O. C. Aderhold will appear on the program of public institutions of higher education in the southern states.

He is president of the University of Georgia and will discuss the Southern Regional Education Board's advisory services.

Dr. Harmon Caldwell, chancellor of the University of Georgia system, is chairman of the Southern Association Commttee on Athletics. This committee will make a special report to the group.

Keynotes A&I's Third Career Conference

Winthrop Rockefeller Cites Opportunities for Race Youth

By CATHERINE L. SMITH

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—"There are unlimited opportunities in many fields for trained and qualified Negro youth," declared Winthrop Rockefeller in a keynote address before an audience of over two thousand, five hundred students and 152 consultants, attending the opening general session Tuesday, March 24, of the third annual Career Conference on the campus of Tennessee State University, Nashville.

Mr. Rockefeller, grandson of the famed John D. Rockefeller and chairman of IBEC Housing, urged the students to submerge any attitude of defeatism and to develop self-confidence in order that they might take advantage of these unlimited opportunities.

Mr. Rockefeller is also a member of the board of the National Urban League.

DR. W. S. DAVIS, president of Tennessee State University, presented Gov. Frank G. Clement of Tennessee, who praised the "foresight, generosity and great spirit demonstrated by the Rockefeller family that has enabled hundreds of young Americans to serve today."

President Davis reaffirmed the purpose of the Career Conference, "to bring face-to-face the youth of the university with job requirements and opportunities of business and industry of the world."

Consultants from the various areas of business, industry and the professions hailed from twenty cities in sixteen states and one foreign country.

SIXTY-TWO scheduled seminars and interest groups convened for discussion Tuesday and Wednesday, March 24-25.

The consultant-staff banquet on Tuesday night was highlighted by the address of Dr. T. R. M. Howard of Mound Bayou, Miss.

He urged Negro youth to take advantage of the opportunities that are "emerging in the changing South." "Too many Negroes are failing to take advantage of opportunities in the South, however," Dr. Howard said. "Some seek Northern positions without investigating what is available here."

Dr. Merle R. Eppse delivered the main address during the summary general session, Wednesday, March 25. Dr. H. C. Stuntz, president of Scarritt College, spoke at the closing meeting Wednesday, March 25.

Other names which studded the list of luminaries were:

ALL NATIONS FOUNDATION (Los Angeles, California)

TO CALIFORNIA. — Walter Burkes, 1953 graduate of the University School of Social Work, has been employed as social group worker with the All Nations Foundation in Los Angeles. The Foundation was originated by Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam and the staff represents workers from many nations. Burkes, a former U. S. naval officer, is a native of Little Rock.

Man Bought Liberty For Self, Wife

Set Up Fund To Promote Good Citizenship

NEW YORK — The story of Amos Fortune, African-born American who in the late 18th century bought his freedom and made a contribution to good citizenship in his adopted town, Jaffrey, N.H., will be told by James Fassett during the N.Y. Philharmonic - Symphony broadcast on CBS Radio Sunday, Feb. 15, 2:30-4 p.m.

Mr. Fassett first became interested in the story of Amos Fortune years ago when he brushed aside the snow on a tombstone and read:

Died At Age Of 91

"Sacred to the memory of Amos Fortune who was born free in Africa, a slave in America, he purchased his liberty, professed Christianity, lived reputably and died hopefully Nov. 17, 1801/ aged 91."

In Jaffrey recently for first hand research, Mr. Fassett found a number of documents, including the record of Fortune's purchase of his freedom from Ichabod Richardson of Woburn, Mass.

Prospered As Tanner

Fortune prospered as a tanner and currier. He purchased the freedom of three women slaves, one of whom became his wife. He moved to Jaffrey, built a home and a tannery, and became one of the town's most respected citizens.

In his will, after caring for his wife and adopted child, he set up a fund to be used to promote good citizenship.

The fund, allowed to accumulate for 150 years, is now used as prizes for a school children's public speaking contest on good citizenship, and for an annual Amos Fortune Forum, a lecture series by economic leaders.

Cole A Busy Artist

Nat (King) Cole could well rest on his laurels as a pianist and recording star, but he doesn't.

He is just about the most-sought after TV performer in the business because his pianistics and emotion have just about captivated millions of TV viewers.

Leading The Field

The guy is leading the field in all kicks including jazz, progressive, blues and Dixie. His "Mona Lisa" is an unforgettable item. Now his "Pretend" and "Don't Let Your Eyes Go Shopping" are hard-hitting waxings.

If you missed him on the Jo Stafford radio show, Feb. 2, 4 and 6, and Red Skelton's TV show, Feb. 8, you missed a treat. Everything he did was with great finesse.

Has Keen Mind

Dorothy Kilgallen (Mrs. Richard Kollmar in private life) possesses one of the keenest minds in television. You know what I mean if you listen to the TV's Sunday night's "What's My Line," emceed by John Daly, one of the best in the business.

Sam McDaniel, brother of the late Hattie McDaniel, will be seen as a handyman on Ford (TV) Theatre's "Old Man's Bride," Thursday, Feb. 12, a story with a Texas backdrop.

The Mills Brothers, show-stopping quartet of stage, screen and radio, will be guest artists on the Edgar Bergen-Charlie McCarthy show Sunday, Feb. 15, 8-8:30 p.m., from Hollywood.

Canada Lee Foundation Gives Award

NEW YORK — The Canada Lee Foundation last week awarded its first two grants-in-aid to theatrical students, annonuced Miss Margaret Webster, chairman of the Foundation Scholarship committee.

Recipients of the awards were M. Carl Holman, candidate for a master's degree in fine arts at Yale university, and Charles Harrigan, recent graduate of the New York high school of Performing Arts.

Holman's grant will aid him while he prepares a thesis and play that are required before he proceeds with his academic studies this fall. Last year a play written by Homan was chosen as the best play of the year at the school.

Harrigan's grant will help defray living expenses as an apprentice with the Asbury Park Summer Theatre, where the scholarship committee was able to place him. Harrigan was the only member of his graduating class to be awarded the school's Certificate of Merit this year.

Give $150,000 for African study

NEW YORK—Basic factors in the economic development of Africa will be studied under a grant of $150,000, which was announced last week by the Carnegie Corporation of New York.

The study of Africa will be made by members of the senior staff of the Food Research Institute, Stanford University.

The project is organized on a five-year basis, with the grant payable in annual installments of $30,000 each year.

It's More Fun—'

Businessman Gives $2 Million To Charity

NEW YORK, Dec. 13 (U.P.) — Edward J. Noble, who lost interest in making money after learning there's more fun and profit in giving it away, announced today a gift of $2,000,000 to education and charity.

The 71-year-old business executive said he hoped his act would encourage others who might be "procrastinating" to give to a worthy cause. "You can't take it with you," he commented.

Noble, chairman of the Finance Committee of American Broadcasting Paramount Theatres, Inc. and chairman of the board of Life Savers, Corp., has not confined his contributions to money alone.

He has sought to put philanthrophy on a business basis, using the same know-how that enabled him to convert Life Savers from a white elephant into a million dollar corporation.

Noble keeps little of his money for himself. "Except for a nominal amount for my wife and daughter, everything I have has gone into the Edward John Noble Foundation."

GIVES $2,000,000— Edward J. Noble.

The $2,000,000-gift Noble announced today will go to the foundation, with no strings attached. There is no limitation on projects for which foundation funds may be used as long as the money is spent so as to "be of as much help as possible to as many as possible."

Beneficiaries of the Noble Foundation include St. Lawrence University, Canton, N. Y. North Country Hospitals, Inc. in Northern New York State, the Salvation Army and the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis.

Noble also has put his administrative talents to work for the government. He is a former chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Authority and a former undersecretary of Commerce.

He divides his non-business and non-philanthropical time between his 34th floor suite in the Waldorf-Astoria Towers here, an estate in the Thousand Islands and a 25,000-acre island cattle barony off the Georgia coast.

FELLOWSHIP FUND- (NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST,U.S.A)..

Fellowship Fund Created By United Church Women

NEW YORK—Establishment of an annual fellowship fund through which individual church women can support and expand interdenominational women's work was announced this week by Mrs. James D. Wyker, president of the United Church Women, a general department of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A.

The Fellowship Fund has been endorsed officially by the presidents of 15 women's national denominational boards.

THEY ARE: Mrs. Frank G. Brooks, Methodist; Mrs. W. Bayard Buckham, Congregational Christian; Mrs. E. Roy Corman, Evangelical and Reformed; Mrs. R. T. Fetherston, Seventh Day Baptist; Mrs. Anne E. Heath, African Methodist Episcopal; Mrs. Maurice B. Hodge, American Baptist; Rossie Thompson Hollis, Colored Methodist Episcopal.

Also: Mrs. W. H. Hopper, Presbyterian, U.S.; Helen M. Jordan, Council of Community Churches; Mary A. Pennybacker, Protestant Episcopal; Ocie G. Perry, Church of God; Ellen P. Robinson, Society of Friends-Five Years' Meeting; Mrs. J. Balmer Showers, Evangelical United Brethren; Jessie M. Trout, Disciples of Christ; and Mrs. Sailsman W. Weller. African Methodist Episcopal Zion.

THE PLAN sanctioned by the denominational presidents calls for individual contributions of five dollars to create the Fellowship Fund that will enable women to work together "in more ways, in more communities and in more churches," Mrs. Wyker said.

The Fund was also made necessary, the church women's president explained, by the need for greater support of cooperative programs that have grown as the number of interdenominational women's groups has increased and as women of the churches have seen the united work as a part of their Christian responsibility.

IN THE PAST five years, Mrs. Wyker pointed out, the number of state councils of church women has grown to 40, including every state in the union, the District of Columbia and the Territory of Hawaii. In the same period, she added, the number of local councils has risen to more than 1,900 and the number of World Day of Prayer groups to over 17,000.

The Fellowship Fund for 1954, with a goal of $100,000, will provide necessary support for the continuation of the programs of these councils, Mrs. Wyker said.

761 to Share $100,000 Awards Made by Freedoms Foundation

VALLEY FORGE, Pa., Feb. 21.—Freedoms Foundation tonight announced that 761 individuals, schools and organizations will share $100,000 for outstanding contributions to "a better understanding of the American way of life during 1952."

Vice - President Richard M. Nixon, former Republican Senator from California, will present awards tomorrow to the first-place winners in special Washington's Birthday ceremonies at historic Valley Forge.

Freedoms Foundation — non-profit, non-political, non-sectarian —was organized in 1949 for its announced specific purpose "of honoring Americans who contribute to freedom "by the things which they write, do or say." President Eisenhower, then General of the Army and president of Columbia University, presented the first awards.

Awards in 16 Categories

The awards are in sixteen categories: general, sermons, magazine articles, cartoons, college campus programs, community programs, editorials, essays, photographs with captions, public addresses, company employee publications, 16-mm. motion pictures, radio and television programs, advertising campaigns — national and local.

In addition, the foundation this week will honor 264 schools and school systems and present $100 cash awards to forty-five high school publications for "outstanding editorials on freedom."

There are three principal awards in the general category — Men's Club of the First Congregational Church of Phoenix, Ariz., originators of the God and Freedom Medal distributed to United States service men; Robert H. Niemeyer, who was brutally beaten by hoodlums when he fought gambling, and ran for Mayor, in his former home in North Lake, Ill., a Chicago suburb, and Western Maryland Railroad for its pageant "Mr. Lincoln goes to Gettysburg."

Foundation officials said Mr. Niemeyer is honored "for the deeds, not for anything he wrote." They said he left North Lake to safeguard his family and added that he will be under twenty-hour-hour protection during his Valley Forge visit.

Advertising Campaigns (national)—Ford Motor Co., Dearborn, Mich.; (local)—"Deseret News" and twenty Utah citizens and business organizations, Salt Lake City, Utah.

Other top winners are:

Cartoon—Jack Hamm, Waco, Tex., "News Tribune," cartoon entitled "Relay That Must Not Fail."

College Campus Program—Case Institute of Technology, Cleveland, in co-operation with the Republic Steel Corp., "Economics in Action" program.

Community Program — Greater Muskegon (Mich.) Chamber of Commerce for its "Greater Muskegon Freedom Week."

Company Employee Publications —Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., Akron, Ohio, for its "Non Skid," "News," "Southerner," "Californian."

Editorial—Jack W. Gore, Fort Lauderdale, Fla., "Daily News" for "Your American Heritage."

Essay — Howard F. Kershner, New York, for "God, Gold and Government."

Magazine Article—Capt. Eddie Rickenbacker, New York, president of Eastern Air Lines, for his "Let's Stop Fooling Ourelves" in "The American Weekly."

16-mm. Motion Picture — Lutheran Church, Missouri Synod, St. Louis, for its "All That I Have."

Photograph With Captions — Herbert D. Hayman, Philadelphia, for "Conceived in Liberty."

Public Address — Cecil B. de Mille, Hollywood movie producer, for "Silent Voices."

Radio Program—"Life Is Worth Views the News," Robert Montgomery, New York.

Television Programs — "Life Is Living," Bishop Fulton J. Sheen, New York.

9 Awards of $1,000

Cash awards of $1,000 go to top winners in the general, sermons, magazine articles, cartoons, college campus programs, community programs, editorials, photographs with captions and public address divisions. In the general category there are fifty second-place awards of $100 each. The others have twenty $100 second-place awards.

All recipients receive the foundation's George Washington Honor Medal, which depicts America's first President at prayer.

The awards jury, headed by Dr. Albert C. Jacobs, chancellor of the University of Denver, made special awards to the American Broadcasting Co., Columbia Broadcasting System, National Broadcasting Co. for their convention and election coverage; the American Legion for its "Boys' Nation" program; United States Military Academy for its "Sesquicentennial Program"; National Committee for a Free Europe for its "Radio Free Europe" achievement, and the Armed Forces Information and Education Division for its "Armed Forces Talks and Radio Programs."

For Students Under 17 Years of Age

Ford Program Grants $100,000 To Morehouse's 'Most Gifted'

ATLANTA—The Ford Foundation-sponsored program which Morehouse College instituted in September, 1952, for exceptional young men under 16½ years of age has been extended, thanks to a generous grant of $100,000 ($90,000 from the Ford Foundation and $10,000 from another source), according to an announcement by President Benjamin E. Mays of Morehouse College.

Instead of permitting two groups (up to thirty in each group) of these "pre-induction" students to study on all-expense scholarships for two years, as originally planned, the increase in funds will permit an additional thirty-man group to get two years of college work done before reaching Army induction age, with all expenses paid, thus extending the operation of the program from four to six years.

THE FUND for the advancement of education (the Ford Foundation), under this plan, provides all-expense scholarships of $373 to $750 per student for the first two years of college work (available the second year on condition the student does well the first year).

The extended program also provides some funds for those students who, having done well the first two years under the program, will wish to complete their college training but lack sufficient money to pay for it.

The fund will give limited help to such men during their junior and senior years.

Under the original plan, Morehouse admitted twenty-nine young men in September, 1952, with up to thirty scholarships available for the fall of 1953. The new arrangement will permit thirty more to enter in September, 1954, and an additional thirty in September, 1955.

THE FORD scholarships are open to all high school students (male) who have completed the work of the tenth grade and who will be 16½ years old or under at the time of registration at Morehouse. They must pass an examination administered by a representative of the college and must be recommended by their high school principals as possessing good character and showing promise. The new arrangement extends the age limit to 17 years. Those who are awarded the Ford scholarships are admitted to Morehouse will full freshman standing.

Ford Foundation's Fund for the Advancement of Education has granted $170,000 to finance a two-year search for talent among Negro high school seniors in the South. This is the best break we have received educationally since the Rosenwald Fund bowed out. With such opportunities there will be fewer legitimate alibis for failure.

$15,000,000 for Civil Rights

THE Ford Foundation which has been tossing fortunes hither and yon for projects both commendable and dubious, has just peeled off fifteen million dollars to set up a Fund for the Republic, with Paul G. Hoffman as chairman.

The purpose of this well-heeled fund is to promote the cause of civil rights in the United States by studying the problems "encountered in the field of civil liberties"; making "a clear statement in contemporary terms of the legacy of American liberty" and proposing "to help restore respectability to individual freedom" while recognizing "the menace of communism and Communist influence in this country."

The tone of its initial statement seems to indicate that it is going to spearhead a counter-offensive against the so-called hysteria, witch-hunting and investigating by which patriotic groups are attempting to combat the nefarious designs of subversives in the educational, labor, artistic and entertainment world.

However that may be, what we are primarily concerned with is the fact that nothing is said by spokesmen for this fund about the biggest civil rights problem in the United States—the Negro problem.

Worse, there was not, at the time of this writing, a single Negro on the committee which will superintend the dispensing of this fortune, although there are many capable colored men and women who have devoted a lifetime to this question and are more expert than Mr. Hoffman and his associates.

Segregation is still with us, discrimination in all of its ramifications is very much present, innumerable handicaps prevent Negroes by virtue of their color from sharing the full measure of citizenship—and these evils are far more dangerous to the future of American civil liberties than so-called witch hunts.

The place of the colored Americans in our society is the true gauge of civil liberties, and until the restrictions placed upon them and the handicaps that burden them are removed, the state of civil liberties will remain parlous.

We don't need any more studies of the state of civil rights in the republic. The libraries are full of them.

What we need now is to utilize this information in a frontal attack—educationally, politically and economically, on the strongholds of bias, discrimination and proscription.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, with forty-four years' experience, knows how to do this, but none of its officials is on the committee.

The National Urban League, with forty-three years' experience, knows how to do this, but the committee does not include any of the league's experienced officials.

Incidentaly, we do not believe that the Ford Foundation has given either of these organizations a nickel, although it is squandering a quarter million dollars on studying the life of some obscure village in India!

We seriously doubt that the deceased Henry Ford who, in addition to being thrifty and practical, was most friendly to Negro labor (which was at first barred from other automobile plants), would approve of such boondoggling with his billions.

The problem of the Twentieth Century is the problem of the color line, and when that is intelligently attacked the greatest danger to our civil liberties is being removed.

We suggest that as one of its first steps in safeguarding civil liberties, the Fund for the Republic turn over at least a million of the fifteen million dollars it has to the NAACP (which knows how to do what the fund is attempting), and comparable amounts to the National Urban League and the United Negro College Fund.

Rockefeller's Aid Will Know No End

A GLORIOUS chapter in American philanthropy is coming officially to an end. The General Education Board will close its books this year, after having spent nearly $316,000,000 in principal and interest.

The Board was founded by JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER in 1902 "for the promotion of education in the United States of America without distinction of race, creed or color." Every state has gained lasting benefits. From the start, however, the Board has had "a special concern for the Southern region, where the needs were especially great in relation to available resources."

That special interest has brought $146,000,000 of the Board's money into Southern education, both white and Negro. This in turn is only a small fraction of what the South itself has spent on educating its people. The Southern states rate high on spending for education in proportion to their income. The General Education Board money, however, has been an invaluable inspiration and a pump-primer.

The expansion of American education in the past half century is almost too big to be comprehended. President DEAN RUSK and the other members of the General Education Board can surely look with satisfaction on a program that has been the handmaid of progress. Nobody can say how much useful citizenship has been contributed to American life by the opportunities provided under this grant.

Just one item in the list is the Southern Police Training Institute in Louisville. The General Education Board and the Carnegie Corporation set it on its way. Now it has had a chance to prove its worth and its claim for further financial support.

The philanthropies started by JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER are far from coming to an end. The Rockefeller Foundation, started in 1913, brought another $183,000,000 to "promote the wellbeing of mankind throughout the world." The General Education Board may close its books this year, but it will never complete the record of service it has set in motion.

Sad news for Negro education is that the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation will fold this year after spending its last five million. It will have spent $321 million since 1902, and a large part of it went to Negro colleges and colored students. Good thing we have the United Negro College Fund.

A Rockefeller Fund For Education Expires

The South lost a great friend the other day. The General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation expired, after appropriating the last of $316,000,000 of funds set up by the late John D. Rockefeller for "the promotion of education in the United States of America without distinction of race, sex or creed."

During its 50-year history, the Board has done just that. It has "promoted" education. From the beginning it devoted much of its effort to the South, where economic conditions had held education back. In recent years its program has been devoted entirely to this region, with a total of $146,000,000 in grants having been made to Southern institutions.

Atlanta schools, including Georgia Tech, Emory and Agnes Scott, have shared liberally in the funds. The University of Georgia and its various branches have received substantial grants. Its work in promotion of teacher training and research projects has been greatly beneficial. Its training of leadership through fellowships for travel and study has contributed greatly to Southern renaissance. Its work in Negro education has alleviated one of our greatest problems.

Partly as a result of its painstaking work, the South is beginning to meet its own educational problems. In its 1952 report, the Board points out that "it is a source of deep satisfaction to observe that the amount which it has contributed over a 50-year period to educational development in the South would now be but a small fraction of the contributions being made in a single year for this purpose by the Southern states themselves."

As it approaches the end of its work, a grateful South can take stock of itself and give praise for a job well done. The contribution made by the General Education Board to a really New South can be measured in concrete achievements, the fruits of which will continue to have an important bearing on the nation's future.

General Education Board Assistance Discontinued

NEW YORK CITY — (ANP) — Activities of the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation perhaps the biggest philanthropic aid to Negro education will be discontinued at the end of this year.

The fund was set up in 1902 by the late John D. Rockefeller for "the promotion of education in the United States of America without distinction of race, sex or creed."

During its 50-year period, the General Education Board awarded more than $315,000,000 to public and private colleges, medical schools and state departments of education.

With unapproriated resources totaling more than $5,500,000 the board has decided, according to its president, Dean Rusk "that highest priority for use of the slender remaining resources would be accorded to fellowships and scholarships in the South and to Negro education in the South, with some special attention to opportunities in the lower income states."

Said Rusk further, "While the educational objectives of the southern states are by no means fully attained, the achievements of recent decades represent striking advances that hold great promise for both the South and the nation as a whole."

The board granted nearly hlaf of its total funds to southern schools over its 50-year span.

The final report of the General Education Board finds that, "the potential number of Negro college students is growing steadily as a result of expanding opportunities for secondary education in the southern states."

During its 50-year period, the General Education board awarded more than $315,000,000 to public and private colleges, medical schools and state departments of education.

Rockefeller Grants Will End This Year

NEW YORK — Activities of the General Education Board of the Rockefeller foundation, perhaps the biggest philantropic aid to Negro education, will be discontinued at the end of this year.

The fund set up in 1902 by the late John D. Rockefeller for "the promotion of education in the United States of America without distinction of race, sex or creed."

EDUCATION

General Education Board To End

The termination of the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation, biggest philanthropic aid to Negro schooling, was announced last week. Dean Rusk, president of the fund, said it will spend its last $5,607,406 this year.

The special fund, which was set up by the late John D. Rockefeller in 1902, has spent nearly $316,000,000 in grants and benefits without distinction of race, sex or creed. The report is conclusive on the need to give "highest priority for use of the slender remaining resources" to a specific program.

This program will be fellowships and scholarships in the South and aid to Negro education in the South, with some special attention to opportunities for aid in the lowest-income states.

General Education Board Has Remarkable Record

THE MOST RECENT annual report of the General Education Board, for the year 1952, is a modestly phrased accounting of a magnificent contribution by it to the cause of education, and particularly to Negro education and the advancement of learning in the South generally. It is appropriate at this time to take note of this report because the board has decided that, "having spent its resources upon the tasks to which it was committed, it must now terminate its activities."

It is good to know that "it was also decided that highest priority for use of the slender remaining resources would be accorded to fellowships and scholarships in the South and to Negro in the South, with some special attention to opportunities in the lowest income states."

That decision is ample evidence of the hard-headed, realistic generosity of this philanthropic organization, since its founding in 1902 by JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER SR. The late Gilman benefactor established the General Education Board for "the promotion of education in the United States without distinction of race, sex, or creed," and for that purpose has spent in the past fifty year period, inclusive, an aggregate of $315,965,984.

AS DEAN RUSK, president of the board, indicates in his report, these funds have gone to both public and private colleges and universities, to medical schools, to state departments of education, and to projects in educational research and experimentation. From the beginning it exhibited "a special concern for the southern region, where the needs were especially great in relation to available resources."

MR. RUSK does not say so, but in giving generous support to all levels of education for the Negro in the South, the board also recognized the callous disregard of the South in providing anything like equal facilities for colored youth.

Fortunately, that picture is changing for the better — perhaps grudgingly in many instances, but necessarily under the order of the courts ruling for citizens who finally tired of using fruitless entreaty and turned to litigation under the Constitution's guarantees of equal rights.

When it is noted that of the total spent by the board, nearly half—or $146,000,000—has been spent to assist southern states' educational programs, it becomes apparent just how vital has been the organization's role in bringing about a better life for all people of the Southland.

Passing over for the moment the reasons therefore, it is a notable fact—as Mr. RUSK stresses—"that the amount which it (the board) has contributed over a fifty year period to educational development in the South would now be but a small fraction of the contributions being made in a single year for this purpose by the southern states themselves."

TWO RECENT projects of the General Educational Board are especially significant. It contributed $25,000 in 1952 to the United Negro College Fund's general campaign on behalf of 31 member institutions, and it has also contributed one million dollars to the UNCF project to raise $25 million to help remedy the shortcomings in the physical facilities of the affected colleges, where work is hampered by overcrowding, insufficient library facilities, antiquated dormitories, and inadequate laboratories.

In the other major project the board is supplying funds to make it possible for Negro colleges to be accredited on the same basis as white colleges by the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. Actually, the past accreditations of this body have been on a dual system which was in actual effect detrimental to the white program of educating Negroes. To change the differential system is vital because, by the latest tabulation available, of all the colored youths in college, 28 percent of them are enrolled in Negro institutions.

The Southern Association has a membership of 150 colleges and about 1,300 secondary schools. Since 1927, a special committee of the association accredited about 40 colored colleges and 150 of our high schools—"but its standards for Negro institutions have been different from those applied to white institutions."

IN ORDER to accredit these colleges and schools "through the same procedures and on the same basis as white institutions," the General Education Board has authorized one of its commissions to make a study prior to re-rating 58 Negro colleges and universities. It will underwrite the costs—and they will be considerable—of this effort, to extend through 1955. Many of the accreditations by states have had the same fault.

It is manifestly unfair and, in the long run, injurious to the minority group for its students to be attending colleges accredited as Class A when they are in fact Class B or C.

Competition after college in our highly complex, technological, social and economic life makes educational shortchanging of this sort indefensible. It should have been eliminated long ago.

The nation's thanks should go to the General Education Board for this move to eradicate it now, as well as for its half-century of truly remarkable service to mankind.

Agency Founded By J. D. Rockefeller Aids Many Students

Report For Past Year Discloses Southerners Of Both Races Get Scholarships And Take Advanced Study In Greatest Schools in United States Several Young Nashvillians Listed

The General Education Board, founded by John D. Rockefeller, which supports in a big way many private colleges and universities, in its 1952 report, shows among other important items, that those who contend that Negro schools seeking higher education should fight to get into the white state-supported universities of the South have not noted that the suggestion does not interest many such Negro students.

The GEB shows that overwhelmingly white students of the South seeking "higher education" pass up the universities of their region and go North themselves, for advanced study. Colored students, after finishing the universities of their region, apparently want to get just as good advanced training as the white students of their region, and therefore, they together with their own money, or with funds they get from scholarships and fellowships, are attending the biggest universities in the country. Evidently they mean to be "on par" with their fellow-Southern white students in equipment for the biggest and best jobs the South will be offering.

The fact and figures, dealing with scholarship and fellowships as given by the General Education Board for 1951 and 1952, "personate" a number of colored Southerners as well as whites who elected to go North for higher learning.

Included in the list are the following, colored students with the figures showing ages of the students who were awarded scholarships or fellowships For 1951

THIS IS ONE OF THE MANY GROUPS photographed in the home and on the beautiful grounds of Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune during the busy week of March 17-22 when Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt visited Daytona Beach. Many visitors came to the Convocation, annual trustee meeting of Bethune-Cookman College, the organization of the Mary McLeod Bethune Foundation and lastly the concert of the famous singer Miss Marian Anderson.

Reading from left to right they are Judge Frederick K. Watkins of Durham, N. C.; Miss Marian Anderson, Mrs. Marjorie Joiner of the Mdm. Walker Co.; Mrs. Mary McLeod Bethune; Mrs. Gertrude Murphy of the House of Beauty in Detroit and Mrs. W. A. Scott, Sr. of the Atlanta Daily World.

BY MRS. W. A. SCOTT, SR.

The Mary McLeod Bethune Foundation

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — (SNS) — Friends of Mrs. Bethune from all parts of the country including the most beloved woman in America, Mrs. Anna Eleanor Roosevelt, gathered at the lovely home of Mrs. Bethune on the College Campus last Tuesday to assist her in realizing another of her great dreams for the benefit of humanity.

Many large furniture firms and other businesses donated wall-to-wall carpets, rugs, linoleum, linen, bedding foam rubber pillows, etc., etc. to redecorate the historic home filled with trophies, plaques, pictures, gifts, books, etc. from all parts of the world. The Sneed Land Scaping Co. did a marvelous job on the beautiful grounds shaded by the grand old moss-draped trees. An interracial committee labored for overtime preparing for the coming of two great women, Eleanor Roosevelt and Marian Anderson.

Maxwell W. Saxon, principal of Euclid High School at DeLand, has been chosen to have charge of the grounds of this shrine to which many will journey in the years to come.

Citizens, from top officials down, cooperated in every way. A large group met Mrs. Roosevelt at the airport and escorted her to the city with motorcycles and band. Two little misses, Robin Zeigler and Patricia Bethune great grand daughter of Mrs. Bethune, presented flowers to the first lady.

Mrs. Roosevelt and her secretary were Mrs. Bethune's house guests.

After the first session of the foundation meeting a lovely dinner was served in the College Dining Hall. — An impressive interracial gathering.

Many pictures were taken of all the events including gatherings in the beautiful gardens. These will be preserved for the future generations.

A further discussion of the Foundation was held at 5 o'clock Saturday and taken up again Monday. All details are being carefully worked out.

Other big events at Daytona Beach last week were the annual meeting of the large board of trustees from all parts of the country — One member from one of the New England States, at one of the luncheons was heard to remark: "I have come to pay my taxes to Bethune-Cookman."

Another very entertaining event was the chapel exercise at which Mrs. Roosevelt spoke. On this occasion the large, beautiful uniformed band "strutted" its best, leading the large student body into the chapel.

The huge African Exhibit displayed in the Library by Mrs. Margaret Davis Bowen was viewed by hundreds.

Foundation Is Organized; Mrs. Bethune Is Honored

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — The Mary McLeod Bethune Foundation, an educational and charitable corporation, has been created by the leader of Bethune-Cookman College for 49 years, and the College doors have been thrown open to members of all races.

Both of these advances came last weekend, and were highly lauded by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, former first lady of the United States, who was given an honorary Doctor of Laws degree by Dr. Bethune, founder and president emeritus of the school.

Mrs. Bethune, now snowy haired, announced the foundation at an invitational dinner at her home which was attended by her old friend, Mrs. Roosevelt, who lauded her for her work.

The doors of the college were later thrown open through a change in the charter, which formerly provided that only Negroes could attend the local college. Such a suggestion had been made by the wife of the late Franklin D. Roosevelt, and Mrs. Ruth D. Wilson, of New York, both members of the Board of Trustees.

Both women were present to attend the annual meeting of the board when the three history-making events occurred. The move was probably started by a charge that the United Negro College Fund "sustains segregation."

The two women asked that all reference to Negro and white be deleted from the charter. Board Chairman J. W. E. Bowen immediately appointed a committee to draft a statement answering the charge that support of the fund constitutes promotion of segregation. The school receives grants from the fund.

In commenting on the Mary Bethune Foundation's beginning, Mrs. Roosevelt said "I am thinking that my husband would have been so happy at what you have done on this day. He felt that your work was of great value and always said that you had done a remarkable piece of work for all young people during the depression."

The first contributor to the foundation was the Greek Letter Beauticians of Chicago, who, thru Mrs. Marjorie S. Joyner, presented $3,150. Mrs. Carmen Murphy of the House of Beauty of Detroit, said the group would establish a fund to support the foundation and Hobson Reynolds, of Pennsylvania, made a similar pledge for the Elks.

The foundation will make it possible for deserving students from all lands to gain a higher education.

Honorary Doctor of Laws degrees were also bestowed on three other persons during the session. They are: Bishop John W. Branscomb, Florida and Cuba Conference of the Methodist Church; Bishop J. W. E. Bowen, resident Bishop of the Atlantic Coast area of the Methodist Church; and Herbert M. Davidson, editor of the Daytona Beach News-Journal.

Hails Creation Of Bethune Foundation

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla.—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt hailed the creation of a Bethune Foundation here last week as a "potent example of democracy in the United States."

The Mary McLeod Foundation was dedicated here for the purpose of commemorating the works and lives of nationally famous women.

MRS. ELEANOR ROOSEVELT was honored last week at the Board of Trustees meeting of Bethune Cookman college. MARY McLEOD Bethune

The Mary McLeod Bethune Foundation Has Been Born To Inspire Posterity

This has been an unusual week of historic interest at Bethune-Cookman College.

For the past two years I have been formulating plans and ideas in my own mind for the setting up of what I term the Mary McLeod Bethune Foundation. The theme thought running through the whole idea is not for myself but for others.

The home where I live had been in the making for the past forty years. It seems now to have rounded out into a peaceful spiritual inspiring little corner where one might hide away for real meditation and backward looking and forward imagination.

Little thoughts and ideas and trinkets have been gathered here from many corners of the earth. Citations and awards, unforgettable remembrances and treasures have come from here, there and everywhere. The walls have been covered with photographs of friends of many races and nations. The mottoes of inspiration and encouragement have found their way into our little center. Here the grass covered lawn with shrubbery and flowers and beautiful trees add to the lustre and uniqueness of the home. The roaring of the great ocean by night and by day lulls one to a dreamland of thinking and planning and dreaming.

The nestling of the wonderful College buildings among the trees and the winding paths adjoining me: — the constant movement of fine young people from our America and many other countries; — the comfortable stillnesses beneath the moss hung trees and the marvelous message from the pink azaleas in the garden — all give to a dreamer like me a sacredness that tells me to give fully and in to this beautiful little sacred home, and its contents, and the soil upon which it stands to the Mary McLeod Bethune Foundation as a starter in the preservation of valuables and whatever personal affects I may have of significance to the thousands that shall pass this way in the years to come.

Here they will find inspiration. Those who are striving for the heights will find strength for their aspirations. The appraisers indicate that my gift can be counted in value to the amount of forty thousand dollars.

In my vision it seemed to me that this precious spot should not be selfishly claimed by my son and grandchildren. So another home is theirs and this I bequeath to boys and girls, to all races, creeds, classes and colors that they may find just a little of the inspiration and consecration that have come to me during these years of service.

The Foundation shall have a small board of trustees, a large number of a board of directors and a very large number of sponsors.

We want only men and women, boys and girls who believe in the rights and philosophies of Mary McLeod Bethune to participate in this great venture; those who will be heard; those who will sponsor this venture with sincere determination and courage, in order that the little seed planted over 49 years ago may grow continually. Those who pass this way will surely be inspired and will realize that this which God has done for me, He will do also for you.

My friend, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt announced the launching. She was my house guest for a night and a day with her charming companion, Mrs. Malvina Thompson. It was gratifying to have our Mayor, the Honorable Tamm, our City Manager Harlow and members of city management with their various staffs — and citizens, white and black alike to stand faithfully by during the launching of this Foundation.

They join with thousands of others who are showing their appreciation for the efforts of a loyal American citizen who has given of her very best to the cause of humanity. My files are being set up; my autobiography is being written; the home is becoming a shrine for posterity.

Friends who may have clippings or remembrances that are pertinent to the development of our project should send them to us. We shall be happy to have many of you help us in the development of the spiritual assets of the Foundation.

Following the launching of the Foundation, a great occasion took place. Marion Anderson appeared for our Advisory Board, students and friends. What a ray of light was emblazoned over our city as one great voice cried out in soulful music — as no other voice can cry — for harmony and friendship and goodwill.

My friends from Detroit, Ohio, Chicago, California and strategic places across our great nation were here to recognize the magnitude of these offerings we now have made in order that a shrine to the promotion of enlightenment and better human relations may be shown brightly on this spot already sacred with sacrifice and achievement.

It was a great occasion.

I wish all of you could have been here.

Phelps-Stokes Fund Honors Mellons For Aid To Students

P. 11 Afro-American

P. 11

Three years ago Mellon made a contribution to the Phelps-Stokes Fund to assist selected students to prepare themselves for medical or public health service in Africa.

The Mellons today are supporting four Haitian nurses currently receiving graduate specialist training in the United States in preparation for service on the staff of a hospital to be privately built and equipped by the Mellons in Haiti. Mr. and Mrs. Mellon plan to leave here immediately after the luncheon for Haiti to begin the hospital project.

He is a medical student at Tulane university and Mrs. Mellon is a nurse and laboratory technician.

Reid Foundation

Reid Foundation to Grant Six Fellowships in 1954

A program under which six fellowships of $5,000 each will be awarded to American newspaper men and women for study abroad during 1954 was approved yesterday by the board of the Reid Foundation.

Candidates are required to have at least five years of experience in daily newspaper or press association work, and must plan to continue their careers in journalism. They must be sponsored by leading executives of the newspapers where they work, and a summary of their journalistic and educational background is requested, as well as a statement setting forth their reasons for wishing to study a given nation or area. They may choose to work in Europe, South and Central America, the Far East, Near East or Africa. Applications will be received until Oct. 1.

The board, at its annual meeting, also re-elected all directors and officers of the Foundation.

Fellows Now Abroad

Six recipients of fellowship grants were chosen last year and are now abroad. They are: Ralph W. Davis, of "The San Bernardino (Calif.) Sun," studying in Japan; Ann H. Holmes, of "The Houston Post," studying the fine arts in Europe; John Robbins, of "The Cleveland Press," in Southeast Asia; Herbert A. Shaw, of "The Dayton Daily News," in Africa observing native demands for self-government; Billy R. Stokes, "Oakland (Calif.) Tribune," surveying labor conditions in France, Italy and Western Germany, and Ruth Walker, of "The Greenville (S. C.) News," in England, observing court procedure.

Directors of the Foundation re-elected yesterday are: Dr. Charles Seymour, former president of Yale University; Ferdinand Eberstadt, of New York, president of F. Eberstadt & Co.; Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare and executive vice-president of "The Houston (Tex.) Post"; Ogden R. Reid, and officers of the Foundation; Mrs. Ogden Reid, president; Whitelaw Reid, vice-president and treasurer, and William E. Robinson, second vice-president and secretary.

Candidates for fellowships are selected by the fellowship committee, meeting once annually. Members of the committee, also re-elected yesterday, are: Wright Bryan, editor of "The Atlanta Journal"; Erwin D. Canham, editor of "The Christian Science Monitor"; Gardner Cowles, editor of "Look" magazine; Norman Chandler, president of "The Los Angeles Times"; Barry Bingham, publisher of "The Louisville Courier-Journal" and "The Louisville Times"; E. Palmer Hoyt, editor and publisher of "The Denver Post"; Whitelaw Reid, editor of the New York Herald Tribune; Basil L. Walters, executive editor of "The Chicago Daily News," and Wilbur Forrest, chairman.

Application blanks may be obtained by addressing Mr. Forrest, chairman of the Fellowship Committee, New York Herald Tribune, 230 W. 41st St., New York 36.

General Education Board to close shop

Awarded over $315,000,000 to public, private institutions

NEW YORK CITY (ANP) — Activities of the General Education Board of the Rockefeller Foundation perhaps the biggest philanthropic aid to minority group education, will be discontinued at the end of this year.

The fund was set up in 1902 by the late John D. Rockefeller for "the promotion of education in the United States without distinction of race, sex or creed."

During its 50-year period, the General Education Board awarded more than $315,000,000 to public and private colleges, medical schools, and state departments of education.

Resources 5½ Millions

With unappropriated resources totaling more than $5,500,000 the board has decided, according to its president, Dean Rusk, "that highest priority for use of the slender remaining resources would be accorded to fellowships and scholarships in the South and to education of colored Americans in the South, with some special attention to opportunities in the lowest income states."

Said Rusk further, "While the educational objectives of the southern states are by no means fully attained, the achievements of recent decades represent striking advances that hold great promise for both the south and this nation as a whole."

The board granted nearly half of its total funds to southern schools over its 50-year span.

The final report of the General Education Board finds that, "the potential number of colored college students is growing steadily as a result of expanding opportunities for secondary education in the southern states."

The Bronx-Manhattan Chapter is the first of a series of local Chapters of the W. C. Handy Foundation for the Blind, to be formed in states and cities where they are found to be needed. The organization is pledged not to duplicate the activities of any other agency but rather to supplement existing services. It will work in cooperation with all groups interested in improving the lot of blind individuals.

State-owned TV public school system is proposed if courts ban segregation

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 22—(AP)—An Alabama legislator proposed today establishment of a state-owned television system to carry public school work directly into homes if the courts ban segregated schools.

Rep. Sam M. Engelhardt Jr., of Macon County, where the famed Negro college, Tuskegee Institute, is located, outliend his proposal on a visit to the state capital.

Negroes outnumber whites about four to one in his county.

"There would be no problem of segregation if instruction were beamed directly into homes," he said, "and it might help to put some of the burden of education on the parents, where it belongs.

"OF COURSE provision would have to be made for TV school reception centers spotted over the state for the convenience of families who could not afford private television sets."

The Federal Communications Commission has allocated five TV channels to Alabama for educational purposes.

If the state should decide to go all out for television education system, Engelhardt said it probably would be necessary to seek additional channels for instructional telecasting.

Engelhardt alarmed at the lawsuits pending before the U. S. Supreme Court which seek to knock out segregation in the public schools, previously said he would sponsor a bill during this year's Legislature to take the state out of the school business altogether if segregation is done away.

The legislator said he is mentioning the television idea "only to give educators something to think about," and will go ahead as planned with the other bill.

This measure, which has already been drawn up, proposes to replace the present segregated system with privately operated classrooms, financed with state, county and city founds but free from government control.

The Macon County lawmaker sponsored an amendment to the general education appropriation bill in the Legislature two years ago to cut off state funds if the courts sehould forbid segregation. It was deleted, however, before the measure passed.

AS TO CONVERTING the school system to television, Engelhardt said his plan probably would offer the most economical way to handle a non-segregated school program without causing violence between the races.

"There are quite a few Southerners who just aren't going to let the Supreme Court tell them how to operate their schools," he said. "The racial problem is a delicate one in the South and it just can't be worked out by a Supreme Court directive."

Engelhardt observed that with TV classes the state could offer the best instructors in every subject and give more children, regardless of race, advantages of superior teaching.

"I'm sure it would virtually do away with school building programs and costly school maintenance," he said.

"We could concentrate more on the quality of teaching and quit worrying about expensive upkeep of the school system."

Engelhardt said with the amount of money Alabama is now spending on public education there would be plenty to finance a vast TV network and reception centers at key spots over the state.

Better educational facilities for Negroes being sought here

BY ALICE GARDNER MURPHY
News staff writer

A request for a committee to work towards improved educational facilities for Birmingham-area Negroes has been placed before the Inter-Racial Committee of the Jefferson County Coordinating Council.

The request—which says there is a need for special classes in such fields as speech and hearing correction and sight-saving—was placed before the committee's annual meeting by Clarence O. Brown, executive secretary of the group.

Episcopal Bishop C. C. J. Carpenter was reelected president and Arthur Shores, Negro attorney, vice president, at the meeting. Methodist Bishop Claire Purcell attended as a new member.

In his annual report, Brown told members of the two-year-old committee of 25 white and 25 Negro community leaders that "we have come to the point where we can begin a program of action, the results of which might well be seen in 1953."

THE COMMITTEE is divided into sub-groups working towards improved housing, transportation, recreation, police, fire and medical facilities for Birmingham-area Negroes.

Brown suggested an educational sub-committee be added to the program, telling members that "regardless of the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court there is and will be a tremendous job to be done."

He also urged that the committee try to find leaders and sponsors for special classes for Negro students.

The Birmingham city school system has one sight-saving class which is attended by white children with poor eyesight from over the county.

Speech and hearing correction work in the white schools is co-sponsored by the Junior League Speech and Hearing Clinic.

REPORTING on the committee on Negro police, Brown said that studies have been compiled on other cities in the South.

"In most cities the addition of Negro police has proved effective, but the key factor seems to be the attitude of the administrators of the police program.

"In Birmingham at present our aim might be to work with city administrators for a performance of police duties with the highest efficiency and skill without regard for race, creed or color."

BROWN commended the work of Mervyn Sterne and the hospital committee in raising funds for a Negro hospital here, now under construction under the Hill-Burton Act.

Mr. Sterne reported that Charleston, W. Va., and Macon, Ga., medical societies have recently admitted Negro doctors to their membership.

Birmingham medical society membership is not open to Negro doctors, but doctors must be members of the society to practice in local hospitals, he pointed out.

Brown reported that little progress has been made in the field of housing and urged the committee to "encourage every individual and agency to improve rental property and homes to build more and better homes for Negroes here."

He said no progress had been made in the field of transportation and suggested that "a way be devised to reach management and labor of the Birmingham Transit Co. to train its personnel to render courteous service to all passengers.

New Survey Shows 649 One-Teacher Schools In State

Alabama still has 649 one-teacher schools, a new survey by the State Department of Education disclosed.

The survey shows that 392 are Negro schools where the average daily attendance is one to 25 pupils. Another 160 schools where the number of Negro children in daily attendance is between 26 and 50 were noted.

About 85 one-teacher schools for white children were listed in the state where the average daily attendance ranges between one and 25, and one more such white schools where the daily attendance is 26-50.

The survey also shows that there are 427 Negro and 168 two-teacher schools; 176 Negro, and 164 white three-teacher schools; 107 Negro and 107 white four-teacher schools; 48 Negro and 70 white schools with five teachers each, while 355 Negro and 837 white schools throughout the state each have six or more teachers on their staffs.

Survey Shows Ala. Schools Unequal

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — A survey by the state department of education disclosed last week that Negro students attend 552 of the 646 one-teacher schools in Alabama.

According to the survey, 392 of the one-teacher colored schools have an average daily attendance of from one to 25 pupils, and 160 others average between 25-50 students.

The survey also revealed that there are 427 colored and 168 white two-teacher schools; 176 colored and 164 white three-teacher schools; 107 colored and an equal number of white four-teacher schools.

Alabama School Forces Seek More Funds From Legislature

Public Outlay for Schools Jumps 1,500 Per Cent in Eighteen Years

By FRED TAYLOR

Staff Writer, Birmingham News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Feb. 14—Alabama school forces, highly successful in getting big revenue increases for public education in recent years, will come storming back for more when the Legislature meets May 5.

School leaders want a lot more, including a $100,000,000 bond issue for buildings, plus additional millions for teacher pay raises and other operational costs.

This, in the face of Gov. Gordon Persons' stand against any more taxes in any form, presages some lively tussles in the House and Senate over school demands.

Outlay Climbs

A check of appropriations since 1935 discloses that in the last 18 years the amount Alabama taxpayers have contributed to public education has jumped more than 1,500 per cent.

Back in 1935, the state's total appropriations to all public schools amounted only to about $5,000,000.

But this has steadily been stepped up until it reached $78,000,000 for the current fiscal year. Last year the schools got $76,000,000, or a total of $154,000,000 for the first biennium of the Persons administration.

This represents sharply increased appropriations to public education since Governor Persons took office. The governor went to bat for the schools at the outset and helped push through the Legislature a hike in the state's general sales tax from 2 to 3 per cent.

The boost is bringing in over $20,000,000 more yearly for teacher salary increases, funds for upgrading teachers each year for higher pay, retirement funds, better transportation facilities for children and so forth.

Salaries Raised

Each of the state's more than 23,000 teachers received a minimum yearly raise of $300, with some getting more. Many counties and cities supplement teachers' pay from local taxes.

As for the proposed $100,000,000 building program, it was pointed out that the state has appropriated more than $31,000,000 for new school buildings, additions and improvements to school plants since 1945.

Legislative leaders feel certain there will be no new taxes levied this year. But school men have a plan to get some $20,000,000 to $25,000,000 more from the sales tax by knocking out all exemptions.

Tax Exemptions

Governor Persons also has declared himself against any such move, which he also opposed in the 1951 session. To remove the exemptions would mean the consumer eventually would have to pay the sales levy not only on retail prices, but indirectly absorb this 3 per cent tax on all raw materials which go into manufactured products.

Exemptions are granted on machinery used in manufacturing products which must bear the tax. And the 1951 Legislature granted sales tax exemptions on various farm commodities, such as feedstuffs and insecticides.

There are other ways in which the school leaders hope to raise additional millions for education. One plan is to ask the Legislature to stop allowing a deduction of federal income tax payments by those making returns in computing what they owe in state income taxes.

It has been estimated this would increase state income tax collections approximately $5,000,000. And it would boost the amount the average state income taxpayer has to pay each year by 15 to 20 per cent.

Still other revenue-raising proposals are expected to be laid before the lawmakers.

Want to Check

However, these will be studied by the governor and his budget committee, which will begin its sessions late in March. Meeting with Governor Persons to consider both school and general budget matters will be State Sen. Albert Boutwell, chairman of the Senate Finance and Taxation committee; Rep. Noble Russell, chairman of the House Ways and Means committee, State Finance Director D. W. Hodo, State Budget Officer Jake Jordan and others.

Asked how they feel about appropriating more funds to the schools, both Boutwell and Russell said they wanted to check thoroughly into present income before making any hard and fast decisions.

Supreme Court Ruling On School Segregation Hangs Over State Legislature Like A Sharp-Edged Sword

By REX THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala. Jan. 10—Race-conscious Alabama legislators are approaching their 1953 session under a cloud of uncertainty as dark and foreboding as any in the state's troubled history.

Overshadowing all other problems, as the House and Senate get ready for the biennial meeting in May, is the possibility that the U. S. Supreme Court will outlaw segregation in the public schools.

Even without that challenge to the tradition of white supremacy, there would still be enough controversial matter to keep the Legislature busy through the summer.

The schools are asking for more money again, both for operating costs (including salaries) and for buildings. School building needs, piling up over the years, have reached the critical point where experts say it will take 300 million dollars or more to meet the demand.

More money, of course, means more tax revenue, and a campaign has already begun to plug up some of the loopholes, or exemptions, in both the sales and income taxes.

Conditions at Bryce Hospital, where the death of several patients was blamed on lack of ventilation during a heat wave in the summer of 1951, could become another major issue.

To Stir Up Debate

More certain to stir up debate is Gov. Gordon Persons' promised attempt to get a 60-mile highway speed limit written into the law to take the place of the present limitation which was fixed by proclamation. It has already been held unconstitutional, but hasn't been finally passed on by the State Supreme Court.

Persons speaks confidently of the chances of getting a speed limit law through without a major fight, but there will be some opposition from those who successfully opposed a similar measure in 1951.

Other changes in the traffic code probably will be sought, too, in an effort to stop the slaughter on the highways, but the program in detail hasn't crystallized.

The old battle between States Righters and Regular Democrats for control of the State Democratic Executive Committee may break out again to touch off more fireworks. An attempt probably will be made to tie the hands of the committee—it can't bind Alabama's presidential electors to the national ticket again.

National party Loyalists now in control of the committee required elector candidates last year to sign a pledge to support the regular party nominee for president no matter who it was. States Righters fought the pledge in court, but lost.

As a last resort, they're talking about rewriting the election laws to restrict the state committee's authority. Such a move, with the kind of sponsorship to give it weight in the Legislature, could result in a scrap rivaling the name-calling that prevailed during the tumultous Folsom administration.

Poll tax repeal, or modification, and jury service for women are other perennial issues likely to bob up again in the 1953 session. They are always good for a first-class squabble.

Question Mark

But all these are obscured by the shadowy question mark over racial segregation in the classroom. A decision against separate schools would confront Alabama with perhaps its gravest crisis.

Anticipating that, Rep. Sam Engelhardt of Macon County, where famed Tuskegee Institute is located has already drafted legislation to set up a system of free private schools, operated on funds donated by the state.

It would take a constitutional amendment, and that likely would mean a special session of the Legislature, for this reason:

Constitutional amendments cannot be voted on by the people until 90 days after final adjournment of the legislative session at which they are submitted.

Consequently, if a school amendment were acted on by the Legislature at the regular session which generally lasts until September, the people couldn't vote on it until after the fall school term began.

To speed it up, the House and Senate could recess the regular meeting, have the governor call them back immediately in a special session, pass a school amendment, then go back to their regular work.

That way, the amendment could be submitted to the people three months after the end of the special session, or during the summer.

Educators Eye Cost To Build Negro Schools

Supreme Court Ruling May Ask Equalization Of Facilities In State

By REX THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

Suppose the Supreme Court, instead of outlawing segregation, told the South it must put white and Negro schools on an equal basis within the next few years? How much would it cost the state of Alabama?

Educational leaders are struggling with that question now, thinking that perhaps some such decision may come out of the segregation issue which is pending before the court.

They'd like to have the answer before the legislature meets in May, but for the present they say frankly "It's anybody's guess."

There are so many intangible factors, explains Reece White of the State Education Department, that even a rough guess at the cost would be difficult. White, as head of the department's division of administration and finance, is devoting a good deal of time to the problem.

One thing, however, does seem certain: A stepped-up equalization program would call for a tremendous lump-sum expenditure for Negro school buildings plus a sizable increase in annual schools appropriations, chiefly for salaries.

Federal and state experts are making a county-by-county survey of building needs now, both for white and Negro schools. They have estimated it will cost 300 million dollars to bring all the buildings up to "decent" standards.

Negro schools will need between 10 and 150 million on the basis of findings in the 26 counties where the survey has been completed.

Two powerful statewide organizations, the Alabama Education Association and the Alabama Farm Bureau Federation, have advocated a multi-million dollar bond issue to meet the building requirements. The Farm Bureau recommendation specifically pointed to the need for Negro schools.

A hurried-up program to equalize education facilities also would mean heavier expenditures for Negro teacher salaries and curriculum changes, White explained.

No figures are available, for instance, on how much effort would be needed to make the same courses of instruction available for Negro and white students in each city and county.

In some places, White said, the cost would be extremely high. Winston County, he pointed out, has only 17 Negroes registered in its schools, and to establish new courses and hire new teachers there might mean setting up special classes for one or two students.

School bus transportation is another, but less important factor. Progress in that direction has moved along fairly rapidly.

Negro and white teachers are already on the same salary scale as far as state funds go, but equalized education would still cost more. For this reason:

Teachers regardless of race are paid according to the amount of college training they have had, Negro teachers, on the average, have had less college education than their white colleagues in Alabama, so their average earnings are lower—$192 a year to be exact.

Thus to bring the 7,000 Negro teachers up to the same experience level of the white instructors would cost $1,344,000 a year, or 7,000 times the $192 differential which now exists.

Meanwhile, as the grim waiting for the Supreme Court decision goes on, members of the legislature are thinking also of what they might do if segregation is abolished altogether.

And Rep. Sam Englehardt of Macon County, who has proposed a "free private school" program operated with state funds, said today he has found favorable reaction among his colleagues.

Englehardt's plan would turn the schools over to private corporations which would operate them with money and property "donated" by the state.

The corporations would be formed by 10 or more patrons in each school and chartered in the office of the probate judge in each county officers would be elected and constitutions and by-laws written for individual schools.

The corporations would have the power to buy, sell and lease real estate and to admit students "upon such conditions" as they chose. Funds would be allocated to each school by local school boards.

School Opening On Time, Says Board Members

The Montgomery County Board of Education has completed plans for opening the schools Thursday, Sept. 3, including the naming of two schools, selection of three principals and two supervisors, and authorization for 77 new teachers.

Dr. C. M. Dannelly, superintendent, said the board decided to continue with the previously planned date unless health authorities advise against it.

Principals appointed by the board are Edsel F. Holman MacMillan School, succeeding Murray B. Swann, who resigned to teach in Florida; Meade Lorenzo Guy II, Pine Level Junior High School, succeeding R. F. McKinney, who re-entered the insurance business, and Thelma Smiley Morris, who will be principal of the William Burns Paterson Elementary School for Negroes, under construction on Jefferson Street.

Catherine Johnson will succeed Thelma Morris as Jeanes supervisor for the county. She holds the B.S. and M.S. degrees from Alabama State College for Negroes.

Maggie Y. Forte, B.S. and M.S. from Tuskegee Institute, will be Jeanes supervisor for the city.

Guy taught last year in Capitol Heights Junior High School, and Holman taught at MacMillan School.

Dr. Dannelly said the 77 teachers to be hired are necessary because of anticipated enrollment increases and the resignation of several teachers.

"We named the new 16-classroom Negro school for William Burns Paterson, founder of Alabama State College for Negroes," said Dr. Dannelly.

He added that the name of West End School was changed to the Emma MacMillan School, in memory of the principal there from 1913 to 1942. She died April 22, 1953. "She served in the Montgomery public schools 44 years," he said.

READY FOR OCCUPANCY is this addition to the Ozark Negro High School, built at a cost of approximately $150,000 by Henderson, Black & Greene, contractors of Troy, Ala. Josh Ammons of Troy was superintendent of construction. This fireproof building, which stands adjacent to the original classroom building, consists of eight classrooms, a lunchroom, a science laboratory, and toilet facilities.

Recess to await court's segregation rulina offered

MONTGOMERY, Ala., June 12 —(AP)—Sen. J. M. Bonner today proposed a three-month recess in the Alabama Legislature to await developments in the school segregation cases pending before the Supreme Court.

The outspoken white supremacy advocate told his colleagues:

"We are facing the most momentous condition since the secession of 1861. Nothing so serious has happened since that time. I am merely trying to make someone stop and think. If there are any thinking men in this Legislature, we need them now."

Bonner's resolution, which went to the rules committee without immediate consideration, would stop the present session after the 21st legislative day about July 14 and reconvene on Oct. 27.

The Supreme Court has called for new arguments on the segregation issue earlier that month.

Bonner said he realized there probably won't be a decision by Oct. 27, but that if there is enough sentiment in the Legislature for a recess, he will probably move the reconvening date back to some time next year.

Purpose of the waiting period would be to have the Legislature back in session for whatever action it might want to take after the segregation decision is announced.

Normally the lawmaking body would adjourn in the Fall and not meet again for two years. The governor could call a special session any time, but Bonner said a recess would be better.

Regardless of What the Supreme Court Says

Alabama Certain to Have 'Bloodshed,' Warns Solon

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Regardless of what the Supreme Court may rule, Negro children of Alabama's "black belt" won't get a decent break in education, according to sentiments expressed by a State Senator here last week.

Wilcox State Senator J. Miller Bonner predicted "wholesale bloodshed" in the "black belt" in an interview given Gene Worstman, staff writer for the Birmingham Post-Herald.

Sen. Bonner said, "The Supreme Court is bound to rule one of two things. I look for its ruling Monday (June 8). It will rule either we must provide equal facilities for both races, or we must provide the same facilities.

"IT'S IMPOSSIBLE for the Black Belt to accept either of these."

Bonner warned that the bloodshed, which he termed an "honest" but "dismal prediction" is on its way "regardless of what the Supreme Court of the United States may say. We just aren't going to have it in the Black Belt."

The 75-year-old solon, who Worstman said "was born in the carpetbag days," declared "I've given more thought, I believe, to our race problem than any man in Alabama."

Bonner suggested that in the event the High Court fails to rule on the education issue in its next two sittings that the legislature be recessed after passage of bills calling for general educational appropriations for the next two fiscal years.

THEN, BONNER recommended, the Legislature would be called again into session to discuss future plans following the court's ruling.

Bonner said that Negroes comprise a majority of more than three to one in the Black Belt area of Greene, Lowndes, Wilcox, Dallas, Hale, Sumter, Perry, Macon, and Marengo counties. In Wilcox, Bonner's home bailiwick, the population is 23,438 with about three and one-half Negroes listed to each white person.

Bonner maintained that Wilcox could not afford the estimated $3,375,000 needed to put Negro facilities on par with those of whites.

Of this amount, $70,000 would be earmarked for white schools and the remaining $3,305,000 would go to Negro schools.

"THAT MEANS if they attempt to do that we've got to get the money from Birmingham or the rich counties because Wilcox can't afford it," said the solon. However, Bonner said that the race question was not something for the distant future, but for the immediate present.

The race question and our school situation makes it certain there'll be wholesale bloodshed in the Black Belt before we ever permit Negroes to attend white schools."

Mr. Bonner has been adjudged an "ardent white supremacy advocate."

Alabama To Open Segregation Study

Will Be Ready To Act After High Court Rulina

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (NNPA) The State of Alabama is moving to get a unified approach of southern states to whatever problems might arise from the decision of the five school segregation cases which the United States Supreme Court has ordered argued next Oct. 12.

If the State Senate gives its approval, a committee to study segregation, made up of state officials, educators and private citizens, will be created to consider every possible solution.

Governor Gordon Persons would designate the members of the propose committee, including state department heads, five members of the legislature, four laymen, and spokesmen for the state, county and city education boards.

No Indication

The proposed plan gives no indication that Alabama's colored citizens will be represented on the board, whose recommendations would affect their children as well as white children.

State Senator Miller, who introduced the resolution to create the committee, reasons that if a study group is set up, the public prepared to make whatever adjustments that may be necessary.

If the court should decide that segregation in public schools violates the 14th Amendment, Miller reasons, the committee, through its study, should be able to recommend the next step to take.

Suspicions Arise

On the other hand, if the court should order equalization of school facilities for colored children with those afforded white children, he reasons, the committee should be able to come up with estimates of costs and how the necessary construction can be financed.

While Miller's resolution appears to be a step in the [illegible] direction, the suspicion [illegible] among colored people that the purpose of the committee would be chiefly to find some way of circumventing a decision ordering integration.

Under Miller's resolution, other southern states would be invited to undertake similar studies so that when the school segregation cases are decided representatives of the seventeen states having segregated school systems can get together to work out a common course of action.

Private School Ill

One probable effect of the resolution, if adopted, would be to kill the stand-by "free private school" bill offered by Representative Sam Engelhardt of Macon County. Englehardt wants the legislature to have a private school system ready to go into operation if the Supreme Court should order the abolition of segregated schools.

The Englehardt proposal is patterned after the plan of Governor James F. Byrnes of South Carolina, which, in effect, would turn over the public school system to a private organization and the State would appropriate funds to pay the tuition of pupils.

Fred Taylor reporting—

Beatty suggests plans to meet court ruling on segregation in schools

BY FRED TAYLOR, News staff writer

Alternative plans of action to meet a possible U. S. Supreme Court decision knocking out racial segregation in public schools have been suggested to Gov. Persons by Jefferson's veteran Rep. Jimmy Beatty.

Beatty, Birmingham attorney and widely known as an authority on constitutional questions, proposed:

1. That governors of all 48 states be convened to consider the feasibility of reamending the federal constitution al to clarify the 14th Amendment "so as to make it crystal clear and beyond further question that the states, in the exercise of their police power, would be permitted to establish separate schools for the two races."

TAYLOR

2. If this could not be accomplished, "then I can only suggest that the strictest regulations by physical examination and frequent inspection for cleanliness, mental capacity, ability to keep up with classes, etc., be enforced."

Under this alternative plan, Rep. Beatty also recommended redistricting of school districts "so as to enable school authorities to insure that the standards of our school classes may not deteriorate to the level of what we would expect it to be, namely: that of the most backward of colored children."

BEATTY

He emphasized that "all of this could, of course, be done without violating any constitutional right."

'Abolition unthinkable'

GOV. PERSONS, in calling upon legislators, editors, school leaders and others for their "views and suggestions" on how to prepare Alabama for the impending high court ruling, termed complete abolition "unthinkable."

"I agree with your conclusion that such a decision by our highest court would be unthinkable," Rep. Beatty wrote the governor.

Beatty's letter

AS TO THE 14TH AMENDMENT, interpretation of which by the high court will determine how it rules on the segregation cases, Beatty's letter said:

"I have never thought it was the intention of our Congress when it submitted the 14th Amendment to the states for ratification even during the turbulent year of 1866 (at the end of the Civil War), to abolish segregation of the races.

"Certainly, this language was not used in the amendment which was submitted for ratification. The object of the amendment, as has been recognized by the U. S. Supreme Court long ago in the case of Plessy vs. Ferguson, to name only one, was to enforce absolute equality of the races before the law.

"But, as the Supreme Court remarked, it could not have been intended to abolish distinction based upon color or to enforce social as distinguished from political equality, or to enforce or permit co-mingling of the two races upon terms unsatisfactory to either.

"The Supreme Court further observed that laws requiring the separation of the races in places where they are liable to be brought into contact do not necessarily imply inferiority of either race to the other."

State police powers

THE JEFFERSON lawmaker pointed out that it had been recognized that such laws generally had been upheld "as within the competency of the state legislatures in the exercise of their police powers."

"It was also there observed," his letter added, "that the most common instance of such laws was in connection with the establishment of separate schools for white and colored children and it so happened that such laws have been enacted and upheld by the courts of states where the political rights of the colored race had been longest and most earnestly enforced.

"One of the earliest cases involving the question of separation of races in schools arose in the state of Massachusetts—the birthplace of the abolitionist movement. Practically identical laws have been passed by the legislatures of Ohio, New York, Missouri, Indiana, among others, and all have been upheld by the Supreme Courts.

Sees favorable action

AS TO HIS PLAN for convening governors of all 48 states for re-amending the federal constitution, Rep. Beatty wrote Gov. Persons:

"Personally, I would not despair of the hope that the citizens in the required (36) majority of the states will review this serious question far more favorably, since we are now so far removed from the animosities and prejudices which dominated thought and action immediately after the Civil War.

"Particularly am I of this opinion because, as heretofore stated, leading states in the North, including Massachusetts and New York, have in the course of their history enacted laws for the establishment of separate schools."

'Equal facilities'

GOV. PERSONS invited suggestions on continuation of the state's present system, in case the high court rules in favor of this "but with a definite time limit in which to completely comply with the 'separate but equal facilities'."

The governor had pointed out in his letter that some Alabama cities and counties already have provided "equal facilities" for white and Negro school children, while other municipalities and counties were seeking to do this.

In commenting on such a possible ruling, Rep. Beatty cited efforts being made to provide "equal facilities."

"This has been accomplished in some localities, and in others the effort is still being pressed with all the earnestness that the resources of the communities will allow," his letter said.

"When one compares the facilities now provided for the educational advancement not only of the Negroes but the other races as well, with that existing only one short lifespan ago, we can only stand in awe at the progress that has been made.

Strides in Jefferson

BEATTY DECLARED that in some sections of Jefferson County the Negroes "have far better physical school facilities than are available for white pupils."

"At the Wenonah Negro Trade School not only are the school and shop buildings, dining halls and dormitories superior to that provided at Alabama colleges for white students, but the principal at the Negro Trade School is provided with a $40,000 to $50,000 brick residence as well.

"Therefore, it is difficult to understand how the state of Alabama can do more than follow its present program.

"It is conceivable that Negro educators should probably have representation on the State Board of Education, and that the state appropriations for schools should be apportioned among white and Negro schools upon a formula relatively proportionate to the white and colored school attendance."

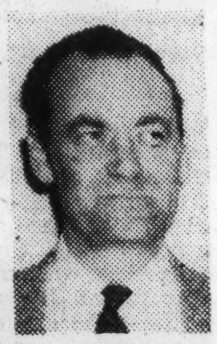
Answers pour in

GOV. PERSONS, in asking for suggestions on what should be done to meet the high court ruling, said "Unfortunately, we do not know exactly what to prepare for." However, he stressed that Alabama must be prepared for whatever decision the court hands down.

Persons was frank to admit he does not have the "solution," but expressed the belief that "we'll get it," as answers poured in from more than 600 state and community leaders to whom he sent letters.

These will be checked over by the governor, members of a six-man legislative interim committee and Dr. W. J. Terry, state education superintendent. Then recommendations will be considered by committee members and those of the State Legislative Council at Montgomery Jan. 8.

Tuscaloosa Sen. E. W. Skidmore, council chairman, has called this special meeting to consider recommendations and to hear a "progress report" by Charles M. Cooper, legislative reference service director, who has made a study of problems likely to result from the court decision.



Skidmore

Members of the interim committee, appointed under authority of a Senate joint resolution adopted in the closing days of the 1953 session, are Jefferson Sen. Albert Boutwell, Senate president pro-tem; Sens. J. Miller Bonner, Wilcox, author of the resolution, and Herbert Byars, Hale; Reps. Bob Kendall, Conecuh; Ira Pruitt, Sumter, and Jack Gallalee, Mobile.

Bonner's resolution urged that the governor call a special session of the Legislature, if the court knocks out segregation. It stated that such emergency session be called "upon the announcement of any decision by the Supreme Court of the United States which threatens, either directly or by implication, the continuing validity of the present organization of the schools of this state."

Private school systems

SEN. BYARS, Macon County Rep. Sam Engelhardt Jr., son-in-law of Sen. Bonner, and others introduced bills in the recent legislative session to create private school systems, if segregation is ruled out.

These were patterned after the South Carolina and Georgia plans for private setups to supplant public school systems in such an eventuality.

But these proposals were held up to await further developments in the segregation cases.

Call of the wild in parks

What makes boys and girls turn berserk the minute they get into a playground, asks John Littlehale, caretaker of a Nottingham, England, park. They have stripped young trees, pulled basins out of washrooms, broken swings and killed dozens of fish with bricks.

Lap sitting illegal

SAN DIEGO, — (AP) — A San Diego waitress was pinched while she was sitting on a sailor's lap. Pinched by the police, that is.

Vice squad officers booked her at city jail on charge of "mingling" with the cafe's customers in violation of a city ordinance.

"I never heard of such a law," she said indignantly from her jail cell.

Appeal To Newsmen—

Persons Invites Suggestions On School Segregation Plan

1+d 1 2 Col

Newspapermen and radio commentators were invited by Gov. Gordon Persons today to tell him what they think Alabama should do to get ready for the Supreme Court's decision on segregation.

Asserting the state "must be prepared for any eventuality," the governor appealed to the press and radio in Alabama to "take the time to write me your views and suggestions covering the problem that will confront us." Wed. 12-23-53

His request came in personal letters addressed to newspaper editors, feature writers, news service reporters and radio commentators. Explanatory notes were attached authorizing them to make it public. P/D

"Bigger Than Any Of Us"

Persons said "this problem is bigger than any of us," and he urged the radio and newsmen to reply "no matter whether you are a Democrat, an Eisenhower Democrat, a Republican, or whether you are pro- or anti-Truman, pro- or anti-Eisenhower, or pro- or anti-Persons."

Without venturing to predict the outcome of the Supreme Court school segregation cases, the governor did say it seemed probable that the tribunal will either order segregation abolished outright or continue the present "separate but equal" doctrine with a definite time limit for compliance.

He mentioned, too, the possibility that the court might throw the suits out on the grounds that the federal government has no jurisdiction, but observed at the same time that "this seems highly unlikely."

Must Explore Solutions

Because of the uncertainty, Alabama must "explore every possible solution so that we can be prepared for any eventuality," he said, adding:

"We all know every city and county in Alabama has, for many years, been making an all-out effort to provide equal facilities. Some have accomplished this. Others are still in the process.

"I know you are busy, but certainly none of us are so busy but what we can devote whatever time and thought is necessary to solve this problem. I feel that you will have a good idea as to how your own people will react."

Carter Opposes End Of Public Schools

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—Two conservative southern leaders speaking here this week contended that the cost of equalizing schools in the South would rival the national debt.

If they are right it could bankrupt some of the poorer states.

Hodding Carter, editor of the Greenville, Miss., Delta Democrat-Times, told the Birmingham chapter of the American Assn. of University Women the cost of providing equal schools for Negroes would average from $50 to $100 million in each state.

State Sen. James H. Faulkner estimated the cost in Alabama at $150 to $200 million. Both opinions assumed that the Supreme Court will rule in favor of segregation in the cases now pending before it.

Carter based his estimate on the cost of equalizing school plants alone. He said that in the event of a ruling against segregation, he would be opposed to the abolition of the public school system.

Even a ruling against segregation would not result in mass enrollment of Negroes in previously white schools, Carter said.

Using Carter's estimate for school plants alone, the cost of equalizing schools in 13 states would be $650 million.

Integration of the existing school system might conceivably cost $8 million.

Alabama politics . . . Updating the record—

Sen. Boutwell is a punctual legislator; some Negro school plans are projected

BY HUGH SPARROW
News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Nov. 10—When it comes to punctuality as a legislator there are few, indeed, who equal the record of Jefferson's Sen. Albert Boutwell.

During the recent Legislature Sen. Boutwell was present on each opening roll call. What's more, a check shows that he was equally as punctual in 1947, 1949 and 1951.

Not only was Sen. Boutwell present on each of the legislative days, but the record shows he voted on most of the roll calls.

Sen. Boutwell's attendance record was brought to light as a result of a check the past week into his 1953 voting record.

A FEW WEEKS AGO THIS column presented an analysis of how Jefferson's House members voted during the 1953 session. Because the Senate journal had not been completed Sen. Boutwell's voting record was not given at that time.

During the 1953 session Sen. Boutwell jointly sponsored many of the administration measures. He was the governor's floor leader in the Senate. He sponsored about 25 other measures.

SEN. BOUTWELL voted yea on the speed limit proposal, on the bill extending the $3 tag to farmers' pickup trucks, the two year back poll tax amendment and on the Solomon bill forbidding certain—but not all—state employes from joining labor unions.

He voted for the teacher pay raise, the women jury service measure and the bill intended to prevent use in public schools of textbooks written by persons suspected of Communist leanings.

SEN. BOUTWELL didn't vote either way on a bill repealing the black market license on illegal slot machines. He voted yea on bills backed by chiropodists and on the measure to restrict the number of optometrists entitled to practice. Boutwell voted nay on a measure requiring advertisement of general bills of local application.

He voted aye on all appropriation bills and on the measure making a special appropriation for treatment of polio victims.

On the socalled right to work bill, Sen. Boutwell paired with Sen. Benson of Jackson. If Benson had been present he would have voted yea and Boutwell nay.

AT LEAST two new proposals to cope with the situation in event the U. S. Supreme Court rules against school segregation will be presented when the legislative council holds its next quarterly session early in January.

At the last council meeting the problem was given preliminary study. The Legislative Reference Service was authorized to make a study and offer suggestions. Individual council members also agreed to give the problem study before the next meeting.

State Schools Face Problem Of Finances

AEA Secretary Plans Series Of Questions To 1954 Candidates

Even without a Supreme Court ruling against segregation, Alabama's public school system faces a staggering problem of finances next year.

Frank Grove, executive secretary of the Alabama Education Association, suggested yesterday that candidates for the legislature and governor will be called on to answer such questions as these:

Will the 6 3-4 million dollar "cost of living" bonus given teachers by the 1953 legislature become a deficit in 1955?

How can enough school buildings and facilities be provided to meet the present and future need?

How can the excessive number of pupils per teacher in many schools be reduced?

What action can be taken to halt the flow of Alabama teachers to other jobs and teaching posts in other states?

Grove, in a prepared release approved by the AEA Board of Trustees, said "it would be highly unfortunate for Alabama children" if the next governor and members of the next legislature went into office without understanding the "imperative" need for improving school conditions.

"Splendid Gains"

He noted that "splendid gains" have been made in state school support in recent years, recalling that the income tax was earmarked for schools in 1947 and the sales tax increased by one cent in 1951.

"Today these two taxes, augmented by the use tax, contribute $70,517,000 to the education trust fund," the AEA release said. "Even so, swelling enrollments, high living costs, and competition for trained teachers continue to make schools Alabama's number one economic and social problems."

The 1953 legislature allotted the surplus in the building commission for teachers' salaries. This will yield approximately $3,379,000 for each of the next two years. Grove said it will provide monthly increase of about $14 to Alabama teachers and lifts the annual average salary to approximately $2,700. "This average, however, is still below salaries paid in North Carolina, Louisiana, Georgia, Florida, Texas and Virginia," he said. "Moreover, salaries paid Alabama college teachers are well below those current in other states. As a consequence, it is difficult to hold highly trained men in specialized fields at the college level."

In 1955 this money must be replaced by a continuing appropriation or it will lapse, which would mean a cut in the salaries of public school and college teachers, the AEA official added.

The recent legislature increased continuing appropriations by approximately 2 1-2 million dollars a year. This goes to improve teacher retirement benefits, the extension service at Auburn and the several trade schools.

No Increases Authorized

No increases were authorized to improve school transportation, to buy enough textbooks, to expand vocational education, or to provide buildings and facilities, said Grove.

"With mounting enrollments and with many school buildings now in use overcrowded, poorly lighted, and otherwise inadequate for teaching," the education spokesman said, "the school building problem for both whites and Negroes is especially acute.

A federal survey of school building needs completed in Alabama some months ago showed that a sum approximating 300 million dollars would be required to provide enough buildings and facilities to meet state needs adequately.

This survey was made before the unprecedented first grade enrollment of the current year, Grove pointed out.

"Today practically every Alabama town and city has had to add additional first grade teachers or to report first grade registrations of 35 and up," he said. "The building problem is further complicated by the imperative need of providing improved housing and facilities for Negro school children.

"Regardless of the decision to be handed down by the U. S. Supreme Court relative to segregation in the public schools, more and better buildings for Negroes cannot be further delayed in Alabama."

School Revenue Sought

In their efforts to find additional school revenue, Grove suggested that parents, candidates, and voters in general may want to examine the following possible sources of new money:

Increase local funds for schools by (1) raising the assessment on property on which the 7-mill county and district tax is now levied; (2) raising the constitutional limitation on local school taxes from 7 to 12 1-2 mills. Certain school systems have already followed both of these plans of action in part.

Abolish in whole or in part the current exemptions under sales and use taxes.

Raise the rates on income taxes paid by corporations to equal the rates paid by individuals.

Disallow deductions for federal income taxes in calculating taxes on income due the state.

Levy a tax for schools upon Alabama-produced petroleum products.

Sen. Boutwell declares—

Alabama won't abandon segregation in schools

BY FRED TAYLOR, News staff writer

Alabama will not accept abolition of racial segregation in its public schools, in the opinion of Jefferson Sen. Albert Boutwell, president protem of the State Senate.

Boutwell, member of a six-man legislative interim committee named to study problems expected to arise from an early U. S. Supreme Court ruling on segregation in the schools, declared:

"I think we will find a solution and take the necessary steps to preserve our Southern traditions and our way of life. We will not accept abolition of segregation in our public schools in Alabama."

THE JEFFERSON SENATOR'S comment came in response to a letter from Gov. Gordon Persons to all members of the Legislature, newspaper editors, school leaders and others seeking "views and suggestions" on what should be done, if the high court knocks out segregation.

Sen. Boutwell and the other five interim committee members will meet with Gov. Persons, Dr. W. J. Terry, state education superintendent, and members of the state legislative council at Montgomery Jan. 8.

This meeting has been called by Tuscaloosa Sen. E. W. Skidmore, council chairman, to consider the anticipated segregation ruling and its expected impact on the schools.

MEANTIME, REP. LARRY DUMAS, chairman of the Jefferson legislative delegation, said the seven House members and Sen. Boutwell would meet here before Jan. 8 to consider the governor's request for suggestions.

Others on the legislative interim group, appointed under authority of a Senate joint resolution adopted in the closing days of the 1953 session, are Wilcox Sen. J. Miller Bonner, resolution author; Hale Sen. Herbert Byars and Reps. Bob Kendall, Conecuh; Ira Pruitt, Sumter and Jack Gallalee, Mobile.

This resolution had urged Gov. Persons to call a special session of the Legislature, if the court rules out segregation in the cases pending before the high tribunal.

And bills introduced in the recent session by Sen. Byars, Macon, and Rep. Engelhardt Jr. and others to establish private school systems in Alabama, in event of such a decision.

However, these proposals were held up to await further developments in the segregation cases.

IN ASKING FOR REQUESTS, Gov. Persons said that complete abolition of segregation is "unthinkable."

"Unfortunately, we do not know exactly what to prepare for," wrote the governor. But he stressed that Alabama must be prepared for whatever decision the court hands down.

The governor admitted he does not have the "solution." However, he expressed the belief "we'll get it," as answers came in reply to more than 600 letters sent out by him.

ONE OF THESE ANSWERS was submitted by Jefferson Rep. Henry Beatty, Birmingham attorney and widely known authority on constitutional questions. He suggested alternative plans of action.

If segregation is ruled out, he proposed that all 48 governors be called together to consider feasibility of reamending the federal constitution to clarify the meaning of the 14th Amendment. Then, he said, it could be made "crystal clear and beyond further question that the states, in the exercise of their police power, would be permitted to establish separate schools for the two races."

Beatty said that if this could not be accomplished, then he could "only suggest the strictest regulations by physical examination and frequent inspection for cleanliness, mental capacity, ability to keep up with classes, etc., be enforced."

Preparing For 'Eventualities'

Persons Wants Ideas On Segregation Issue

From his announcement Tuesday, it is evident that Gov. Gordon Persons is highly concerned over the possibility of an unfavorable ruling by the U.S. Supreme Court on the Southland's segregation issue.

In a personal letter to Alabama's newspaper editors and radio commentators, Gov. Persons asked for suggested solutions to the school segregation problem.

"Alabama must be prepared," the governor wrote. "Unfortunately, we do not know exactly what to prepare for. This makes it the more necessary that we, in the meantime, explore every possible solution so that we can be prepared for any eventuality."

"The consequences of an unfavorable decision are, of course, unknown to any of us. What the decision itself will be is, of course, also unknown. However, it appears to me that perhaps the Court could decide along one of three general lines:

1. "REJECTION of the case on the assumption that the Federal Government's jurisdiction lies only in the District of Columbia. This seems highly unlikely.

2. "Complete abolition of segregation. To me this is unthinkable in view of the fact that the present system of 'separate but equal facilities' was itself long ago established by the Supreme Court.

3. "Continuation of the present system but with a definite time limit in which to completely comply with the 'separate but equal facilities.'"

Persons continued: "No matter whether you are a Democrat, an Eisenhower-Democrat, a Republican, or whether you are pro or anti-Truman, or pro or anti-Persons, this problem is bigger than any of us."

The purpose of writing newsmen, the governor indicated, is to get an idea as to how Alabamians in general feel about the matter.

Legislative Units To Study Advice On Segregation

When the Alabama Legislative Council meets here Jan. 8, it will join with a special six-man legislative committee to study some advisory letters sent to Gov. Gordon Persons on the problem of segregation in the public schools.

Gov. Gordon Persons made it known yesterday that he had received about 75 replies to a circular letter he had sent to news and radio men and county education officials asking their opinions on what Alabama should do if the Supreme Court abolishes school segregation.

The governor said that the joint meeting will handle the report on the letters informally.

At the same meeting the Alabama Legislative Council is expected to receive a report from Charles M. Cooper, director of the Legislative Reference Service, on what other states have done, or are doing, as a preparation for the awaited Supreme Court's ruling.

Ala. Governor Polls Leaders On Segregation Suggestions

Declares State Must Be Prepared To Act If Court Rules Adversely

By FRED TAYLOR
Staff Writer, The Birmingham News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Dec. 26—Gov. Gordon Persons moved this week to prepare Alabama for the impending U.S. Supreme Court decision on segregation in the public schools and to take whatever state action necessary to meet it.

He termed complete abolition of racial segregation as "unthinkable," in calling for members of the Legislature, newspaper editors, local and state school leaders, university presidents and others to give him their "views and suggestions" on what should be done.

"Unfortunately, we do not know exactly what to prepare for," Gov. Persons said. But he emphasized that Alabama must be prepared for whatever ruling the high court hands down.

Lacks 'Solution'

The governor was frank to admit he did not have the "solution," but he expressed the belief that "we'll get it," as answers started pouring in from the more than 600 state and community leaders to whom he sent letters.

Among legislative leaders commenting on Gov. Persons' action was Jefferson Sen. Albert Boutwell, Birmingham attorney and president pro tem of the State Senate, who declared:

"I think we will find a solution and take the necessary steps to preserve our Southern traditions and our way of life. We will not accept abolition of segregation in our public schools in Alabama."

Sen. Boutwell is one of a six-member legislative interim committee, named under authority of a Senate joint resolution adopted in the closing days of the 1953 session, to study the problems expected to arise from a Supreme Court decision.

This resolution, authored by Black Belt State Sen. J. Miller Bonner, veteran legislator and States' Righter, urged that the governor call a special session of the Legislature, if the court knocks out segregation.

This resolution stated that such emergency session be called "upon the announcement of any decision by the Supreme Court of the United States which threatens, either directly or by implication, the continuing validity of the present organization of the schools of this state."

Other Members

Sen. Bonner likewise is a member of the interim study committee, which also includes Hale County Sen. Herbert Byars and Sumter County Rep. Ira Pruitt, both Black Belters, in whose counties Negroes greatly outnumber whites; Conecuh County Rep. Bob Kendall and Mobile County Rep. Jack Gallalee.

Findings will be laid before the State Legislative Council, headed by Tuscaloosa State Sen. E. W. Skidmore, at a special meeting called here for Jan. 8.

The council at that time also will hear a "progress report" from Charles M. Cooper, director of the State Legislative Reference Service, who has been studying problems likely to result from the high tribunal decision.

Bills Offered

Bills were introduced in the recent legislative session by Sen. Byars, Macon County Rep. Sam Engelhardt Jr., in whose county Tuskegee Institute is located, and other senators and representatives to establish private school systems in Alabama if segregation is ruled out. These were patterned after the Georgia and South Carolina plans for private systems to supplant public school systems, in such an eventuality.

However, these proposals were held up at the governor's request to await further developments in the segregation cases.

In asking for suggestions this week, Gov. Persons wrote state leaders "No matter whether you are a Democrat, an Eisenhower-Democrat, a Republican, or whether you are pro or anti-Truman, pro or anti-Eisenhower or pro or anti-Persons, this problem is bigger than any of us."

Persons' Views

The governor said he believed the court "could decide along one of three general lines." He listed them as:

"1—Rejection of the case on the assumption that the federal government's jurisdiction lies only in the District of Columbia. This seems highly unlikely.

"2—Complete abolition of segregation. To me, this is unthinkable, in view of the fact that the present system of separate but equal facilities was itself long ago established by the Supreme Court.

"3—Continuation of the present system, but with a definite time limit in which to completely comply with the 'separate but equal facilities'."

School Segregation Hottest Topic In State Of Alabama

"Editor's Note: With the controversial issue of school segregation still the hotest topic in the South, intensified by the postponement of settlement of the question by the United States Supreme Court, the following column by Allen Rankin is being reproduced It appeared in the May 24 issue of The Montgomery Advertiser-Journal Davis wh s mentioned in the story is not a member of the National Newspaper Publishers Association and is not recognized as an authentic voice of the Negro Press. Lee has been ernwidely quoted by a number of Southern newspapers which are unfriendly to the Negros struggle for first-class citizenship.—Emory O. Jackson, Managing Editor, Birmingham World)

By ALLEN RANKIN
Columnist, The Birmingham-Advertiser-Journal

Several worried Negro leaders have approached us recently They fear that if the U. S. Supreme fear that if U.S. Supreme Court rules against segregation in school classrooms, their race will lose much more than it gains.

They are aware that the teaching professions s one of the man Negro "industries" of the South. They fear that many Negro teachers will lose their jobs, or at least their chance of promotion, if they are forced to give up their independent system and integrate with white teachers. Probably the most articulate mouthpiece of this faction is Davis Lee, publisher of The Newark (N. J.) Telegraph. Lee has pointed out in editorials that alleged non-segregation in schools in the North is far from a "howling success." Few of the Northern states will hire Negroes as teachers, he says, and adds, "Every device is employed to keep qualified Negroes from being assigned." Lee cites that in the city of Newark, N. J., where Negroes constitute 20 per cent of the population, only 70 of 2,200 teachers currently hired are Negroes." None of these are principals. "Despite all of the hallabaloo about the liberal East and North," he continues, "no Negro has been made head of a state college or University. Down South, the woods are full of Negro college and university presidents."

With his own independent school system in the South, the Negro educator has a lovely future, ndeed. Alabama alone employs 7,658 Negro teachers, on an absolutely equal-for-penny salary basis with whites of comparable qualifications.

The system is equal in other important respects. The Negro school going population composes 35.23 per cent of the State's school-age people. Negroes now have 34 per cent of the State's teaching jobs. The average Alabama Negro teacher's salary is $2,424 a year as compared to the white teacher's average, 2,-598. Moreover, many Negroes are climbing into the jobs of principal and other higher-paying administrative positions. There are 56 such higher job holders n the Negro system compared to 280 in the white system Recently, Jefferson County apponted a Negro Director of Education who is now a force at policy-making level.

The payroll for Negro publ[illegible] teachers in Alabama amounts o more than $17 million a year; in Georgia, to $15 million a year; in North Carolina, to $22 million a year

Would a non-segregation decree rom the Supreme Court destroy his pretty economic picture? Would whites tend to crowd out or subjugate Negro teachers in an integrated system?

The Negro spokesman Davis believes so. He fears that under non-segregation 75 per cent of all Negro teachers in the South would lose their jobs—and that 20,000 Negro principals would lose out as well.

HIGH HOPES AND CALM

The State Department of Education is inclined to take a calmer view. Or so we gathered from browsing informally through some department records and opinions this week. The "inside" experts we talked to—though they refused to be quoted by name—are hoping for things to work out in this order:

1) That the Supreme Court will hand down a wise decision which, whatever the newness of its wording, will allow the white and Negro school systems to remain separate if the advantages to the Negro are equal.

2) That greater efforts will be made to establish a real, not just a verbal, "equality" between the two systems.

3) That in any case, even in the event of an inflamatory ruling on the Court's part, Alabama legislators will "sit tight" and "cool off a while," before considering any rash and racially-angry measures that would wreck the school system and set education back a hundred years.

If the legislators refrain from firebrand actions and stay "hands off,' some state educators believe, schools of both races can continue their present progress, whatever the Supreme Court's ruling might be.

WOULD NEGROES LOSE OUT HERE?

Would many Negro teachers lose their jobs by a non-segregation decree? "I can't see it that way," said one authority in the Department. "Maybe, in a few places Negroes would lose out through consolidation, but I can't see how any mass change would be forthcoming. In many Alabama counties we have about as many Negro teachers as Whites. We need them all, and more besides. I see no reason why they wouldn't go right on teaching."

Some people have advanced the notion that Negro teachers might be squeezed out, if thrown in competition with "better trained" white teachers who would have seniority. The astonishing fact, however, is that at least by technical educators' standards, Negro teachers have recently outstripped whites in such technical qualifications. Five years ago only 54.4 per cent of the State's Negro teachers had three years of college training or more. Today 84.9 of our Negro school personnel has had such training compared with 84.2 of our white school personnel.

The State Department of Education hopes and prays for no radical upset, from either court ruling or legislative insanity, that would upset its memorable progress to date

NEEDED: 'REAL' EQUALITY

The way to keep classrooms segregation—desired by the majority of both races in the South—is actually to give the Negro "equal" school facilities that we like to boast that we give him, many authorities believe Almost incredible strides have been made in this direction in the last 10 years, particularly in the last five. But here is still far to go if we are to assure Negroes of school buildings and programs on a par with ours As one authority put it, "To actually bring their school system in general up to real equality with ours would cost an amazing sum of money."

Macon County presents a typical-heartbreak-the-problem picture. The population of Macon is said to be about 80 per cent Negro, and, sure enough, the books show that Macon has at least 80 per cent more Negro school than white ones. In fact, it has only three white schools and some 46 Negro schools. But what kind of Negro schools are they?

Nineteen of them are one-room shack affairs; 16 of them have 2 rooms; and 4 have three rooms. Eighteen of them are not even on state-owned property, and seven of them are lodged in privately owned structures or churches. Many of them have been thrown together by Negro parents themselves, who pushed together some second-hand lumber, called the shack a school, and requested a teacher for it.

In Brownville Negroes in grades from one to eight are packed together into a two-room school.

13 GRADES IN 3 ROOMS

In Lowndes County the picture is much the same. Eight larger white schools contrast with 59 Negro schools, 37 of them one-room, and 13 of them two-room structures, only 13 of them on state-owned land. They have names like Steep Creek, Sandy Ridge, Old Pleasant Valley and Bazziel Springs. At Marble Stone School, seven teachers attempt to teach pupils in grades one through 12, all crammed into three classrooms!

Both Macon and Lowndes have acquired some excellent Negro schools and are pushing for more. Both are simply typical of counties predominantly Negro. Montgomery County, despite its fine Negro schools in the city, presents too many one-room shacks in rural areas. In this and other counties the growing number of luxurious, modern schools for Negroes has not allowed us to forget the trash and inequalities out in the backwoods.

We repeat that the picture is changing for the better at an almost unbelievable rate. Yet, it will not be entirely sunny until the "equal facilities" we boast of are entirely real. And when they become real, brick for brick, book for book, auditorium for auditorium, we will have lost most of our segregation problem.

We believe that very few Negroes would choose to attend white schools even now. When schools ar really equal, that number will be practically non-existent.

In addition, the Legislature turned thumbs down on a proposal to abolish Alabama's free schools to event the U. S. Supreme Court outlaws segregation.

Mobile Schools Hit Highest Enrollment

MOBILE, Sept. 9 (AP)—Mobile County Superintendent of Schools Cranford H. Burns reported today public school enrollment has risen to an all-time high of 44,343, creating a "critical" housing problem.

Double sessions have already been introduced at one white school with first and second grade instruction divided into morning and afternoon periods.

Dr. Burns said double sessions may also be necessary to relieve congestion in other primary schools until a four million dollar building program now under way is completed.

Three Negro schools have primary grades operating on the double session plan.

The 44,343 enrollment is 2822 higher than the 41,521 total at the corresponding time a year ago. It includes 30,358 white and 13,985 Negro students.

ALABAMA SEEKS UNIFIED ACTION ON SCHOOL SEGREGATION CASE

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (NNPA) — The State of Alabama is moving to get a unified approach of southern states to whatever problems might arise from the decision of the five school segregation cases which the United States Supreme Court has ordered reargued next October 12.

If the State Senate gives its approval, a committee to study segregation, made up of state officials, educators and private citizens will be created to consider every possible solution.

Governor Gordon Persons would designate the members of the proposed committee, including state department heads, five members of the legislature, four laymen, and spokesmen for the state, county and city education boards.

The proposed plan gives no indication that Alabama's colored citizens will be represented on the board, whose recommendation would affect their children as well as white children.

State Senator Miller, who introduced the resolution to create the committee, reasons that if a study group is set up, the public and educators will be better prepared to make whatever adjustments that may be necessary.

If the court should decide that segregation in public schools violates the Fourteenth Amendment Miller reasons, the committee, through its study, should be able to recommend the next step to take.

On the other hand, if the court should order equalization of school facilities for colored children with those afforded white children, he reasons, the committee should be able to come up with estimates of costs and how the necessary construction can be financed.

While Miller's resolution appears to be a step in the right direction, the suspicion lurks among colored people that the purpose of the committee would be chiefly to find some way of circumventing a decision ordering integration.

Under Miller's resolution, other southern states would be invited to undertake similar studies so that when the school segregation cases are decided representatives of the seventeen states having segregated school systems can get together to work out a common course of action.

House members shouted approval of the resolution when it came up on that side of the Capitol, but the Senate Rules Committee had not acted on it when the Senate took a 12-day recess.

There is no organized opposition to it, however, and the committee is expected to report it out shortly. The legislators reconvened July 14.

One probable effect of the resolution, if adopted, would be to kill the stand-by "free private school" bill offered by Representative Sam Engelhardt of Macon County. Englehardt wants the legislature to have a private school system ready to go into operation if the Supreme Court should order the abolition of segregated schools.

The Englehardt proposal is patterned after the plan of Governor James F. Byrnes of South Carolina which, in effect, would turn over the public school system to a private organization and the State would appropriate funds to pay the tuition of pupils.

If the study committee is set up, no legislation anticipating the Supreme Court's decision is likely to pass.

Questions which lawyers in the five school segregation cases and the Department of Justice of the United States have been asked to discuss on reargument include

'Jim-Crow Schools' Rob Kiddies of $200,000,000; Solons Fight Equality

LUVERNE, Ala.—Alabama's "Jim-Crow Schools" are robbing Negro children of approximately $200 million.

State Senator J. H. (Jimmy) Faulkner of the Alabama Twenty-first State Senatorial District (Baldwin, Escambia and Monroe counties) addressing the Crenshaw County (white) teachers here Sept. 3 put the same information in different words.

He said that if the United States Supreme Court blotted out segregated public schools, from $150 million to $200 million would be needed to provide equal facilities for white and Negro children.

MEANTIME TWO ardent "White Supremacy" lawmakers failed in their efforts to tack on to the $160 million school appropriation bills amendments for the automatic cutting off of funds should the Supreme Court knock out the dual schools.

House Representative Sam Englehardt of Macon County was the only one voting for his amendment. His father-in-law, Senator J. Miller Bonner lost twelve to eighteen in the Senate on a similar move.

Senator Faulkner has been mentioned as a possible candidate for Governor.

In Monroe County, one of three in his district, there is only one Negro voter. A school principal interested in voting was dismissed this year by the Monroe County Board of Education.

Within the past five years, the state invested more than $800,000 in permanent building improvements at these two institutions.

This year's Legislature provided $300,000 to contract for special instruction for Alabama students at Tuskegee for each of the next two years, plus an additional $40,000 a year conditional outlay for nurses training. This is expected to be paid.

The lawmakers also approved a $700,000 conditional outlay for A & M Institute and Alabama State for for building purposes the next two years. Each school will get $175 000 a year if the money is available as expected.

As a yardstick to show how much progress has been made, Dr. J. C. Blair, director of the State Education Department's division of Negro education, noted:

Enrollment in Negro high schools rose from 1,780 in 1921 to 73,024 in 1951; the number of teaching positions from 2.140 to 7,451, the avejage annual salary from $284 to $1,870 and cost per pupil enrolled from just over $6 to $68.77.

Due to consolidations the number of schools dropped from 1,838 in 1921 to 1,781 in 1951. Elementary school enrollment increased from 164,340 in 1921 to 197,304 in 1941 but dropped back to 168,474 two years ago.

More Work Still Needed—

Progress Made To Narrow Gap In State Negro, White Schools

By LYNNE BRANNEN

Although the gap between white and Negro education in Alabama has been steadily narrowed over the past three decades, school authorities concede much remains to be done.

The progress is evident in the growing number of Negro teachers and their salaries, in per - pupil costs, transportation, length of school terms, and in capital outlays for badly needed school buildings.

Following the trend, the 1953 Legislature added $390,000 for each of the next two years to the appropriations for the two state - supported Negro colleges and Tuskegee Institute, while the white colleges received nothing additional.

But with the segregation decision pending in the Supreme court, school planners are far from complacent. State Supt. W. J. Terry put it this way:

"Despite the remarkable progress we've made, demands on the school system are increasing each year. There's always a pinch in finding adequate facilities for children of both races and enough qualified teachers to serve them.

"It has been traditional that school costs increase faster than the funds to meet them."

Although Alabama's white population outnumbers the Negro about two to one, school funds have never been proportionately divided between the two races. Until recently the gap had been growing wider.

In recent years, however, the division of money for school buildings has been more equal.

In 1942 - 43 the state put up $793,196 for white and $158,269 for Negro schools, about a five-to-one split. Capital outlay in 1947 -48 was $3,699,467 for white and $1,389.604 for Negro schools, about three - to - one.

Between May 1, 1951 and May 1 this year $5,198,109 was provided for Negro school buildings and $11,212.212 for white, which comes close to the population ratio of the two races.

Negro School Needs

But ne high ranking educator said in his opinion the state won't begin to meet the U. S. Supreme Court's "separate but equal facilities" standard, until the ratio is changed to put a larger part of building funds into Negro schools.

The appropriations for the two state Negro colleges, Alabama State College for Negroes at Montgomery and A & M Institute near Huntsville, increased from $484,749 in 1945 - 46 to $694,960 in 1949 - 50 and $1,250,000 in 1953 - 54.

Adopt Resolution

Alabama Solons Seek Safeguards For Segregation

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Alabama lawmakers, Sept. 8, adopted a resolution seeking to set up segregation safeguards should the United States Supreme Court rule out the dual school system.

A special session of the Legislature would be called to work out a segregation-preserving formula for the public schools.

Senator J. Miller Bonner of Wilcox County, father of the notorious "Bonner Amendment" which is designed to restrict Negro voting, is credited with inspiring and piloting the three-pronged resolution through the Legislature.

In addition to the call-back of the Legislature, it authorizes the Governor to appoint a six-man legislative committee, three from each house, to determine what measures would be needed to continue the dual school system should the court blot out racially separate schools. It also instructs the attorney general to file a friend-of-the-court brief on the side of the racial segregation defendants.

In Senator Bonner's Wilcox County, there is not one Negro voter although there are 8,218 Negro citizens 21 years of age or above. He is dubbed the "ardent champion of white supremacy" and a bitter foe of Negro advancement and political expression.

"Disorganize the operation of the public school system in Alabama, throw into confusion both the training and assignment of teachers and force the reallocation of all pupils.

"Impose expense upon the state in the continuation of the school system beyond any present provision or capacity to meet and compel serious consideration of the abandonment of the function of public education.

". . . Sterilize the police power of the state, reflected in many statutes, which has promoted and is essential to the preservation of domestic tranquility."

1953 Legislature successfully stands pat against special interim probe committees

BY HUGH W. SPARROW, News staff writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Sept. 19—The 1953 Legislature distinguished itself in this respect at least: It stood pat against all but one effort to launch special investigations and set up interim committees.

The lone exception was Senate Joint Resolution 49 authorizing a joint committee of the House and Senate to prepare legislation "to protect the interests of the state and its citizens" in event the U. S. Supreme Court outlaws school segregation.

THE HOUSE rejected, 20 to 35, a joint resolution authorizing an investigation of the State Planning Board by the Legislative Reference Service, to determine among other things, whether the agency is an essential one.

SPARROW

Both houses defeated stubborn efforts to establish a joint legislative committee to investigate telephone rates in Alabama and to report their findings to the next Legislature. Another similar resolution, calling for an investigation of telephone rates by the Alabama Public Service Commission, likewise was killed by the Senate.

Killed in Senate

A RESOLUTION, jointly sponsored by 45 House members, calling on the Legislative Reference Service to study better ways to handle local legislation, was adopted by the House, but was killed by the Senate.

House bill defeated

THE SENATE also defeated a House bill, sponsored by Reps. Adams and Morgan of Jefferson, calling for a joint study commission in connection with the formulation of the biennial budget.

The bill authorized a committee to be composed of members of the Senate finance and taxation committee and the House ways and means committee.

The committee would have been authorized to meet 30 days before each regular legislative session; to hold hearings and to draft the general and educational appropriation bills.

Segregation brought up

STILL ANOTHER joint resolution setting up a special committee was defeated by the Senate after having been adopted by the House. It was Rep. Ed Miller's resolution calling on the governor to appoint a committee "to study and plan for any impact that may be brought upon the state by a decision of the Supreme Court relative to segregation in the public schools."

Joint resolution

SENATE JOINT Resolution 49, which the House adopted shortly before the session ended, provided:

"First: That the attorney general prepare or cause to be prepared and filed in his name, on behalf of the state, a brief as amicus curiae in one or more of the cases now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States involving the question of the constitutional validity of the separation of races in the public school systems of the state, asserting in such brief the position that such separation is valid and within the power of the state to require the pointing out to the court the extremely ominous and disturbing consequences in this state of a contrary decision.

"Second: That governor call a special and emergency session of this Legislature immediately upon the announcement of any decision by the Supreme Court of the United States which threatens, either directly or by implication, the continuing validity of the present organization of the schools of this state.

"Third: That the president of the Senate and the speaker of the House appoint a committee of three members of each body to prepare, after consultation with the governor, the superintendent of education and such other persons as it may determine, such legislation, including submission of constitutional amendments, as may be required to protect the interests of the state and its citizens in the event of a decision by the Supreme Court of the United States which destroys or impairs the principle of separation of the races in the public schools of this state."

Named to committee

THE FOLLOWING were appointed to the committee: Sens. J. M. Bonner (author of the resolution), of Wilcox; Albert Boutwell of Jefferson and Herbert J. Byars of Hale, and Reps. Bob Kendall of Conecuh, Ira Pruitt of Sumter, and Jack Gallalee of Mobile.

'Equal' schools for Negroes to cost $150 million—is view

It will cost $150 million to $200 million to bring Alabama's Negro schools up to equal level with white schools in the state.

That is what Alabama faces if the Supreme Court rules to require "separate but equal" schools for Negroes in the South.

That estimate was placed before Jefferson County teachers Saturday by State Sen. James H. Faulkner of Bay Minette, who is regarded as a possible candidate for governor of Alabama.

"If the Supreme Court rules for an integrated school system—that is, requiring white and Negro students to attend the same schools—I don't know what the answer will be," the Baldwin County legislator said.

"It is a problem that is going to be thrust upon us possibly within the next 10 weeks," he emphasized.

OUTLINING THE state's other educational needs, Faulkner told county teachers Alabama will have to spend an additional $75 million a year to bring its schools up to the national average. "We are appropriating $80 million a year to public schools from state funds now," he said. "To come up to the national education average we would have to spend almost double that amount," he told teachers.

"It will take $300 million to bring our crowded, often outdated and condemned school buildings up to par—that figure comes from a national study," Faulkner said.

He also pointed out that Alabama school buses, built to transport 48 children, carried an average of 65 children to school each day last year, and the average is considerably higher this year.

"We have 80,000 more children enrolled in our public schools this year than we had last year," he reported.

"These are facts and figures we have got to face and to cope with."

FAULKNER ALSO said that it is "obvious" why we do not have enough school teachers in Alabama. "With the raises provided for teachers during the past two legislative sessions, the average teacher's salary in this state is still only $2650," he said. "Teachers who quit and go to Florida can make $1000 a year more."

"When people start complaining about Alabama's ever constant school crisis," the Baldwin senator said, "they must stop and realize that 25 per cent of this state's population is enrolled in our public schools. Our children represent Alabama's greatest opportunity for progress, but that opportunity rests on the education they receive."

"The teacher's part in the education crisis, he said, is to provide leadership so inspiring that the rest of the state's citizenry will come voluntarily to the rescue, and the teacher's greatest responsibility is to instill in her children a love of America and a love of God.

Judge Reveals Way To Save Jim-Crow School System

MOBILE, Ala.— Alabama's leading "White Supremacy" theorist, Judge Horace C. Wilkinson, of Birmingham, in a "National Citizens Day" speech here Sept. 17 revealed his idea of a Dixie-style states' "contract" school plan to save the separate school system in the event the United States Supreme Court decides against it in five pending cases on the issue.

(The segregated school cases are scheduled for reargument before the Supreme Court December 7. But the recent death of Chief Justice Fred Vinson may further delay consideration of the cases.—Ed.)

Judge Horace C. Wilkinson of Birmingham, who espused the "League for White Supremacy" some years ago, speaking before the Mobile Real Estate Association at Admiral Semmes Hotel said that the compact clause of the federal constitution could be utilized to reconstruct legally the separate school system should the court hand down a decision against the latter. His speech was labeled a "Constitution Day" address."

In Montgomery the same day, State Senator Jimmy Faulkner of Bay Minette speaking at a Junior Chamber of Commerce meeting held in the Jefferson Davis Hotel said that the pending school segregation cases, from the Southern viewpoint, were hurt by the death of Chief Justice Fred Vinson.

"He (Vinson) was a friend of the South," Fr. Faulkner said. He warned against rash plans to circumvent an anti-Jim Crow decision "since the high tribunal might make a ruling that would preclude the action we plan." He estimated that it would take upwards of $250,000,000 to bring the Negro public schools of Alabama up to the white ones.

Judge Wilkinson who served as special counsel for the City of Birmingham in defending the racial zoing laws, which he lost all the way up and to the Supreme Court, in his speech ripped the U. S. Supreme Court justices and dubbed them "ministers of miscegnation." Under his "compact plan" Judge Wilkinson asserted that the Jim Crow states could keep the dual schools by signing contracts with each other.

"If the provisions in our state constitution requiring separate schools for the races is stricken down, the mongrelization of America may be deferred by Alabama entering into contract with a majority of the states, approved by Congress, to educate the races in separate schools," Judge Wilkinson asserted.

He added: "I say a majority of other states because, in my opinion, it will not be difficult to get the Western states and some of the Central states to make an agreement of this kind with us."

"Thirty states," he suggested "have laws against miscegnation they do not want broken down. When a majority of these states agree, congressional approval would be in sight."

Judge Wilkinson criticized rulings already made by the highest tribunal which want contrary to his thinking on racial segregation. He argued that the justices "do not seem to have an unclouded understanding of our Constitution, or how to apply it to life as we live it today."

Judge Wilkinson said that "the only way I can account for this phenon is that the Constitution of the United States does not require members of its Supreme Court to be learned in the law."

"There is a hue and cry for the Supreme Court to decide that social and political equality is a national function and beyond the regulation of the state. In other words, it is claimed that the constitution abolishes segregation and the court should so decide."

"The truth is that the court should decide that non-segregation is unconstitutional. Non-segregation leads to social and political equality. Social and political equality results in miscegnation. Miscegnation destroys both races."

"Our government is not authorized to destroy itself. Race destruction is not a national function. Neither is anything that leads to race destruction a national function. Segregation is racial security. Segregate or cease to exist is nature's law of race," he said.

He likened segregation to a wire fence between his house and the one of his next door neighbors. It "keeps his chickens out of my wife's flowers, and my dog out of his chicken house. I have a good dog. My wife's flowers are beautiful. My neighbor's chickens are wonderful. The little wire fence keeps everybody happy. Remove the fence and confusion and unhappiness are certain to follow."

He contended that the federal Constitution gives the individual nothing but prevents the government from taking away rights he already has. "And no state gets any right under the national Constitution, to regulate its local affairs. Each state had that right before the Constitution was adopted."

"In opinions sponsored by the most of them in the past decade or so, dealing with the matters of race, they have spread the cancer of miscegnation throughout our body politic."

He counseled: "Unless there is a revival of racial pride and racial integrity in this state, the mongrels and those in sympathy with them will name your next governor and your next U. S. senator.

Judge Wilkinson was one of the key figures in setting up the Dixiecrat movement which was launched in Birmingham in 1948.

New Day in Phoenix, Ariz.

SEGREGATION in Phoenix, Ariz., high schools was outlawed by the courts last week, and at the same time it was eliminated at the high school level in Las Cruces, N. M.

Similar steps have recently been taken in Carlsbad, N. M., and other communities, and the State Legislature has before it a bill to abolish segregation in all schools and public institutions, as well as an anti-discrimination bill with teeth in it.

In adjacent Arizona the Legislature is considering adoption of a strong civil rights law and an FEPC bill.

Although both Arizona and New Mexico have laws giving localities option on racial segregation in schools, the process of desegregation has been commendably rapid in the past couple of years, somewhat speeded by legal suits instituted by the American Civil Liberties Union and the NAACP.

However, the important and significant thing is that there exists the willingness to break the segregated pattern.

Officials in both states aver that the cost of segregated schooling is "excessive," and we predict that ere long every state now having segregated schools will come to the same conclusion.

In Arizona

Ban School Segregation

By J. C. DOBBS

PHOENIX, Ariz. (ANP)—Segregation in public schools in Arizona is unconstitutional, but it probably will be some time before the schools throughout the state become fully integrated.

Fred C. Struckmeyer, Jr., judge of Superior Court, last week outlawed segregation, but it will take a court order enjoining schools from practicing segregation before the effect of his ruling will be felt.

Judge Struckmeyer's decision was handed down in connection with a suit filed by three Carver high school pupils who were denied admission to the so-called "white" schools.

Segregation In Schools Hit

Phoenix, Ariz.—Declaring that "democracy rejects any theory of second-class citizenship," County Judge Fred Struckmeyer, Jr., outlawed segregation in the high schools here.

"There are no second-class citizens in Arizona," the court said. "And the trend from the time of the enunciation of the principle that 'all men are created equal' has been constantly to reconsider the status of minority groups and their problems."

Up to 1951, Arizona had made segregation mandatory in elementary schools and optional in high schools. After the legislature made segregation discretionary with school boards, the American Civil Liberties Union and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People appealed to the court, which ruled that the legislature's delegation of power was unconstitutional.

PHOENIX SCHOOLS END SEGREGATION

PHOENIX, Ariz., July 8 (AP) — Racial segregation in Phoenix high schools is ended.

The high schools and Phoenix college board voted last night to abolish its long-standing practice of educating Negro students in a separate high school.

It opened the doors of all seven of its high schools to students to all races.

The action, taken with two of the five-member board refusing to vote, wiped out the last vestiges of racial segregation on the high school level in Arizona.

All other cities, although most of them had only nominal Negro populations, ended high school segregation many years ago.

Segregation on the elementary level is still practiced in many districts of the state. It is a matter left up to the discretion of local school boards. A suit challenging constitutionality of this "permissive segregation" law is pending before the Arizona supreme court.

Arizona Wipes Out School Segregation

Judge Rules Jimcrow High Schools Are Unconstitutional

PHOENIX, Arizona — (SNS) — An Arizona Superior court judge has outlawed racial segregation in Phoenix high schools in a decision which accelerated efforts to eliminate racial discrimination in the Southwest.

Judge Fred C. Struckmeyer, Jr., of the Maricopa County Superior court ruled that racial segregation on the high school level is unconstitution. He ordered the Phoenix board of education to admit Negroes to white schools.

Arizona has an optional racial segregation law. Up to 1951, Arizona had mandatory segregation in elementary schools and optional segregation in high schools. In 1951, the Legislature made segregation in all grades discretionary with school boards.

The NAACP and the American Civil Liberties Union challenged challenged this law and specifically the right of Phoenix high school district officials to require four Negro students to attend the Carver high school, an all-Negro school with a total enrollment of all.

The suit was brought in Federal Court but was transferred to the state court on a jurisdictional point. Similar cases are pending before the U. S. Supreme Court.

Judge Struckmeyer held that the Legislature's delegation of the discretionary power to school officials was unconstitutional. Recognizing that the Supreme court has ruled that "separate but equal" educational facilities might be constitutional, Judge Struckmeyer observed:

"Nevertheless, democracy rejects any theory of second-class citizenship. There are no second-class citizens in Arizona and the trend from the time of the enunciation in the Declaration of Independence of the principle 'That all men are created equal' has been to constantly reconsider the status of minority groups and their problems."

The decision was applauded in Arizona where Phoenix was one of the principal remaining centers in the state where segregated schools were maintained.

Although the Phoenix school board was a defendant in the action, a majority of the board expressed approval of the ruling.

NAACP leaders moved quickly to consolidate gains in other portions of the state. Last week the city of Las Cruces, N. M., abolished Negro segregation at the high school level. Officials said that the cost of educating Negroes on a segregated basis was "excessive."

The State Attorney General's office followed this up with an order assuring Negro teachers maintenance of tenure in faculty consolidations occasioned by school de-segregation.

Ban Separate Schools In All Arizona

PHOENIX, Ariz. — The high schools and Phoenix college board voted last Wednesday to abolish segregation in all seven of the high schools in Phoenix.

The action wiped out the last vestiges of racial segregation on the high school level in Arizona. Two of the five members of the board refused to vote.

All other cities in Arizona ended high school segregation several years ago.

SEGREGATION BAN WIDENS

Elementary Schools in Phoenix Plan to End Race Line

PHOENIX, Ariz., July 15 (UP) —School officials today predicted "complete integration" on unsegregated grade school classes here by September, 1954. Elementary schools of Phoenix will begin eliminating segregation this fall under an unanimous ruling of the elementary school trustees. Last week, segregation was banned in the city's high school.

The elementary school board voted yesterday to start "permissive integration" this fall by allowing "the first four grades," kindergarten through third, to begin going to schools "nearest their natural attendance areas."

Grades four through eight were to continue as before during the 1953-54 year because an immediate shift "would be too great," according to Jack D. Williams, board president.

The school district has twenty-three schools and more than 12,000 students and includes three completely-staffed Negro schools, with 1,690 students, more than seventy Negro teachers and other Negro personnel.

Arizona's Approach To Public School Integration

ARIZONA, in the Southwest, has set a good example for other states having dual school systems. Under state laws, Arizona has moved to quit separate schools, and by September of this year integration will be in full effect.

Last year the state legislature repealed an old statute that made racial segregation mandatory in the elementary schools and permissive in the high schools. This action occurred after the state's voters had rejected, a year earlier. an initiative measure banning segregation outright.

With the mandatory law out, the school authorities started out to integrate the schools by degrees. The first step was to make the new law effective in the first, second and third grades. The results were "extremely successful," according to reports. By September of this year the plan will be in effect in the grades from fourth through the seventh. It is already working in all of the high schools.

"Moderate and sensible" leadership was probably the main instrument by which integration has been accomplished without incident. Under the right kind of leadership the people moved to abolish discrimination. It was accomplished under a statute which gave pupils the choice of attending the school in their district that was nearest them, or some other school in the district. The result was that there was a minimum of friction in the course of transition, because both races worked together understandingly.

In some small communities Negro teachers were dropped, but this proved to be temporary, for by recourse to the state courts they were restored to their positions.

Arizona is a state in which southern customs are strong. But despite these customs the state has risen to resolve one of the South's most vexing problems in a manner which might well be emulated by other states.

Action to be taken despite pending suits

Education boards vote to allow pupils to attend nearest school

PHOENIX, Ariz.— No matter what the United States or Arizona Supreme Courts decide about segregated schools, schools in all but two of this state's 14 counties will be desegregated by the beginning of the fall term of 1954.

This disclosure was made on the basis of past decisions and present plans of independently acting boards of trustees of the various counties.

It was also revealed that in Phoenix, the largest city in the state as well as its capital, the 70 colored teachers and the four all - colored schools will be integrated into the desegregated school system.

Desegregation, for several years, has been progressing in Arizona schools since the legislature repealed a mandatory segregation clause carried over from territorial law when Arizona became a state in 1912.

Up To Counties

Rising school costs, which spotlighted the expense of maintaining separate schools, was a major factor.

The legislature left the matter of desegregation up to the counties, however, and last year Phoenix Union high schools district was made the target of a suit to force attendance of colored pupils at schools other than Carver — the all - colored high school — and Phoenix technical school — a technical school which was not segregated.

Action of the Phoenix School Board left desegregation on the "permissive" basis at the pupil level. Pupils will have the choice of attending either the regular school for which their residence is zoned, or of returning to the here-to-fore colored school with which they are familiar.

The here-to-fore all - colored high school will become an "open school," an un - zoned status similar to that of Phoenix technical school.

Two Major Factors

The permissive status was dictated by two factors:

On the economic side, the board could not see its way clear to abandon school plants dedicated to education solely of colored pupils, although they overlap already existing school facilities.

On the human side, they foresaw possibility of embarrassment too, or forcing out of school of some colored pupils, should a change of schools be mandatory.

The curriculum of the colored high school had been fitted to the average needs of its pupils, some of whom, it was foreseen, might find difficulty in changing in mid-school career to an institution whose scholastic standards would have been set on a wider basis.

With the completion of two new school plants, the desegregation decision will, however, put seven high schools within reach of colored pupils.

Neither school officials nor colored community leaders saw any likelihood of immediate mass shifting of colored school attendance; and both felt that unforced integration would be the better way.

Phoenix Ends Segregation In High Schools

PHOENIX, Ariz., July 20 — Phoenix last week joined other Arizona cities and voted to end segregation in its high schools.

Action to end the discriminatory practice came at a meeting of the high schools and Phoenix college board, which agreed to open the doors of all seven high schools to pupils of all races.

Two of five board members refused to vote on the action which wiped out the last vestiges of racial segregation on the high level in the state.

Segregation in high schools in other cities in Arizona ended years ago.

End to segregation would cost state millions—Faulkner

LUVERNE, Ala., Sept. 4 (AP)— It will cost Alabama between $150 and $200 million if the Supreme Court outlaws segregation in public schools, State Attorney General Jimmy Faulkner believes.

He told Crenshaw County teachers yesterday that that amount would probably be needed to provide equal facilities for white and Negro pupils.

Faulkner, who has been mentioned as a possible candidate for governor, encouraged the teachers to support a proposed change in the state's minimum school term law. He said counties would receive 100 per cent benefits from any school funds they raise locally, if the change is made.

4 Arizona Schools OK Integration

PHOENIX, Ariz. (ANP)—Integration became a fact in one high school and four elementary schools here as the fall term opened last week. The schools, previously all-white, registered at least 108 pupils.

A breakdown showed:

Phoenix Union high school, 74; Longfellow, 24; Jackson, 6; Grant, 4; and Lincoln, no report. The latter four are elementary schools.

Integration works both ways. At Carver high school, formerly all-Negro, several non-Negro pupils have registered.

Phoenix high schools and college district desegregated this summer for all grades. The end of segregation from kindergarten through grades three, also came about this summer. Pupils in this category now may choose the nearest school in their district.

Southwest Acts To Mix Schools, End Job Bias

PHOENIX, Ariz. (ANP) —The Southwest has started on a road which colored citizens hope soon will lead to the end of discrimination in employment and education. Indications of the trend are actions which have ended or tend to end segregation in public schools, and legislative efforts in behalf of FEPC bills.

In Arizona and New Mexico, steps have been taken to end jim-crow schools and to end job discrimination. Foremost was a decision by the Maricopa County Supreme Court in Arizona outlawing segregation in Phoenix high schools. This was appealed.

In New Mexico, the cities of Las Cruces and Carlsbad have taken steps to end segregated schools. Last week Las Cruces abolished colored segregation at the high school level by ordering the transfer of some 22 colored pupils to the Union High School.

Both Arizona and New Mexico are states in which segregation in schools is optional with local authorities under state law. Both are working on bills to end discrimination. The latter state has had a FEPC law since 1949.

Segregation Would Be Costly

Nine Eastern Arkansas Counties Now Let School Spending For Whites Dwarf That For Negroes

By KEN JOHNSON

LITTLE ROCK, March 28. — The "big issue" in Arkansas on an expected opinion from the United States Supreme Court regarding segregation in Southern public schools, centers in for the most part in about nine counties in the east and southeastern section of the state.

That's assuming the high tribunal hands down a ruling for "separate but equal" facilities. If the opinion calls for outright abolishment of segregation, that's another story.

Gov. Francis Cherry touched off speculation on the "Arkansas angle" of the pending decision last week when he said he's considering naming a statewide committee on the school question, to coincide with the Supreme Court decision. Other talk immediately sprang up that a special session of the Arkansas Legislature might have to be called whenever the ruling is handed down.

Mr. Johnson

Arkansas officials are hoping, as apparently school spokesmen are in other Southern states, that the ruling will be to the effect that Negro facilities must be made equal with whites, but that the present system of separate schools can be continued.

If a ruling should come down for abolishment of that system, it might not catch Arkansas leaders totally unprepared, but certainly it would come as a shock.

In fact, Arkansas has already made a somewhat detailed study of the school picture on the assumption that the decision will be for "separate but equal" facilities. School leaders hope they're on firm ground in settling on that assumption. In the meantime, the studies they've made point to the eastern section of the state as the "critical area" in the event the Supreme Court orders that equalization of facilities must be speeded up.

Negroes Outnumber Whites

Ed McCuistion, director of the division of Negro education in the State Department of Education, pointed to nine counties where the ratio of colored population is from two to three times that of white, whereas taking the state as a whole, white pupils outnumber colored three to one. He listed the counties as Crittenden, Phillips, Lee, Jefferson, Lincoln, Desha, Chicot, Ashley and St. Francis.

"That would be the area hardest hit by a court decree demanding equal facilities," he said.

The reason lies in the heavy colored population in ratio to whites. Although improvements have been made in most of those counties within the past 10 years in improving colored schools, advantages still aren't equal, said Mr. McCuistion. To equalize them would require additional "local" effort within those counties as well as more aid from the statewide level.

The director said that statewide, about 50 of Arkansas' 75 counties contain most of the colored population. The colored pupils in the other 25 counties are "negligible" insofar as constituting a problem on equalization.

Few Negroes In 25 Counties

A statistical summary of Arkansas public schools completed for the 1950-52 school period under direction of Arch Ford, now education commissioner, but who at the time was assistant commissioner under A. B. Bonds, shows what Mr. McCuistion is referring to.

The expenditures per child in Crittenden County for the 1951-52 year on the basis of average daily attendance was $131 for whites, $43 for colored.

Lee County, $128 for whites, $50 for colored.

Phillips County, $113 for whites, $63 for colored.

Jefferson County, $120 for whites, $77 for colored.

St. Francis, $124 for whites and $58 for colored.

Other counties in the so-called "critical" area spent about the same ratio on education of the two races.

Mr. McCuistion said in most instances, particularly in Crittenden County, the aid to colored has increased even since 1952. But large amounts of money still would have to be raised to bring colored schools up to equal with those for whites.

The real "pinch" would come not so much in the fact that equalization would have to be done. As a matter of fact, records show that Arkansas counties for the most part have taken big steps forward during the past 10 years to achieve a desirable "separate but equal" status.

What worries educators is whether or not they will have to bring about an "immediate" equalization.

Equalization Cost Is Millions

Education Department studies indicate that more than 17 million dollars would be needed to bring colored facilities up to a par with whites. And more than three millions a year more would have to be thrown to Negro education in year-to-year "operating" funds. The 17 millions represents a "fixed" figure that has accumulated over the years. But the operational figure would be a recurring one every time a new school year rolled around.

Yet even at that, Arkansas apparently is in a better position than other Southern states on the equalization problem. Mr. McCuistion, in fact, said his studies show that Arkansas' "differential" between white and colored facilities is smaller than any other Southern state.

Assuming the state had to embark—as result of Supreme Court impetus—upon a feverish equalization program confined within a certain deadline, some educators believe that the creation of countywide or "area" colored school districts might be one answer.

Under such a procedure, colored schools would be built in a centrally-located area to serve a larger number of pupils than small, more numerous substandard schools now accommodate.

That would be a reduction in the number of school buildings, would place emphasis on putting more "quality" into just one or two schools in a certain area, but would doubtless increase transportation problems in getting the pupils to and from classrooms over the wider area covered.

In some areas of the state, that plan has already been started.

Bi-Racial Board to Check Text

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—The Little Rock School Board approved last week the establishment of an interracial citizens advisory committee to help school officials choose textbooks for the ninth, tenth, eleventh and twelfth grades.

The committee was suggested by Supt. Virgil T. Blossom and unanimously approved after Blossom explained that it was designed to eliminate any possible criticism of textbooks.

"This is not a defense mechanism but an education policy for the public," said Blossom.

The committee will include two members, and one white and one Negro from the following organizations: City Council of Parent-Teacher Association, American Legion, Ministerial Alliance and one member each from the County Bar Association, the daily newspapers, the Pulaski County legislative delegation and the education committee of the Chamber of Commerce.

Arkansas School Board Is Ordered To Equalize Plants

HELENA, Ark.—Federal Judge Harry J. Lemley has signed a federal order directing Helena-West Helena School Board to equalize Negro schools with white schools under their jurisdiction.

Negro plantiffs had filed a stipulation to their original suit saying that plans for construction of new buildings and a school board policy favoring equalization would serve "as a basis for settlement of this cause."

Praising the board and the plaintiffs for their settlement, Lemley said that:

"The problems involved in the equalization of public school facilities as between the races, which problems are not peculiar to the particular district involved in this case can be better handled by cooperation between men and women of good will of both races than by coercive judicial process."

He said the present Negro school facilities are not substantially equal to those furnished white students and directed the board fulfill its plans by next September to build a new high school and gymnasium for Negro students in Phillips County School District No. 2.

Three mills of a 33-mill tax has been earmarked for Negro school construction.

DR. MARGARET J. BUTCHER
Cranks keep her telephone busy

Cranks keep Maggie Butcher's telephone ringing all nite long

WASHINGTON — Maggie Butcher's telephone is probably ringing again.

There was a D. C. school board meeting this week when, as usual, she spoke out frankly against Washington's jim-crow schools.

Now, thanks to the cranks and crackpots and hecklers who looked her up in the phone book, Maggie and her husband, Actor - Director - Teacher, James W. Butcher Jr., are in for another telephone seige.

They Wonder

Many of the callers, who seem to represent varying levels of education and breeding, want to know if Maggie hasn't "anything better to do" with her time than to fight for an equal education for every child attending public schools in D.C.

"We pay the bulk of the taxes," some of these anonymous callers tell her. Another has said:

"You outsiders ought to let us alone!" and then was hushed into silence when Maggie replied that she was born in Washington and has lived here all her life.

The Language

Still other callers have used obscene language which, to quote Maggie, "I was embarrassed to hear, much less repeat."

The voices which came over the phone are male as well as female. Some have accents betraying the part of the country where they learned to talk.

At least one has shown a strong alcoholic influence as she drawled, against a confused background of noise from wherever she was:

"Is this Margret I wanna speak to Margaret!"

It's Annoying

This type of annoyance has been going on in the Butcher household ever since Maggie spoke her first piece in her first school board meeting this past September.

Since then, following board meetings, the Butcher phone has jangled, often after midnight, for hours on end.

Some of the nuisance - callers don't have anything to say. They evidently just dial Maggie's number and let the phone ring until she answers.

Rings In Wee Hours

"One night," she reports, "my phone rang 45 times, after midnight."

"Another time my husband and I answered the phone five times between 2 a.m. and 5 a.m.

"There was another occasion" Maggie went on, "When I happened to be working late and the phone rang repeatedly—at least nine times. When I picked up the phone, I told whoever was at the other end that he or she had done me a favor by keeping me awake so that I could finish my work!"

Can't Understand

Some of the more articulate telephone callers have said that they don't understand why Maggie is so concerned about the race problem in D. C. schools when she herself looks more "white" than colored.

Maggie's retort to one of these callers was that there are many members of the race who look as though they belong to another race, just as there are many other persons who think they are white, but have colored blood.

She points out that she comes from a family which has for generations been proud of its racial heritage and active in educational and civic affairs.

Her close ties with her family are one of the reasons why she and her husband are conscientious about answering the telephone's repeated rings— even though doing so may only bring a string of abuses over the wire.

Must Answer

"With illness in the family, we have had to answer the phone, no matter who might be calling," Maggie says. "My husband also receives many important calls in connection with his work in the theatre. We have thought of having an unlisted number, but we also feel that if you are engaged in community work, you should be available."

She has, however, consulted with an attorney about her telephone annoyance, and may take steps against the offenders.

Even before Maggie was appointed to the school board, she learned what it was like to sponsor an unpopular cause where races are concerned.

Last year, she wrote a letter to the press criticizing the D.C. school superintendent. That evening a brick crashed through a downstairs window in her mother-in-law's home. It was followed by another brick which smashed the window of an upstairs room where there were small children, who were fortunately unharmed.

"I paid for those two broken windows," Maggie says, "We believe they got my mother-in-law's address by mistake, thinking it was mine."

Crusade Continues

She served notice at this past Wednesday's meeting that she is "digging in" for a long fight to prove that separate schools can't be equalized and that integration is the only answer to the disparaties of a dual system.

About her membership on the board she says:

"I didn't seek or solicit the appointment and I get no material gain or other personal advantage from it.

"I am not paid for being on the school board, although I do a tremendous amount of work.

Moral Conviction

"What I am doing I do as a matter of principle, out of a deep moral conviction that these wrongs can be righted and that the school board should take the step in rectifying them."

Most thoughtful Washingtonians respect Maggie's point of view and she has been warmly commended by local citizens backing her in her fight.

The AFRO published, a few weeks ago, a number of "bouquets" which can perhaps be best summed up in the succinct comment of Mrs. Smallwood Williams, wife of the pastor of Bible Way Church. Mrs. Williams said:

"More power to her."

In a different way, the Star newspaper said about the same thing when it editorialized on Maggie's comments about the corporation counsel's brief for the Supreme Court in the local school segregation case.

The Star said that Maggie had "commented with wisdom as well as indignation." The editorial went on to support her contention that school board members should have been consulted in the preparation of the brief.

In conclusion, the Star editorial quoted from Maggie's comments, saying:

"Mrs. Butcher is quite right in asserting that 'a basic factor in

Dean Sayre Urges Christians to Meet Problem of 'Dividedness' in Race Relations

The Very Rev. Francis B. Sayre, jr., dean of the Washington Cathedral, yesterday said Christians were violating the commandment, "Love thy neighbor as thyself," in regard to their Negro brethren."

Commenting wryly on segregation in the District schools, he said: "Our concern is that if the Supreme Court orders the schools here to be integrated, educational standards are likely to fall because of the influx of poorly trained pupils from overcrowded schools.

"And then we shall likely feel obliged to move out of the District to provide a better scholastic level for our children elsewhere or send them to segregated private schools. And what an expensive headache all that will involve!"

"As a citizen," he continued, "I can have my private opinions about segregated public schools and unequal employment opportunities and all manner of trifling social restrictions forgotten by all except the victims. On these points, however, I, like all of us, must leave it to the Supreme Court to decide as to whether they are in consonance or not with the democracy we have legally adopted."

Ministers, he said, are in a different case.

"But as a minister," he continued, "there remains to me the more profound duty of declaring the principles that flow from our Christian faith."

The church "can no longer afford," he said, "not to speak in Christ's name, no matter what obloquy or vicious rumor may result.

"The choice for us now is abundantly clear: either we break God's law and find ourselves broken instead by His judgment—or else we fearlessly follow the leading of God's Holy Spirit, in whom there is neither bond nor free, neither white nor black—but only the all-encompassing love of Jesus Christ."

In discussing the racial problem, the dean said, in a sermon, "We all know that to be born with a brown skin is to face a very different sort of existence from yours or mine."

He agreed that great progress had been made—"painlessly on the whole—and on the basis of that many argue that we had better not 'force' the issue (which of course really means 'face' it)." From this springs the gradualist argument—let time work it out, he said.

"But it is not the clock that saves," he emphasized; "time never softens pride but only hardens it; we are never redeemed by any calendar."

The dean declared "no steps were ever made toward brotherhood until someone squarely faced the problem of dividedness, and it is to our shame as Christians that we have allowed others to lead the way."

A year ago the cathedral faced "the problem of dividedness" with regard to its schools, and decided to admit Negroes.

17 Groups Firing At Segregation In National Capital

WASHINGTON, — (ANP) — Seventeen national organizations last week declared that the District of Columbia's failure to provide equal educational opportunity for colored and white children is a violation of the U. S. Constitution.

A letter sent to the D. C. board of education said the constitution forbids "all discrimination on grounds of race or color", and even those who accept the separate-but-equal doctrine" must agree that the separate schools of the District of Columbia do not approach equality in the very sense of the word."

The letter said that equality can be provided through into integration and the board is required to do so if inequalities now exist which can be remedied by a discontinuance. In those cases at the very least schools, class and teachers assignments must be made without regard to race.

The letter was signed by the St. Peter Claver Center, the Washington Council of the American Council on Human Rights, the Washington Fellowship, Education Committee of the Federation Civic Associations, the Interracial Workshop and the American Friends Service Commitee.

Other signatures came from the Public Affairs Committee, of the Washington Ethical Society, the Education Committee of the Washington Urban League, Joint Social Order Committee of the Friends Meetings of Washington, Washington Chapter of the Unitarian Fellowship for Social Justice, the Washington Chapter and of the commission of law and action of American Jewish congress, the Japanese-American Citizen League.

Still other organizations signing the letter were Washington Chapter of the American for Democratic Action, the Potomac Cooperative Federation. Friends Committee of National Legislation, the District of Columbia Chamber of Commerce, and the Catholic Interracial Council of Washington.

University Women Would Abolish Bias

WASHINGTON, D. C. (NNPA) — The Washington Branch of the American Association of University Women has voted unanimously in favor of ending racial segregation in the public schools of the District of Columbia, it was disclosed Friday.

In a letter signed by Dr. Katherine A. Frederic, president of the branch, Dr. Hobart M. Corning, superintendent of schools, and members of the Board of Education were notified of the branch's action.

The letter pointed out that the local branch of the AAUW "has successfully practiced racial integration in its membership." It said this is consistent with the policy of the parent organization.

"The Washington Branch of the American Association of University Women has already indorsed the integration of the two Washington teachers colleges," the letter said, adding:

"The branch has encouraged general studies of the problems relating to integration in the schools of the District of Columbia and, at the request of the superintendent of schools to various organizations, this branch submitted suggestions regarding preparation for integration.

"The Washington branch of the American Association of University Women favors integration in the public schools of the District of Columbia. Although recognizing the many problems that remain to be worked out and the need for intensive study of those problems, the branch expresses its belief that integration in the District schools is consistent with our American traditions and a means of eliminating the inequities in the education of District children.'

Racial segregation in the public schools of the District of Columbia is attacked as unconstitutional in one of five school segregation cases which are set for reargument before the Supreme Court on December 7 and 8.

Integration Speed Backed By Corning

School Official Says City Not Committed To 'Gradualism' Plan

By Jeanne Rogers
Post Reporter

School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning yesterday disclosed that if the Supreme Court rules the present segregated system unconstitutional, he would favor a fast-action plan for integrating District schools.

Explaining that he and his officers have been working out a program of integration, Corning added: "We are not committed to a program of gradualism."

Corning said he personally doesn't believe that integrating schools would be the correct procedure for Washington to follow. He did not say what, if any, transition period he preferred.

Several times during his regular press conference yesterday, Corning told reporters he did not wish to comment on the brief the Corporation Counsel filed in the pending Supreme Court segregation case which names the Board of Education as defendant.

At one point, however, Corning said he agreed with the Corporation Counsel's statement that integration should not be put into effect over a long period of time.

Corning said the Corporation Counsel's brief was read to him over the phone the day before it was filed. He said he assumed this was done to give him general information about its contents.

Corning said he was not asked to approve the brief. He added that on several occasions he was asked to supply the Corporation Counsel with facts about the school system in connection with the brief.

C. Melvin Sharpe, president of the Board of Education, yesterday told The Washington Post that the Corporation Counsel's brief was read to him, in advance of filing, by Milton D. Korman, Assistant Corporation Counsel.

"I had the feeling the brief was being printed at the time it was read to me," Sharpe said. "I think it was coming off the presses, because it was read in installments."

Sharpe said he was assured by Korman that the brief had been gone over thor

Korman yesterday refused to comment on whether any city officials received a preview of the brief. He suggested the

6 Groups Ask School Board To Declare Lack of Equality

By Jeanne Rogers
Post Reporter

Six Washington organizations yesterday urged the Board of Education to declare publicly that District public schools do not provide equal education for Negro and white pupils.

Copies of this request were sent J. Lee Rankin, Assistant Attorney General, and Vernon West, District Corporation Counsel.

In a separate letter, the six groups sent Rankin excerpts from recent reports by School Superintendent Hobert M. Corning on school housing and the number of teachers assigned to the white and Negro divisions of the school system.

Summarizing their position, the groups wrote Rankin:

"The Board of Education, despite strenuous effort, has failed to provide equal education for all children in the District; the Board's own statements and reports support our position and indicate that the Board is aware that it cannot and does not afford equal education."

Rankin, who will argue the Justice Department's brief in the forthcoming segregation hearings before the Supreme Court, was asked to consider the information sent him by the groups.

The groups are the District chapter of the American Veterans' Committee; the District-Maryland regional office of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith; the Catholic Interracial Council of Washington; the Commission on Community Life of the Washington Federation of Churches, and the District branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

In their letter to the school board, the organizations declared:

". . . The Board of Education is unable in the present segregated school system to provide equal education without regard to race."

The signers said this statement was based on a review of school board efforts to provide equal educational opportunities over years and on Corning's latest reports "which show the clear inequality in teacher-pupil ratio between white and Negro division." The groups cited recent studies made by Corning showing a surplus of white instructors and a corresponding shortage of Negro teachers.

"We respectfully urge the Board of Education to declare publicly by formal resolution that despite its consistent effort to provide equal education (it) has been and is at present unable to administer the public schools in a manner to provide the same educational opportunity for Negro children as is provided for white children," the organization wrote.

Equalization Of Schools Ordered by January 20

Board of Education Tells Corning to Fix Balance, Or Explain Reasons He Cannot

By Jeanne Rogers
Post Reporter

The Board of Education yesterday ordered School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning to correct any existing inequalities between the Negro and white divisions of the District school system before January 20—or explain why this is impossible.

The mandate, which could mean transfer — while schools are closed for the holidays—of some buildings from white to Negro use, was approved by a 6-1 vote of the nine-member Board.

Later in the meeting, Corning told the Board he is prepared to transfer 54 teachers' salaries from the white division to hire needed Negro instructors. He said the money would be available on the Negro division payroll February 1.

Corning said this switch would mean the dismissal of a "small number" of white temporary teachers. The number will not be known until mid-semester, when classes have been organized, he said.

Prior to the vote on equalization, Board members listened for two hours to parents who urged transfer of several white schools as the only solution to overcrowded Negro schools in the same neighborhoods. These witnesses presented documented evidence of "unequal school facilities."

Transfer of one of the White elementary schools in the Woodridge area was requested by Dr. Osborn T. Smallwod, president of the Woodridge Civic Association. The white schools in the area are Woodridge, Carlton and Central aves. ne., Burroughs, 18th and Monroe sts. ne., and Langdon, 20th and Franklin sts. ne.

Smallwood said the transfer this fall of Noyes School did not elimate overcrowding at Slowe School. He added that both these Negro schools are operating at more than capacity and that the white schools have a total of 690 vacancies.

Transfer of McKinley High School, 2d and T sts. ne., to house Negro students now attending Armstorng High School, 1st and O sts. nw., was requested by Hortense M. Fitzgerald, president of the Armstrong P-TA. Mrs. Fitzgerald said the "least you can do" is sek an emergency appropriation to make this change.

Corning has said it would take much money to equip McKinley for technical courses now given at the Negro school and to equip another white high school with shop equipment now used by McKinley students.

Williams, a Board member, said he thought the "Baltimore Plan" would work at McKinley. He referred to the integration this year of the Polytechnic Institute in Baltimore after Baltimore's School Board agreed that facilities offered at Polytechnic, a former white school, could not be duplicated in a Negro institution.

Williams asked the Board to order Corning to recommend the enrollment of Armstrong students at McKinley in cases where adequate facilities were not available at the Negro school.

Tobriner, Board member, said he believed a "detailed fact-finding" would have to preceed such a move, adding that every court in Washington would grant an injunction against the Board of Education if it took the action. Williams withdrew his motion.

Mrs. Butcher then moved that Corning correct by February these ten situations, which she said were instances of inequality.

Larger class size in Negro schools as compared to white classes; a surplus of 188 white teachers and a shortage of 69 Negro teachers; employment of 285 temporary white teachers who have no tenure rights under law; kindergarten waiting lists of 465 Negro and 31 white youngsters; four-day kindergarten classes for 2576 Negro pupils.

Also, kindergarten classes of more than 70 pupils per teacher for 150 white children and similar overcrowding for 4356 Negro youngsters; McKinley High School, 29 percent occupied, as compared to Armstrong, 86 percent occupied; four locked shoprooms at McKinley, none at Armstrong; less than 40 percent McKinley enrollment taking technical courses and 90 percent Armstrong students so enrolled; more than 20 percent of McKinley students taking typing and less than 10 percent at Armstrong taking commercial courses.

Hamilton, Board member, took issue with Mrs. Butcher's proposal, stating: "We have to consider the practical angle. . . . How can Dr. Corning put into effect such a gigantic move?

"I'm aware facilities are not equal," Hamilton continued, "but I'm not ready to vote."

Earlier, Hamilton said he favored integration of schools, but believed that under law, the operation of the dual school system is proper.

"All right," Mrs. Butcher said, "this board has been asked (previously) to go on record it can't provide equal facilities." She added that her request would be a hard job for Corning.

Mrs. Butcher declared: "I'm one who voted to raise his salary (Corning's) to $22,000. If the job's worth that, it's worth a little homework."

At this point, Mrs. Butcher agreed to withdraw her motion in favor of Board Member Kirks' proposal that Borning check out all charges of inequality, correct any cases before the January meeting or report why correction was not posible. The proposal was approved.

Mrs. Butcher then warned: "I'm digging info r a long fight. I don't believe there's such a thingaseq ualization. You can't equalize. This is just a drop in the bucket."

Although it was not read during the meeting yesterday, several members mentioned copies of a 19-page report they receivd documented school inequalities from Mrs. Butchr. This report ascitedin October and November Board reports made by Corning.

Mrs. Butcher's analysis was critical of efforts to achieve equality. Mrs. Butcher said 118.5 more salaries should be transferred from white to Negro use to equalize class size at Board standards.

Mrs. Butcher also wrote that: "It is apparent the Superintendent is approaching theproblem of the shortage of teachers in Division II (Negro) from the point of view of what can be spared by Division I (white). All the administration ever did was to figure out the smallest number of transfers at the very last moment," Mrs. Butcher's report continued.

Near the end of yesterday's three-hour meeting, Corning recommended that 54 white salaries be transfered temporarily to Negro use.

'Equalize' Order Hits D.C. Schools

BY ETHEL L. PAYNE
(Defender Washington Bureau)

WASHINGTON — The board of education of the District of Columbia has ordered Superintendent of Schools Hobart M. Corning to "equalize" schools by January 20 of 1954 or show reason why.

By a 6-1 vote with two of the nine members abstaining the body upheld the three-point "equality" plan presented by Dr. Margaret Just Butcher, one of the three Negro members, only a few days prior to the order last week.

The action by Dr. Butcher was seen as a strategic move to bring about integration in the public schools of Washington.

Her demands included equalization of the teaching loads of Negro and white teachers by Feb. 1, the start of the second semester, and equalization of facilities at Armstrong high school with those at McKinley Tech by Feb. 1. In lieu of this, she asked that Negro students be allowed to attend McKinley.

It is generally recognized as a physical impossibility to equalize the District's two school systems. But until the systems are equalized, the school board is in violation of the law requiring separate schools. Opponents of Jim Crow schools see integration as the only alternative.

Washington is faced with the problem of shortage of Negro teachers and an over supply of white teachers. This situation was brought on by a decrease in the white population of the capital while the Negro population was increasing. The work loads of Negro teachers are higher than whites.

Dr. Butcher, who has been a thorn in the side of the school board since her appointment last June, then warned, "I'm digging in for a long fight. I don't believe there's such a thing as equalization. You can't equalize. This is just a drop in the bucket."

Parents File Reply On Dual Schools

By Sam Zagoria
Post Reporter

A group of District Negro parents yesterday submitted a brief to the Supreme Court emphasizing that their challenge of public school segregation is distinctly different from that of the four-state cases.

The 22-page brief, entered by Attorney James M. Nabrit, jr. and George E. C. Hayes for the parents, is a reply to the stand taken by the District Corporation Counsel's office on behalf of its clients, the Board of Education.

The Supreme Court is scheduled to start hearing arguments on the segregated school controversy on Monday. The jurists will begin with a consolidated case involving Virginia and South Carolina, then move on to the Kansas case, then the District of Columbia and wind up with Delaware.

Yesterday's brief takes this stand:

1. The District's case centers on the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution, rather than the Fourteenth, as in the state cases. Since the Fourteenth spells out limitations on states in treatment of citizens, the attorneys argue that it has little application to the situation here since the District is not a state.

This raises the possibility that even if the highest court should rule one way on the state cases, the attorneys for the parents feel that it does not preclude a different finding in their case.

2. The District case concerns the limiting of rights of Negroes by denying them education in a particular school solely because of race. Such limitation deprives Negroes of liberty despite the Fifth Amendment warning that no person shall "be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law."

The attorneys argue, too, that the test of deprivation is "whether the action is arbitrary, but never as to how much liberty is taken." This is intended in refutation of the District government's position that although Negro youngsters have been denied admission to the white Sousa Junior High School, other comparable facilities have been offered.

3. "Our government is one of laws and not of men. In this system, race is irrelevant . . . equality for all citizens—and a constitution that is color-blind," the brief declares, adding that there is no express power, nor an implied one, giving the Federal Government authority to "make racial distinctions in affording educational opportunities."

4. It is "the policy of the President of the United States to use all applicable authority of his high office to terminate all forms of segregation in the Nation's Capital," the Attorney General has filed a brief supporting the argument of the Negro parents and the District Commissioners have ordered an end to all "segregation in the District government."

These policies of "superior officers of Government" differ with the stand of the Board of Education and in addition, there are differences of view on the board.

5. The District's argument that it would take time to change from a dual to a single school system is faulty because if the Corporation Counsel's staff "had conferred with their clients—the Board of Education—they would have been advised that substantial 'indoctrination of teachers' is already an accomplished fact."

The brief cites the existence of an integrated teachers' union, several dozen school system committees, training programs and meetings in which both Negro and white instructors participate "without untoward incident."

"The most devastating rebuttal" that the city is "unprepared for the possibility of an immediate end of segregation in the public schools comes from the pen" of Superintendent of Schools Hobart M. Corning, one of the defendants. In his annual report for the school year 1952-53, after a discussion of several steps taken by the Board of Education in planning possible reorganization as a result of a possible Supreme Court decision ending segregation, he notes, "The Superintendent and the officers will not be unprepared in the event that major changes in the organization are required."

SPOTTSWOOD BOLLING, JR. . . . publicity shy

Boy, 14, Won't Hear His Racial Case Argued

Spottswood Thomas Bolling, Jr., the 14-year-old Spingarn High School freshman who figures so prominently as the plaintiff in the District's school segregation case before the Supreme Court this week, will not be on hand when the nine justices convene—he prefers school, particularly the gym hour basketball games, instead.

Spottswood, better-known to his schoolmates as "Doc," and Board of Education President C. Melvin Sharpe are the principals in "Bolling v. Sharpe," a case destined for a top place in Constitutional law books no matter which way the Supreme Court rules.

Doc (his nick-name came from carting around the medical kit for the school football team) was graduated from Turner Elementary School in June, 1950.

"That fall mother and a whole lot of grownups took me and a whole lot of other children over to Sousa Junior High School," Doc said, fingering his black tie and looking down nervously at his feet. "They went in to see the principal. My mother said I couldn't get in so I went to Shaw Junior High School. That was farther away from home and overcrowded."

Doc, his older brother, Wanamaker, 17, and three other children, all Negroes, had sought admittance to the all-white Sousa Junior High School.

Doc and Wanamaker's mother, Mrs. Spottswood T. Bolling, Sr., 122 Park pl. ne., and the mothers and fathers of the other children formed the Consolidated Parents Group, Inc. and brought suit.

They wasted no arguments on whether Shaw was inferior to Sousa, the usual ground in a segregation case. They simply declared that the mere denial of the right of five children to enter Sousa "solely because of race and color" violated the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution and the Charter of the United Nations.

Interviewed in his home yesterday, Doc bit his fingernails, shriveled inside his freshly-pressed tan tweed sportcoat, "No sirred" and "Yes sirred," even ducked out behind the kitchen gas furnace— all to make clear he would prefer to resume watching the Notre Dame game on television, or go over to Lincoln Park and play basketball, or do anything at all but discuss a Supreme Court segregation case.

It might bear his name but it certainly didn't bear his immediate concern.

"He's publicity-shy. I practically had to sit on him to keep him home for the photographer," Mrs. Bolling explained.

Mrs. Bolling is a certified multilith operator in the General Services Administration reproduction department. Her husband, who was graduated from Hampton Institute in carpentry and worked for the Public Buildings Service, died in 1948.

Mrs. Bolling spent yesterday doing the family ironing in her neat two-story frame house with its green shutters and green and white front porch. The family goes to Georgetown's Jerusalem Baptist Church on Sundays and on the mantel Mrs. Bolling had placed a three-sided shrine with a candle.

"We have a nice block here," she said. "It's a mixed block, only about nine colored families. I just always like for people to live together and know one another. I just don't think anybody is inferior, because God made us all together."

Mrs. Bolling plans to use her Government leave this week to take a chance on getting a seat inside the Supreme Court to hear what the legal minds have to say on the subject.

Whose Views Will D. C. Give the Court?

By Ben W. Gilbert

THE CASE OF Spottswood Thomas Bolling, et al., versus C. Melvin Sharpe, et al., is scheduled for argument before the United States Supreme Court this week. Bolling is a young Negro who sought admission to a public school for white students. Sharpe is president of the District Board of Education.

GILBERT

This one may go down in the constitutional law books as a basic case on citizen rights under the Fifth Amendment. The question at issue is not a citizen's right to avoid compulsory self-incrimination, but the right of citizens in areas under the jurisdiction of Congress to a non-segregated education.

The Fifth Amendment forbids Congress to deprive any person of "life, liberty, or property without due process of law." The comparable clause of the Fourteenth Amendment is involved in the school segregation cases originating in the states concerned.

THE CORPORATION COUNSEL of the District of Columbia filed a brief with the United States Supreme Court last week in answer to a request from the court for guidance on how racial integration of public schools might be ordered. The court's questions, propounded last June, were cast in a legal framework, but they seemed to be seeking practical advice. From where did this practical advice come?

It did not come from the District Board of Education, which would have the job of applying an integration order. The brief stated openly that the nine members of the school board had not been questioned in the matter. It's possible a majority of the school board members would favor integration if left to their own devices, but the court was told only that their public utterances indicated they were divided on the issue.

School Board President Sharpe and Schools Superintendent Hobart M. Corning heard the brief read to them over the telephone by an assistant corporation counsel just before it was filed, but they had no opportunity to study it. District Commissioner Samuel Spencer had a chance to read it, although technically he is not a party to the suit as are the members of the school board.

School Board Member Margaret Just Butcher has protested publicly that she was not consulted in the preparation of the brief, which purports to represent all the members of the Board of Education. It is not known whether her protest will be called to the attention of the court.

THE BRIEF DOES NOT defend the refusal by the school authorities to admit the Negro to a white school. That was done a year ago when the case was argued originally

It is interesting to note that the brief was reviewed by the Justice Department and was changed in some particulars before it was filed. But, even in its modified form, it was not entirely satisfactory to the Federal Government. That should surprise no one, because the Federal Government and the District are technically and legalistically opposed on the issue of segregation.

In its final form, the District brief appears confusing and contradictory. At one point, it states that "no gradual adjustment appears necessary and none is recommended." Elsewhere, reasons are listed why integration should be delayed for an "unpredictable" time.

One suggestion is that integration should be delayed until Congress has provided funds for the training of teachers and until the teachers have been trained.

There is nothing in the record to indicate the school board favors this approach. Miss Butcher, for instance, argues that many of the city's 3500 teachers will not need the intensive indoctrination suggested.

THE DISTRICT'S BRIEF seems to argue that nothing should be done about racial integration until the entire school system is ready to accept it all at once.

The Federal Government's brief, on the other hand, recommends machinery for gradual integration under the jurisdiction of the District Court. Under the Federal proposal, the District School Board would be allowed to work out an orderly program of integration that could be put into effect at once in some areas of the city and more gradually in other areas.

The District brief also raises technical problems concerning the hiring and promotion of teachers under integration. To some persons these problems may appear formidable in advance of a Supreme Court integration order. But because they are largely technical, there undoubtedly are technical ways to solve them.

Preparing For Integration

The District of Columbia has responded to the Supreme Court's request for information concerning the effects of a decision invalidating segregated school systems with a brief that seems admirably thoughtful in content and cooperative in spirit. "If separate schools for the races are declared unconstitutional, cognizance should be taken by this Court of the necessity for proper preparation for integration," it urges, "and the cases should be remanded to the respective district courts with instructions to order prompt preparation for integration and to order actual commencement and completion of integration within a reasonable period of time."

Whatever the constitutional merits of this view, it appears eminently sensible and pragmatic. Integration of Washington's dual school system would require, as the corporation counsel notes, "something more than mere reshuffling of the pupils." It would require proper indoctrination and instruction of teachers; and Congress would have to act and to appropriate funds for this kind of training. It would require indoctrination of parents and children; and for this, patient and understanding efforts would have to be made by parent-teacher associations, churches, citizen associations and a variety of community groups. It would require careful planning by the Superintendent of Schools. Without such groundwork, integration would be likely to produce confusion and friction to the serious disadvantagement of school children of both races.

The corporation counsel says candidly that the necessary preparation does not necessitate a gradual and protracted adjustment. He insists only that "an adequate time is necessary and advisable to accomplish the change in the manner in which acknowledged leaders in education believe that such a change should properly be accomplished." Adequate time is difficult to define since, at least in the case of the District, it depends in part upon congressional action.

But the length of time needed to accomplish the change in the desired manner depends in even larger part upon the actions of school authorities and community organizations. And these have been notoriously slow in making so much as a commencement. The school authorities in particular need to be ready with plans for redistricting schools and reassigning teachers in order to assure the greatest possible equity. There has been ample notice of the possibility that the Supreme Court will find segregation to be forbidden by the Constitution. In that event, "adequate time" to bring local practices into conformity with the Constitution ought to be the shortest time in which cooperation, good will and resolute effort can manage it. The time to lay the essential foundation for integration is now. The period in which the Court's judgment is awaited ought not to be wasted.

Board orders equalization

Spectators baffled by Col. Hamilton

WASHINGTON

Superintendent of Schools Hobart M. Corning, Thursday afternoon promised to intensify efforts to correct school inequalities here, but said he did not think "any system can be equalized, whether within Division 1 or Division 2 or an intergrated system."

He told a press conference that he will report to the school board in January as to what has been accomplished, the things he thinks the board can do and those he thinks cannot be done under the law.

Spectators at the D. C. school board's historic session, Wednesday, rejoiced at the board's move to "equalize or explain" local schools by January but were puzzled by the actions of Col. West A. Hamilton who helped block two other moves aimed at relief for Division 2 pupils.

With five others on the nine-member board, Colonel Hamilton voted without hesitation for Dr. Rowland F. Kirks' motion.

But he balked determinedly at two other motions offered by Wesley A. Williams and Dr. Margaret Butcher.

Citing the "Baltimore plan," under which both races now attend Baltimore Polytechnic High school, Mr. Williams proposed that pupils at Armstrong High be admitted to McKinley High next semester for courses which are not offered at Armstrong.

Robert Faulkner, stating that he wanted to offer an "amendment" to Mr. Williams' motion, contended that a legal question was involved. He said the matter should be referred to the corporation counsel's office for an opinion.

When Mr. Williams questioned the parliamentary propriety of Mr. Faulkner's move, Colonel Hamilton pointed out that "a substitute motion takes precedence."

Favored Substitute

"I'm in favor of the substitute motion," Colonel Hamilton declared.

Mr. Williams finally withdrew his motion and Doctor Butcher moved that Superintendent Hobart M. Corning be directed to end existing school inequalities by beginning of the second semester.

Colonel Hamilton immediately spoke up:

"I'm not prepared to direct the Superintendent to accomplish an impossibility," he said, "I'm aware of this inequality and of course I'm for integration and against segregation.

'Impossible Mandate'

"But under the existing law we're required to have dual schools.

"I'm not willing," he said a little later, "to vote an impossible mandate for the superintendent. It's now almost January first.

Colored School Population Highest

Washington, D. C., doubtless is the only metropolitan city in the country in which the colored public school enrollment exceeds the white, according to a statement made by District of Columbia Superintendent of Schools, Dr. Hobart M. Corning.

Testifying before the House Appropriations Committee, Dr. Corning pointed out that three years ago, for the first time, the enrollment in the colored schools became equal to that of the white schools.

The next year, he said, there were 4,654 more colored than white students in the dual school system, and this year there are 8,604 more colored than white students.

The superintendent said the figures were not proportionately, but actually.

House Group Trims TV Out From Budget For Schools

Committee Okays Negro Projects And Request for 85 More Teachers

The District's 1953-54 school budget, aimed chiefly at bolstering Negro facilities, sailed through the House Appropriations Committee yesterday almost intact except for the proposed educational television station.

The Committee approved the 85 additional Negro teachers requested, and said it understood that these, together with 32 other positions to be transferred from white to Negro schools, would make the teacher-student ratio the same in both white and Negro systems next year.

Also approved as requested were funds for planning or construction of seven Negro school projects. The commissioners had made no request for either teachers or buildings for white students.

A last-minute request of $400,000—urged by the Board of Education—to build and operate a televisio nstation for educational purposes was cut out entirely.

The school budget recommend by the committee to the full House was $28,194,000. This was $636,000, or 2½ percent, less than requested, but $2,321,000 more than allowed this year.

The $3,189,000 construction fund approved was earmarked for these projects:

Construction of new elementary schools near 56th and East Capitol Sts. and near Stanton and Elvans rds. se.; additions to Douglass and Terrell Junior High Schools and to Syphax Elementary School; planning a new elementary school near 42d and Grant sts. ne. and a eplacement for Van Ness Elementary School.

The item for permanent improvements to existing schools was cut one-third to $100,000 by eliminating money for a rifle range at Coolidge High School, money for automatic kas furnaces in greenhouses at eight senior high schools and nearly half the amount requested for lockers in school buildinges.

Corning Urges Negro Use for Bryan, Noyes

By Jeanne Rogers
Post Reporter

District School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning told the Board of Education yesterday that Bryan and Noyes Schools should be used by Negro students, beginning in September.

Corning said there is no immediate remedy for antiquated Armstrong Technical high school. He added there was no money to alter nearby McKinley High School to accommodate Armstrong students, or to send McKinley's white students elsewhere for technical training. McKinley is one-third occupied.

Mrs. Hortense Fitzgerald, president of the Armstrong P-TA, charged school officials and the school board with being responsible for her son leaving school. She said her 17-year-old boy became so frustrated with the inadequate program that she signed for him to join the Air Force." She said the youth tried to learn electricity in the Armstrong annex, an abandoned grade school. Class equipment was three self-provided iron cords and one soldering machine, she said.

Corning said the ultimate decision of the Supreme Court on integration might determine the "exact nature" of some future relief at Armstrong.

The buildings and grounds committee of the Board of Education will consider shift of the grade schools at 2:30 p. m. June 29. Final board action will be taken at a special session at 2:30 p. m. June 30. Citizens may testify bot hdays in Franklin School, 13th and K sts. nw.

Corning said yesterday the shift of Bryan School, Independence ave. between 13th and 14th sts. se., would make it possible to discontinue use of five make-shift classrooms in Payne School, 15th and C sts. se. He added that classes in all the seven Negro grade schools in the Lincoln Park area would be held to fewer than 40 pupils. A new kindergarten could be opened at both Blow and Pierce Negro Schools, he said.

The 400 Bryan students could be housed in Buchanan School, 13th and E sts. se., Corning said. Buchanan then would have 764 students. Its present capacity is 720, but a reading clinic would be moved to another building. Corning said "no serious loss in service to the children" would result from the Bryan transfer.

After the committee meeting, parents of Bryan students said they intended to fight to keep their school. Several women questioned Corning's choice of shifting Bryan instead of Buchanan. A few months ago, Corning told Payne parents that neither Bryan nor Buchanan could house the students of the other. He didn't explain yesterday what had changed the situation.

In proposing the transfer of Noyes School, 10th and Franklin sts. ne., Corning said it would stave off part-time instruction or huge classes at Slowe School, 14th and Jackson sts. ne. Slowe, which has a capacity of 360, expects 600 Negro students by fall. The 245 students now attending Noyes could go to Brookland, Langdon and Emery Schools "without causing congestion," Corning said.

Corning pointed out he could not transfer Woodridge School to Negro use as asked by parents of Slowe children living in this area. He said it would be displacing 265 students for the convenience of only 117 children.

In presenting a blueprint of other troubled spots in Negro schools, Corning said there would be a shortage of about 1700 seats in th junior highs, particularly in the Southeast and Northwest sections.

Because of parental concern over growing enrollments in the Garfield-Turner School area in the Southeast, Corning said a study had been made. He said the situation is not "pressingly critical" at present, pointing out that a 10-room temporary annex to Birney School is unused.

Corning said he could not recommend transfer of a white school in the fast-changing Northwest section now serviced by three Negro Schools, Park View, Bruce and Monroe. "If school population trends continue as they have in the past," Corning said he might recommend transfer of a white school later.

Pressing for a vote on Cornings proposals yesterday, Col. West A. Hamilton, member of the building committee, said: "I hope we're not going to mobilize a lot of sentiment . . . I'm in favor of the recommendations."

Mrs. Frank S. Phillips, chairman, replied: "I believe we ought to provide the opportunity for people to blow off steam, whether they change our opinions or not." Under a new rule, the board must give 10-day notice before voting for building shifts.

To End Payne Crowding

Move to Shift SE School To Negro Use Is Due Today

By Jeanne Rogers
Post Reporter

A proposal to transfer Bryan School to Negro use may be voted on today by the Board of Education buildings and grounds committee.

School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning is expected to recommend the transfer to reduce overcrowding at Payne School where classes are held in the auditorium of a new addition. The school board commitee will consider the shift during a 2:30 p. m. meeting.

The shift in the use of Bryan School, Independence ave. between 13th and 14th sts. se., will climax two years of pleading by parents of Payne studenst for use of some white school with declining enrollment in the Lincoln Park area. Payne is located at 15th and C sts. se.

During the two years, the parents twice ordered a stay-at-home strike by there youngsters.

Other recommendations by Corning today may include transfer of McKinley High School for use by Negro technical students attending outdated Armstrong High School and transfer of a white grade school to ease overcrowding at Slowe School, 14th and Jackson sts. ne.

The buildings and grounds committee yesterday approved completed additions to three grade schools by the time they are occupied next fall they will be overcrowded by pupils coming in from new housing developments.

They are: Keene School addition, Rock Creek Church and Riggs rd. nw, 10 classrooms, kindergarten, library, assembly and lunch and play rooms, $640,200. The new capacity is 792; the white enrollment is expected to climb to this figure by October.

Bunker Hill addition, 14th st. and Michigan ave. ne., an identicial room plan to Keene, $599,820. With the extra rooms, capacity at this school is 792; between 800 and 900 white students are expected next year.

Turner School third floor and assembly hall, Stanton rd. and Alabama ave. se., $286,600. Upper grades of the Turner school now are attending an annex.

Preparing For Integration

We hope that the Supreme Court's temporary deferment of a decision in the school segregation cases, in contrast to its far-reaching decision on the restaurant case, will not result in any relaxation of efforts by the community and its responsible officials to find constructive ways to achieve the integration of our schools, whenever that former segregation is ended. Between now and the time the court announces its decision much has to be done. There are many serious inequalities and discriminations in the D. C. schools. The present law of the Constitution requires that the separate school systems for white and colored children shall be equal. The Board of Education and the superintendent are duty bound here and now to end the discriminations in school facilities and teaching loads wherever they exist. The delay in determining the constitutional issues gives no sanction to continued inequality or discrimination.

It is evident from the questions put by the court for further argument that one of the important reasons for the delay in its decision is the court's wrestling with the question of how to make integration of the schools not only an end of segregation, but a constructive and unifying experience for the community. Should integration, when it comes, be immediate or gradual? Should it be uniform and general, or should it be tailored to local community circumstances? What is needed by way of preparing community attitudes and community facilities and services? This is the substance of the questions to be considered by the court. They are questions that confront all of us as we plan for our own community.

Most of the organizations which responded to the invitation of the Board of Education to suggest methods of integration of the D. C. schools urged that we follow three main principles. First, that integration, when it comes, should become effective uniformly and at the same time throughout the District, in order to avoid making each step the occasion of community controversy, as has been the case so far in each transfer of schools and playgrounds. Second, that integration be accomplished by zoning the schools and assigning to each school all children living in that school's zone. And third, that segregation, requires hiring, assigning, and promoting all teachers and other staff strictly on the basis of merit.

We are sure that the vast majority of the people of the District of Columbia are ready to undertake sincerely the next step in good human relations based on such principles. We are sure the children are also ready. It is our hope that the Board of Education and the school administration will proceed vigorously to remove the inequalities in the D. C. schools, and will continue to explore and plan and prepare for full integration. The delay of six to nine months gives us all additional time to work together and perfect our plans. Let us make the most of this period.

Arlington County Board Sued, Racial Law Violation Charged

An Arlington resident, who said he's tired of the county-s School Board being "picked on" in court, yesterday filed a suit against the County Board, charging it with breaking the State's racial laws.

Lindell F. Shrum, 6300 N. 29th st., a salesmanager for a District appliance company, said in his suit the County Board had, on several occasions, "wilfully and knowingly" broken segregation statutes.

These acts included, he said, permitting co-mingling of white and Negro audiences in public zoning hearings and budget hearings; and permitting the races to mix during in-service training and staff meetings at the Health Department.

Shrum asked Circuit Court to require the five members of the County Board to show cause why they shouldn't be removed for these alleged infractions of the State's segregation laws.

County board members reached yesterday said they had no comment.

Shrum said he decided to take the action over the weekend after he read a grand jury's report on similar charges against the school board. Shrum said he likes Arlington's schools and is "tired of the school board's being picked upon."

He is a member of the county Democratic Executive Committee and Williamsburg Civic Association, but stressed he acted without the knowledge of either organization.

Shrum referred to a grand jury report on charges lodged against the school board by John Locke Green, Arlington attorney.

The jury on Friday found insufficient evidence to support Green's claim the school board has spent funds recklessly or had shown improper sex education films, but the jury did call upon Circuit Court to "consider" four alleged infractions of segregation laws.

Meanwhile, Commonwealth's Attorney William J. Hassan said yesterday Judge Walter T. McCarthy had issued an order requiring the school board to defend itself against the jury's segregation findings on October 27.

'Grave Inequalities' Charged

17 Groups Ask School Board To End Pupil Segregation

The District Board of Education is required by law to end segregation in Washington's schools—"at the very least" in those areas where equal educational facilities are not offered.

This position is set forth in a letter sent to the board by 17 civic and religious organizations.

"It has been said," the letter emphasizes, ". . . an alleged mandate in certain acts of Congress (requires) a dual system of schools. Whether these acts require or merely permit a dual system is a debatable point. What is not debatable, however, is the fact that no act of Congress can justify violation of the Constitution."

Every possible means, the organizations urge, must be utilized to obtain the "equality which the Constitution guarantees." They go on to cite "flagrant inequalities" in District schools for Negro students.

Referring to school segregation cases to be reargued before the Supreme Court, the letter reminds the Board of Education members that the school year may end before the court's decision can be handed down and put into effect.

"The school authorities have an uninterrupted obligation to obey already existing and clearly interpreted laws . . . ," the 17 organizations point out in their letter. "Even those who accept the 'separate but equal' doctrine must agree that the separate schools of the District of Columbia do not approach equality in the very narrowest sense of the word."

Five cases on racial segregation in schools, one from the District, are scheduled to be reargued before the Supreme Court in December. The principal question is whether separate, but equal, public schools for white and Negroes are permitted by the Constitution.

The local groups sent their letter to the Board of Education last week. A member said yesterday that the letter had not yet been brought to the board's attention, but may be on the agenda for Wednesday's session.

In their letter, the civic organizations stress that "the grave inequality which exists between the education provided for white and colored children is a matter of record."

They point out that the superintendent's report for 1952-53 refers to "an imbalance between the two divisions in number of teachers and school house facilities."

Their letter also notes that capacity exceeded enrollment by 4446 seats in white elementary schools at the beginning of this month. In Negro schools, the letter asserts, the situation was reversed; enrollment exceeded capacity by 3429 pupils.

After citing these as some of "the more flagrant inequalities and by no means an exhaustive report," the organizations conclude their letter by urging the board to provide "true equality through integration."

Groups signing the letter include:

St. Peter Claver Center, Washington Council of the American Council on Human Rights, the Washington Fellowship, Education Committee of the Federation of Civic Associations, Interracial Workshop, American Friends Service Committee, Public Affairs Committee of the Washington Ethical Society, Education Committee of the Washington Urban League, Joint Social Order Committee of the 'Friends Meetings of Washington.

School Board Asks Groups To File Views on Integration

The Board of Education voted 5 to 1 yesterday to ask organizations and individuals to file briefs by February 4 on the best ways to prepare for a possible integration of District schools.

Schools Superintendent Hobart M. Corning, author of the plan, then will cull the reports and write a summary. This action will postpone until early spring an authorized citizen discussion meeting on the same subject.

The briefs are to be confined to two points: The mechanics of integration, such as teacher placement; educational preparation necessary to make integration work more freely in case the Supreme Court should rule segregation unconstitutional.

Corning yesterday said his summary of the briefs would reflect the general pattern of the thinking of the community. His master review, he added, would be used as a basis for discussion and reaction by the persons to be invited by C. Melvin Sharpe, school board president, to participate in the special discussion meeting.

The preliminary step was recommended by Corning to "assure" that the meeting will be of "more specific help than would otherwise be possible." Corning said it was not designed to "circumvent" the board's previous action in authorizing the calling of the extraordinary session.

The move was opposed by Robert R. Faulkner. Favoring the plan were West A. Hamilton, Mrs. Velma Williams, Wesley S. Williams, Walter N. Tobriner and Miss Mary Parker. Mrs. Frank S. Phillips did not vote and Sharpe votes only as tie-breaker. Albert E. Steinem was absent.

The school board yesterday received another progress report in the 7-year struggle to ease overcrowding at Payne School, 15th and C sts. ne. Corning said he proposed to establish two additional classes on "an emergency basis" in the auditorium of the Negro school's addition which opened January 5. This plan, he said, would be preferable to transferring the overload of 145 children to Maury and Webb Schools now.

On the suggestion of Tobriner, the superintendent agreed to ask parents to voluntarily return youngsters to Webb and Maury. Corning this fall promised Payne parents that children attending the more distant buildings could be accommodated in the Payne addition. The students poured in this month, leaving two vacant rooms at Maury and four at Webb.

Each member of the school board received a wire Tuesday from Payne parents demanding the transfer of Bryan or Buchanan Schools to Negro use. The citizens called for a decision at yesterday's meeting.

Corning declared: "I could not, at this time, recommend the transfer of either school when the overflow at Payne involves only 145 pupils." He said neither building could absorb the other's pupils without a "serious curtailment of the educational program."

The school board tabled a statement of principles for operation of the proposed educational television channel which Corning wanted to submit to the Federal Communications Commission. The board recently filed an application with FCC for control of the channel.

In other action, the board:

Urged the Commissioners to set up a borrowing program to finance school counstruction; instructed the legislation committe to prepare a bill to be sent the Commissioners permitting the transfger of funds within the school budget and which would credit the school board with proceeds from sales of school property. This money now goes into the District general fund.

Protested the elimination from the 1954 budget by the Commissioners of money to build a new white junior high school at 4th st. and Mississippi ave. se. Restoration of the item was urged.

Appointed Lemuel A. Penn principal of Phelps Vocational High School and Mrs. Fannie R. Dorsey, principal of Douglass Junior High.

Approved retirements of Mrs. Elfrida K. Taylor, Shaw Junior High School teacher; Mrs. Susan S. Ekstrand, teacher, Gordon Junior High; Miss Vivian Vestal, teacher, Macfarland Junior Highffi Mrs. Alice M. Baker, teacher, Shepherd School; and William F. DeBardeleben, assistant professor, Miner Teachers College.

Enrollment Highest By Actual Count

Superintendent Says Excess In Figures Totals 8,604 Pupils

WASHINGTON, D.C. (NNPA) — The dual school system of the District of Columbia shows the paradoxical situation of a continuing drop in the white school population and a continuing increase in the colored school population, according to the testimony of Dr. Hobart M. Corning, superintendent of schools, before the House Appropriations Committee.

To give members of the committee an estimate of the extent to which the white school population is dropping and the colored rising, Dr. Corning pointed out that three years ago, for the first time, the enrollment in the colored schools became equal to that in the white schools.

THE NEXT year, he said, there were 4,654 more colored than white students in the dual system, and this year there are 8,604 more colored students than white.

"Do you mean proportionately or actually?" asked Representative Earl Wilson, of Indiana, chairman of the District of Columbia Appropriations subcommittee.

"Actually," replied Dr. Corning.

Mr. Wilson said he had made that observation at hearings of citizens' groups when someone was testifying in behalf of division 2 schools and was implying that the teacher-pupil ratio was not the same in the white and colored schools.

MR. WILSON said he tried to explain that public schools were not hiring white teachers, that they were letting them retire and not filling vacancies, and hiring teachers for the colored schools only.

Dr. Corning presented a chart showing that since 1945, 203 positions have been abolished in the white schools and sixty-seven salaries transferred, resulting in the elimination of 270 teachers' salaries in the white schools.

Asked whether only colored teachers were used in colored schools, Dr. Corning replied:

"THE SCHOOLS at the present time are entirely segregated in every respect. There are two complete systems of schools, really, that meet in my office — I have charge of both division. The First Assistant Superintendent on each side and a full battery of officers and teachers — colored and white — are entirely separated all the way through."

The hearings, made public Thursday, show that an off-the-record discussion followed.

In addition to the positions shifted to the colored division, Dr. Corning said, salaries also have been loaned from division 1 to division 2. For example, he said, last year there were forty-nine such positions loaned, which must be returned as of July 1 to division 1.

Until this current year, he added, the school system has been able to establish temporary positions from savings which were available for uses of that sort. There were fifty-three such positions in 1950, thirty-seven in 1951, and thirty in 1952, he said.

Strike Keeps 800 Pupils From Payne Classrooms

Walkout Won't End Till Overcrowding Has Been Relieved, P-TA Head Says

A "stay-at-home" strike protesting overcrowded conditions at Payne Elementary School began yesterday with more than 800 students absent from classes.

The strike was voted last Thursday by the Payne-Maury Parent-Teacher Association.

A total of 57 students of the 899 enrolled reported for morning classes. The number dwindled to 45 after the lunch hour.

P-TA President J. Andrew Thalley said the strike would continue until the association feels the overcrowded conditions have been remedied, and votes to end the children back. "Our next meeting has not been scheduled," he said.

Temporary Classrooms

In an effort to alleviate the situation and prevent the strike, the Board of Education recently set up five "temporary" classrooms in the school's new auditorium section.

The P-TA, however, has demanded that either Bryan or Buchanan Elementary schools, both attended by white students, be turned over for the use of Negro students to take care of Payne's surplus.

"There are enough facilities in the community for our children without improvising classrooms in the auditorium," Thalley said. "The auditorium should be used for its original purpose."

The threatened picketing of both Payne and the Board of Education Administrative Building, at 13th and K sts. nw., did not cause much trouble. Few pickets appeared at both places but drifted away after a brief taste of the cold weather.

Fifth Precinct Pvt. Wade G. Baucom, stationed at Payne, 15th and C sts. se., in case of emergency, reported four pickets, parade in front of the school briefly at noon.

Corning Won't Comment

Meanwhile, Dr. Hobart M. Corning, Schools Superintendent, refused to comment.

District Commissioner F. Joseph Donohue said he is opposed to parents taking their children out of school. "There is a section in the District Code making such action a misdemeanor," he said, "but it has been our policy not to enforce this in the past."

(Under Title 31, Section 207 of the 1951 District Code, a $10 fine or five days in jail, or both, is provided for the guilty parent or guardian for every two days the child is absent.)

This is the second such strike at Payne. In December, 1951, Payne parents kept their children out of school for four days.

By Jack Lartz—The Washington Post

Only a handful of students showed up for instruction in the temporary classrooms set up in Payne School's auditorium. Four of them are sitting beyond the partition.

Payne Principal Frank T. Mundy calmly explained the situation which led up to the strike. "The auditorium classrooms cut the classroom enrollment from 44 students-per-teacher down to about 40," he said, "but the Board of Education standards call for 36 students-per-teacher.

"Before the new auditorium section was opened last month we handled 472 students in classes from kindergarten to the third grade," he said, "but with the new addition we took in 427 students from other schools and added fourth, fifth and sixth grad classes."

The Americans for Democratic Action last night asked all District citizens to support the Payne group demands that Bryant or Buchanan schools be transferred to use of the Payne surplus of students.

Equal School Law Broken, Board Told

Statement Made By Mrs. Butcher While Criticizing Corning's Report

Mrs. Margaret J. Butcher, a board of education member, yesterday accused the board of violating the segregation law because equal school facilities for Negro and white students are not maintained.

"Until this community matures to the point of according all its children one set, and one alone, of educational facilities, I feel that we should be morally bound to insist on equality of facilities for all the children in the community," Mrs. Butcher declared.

Mrs. Butcher, a new member of the board, made the statement in criticising the annual report prepared by Superintendent Hobart M. Corning.

"I felt that this report should surely reflect the superintendent's awareness, though not expressed conviction, that the attempts at school equalization between Division I (white) and 2 (Negro) are hopeless, abortive and completely futile," Mrs. Butcher said.

She added: "It is my strong view that we, the board members, and in a sense custodians of the community's children, are breaking the letter of the so-called 'segregation law' because we are not determined to meet the requirements of equalization."

Mrs. Butcher said she believes the board should insist that Corning bring to it some definite plan for constructive action to meet one of two contingencies—a ruling from the Supreme Court ordering integration, a ruling denying it.

Corning yesterday gave Mrs. Butcher a partial reply to her September request for a report on the teacher shortage and other problems facing Negro schools. He summarized the number of teachers assigned to the two school divisions.

The summary shows there are 1765 teacher positions appropriated for white schools, which on October 1 had an enrollment of 44,878 pupils. The number of positions includes 34 jobs which were frozen to provide funds for mandatory in-service pay increases.

There are 1830 teacher positions in Negro schools, including 20 salaries which were transferred temporarily from the white schools, and 34 permanent salary transfers. The Negro schools October 1 reported 58,800 students.

Corning gave this breakdown of regular classroom teachers and the pupil-teacher ratio in the various levels of the white and Negro schools:

Division I

Wilson Teachers College, 30.5 teachers, 403 students, 13.2 ratio; senior highs, 345.5 teachers, 6497 students, 18.8 ratio; vocational, 67 teachers, 983 pupils, 14.7 ratio; junior high, 364 teachers, 8906 pupils, 24.5 ratio; elementary, 620 teachers, 21,586 pupils, 34.8 ratio; kindergarten, 88 teachers, 4444 pupils, 50.5 ratio. Junior high students attending such classes as sight conservation or social adjustment are 358 to 21 teachers. Ungraded elementary classes such as Braille have 1243 students, 79 teachers.

Division II

Miner Teachers College, 31 teachers, 581 pupils, 18.7 ratio; senior highs, 242.5 teachers, 5792 children, 23.9 ratio; vocational, 59.5 teachers, 1132 pupils, 19 ratio; junior highs, 449 teachers, 13,257 pupils, 29.5 ratio; elementary, 817 teachers, 31,044 pupils, 38 ratio, and kindergarten, 67 teachers, 5084 students, 75.9 ratio. There are 531 children attending special classes, including those for the crippled, in Negro elementary schools and 34 teachers. In the Negro junior highs, shut-in and adjustment pupils number 32 or two teachers.

The subject of equal facilities came up a second time yesterday when Board Member Wesley S. Williams asked Corning to analyze a letter the board received from 17 civic and religious organizations. The letter said the board is required by law to end segregation in schools where equal educational facilities are not offered.

Board Member Robert R. Faulkner declared: "Why not take this issue to Congress? Don't use us (Board of Education) as a sounding board."

Other school board action yesterday:

Approval of a voluntary tuberculin testing program involving 3000 second and sixth grade District students.

Approval of a 10 percent pay increase for evening and summer school employes and per dime substitutes, be become effective after passage of enabling legislation.

Approval of these appointments: John D. Koontz, from assistant principal at Coolidge High School to principal of Taft Junior High; Mrs. Gladys D. Edmonson, chief of Board of Examiners for Negro schools; Harry J. Robinson, principal of Terrell Junior High; William Thornton, assistant principal at Eliot Junior High; and Mrs. Klotha C. Outten, principal at Bryan-Maury School. Retirements were approved for Miss Ida M. Lind, long-time director of elementary education in white schools, and Miss Helen Bagby, Kingsman School teacher.

Parents Picket School Board

Parents of Payne Elementary School children yesterday began picketing the District Board of Education offices in a protest against overcrowding at the school, 15th and C sts. se. Eight pickets arrived at the Board of Education's administrative building, 13th and K sts. nw., at 8:30 a. m. This move is preliminary to a pupil strike which the Payne P-TA has scheduled for Monday. The picketing, the Payne P-TA maintains, will continue until the board equalizes conditions in white and Negro schools.

Montgomery Report Urges $560,000 for Negro Schools

Expenditure of $560,000 for expansion of Negro schools is urged by the Montgomery County Board of Education in its recommendations for a five-year building program.

The board's report says this amount will be necessary to meet an increase in enrollment from the present 2537 pupils to 2830 in 1955 and 2960 in 1958.

Wash. Post

Total student capacity of the county's Negro schools at the completion of present construction in 1954 will otherwise leave an estimated excess of 307 pupils, the report notes.

The Suburban Negro Elementary School, the Board of Education states, is expected to be finished by the fall of 1954. The plans call for 14 classrooms, a library, a kitchen, offices and an all-purpose room, and 15 teaching "stations." (A station in the report is defined as a place of work for a teach or a principal.)

However, for fiscal 1953-54 the report advises:

A two-classroom addition to the Taylor Elementary School, with a pupil capacity of 60 and two teaching stations. Cost, $40,000.

A 20-classroom addition to the Carver High School, with a science laboratory, a music room, an art room, two shop areas and a library, plus conversion of the existing library into a home economics area; an increase of pupil capacity to 640, and 26 additional teaching stations. Cost, $480,000.

Later in the program, the report advises, two or three classrooms and a second gymnasium could be added to increase the school's capacity to between 1100 and 1200 pupils. This, the report states, "should care for the Negro high school population for years to come."

For 1954-55 the board recommends a two-classroom addition to the Rock Terrace Elementary School, with a pupil capacity of 60, and two added teaching stations. Cost, $40,000.

The report says that present overcrowding at the Sandy Spring Elementary School should be eased by completion of the Suburban Negro Elementary School.

This concludes a series on Montgomery County's school plans.

Integrating Schools

The Board of Education was granted a summary recently of the long-awaited—and long-delayed—report on the statements respecting integration of the public school system invited from a number of organizations and individuals interested in community affairs. The board had carefully asked not for arguments as to whether integration is deemed desirable or undesirable, but for advice as to the best means of effecting integration in the event that the United States Supreme Court requires such a change in the District's public schools.

Washington Post p. 4B 1-24-53

Most of the respondents concerned themselves with this practical problem. And most of them, as Dr. Corning summarized their views, agreed that the foundation of any orderly changeover from a dual to a single school system must be a firm, clear, forceful stand by the school authorities themselves. There can be no half-heartedness on the part of the Board of Education or the superintendent if the shift is to be accepted by the community and accomplished smoothly.

Washington, D.C.

Beyond this, the most significant counsel coming from the respondents, in our view, concerned the importance of preparing the community for the change. It is a change that can be effected without friction—provided church groups, civic associations and community leaders of all sorts will help to pave the way for it by making parents and children understand the need for it—and understand the importance of accepting it with restraint and good feeling.

Post 4-24-53

In this connection it is encouraging that, after an unconscionable delay, the superintendent and president of the Board of Education finally have acted to set up a meeting with Washington community leaders early next month.

phasized, "should take steps to help teachers understand integration so they may serve as proper guides for the pupils."

1 Role for Every Citizen

John B. Duncan, District Recorder of Deeds, pointed out that the average citizen has a role in implementing the philosophy of integration. Parent-Teacher associations and women's groups can assist in making an effort to "reach the unconvinced, the unprepared," Duncan said.

The school board, he continued, must follow a clear rule that eliminates the choice of a parent as to what school his child shall attend. "Citizens must insist on a strong policy on the part of the school board, as difficulty arises easily out of confusion," he concluded.

J. R. Wiggins, managing editor of The Washington Post, said that when the decision of the Supreme Court is made known it would be well to place in the hands of every parent the opinion, its purport and any alternative methods open to the school board to put it into effect. He said the school board should elaborate on any new policy in such a manner as to leave no one in confusion.

"We don't want to see a transition become the cause of more unwill in this community," Wiggins declared. That would be "deplorable in the Nation's Capital," to which people everywhere are looking for democratic leadership, he said.

Board Urged to Air Policie Should It Integrate Schools

Nine Washingtonians told the Board of Eoucation yesterday that its first obligation to parents, in the event of school integration, is to issue a simple, clearcut statement of future policy and a brief summary of the Supreme Court ruling.

Thirty business and civic leaders had been invited to discuss with school board members the mechanics of integration and advance educational preparation for it. Thirteen of the 30 at-

Cafritz said students should be assigned to the school nearest their homes, and teachers should stay in the building where they currently are assigned.

Views of Ex-Members

Three former members of the Board of Education expressed their views. Mrs. Robert G. McGuire, sr., said all vestige of segregation in the school system should be eliminated at once. She said there should be a different lineup of top school officers: An assistant superintendent of elementary education, of secondary education and of collegiate education—all answerable to the superintendent of schools. "There should be a system-wide education program on integration sponsored by the school board," she declared.

Dr. Phillip T. Johnson called for "protection" as a must in teacher assignments. He advocated a job analysis to do away with duplication of positions.

Woolsey W. Hall indorsed a majority of the proposals for an orderly integration process which were sent to Schools Superintendent Hobart M. Corning by representatives of community groups and individuals. He opposed a citizens advisory committee or a commission on human relations, however.

Frank C. Waldrop, executive editor of the Times-Herald, suggested that the school board call on the Armed Services to explain its "successful" experience with integration. He said teams of young servicemen and women could tour the schools.

Policy Letter Proposed

Dr. C. Herbert Marshall, president of the Federation of Civic Associations, said the board should send a letter to all parents containing a statement that it is now the policy of the board to send children to the school nearest their homes.

"Don't make a martyr out of any teacher," Marshall said. "Don't give them briefs and books on how to act, just get them to be human before children." Marshall said if the board decided after study that immediate intergration might cause trouble, he would agree to mixing the grade schools and the teachers' colleges first to be followed in three years by the junior highs and then the senior highs.

Mrs. Frances M. Wood, editor of the Afro-American, urged immediate integration, saying: "See it as we see it, a simple matter of a board order."

Attending the 3 p. m. meeting in Franklin Administration Building as observers were Francis G. Addison, jr., president of the Security Savings and Commercial Bank; Rex Collier, editorial writer, Evening Star; Howard L. Coppenbarger, assistant managing editor, Daily News, and H. L. Rust, jr., real estate executive.

Board Called on to Shift 2 Schools to Use by Negroes

by Jeanne Rogers
Post Reporter

The Board of Education yesterday was asked to transfer Raymond grade school and Macfarland junior high to Negro use, beginning in September.

Wesley Williams, board member, backed up the parent petitioners by stating "it is shocking" that no relief has been proposed for overcrowding in three Negro grade schools in this Northwest community. they are the Bruce, Monroe and particularly, the Park View, he said.

Last week, School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning stated there is some unused space at Park View, Warder and Newton sts. nw., and he felt an immediate shift of a white school is not justified. Miss Edith Lyons, associate superintendent, yesterday said this space would be gained by using a conference room for classes and moving out special sight-saving and braille classes.

"I can't see changing the Park View organization when there are so many empty seats in Division I schools," Mrs. Velma Williams, board member said. She referred to Raymond School, 10th and Spring rd. nw., which Negro parents yesterday said had a June enrollment of 294 pupils and a 648 capacity. The speakers said Macfarland, Iowa ave. at Varnum st. nw., had 950 pupils and a capacity of 1193.

Albert E. Steinem, school board vice president, asked that Corning study the area again. 'We'll hold a special meeting if it is necessary," he added. The school board already has scheduled a special session June 30 to vote on the proposed transfer of Noyes and Bryan Schools for Negro occupancy.

Both Corning and C. Melvin Sharpe, school board president, could not attend yesterday's meeting, the last regular session of the 1952-53 school term. The officials testified before a Senate Appropriations subcommittee hearing on District agency money requests.

About half the 3-hour board meeting was devoted to future plans for school buildings. By a 5 to 2 vote, the board approved plans for a Negro grade schools at 56th and E. Capitol sts. Over the repeated protests of Col. West A. Hamilton, the board attached to the plans a suggestion of Mrs. Frank S. Phillips to eliminate the assembly room. The matter, however, will be left to the discretion of school officials who endorse all special rooms.

The school board held over a second set of plans for an addition to M. M. Washington Vocational High Schools for girls. Several members, including Mrs. Phillips, object to inclusion of an auditorium in the school. Presumably the issue will be decided next fall by the board which gets two new members July 1. The terms of Mrs. Williams and Steinem are expiring.

In a last-mniute rush, board members offered these proposals for action next fal:

Mrs. Phillips asked that board committees seek legislation which would let the school system credit to its construction budget the amount of assessed evaluation of abandoned school property returned to the District.

Walter N. Tobringer asked that Corning consider giving an identical examination to Negro and white teacher applicants. He said a single exam would be useful in the event of integration of schools.

Robert R. Faulkner proposed that committees seek legislation to get an appropriation to provide uniforms for members of the High School Cadet Corps. The cadets now buy their own.

Taking advantage of the absenc eof Corning, Colonel Hamilton asked why the superintendent had been omitted from the bill of Sen. J. Glenn Beall (R-Md.), which would give all other educational employes a 10 percent pay increase. Tobriner said he understood it was the practice of the author of the legislaiton not to advocate salaries higher than those of Congressmen. The legislators make $15,000. Corning, the highest paid District official, gets $14,000. Earlier this year, he sought $17,500.

By a 5 to 2 vote, the board approved letting the District Chapter of Americans for Democratic Action sponsor a high school essay contest on "What Home Rule Means to Me." Mrs. Phillips and Faulkner opposed the move.

Faulkner said he objected to ADA sponsoring the contest because it is a politica group. "As a second fact," he said, "there may be some people opposed to home rule." Miss Mary Parker pointed out the Daughters of the American Revolution sponsor contests in the schools and "they take stands on things." Mrs. Williams agreed, adding "the ADA is just a little broader than the DAR, that's all."

In other action, the board approved a new and higher wage scale for personnel of the centralized cafeteria program.

Board members heard an appeal from parents of the Health School for handicapped children for extra space.

Mrs. Williams made one last request as she ended 14 years of service. She asked her fellow board members to do something about antiquated Armstrong High School, technical institution for Negroes. For 10 years, Mrs. Williams has worked to get a new Armstrong.

THE PROPHETS OF DOOM LIED:

Delaware Ends Separate Schools Without Incident

NEW YORK, April 9 — The admission of colored pupils to previously all-white schools in Delaware created no unpleasant incidents, reports Dr. Frederick Wertham, noted psychiatrist and director of the LaFargue Clinic in NYC.

"Despite all the adults' dire forebodings and despite the mistaken theories of some psychologists, colored and non-colored children adjusted on the whole constructively and in a friendly manner to the new situation," he writes in the March issue of The Journal of Educational Sociology.

"The abolition of segregation removes a handicap that interferes with the self-realization and social adjustment of the child," asserts Dr. Wertham in his article, titled "Psychiatric Observations on the Abolition of School Segregation."

Jim Crow A Health Menace

Dr. Wertham describes experiments conducted in connection with the suit against segregation in public schools in Delaware, one of the five school segregation cases argued before the U.S. Supreme Court last December by NAACP attorneys.

As a result of tests given in 1951 to children in the schools involved, Dr. Wertham says, segregation was found to create potential mental disorders and, thus, to constitute a public health problem.

'Emotional Motivation'

In February of this year, a research team of staff members of his clinic went to Delaware and re-tested 22 children who had been transferred from segregated to integrated schools.

"All of the colored children of this study who changed from segregated to integrated schools made distinctly better academic progress," the psychiatrist reveals.

"The most potent reason is emotional motivation. The conflicts caused by state - ordained segregation were removed."

IN 46-PAGE PETITION:

Delaware asks court to let states solve problem

BY JAMES L. HICKS

WASHINGTON

The state of Delaware told the United States Supreme Court Monday, that the matter of segregation in public schools should be left to the state legislatures because the Supreme Court is "not in position" to judge how the prejudices and tensions which gave rise to such schools have "abated in any particular state."

The statement was contained in a 46-page legal brief filed by Delaware State Attorney General H. Albert Young, as Delaware became the first of four states and the District of Columbia to file briefs for scheduled reargument of the five school segregation cases.

Delaware's recommendation that the court leave the matter up to state legislatures came at the conclusion of its 46 - page brief.

The court on June 8 had asked lawyers in the case to submit answers to five legal questions giving evidence as to whether Congress, when it proposed the 14th Amendment understood that it would abolish segregation.

Another Question Asked

It also asked that if segregation was abolished should colored children be permitted to go to any school of their choice or be sent to certain schools under a "gradual adjustment" system set up by court.

The Delaware brief told the court first that Delaware considers questions asked by court "irrelevant to any issue in the Delaware case."

But Attorney General Young stated that Delaware would attempt to answer the questions because of 'their importance" and through a sense of duty." He said, however, this was being done without conceding the relevance of these questions."

Answers First Question

Replying to the first question, Delaware argued that the Congress that submitted the 14th Amendment and the great majority of the states which ratified it understood that segregation in public schools would not by force of the amendment be abolished."

In defending his argument, the brief cited debates of the 38th, 39th and 40th congresses beginning back in 1866. It contended that argument presented in these debates shows that Congress regarded equal education of colored students in separate schools as compliance with the 14th Amendment."

Declaring that actions of these congresses demonstrate a tolerance for segregation in the public schools," the brief stated that it is hardly conceivable that the Congress which proposed the 14th Amendment was attempting to prohibit to the states a type of school system which it had endorsed or refused to change in the District of Columbia. (The District of Columbia at that time had and still has segregated schools).

Cites 'Evidence'

The brief then states that "available evidence" also indicates that most of the states which ratified the 14th Amendment contemplated and understood that it would not abolish segregation in the public schools."

It added however, that this argument would be covered in detail in the argument which Virginia and South Carolina would make before the court.

Turning to the second question asked by the court, the Delaware brief said the framers of the 14th Amendment did not understand either that future congresses might abolish segregation, in public schools, nor that it would be within the judicial power in light of future conditions to construe the amendment of its own force.

Answer Third Question

Responding to the third question asked by the court the brief held that it is not within the judicial powers in construing the 14th Amendment, to abolish segregation in public schools."

The Delaware brief gave one answer for the fourth and fifth questions asked by court.

In these questions the court asked lawyers on both sides to assume that segregation in public schools does violate the 14th Amendment. It then asked whether the court should use its equity power to permit a"gradual adjustment" to be made.

"Petitioner's answers to questions four and five," the Delaware brief said, "are very simple."

If the assumption of the court is accepted, then the decree of this court in the Delaware case should be a simple affirmance and nothing more.

(Editor's Note) This means that the court would then allow the State of Delaware to work out the problems connected with a violation of the 14th Amendment without interference or direction from the high court.

Winds Up Argument

Concluding its arguments attorneys for Delaware said:

The wisdom of abolishing segregation in public schools of the states was considered by Congress at and about the time the 14th Amendment was adopted.

The Congress consistently, whenever the matter arose, decided to leave this problem to the states.

This court is not in a position to judge to what extent the prejudices and tensions which gave rise to segregation laws and the congressional decision to leave those matters to the states, have abated in any particular state, or to judge of the wisdom of abolishing segregation in the public schools of that state. The matter should be left where congress originally left it —in the state legislature."

The Delaware case arose over refusal of two high schools in Wilmington, to admit colored pupils. It was filed in the Delaware Court of Chancery in 1951.

Found Schools Inferior

Chancellor Collins Seitz found that the schools maintained for colored pupils were inferior to those for whites. He ordered schools to cease excluding colored pupils because of physical inequalities.

Delaware appealed Judge Seitz's ruling and the Supreme Court if Delaware affirmed his decision. The court also refused to issue a stay of execution requested by the schools and as a result colored children now attend both schools.

Jack Greenberg and Louis Redding, attorneys of Wilmington, handled the case for the NAACP.

Integration No Problem In Md. Schools

NEW YORK — The admission of Negro students to previously all-white schools in Delaware created no unpleasant incidents, reports Dr Frederic Wertham, noted psychiatrist and director of the LaFargue Clinic in New York City.

"Despite all the adults' dire forebodings and despite the mistaken theories of some psychologists, Negro and non-Negro children adjusted on the whole constructively and in a friendly manner to the new situation," he writes in the March issue of THE JOURNAL OF EDUCATIONAL SOCIOLOGY.

"The abolition of segregation removes a handicap that interferes with the self-realization and social adjustment of the child," asserts Dr. Wertham in his article, entitled "Psychiatric Observations on the Abolition of School Segregation."

Dr Wertham describes experiments conducted in connection with the suit against segregation in public schools in Delaware, one of the five school segregation cases argued before the United States Supreme Court last December by attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. As a result of tests given in 1951 to children in the schools involved, Dr Wertham says, segregation was found to create potential mental disorders and thus to constitute a public health problem.

In February of this year, a research team of staff members of his clinic went to Delaware and retested twenty-two children who had been transferred from segregated to integrated schools. "All of the Negro children of this study who changed from segregated to integrated schools made distinctly better academic progress," the psychiatrist reveals. "The most potent reason is emotional motivation. The conflicts caused by state-maintained segregation were removed

DR. FREDRIC WERTHAM of the Lafargue Clinic in New York City whose study of the harmful effect of segregated schools on Delaware children was discussed in a recent editorial, "An Illuminating Report," has written to deny our inference that Negro children in such schools are "subnormal and anti-social." He contends the harm is done to children of both groups, and that he "specifically stressed the potential harm of segregation to all children." School segregation, he says, "is a public health problem."

Dr. Wertham denies that he ever stated that there are more disturbing incidents in the average segregated school than in the integrated one. His group predicted there would be no incidents between Negro and white children after the change-over, and there were none.

Reiterating that all the children who had been in segregated schools before made better academic progress in integrated schools," he denies the inference that Negroes must be in the company of white people in order to make progress.

With all due respect to Dr. Wertham and his colleagues, we remain dubious about this line of reasoning and we do not think it is necessary in order to contend for the abolition of racially segregated schools. Indeed, if this reasoning is pursued too far, a case might be made out by another group of psychiatrists for continuing segregated schools on the old ground of homogeneity: that people are "happiest" among their own kind.

By asserting that segregation is a public health problem, Dr. Wertham cannot halt the inference that children subjected to it are subnormal since they are harmed by it.

What harms children in segregated schools is the discrimination which inevitably accompanies such separation, and which is unavoidable so long as a dual system obtains. Let's fight it out on that basis.

ALABAMA SEEKS UNIFIED ACTION ON SCHOOL SEGREGATION CASE

Birmingham Ala.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — (NNPA) — The State of Alabama is moving to get a unified approach of southern states to whatever problems might arise from the decision of the five school segregation cases which the United States Supreme Court has ordered reargued next October 12.

If the State Senate gives its approval, a committee to study segregation, made up of state officials, educators and private citizens will be created to consider every possible solution.

Governor Gordon Persons would designate the members of the proposed committee, including state department heads, five members of the legislature, four laymen, and spokesmen for the state, county and city education boards.

The proposed plan gives no indication that Alabama's colored citizens will be represented on the board, whose recommendations would affect their children as well as white children.

State Senator Miller, who introduced the resolution to create the committee, reasons that if a study group is set up, the public and educators will be better prepared to make whatever adjustments that may be necessary.

If the court should decide that segregation in public schools violates the Fourteenth Amendment, Miller reasons, the committee, through its study, should be able to recommend the next step to take.

On the other hand, if the court should order equalization of school facilities for colored children with those afforded white children, he reasons, the committee should be able to come up with estimates of costs and how the necessary construction can be financed.

While Miller's resolution appears to be a step in the right direction, the suspicion lurks among colored people that the purpose of the committee would be chiefly to find some way of circumventing a decision ordering integration.

Under Miller's resolution, other southern states would be invited to undertake similar studies so that when the school segregation cases are decided representatives of the seventeen states having segregated school systems can get together to work out a common course of action.

House members shouted approval of the resolution when it came up on that side of the Capitol, but the Senate Rules Committee had not acted on it when the Senate took a 12-day recess.

There is no organized opposition to it, however, and the committee is expected to report it out shortly. The legislators reconvened July 14.

One probable effect of the resolution, if adopted, would be to kill the stand-by "free private school" bill offered by Representative Sam Engelhardt of Macon County. Englehardt wants the legislature to have a private school system ready to go into operation if the Supreme Court should order the abolition of segregated schools.

The Englehardt proposal is patterned after the plan of Governor James F. Byrnes of South Carolina, which, in effect, would turn over the public school system to a private organization and the State would appropriate funds to pay the tuition of pupils.

If the study committee is set up, no legislation anticipating the Supreme Court's decision is likely to pass.

Questions which lawyers in the five school segregation cases and the Attorney General of the United States have been asked to discuss on reargument include

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following article is the result of an exchange of letters over the past three weeks between the writer of this article and Southern Governors. We feel that the opinions expressed are highly significant at this time. A copy of Mr. Nunn's letter to the Governors, and the replies of some of the chief executives appear on inside pages.

Will Gov. James F. Byrnes of South Carolina defy the U. S. Supreme Court in the vital, pulsating, controversial question of "Educational Segregation?"

Will Georgia's Herman Talmadge "see the light"

What are the official positions of the chief executives of Southern states such as Florida, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky, Louisiana, Missouri, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, on the issue which an entire country is awaiting high court action . . . with bated breath!

The Courier is able to forecast an opinion . . . based on answers to letters sent out several weeks ago . . . letters which sought certain specific information from the men who were able to talk!

NEXT WEEK—FULL PAGE of pictures dealing with background information on school segregation . . . other stories of vital importance . . . YOU CAN'T MISS AN ISSUE!

From this poll . . . the Courier received answers from:

(1) ELEVEN GOVERNORS.

(2) EIGHT ATTORNEYS GENERAL.

(3) SIX HEADS OF STATE DEPARTMENTS OF EDUCATION.

The result of the poll shows that in most of the states from which answers have been received, a majority indicate the following viewpoint:

"WE WILL ABIDE BY WHATEVER DECISION THE U. S. SUPREME COURT RENDERS, RELATIVE TO EDUCATIONAL SEGREGATION."

The answers . . . cloaked in intelligent, well-considered, sane, highly objective language . . . carry a note of caution!

But the answers also disclose that when . . . and if . . . the Supreme Court rules favorably (for Negroes) on the highly controversial issue; there will be no civil war . . . no upheavals . . . no Armageddon . . . a minimum of frictions and tensions.

DECISION DUE SOON

And while the entire democratic world waits the outcome of this latest test of democracy in practice, "Zero Hour" draws closer and closer.

Either this week . . . or next . . . a decision will be handed down. (Decision days are Monday, and if Supreme Court action is not taken on June 8, June 15 is the last day before the tribunal adjourns for the summer).

No one . . . not even the most optimistic nor pessimistic . . . are presumptious enough to even hazard a guess.

Buy everyone feels that the issue of "separate but equal" which stemmed out of Plessy v. Ferguson more than fifty years ago, is faced with its most severe test.

As tension mounts . . . as the day of final judgment nears . . . the Courier discovered that men in high positions throughout the South recognize the forthcoming decision for what it actually is. They know its impact on their states . . . their nation . . . the world at large. And their answers, based on a growing awareness of the political strength of the Negro voters, coupled with forces which they are powerless to stem, are being reprinted in part, without comment, in order that our readers can form their own opinions.

He disclosed that more than 65 per cent of the $58,000,000 allocated to the school districts of the state since July 1, 1951 for construction purposes, has been for Negro schools. He did not disclose any information about the inequality of allocations prior to this date.

In closing . . . after admitting that his state has 7,500 Negro school teachers, and that there is no difference in pay, he closed as follows:

"The people of South Carolina are determined to see to it that ALL CHILDREN, white and Negro, city and rural, are given an opportunity to secure an education. Equal facilities are approaching reality throughout the South . . ."

FLORIDA'S GOVERNOR DAN McCARTY has taken a much more positive position. He writes as follows:

"While it would be inaccurate to say that the State of Florida has completely solved the problem of education for Negro students, it can be said very forthrightly that a great deal of progress has been made in the state in the past several years, in providing excellent educational opportunities for all children, regardless of creed or color."

He summarizes Florida's position relative to any decision by U. S. Supreme Court with these highly significant sentences:

"State officials of the State of Florida, as well as the

BYRNES STATES POSITION

For instance, Gov. James F. Byrnes of South Carolina apparently has retreated somewhat from his announced adamant earlier position. In his letter, he says:

"It (a ruling ending educational segregation) would be a problem for the General Assembly of the state to consider. After a reasonable period of time for the members of the General Assembly to consider the decision, I would call a special session of the assembly for the purpose of determining a course for the schools."

South Carolina's chief executive's comment on the proposed high court ruling follows:

"The overwhelming majority of the people believe the Supreme Court will not reverse the decisions of that court, sustaining the doctrine of separate but equal facilities during the last half century.

"I am confident from recent experiences that should the court people of Florida as a whole, are solving their racial problem in a spirit of mutual cooperation and understanding.

"WE FACE FUTURE DECISIONS WITHOUT ANY APPREHENSION AS TO THEIR SUCCESSFUL SOLUTION."

MARYLAND'S OVERNOR THEODORE McKELDIN, gives a categorical list of achievements in interracial problems and relations as he tells Courier readers:

"I am confident that the State of Maryland can adapt itself without any great trouble to the requirements of any decision of the United States Supreme Court."

He then adds: "I believe this record (achievements he named) of adaptability answers most of your questions. The people of Maryland are a law-abiding people . . ."

Listed among his state's recent achievements are:

Admission of Negroes to the graduate schools of the University of Maryland.

Admission of Negro students to the advanced, so-called A-course at Baltimore Polytechnic Institute . . . a city school . . . because there was no equal facility provided for Negroes.

Admission of Negroes to city golf courses, formerly reserved for whites.

Sharing of City Library facilities by both Negroes and whites.

Repeal of old, hangover segregation law on steam railroads and ferry boats.

Appointment of Negro to State Board of Education.

Appointment of Negro police magistrates, parole officers and an assistant attorney general.

WEST VIRGINIA'S GOVERNOR WILLIAM C. MARLAND wrote: "I am pleased to advise that West Virginia is not faced with a problem concerning segregation. Therefore, it is my opinion that any decision rendered by the Supreme Court relative to racial segregation in public schools, will not create a problem in our state . . ."

MISSOURI'S LETTER, addressed to Gov. Phil M. Donnelly, was answered by Attorney General John M. Dalton. He wrote:

"Many thanks for your letter . . . and in reply will state that we do not anticipate any trouble in Missouri, in case the decision you speak of outlaws educational segregation. We have had fine cooperation in the enforcement of any of the laws.

"You may be assured of the cooperation of this office."

TENNESSEE'S GOVERNOR FRANK G. CLEMENT'S frank comment recognized the necessity for change, and agreed with the Courier letter which expressed the thought that "this is the time for sane, sound, constructive thinking and action. He stated, among other things:

"Although I would not attempt to predict the nature and extent of the adjustments in our education program which a Supreme Court ruling abolishing segregation in our public schools would necessitate, I do not hesitate to predict that whatever the court's decision may be, Tennessee will continue in its efforts to make the best educational opportunities available to all of its children, regardless of race, color or creed."

NORTH CAROLINA'S GOVERNOR WILLIAM B. UMSTEAD refused comment with this brief statement:

"The General Assembly of North Carolina adjourned on the 30th day of last April. No action was taken in connection with this matter. No action has been taken by me as Governor of the state. I shall wait until the decision is rendered."

KENTUCKY'S LAWRENCE W. WETHERBY labelled the land of the blue-grass as "this so-called Southern state."

His letter, which was a masterpiece of acumen, subtle humor and intense penetration into the "whys and wherefores," ended up on this amazing note:

"In conclusion, if the Supreme Court abolishes separate systems, you may rest assured that Kentucky will meet the situation forthrightly and quickly take the steps necessary to comply with this triumph for your people."

He was a bit concerned about the letter, which as he said, raised "Some deep questions which I hesitate at this time to answer with positiveness, a position I do not enjoy."

He also felt that the Courier might take the information it asked for to use to the advantage of the nation's Negro populace. He covered this points as follows:

"I am a bit wary of your aims in seeking the publishable opinions of Southern Governors in meeting a non-segregation ruling by the Supreme Court of the United States. It may be that you are seeking favorable thoughts from the South so as to influence the Supreme Court toward rendering the decision you desire. If officialdom in the South indicates a strong willingness to comply with a non-segregation decision, and the court becomes aware of this, the high bench may be innocently persuaded to outlaw dual school systems."

Mrs. Hobby's Record!

Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby's record has been exceptionally good as far as the Negro is concerned. As ranking officer of the Women's Army Corps during World War II, her treatment of the Negro Wac was exceptional. Her office was the first and only department under the present administration to appoint a Negro, Mrs. Jane Spaulding, to a top position. During the Eisenhower campaign, her approach and general knowledge of the Negro question were praised highly by reporters.

The Courier hastens to assure Governor Wetherby that its interest in getting answers was in no way tinged with a desire to influence the Supreme Court. It is our belief that the decision will be handed down on the facts as presented before this august body. We want to thank him for the influence he thinks we might be able to wield, but we feel that the "Gentleman from Kentucky" is in error. Our sincere apologies.

GEORGIA'S HERMAN TALMADGE was out of Atlanta on a commencement speaking tour, but his aide, Walters O. Brooks wired:

"It has never been the Governor's policy to comment on litigation while it is pending before the courts. His attitude in regard to separate schools and colleges is well known to all. Governor Talmadge will have a statement which will be released shortly after the court's decision.

". . . Also, I am sure that the Governor will be glad to answer any questions regarding the decision which you might have to make of him after the court has ruled."

LOUISIAN'S ROBERT F. KENNON made a public statement some time ago, in which he was quoted as follows:

"Any decision by the United States Supreme Court on racial segregation in the public schools will not pose a critical problem for the State of Louisiana.

"The educational system in Louisiana," he told a news conference, "has recognized the need for additional educational opportunities for Negroes."

MISSISSIPPI'S GOVERNOR HUGH WHITE has admitted he is convinced that a U. S. Supreme Court ruling against segregated schools would create a serious problem for which he has no remedy. Said he:

". . . If the decision is against segregation, I don't believe persuasion would have any effect. I've said before that an adverse decision would create a serious problem in Mississippi for which I have no remedy. It will take a smarter man than I to find the solution."

He admitted however, that he intends to discuss the problem with the Mississippi Education Association, Negro leaders and other interested groups.

IN CASE, HOWEVER, the Supreme Court rules favorably for Negro students, the problem extends far beyond the deep South and the border states.

Many of the Northern states, with their hypocritical air of importance are equally guilty of educational segregation. In fact, many people are of the opinion that the South, which has been forthright in its position, has been far more honorable than states such as Illinois, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and several others where educational segregation still rears its ugly head.

Certainly, a favorable decision by the U. S. Supreme Court must touch these areas as well, and in the interest of honest journalistic reporting, it is well that the North's sins of omission and commission be given an airing.

We know that in the capital of Pennsylvania . . . Harrisburg . . . a nasty situation in segregated schools is just being ironed out! And it is being done without wholehearted assistance from state government heads.

THE SAME HOLDS true in Southern Illinois . . . where segregation exists on many levels. Neither Republican nor Democratic governors took too much notice of this fact until a Negro legislator made an issue out of it.

Indiana is equally as guilty. One of the things which led to action (taken last year) in abolishing educational segregation, we are told, was the fact that a Negro high school basketball team continually won the state championship.

Negro educators and teachers can take heart from the statements of some of the men quoted above. We look for no dislocation of the teacher pattern. In the first place, Negro teachers are better prepared in numerous spots than are the whites. In the second place, residential segregation will continue the present practice . . . in principle . . . for some years to come.

TROUBLE SPOTS WILL likely be limited to rural areas . . .

Governor of South Carolina
Governor's Mansion
Columbia, South Carolina

Dear Sir:

The Pittsburgh Courier Publishing Company, largest Negro-owned publication of its kind in the country, is taking this opportunity to solicit your help and assistance in a matter which we feel is of major importance to your state and the nation.

All of us are aware of the impending decision before the United States Supreme Court which will touch on the vital question of educational segregation.

While we have no way of knowing . . . nor anticipating . . . what the final decision of this august body will be, we are sure that your administration has been concerned about the decision and that you and your official family have had the problem under discussion.

ENCLOSED IN this letter are statements which our reporters have been successful in obtaining from the Governor of Mississippi and the Governor of Louisiana.

We also realize that if our highest court outlaws educational segregation, there must be enabling legislation to implement this decision. We are aware that the fine educational plants which have been built in many Southern states are not monuments to the past. The millions of dollars that these schools represent in taxpayers' money will no be thrown away.

What plans, may we ask, have been made . . . to comply with an affirmative decision, when and if it comes?

What effort has been made to condition the minds of the people, both white and Negro, in your state?

What will be the status of the Negro teacher on the elementary and secondary school level? What will be the status of the Negro teacher on the college level?

Please realize that we are interested in your answers for its informative value to our readers. Ours is certainly no attempt to stir up emotions, but to face the fact that the transition will be difficult enough under any circumstances.

We feel that this is a time for sane, sound, constructive thinking and action. We are ready to help in this effort, and we trust your reactions in answering the letter will make it possible for us to give our readers the result of your considered thinking. It is in the interest of real democracy and a better America that we seek your help.

Trusting that you will find it possible to answer at your earliest convenience, we are,

Sincerely

Dear Sir:

Thank you very much for your letter inquiring about certain matters related to educational segregation and the decision touching on this question now being considered by the U. S. Supreme Court.

While it would be inaccurate to say that the State of Florida has completely solved the problem of education for Negro students, it can be said very forthrightly that a great deal of progress has been made in the state in the past several years in providing excellent educational opportunities for all children regardless of race, creed or color.

In support of this assertion I point out that the State of Florida was a leader in the establishment of the Minimum Foundation Program for the support of public schools. Under this program adequate appropriations have been guaranteed for teachers' salaries, capital outlay, transportation and instructional supplies. Teachers' salaries are based upon educational qualifications and experience, and no differential exists between white and Negro teachers. As a result there is no shortage in Florida of trained Negro school teachers. Moreover, the capital outlay program throughout the state is progressing very rapidly in the construction of new and completely adequate school buildings for Negro children. As a specific example, I should like to point out my own home county (St. Lucie) in which Negro school facilities are superior to those presently occupied by the white children.

It may be of interest, also, to note that in accordance with my recommendation to the 1953 Legislature, Florida A. & M. College has assumed full university status, and that appropriations requested by President Gore have been acted upon favorably by the State Budget Commission and the Legislature.

State officials of the State of Florida, as well as the people of Florida as a whole, are solving their racial problem in a spirit of mutual cooperation and understanding. We face future decisions without any apprehension as to their successful solution

I appreciate this opportunity to give my comments on this matter.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Nunn:

You raise some deep questions in your letter of May 23, questions which I hesitate at this time to answer with positiveness, a position I do not enjoy.

Recently, the Attorney General of Kentucky answered a similar query for you in which he reported the many things that have been done by this State in behalf of Negro education. This so-called Southern State is proud of its accomplishments in this field to date. The Negro student has not been treated shabbily under our traditions and customs.

I am a bit wary of your aims in seeking the publishable opinions of Southern Governors in meeting a non-segregation ruling by the Supreme Court of the United States. The Constitution of Kentucky requires a separate system of schools for colored and white students, although our Legislature has been taking pro-Negro, successful thrusts at this section in the past decade.

We are enclosing an article taken from The Courier-Journal of Louisville which appraises the good fortune dealt to Negro children in this Commonwealth. It was written by Allan M. Trout, a veteran capital correspondent for this newspaper and a most-trusted reporter on educational affairs. I hope this piece brings you a measure of cheer.

Dear Mr. Nunn:

I am confident that the State of Maryland can adapt itself without any great trouble to the requirements of any decision of the United States Supreme Court.

Without a noticeable ripple of protest, since I have been in office, Negroes have been admitted to the graduate schools of the University of Maryland. I successfully intervened to have Negro students admitted to the advanced, so-called A-course at Baltimore Polytechnic Institute--a city school--because there was no equal facility provided for Negroes. Negroes have been admitted to the City golf courses formerly reserved for white golfers. Negroes share the city library facilities with white patrons. The old, hangover segregation law on steam railroads and ferry boats has been repealed as part of my legislative program.

When I was Mayor of Baltimore, I appointed the first Negro to the Board of School Commissioners, and my successor has continued a Negro on the board. Since I have been Governor, I have appointed a Negro to the State Board of Education.

We have Negro police magistrates, parole officers, and members of various boards, as well as an Assistant Attorney General.

I believe this record of adaptability answers most of your questions. The people of Maryland are law-abiding people. We have a very effective and active commission which I appointed on Inter-racial Problems and Relations.

As to the status of Negro teachers, I am glad to advise you that there is no salary differentiation now between the races.

Negroes Attend Inferior Schools

By JOHN A. DIAZ

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—Equal education for Negroes is a volcano on which the South has slept for half a century. The volcano is about to erupt.

It has been estimated that the total difference between educational facilities for whites and Negroes in seventeen Southern and border states today—from kindergarten through college—is one billion dollars. The Southern Regional Council, which has studied the question for years, has said that the figure is probably higher.

But back in Reconstruction Days Southern states themselves enacted laws demanding equality for Negroes and whites in education. However, statistics, facts and figures show that little has been done about it.

In recent years some states, notably Florida, have started big programs to meet the demands of the U. S. Supreme Court, but there is still a long way to go for the South as a whole.

How does Florida stand on equal educational facilities for whites and Negroes?

Article XII, Section 12, of the Constitution of Florida says:

"White and colored children shall not be taught in the same school, but impartial provision shall be made for both."

The Florida Citizens Committee on Education, a group which spent about two years studying education in Florida, reported in 1947 that about 30 per cent of the white and 60 per cent of the colored students and teachers in Florida were working in unsatisfactory school buildings.

THEREFORE, the Negro schools six years ago were twice as unsatisfactory as were the white schools, and since that report was made the Negro schols have not received the equal of the white schools despite the new school buildings and the reconversions of others in a few of the sixty-seven counties of Florida. That's far from "impartial provision" and definitely further from the "separate but eqaul" doctrine.

A survey made by this writer shows that in Florida inequality in educational facilities reaches about 80 per cent of the counties. Such inequalities are in expense per student, textbooks, buildings and bus transportation. In teacher salaries the inequalities are in about 70 per cent of the counties.

Florida high officials, the Board of Control and members of the Legislature are pinning their hopes, apparently, on the "equal facilities" decisions of 1896 which upheld segregation, provided facilities are "substantially equal" between the races. This state is probably more in line with that requirement than any other in the South, despite the fact that in all small counties, and in some of the large ones, too, there are Negro schools that are far inferior to those for whites.

LET'S TAKE a typical Negro school found in one of the small towns: Winter Park, for instance. It's situated in Orange County, which is among the larger counties of Florida. In this county there are twelve Negro schools and thirty-seven for whites.

In 1951-52, $2,895,767.25 was spent on the white schools, and only $651,256.85 on Negro schools—over four times as much on white schools, even though there are only three times more white schools than those for Negroes.

But the picture is worse when you take the schools individually. The inequalities in the schools of Negroes and those in the public schools for whites are as follows:

The white school children of Orange County have schools of comparatively modern designs and construction, as the school grounds are landscaped and divided into playground areas which are reasonably equipped for recreational purposes. But only three Negro schools out of the twelve in the county reach near those requirements.

BUT IN the white schools, space is provided for classrooms, health clinic rooms, lunchrooms, libraries, music rooms, auditoriums and gymnasiums, and are provided with reasonably satisfactory facilities in the matter of decoration, heating, lighting, tollets and other facilities and equipment to provide proper standards of health, comfort and welfare for the students.

On the other hand, the school provided for Negro children is one of antiquated or substandard construction and design, situated on grounds which are for the most part sandy and unlandscaped, not provided for playground purposes and poorly equipped, if at all, for recreational purposes.

The school buildings for the Negroes are inadequately constructed, and in some cases in such poor state of repair that the roof leaks. There are in this school such poor toilet facilities that the children have to wait in line, and go out in the rain to use tollets.

IN THIS SCHOOL there are no adequate lunchroom facilities, and the five dilapidated buildings are full of rats. The plaster in most of the buildings has commenced to fall, which makes it very dangerous for the students in the classrooms.

The lighting in the school is inadequate to the extent of being a menace to the eyesight of the students. Heating facilities are inadequate. The floors of most of the buildings are dark and splintered. This school provides no space for library, auditorium, music rooms, and health clinic.

How is that for impartial provision under Florida's Constitution? Where is the "separate but equal"?

FURTHER illustration of partiality is furnished in the public schools of Daytona Beach, in the county of Volusia, where there are seventeen schools for whites, and the same number of schools for Negroes.

In 1951-52, for the white schools a summary of current expenses shows an expenditure of $2,113,286.23; for the Negro schools it is only $535,403.90.

For the same period (1951-52) expenditures for support and maintenance for whites were $383,060.84; for Negroes they were $84,952.46.

In this county, in Daytona Beach. Negro citizens have been protesting to the school authorities against the double and triple school sessions that are prevalent. These children attending these sessions are deprived of adequate facilities for supervision and are denied equal educational opportunities that children of the white race attending other schools receive.

Daytona Beach Negro leaders have claimed in their protest that the atmosphere of the Negro schools does not stimulate learning. They gave the school board other reasons for their protest, which follow:

(1) The shacks, having once been condemned, will create a psychological effect on the child which will not promote good attendance.

(2) The unwholesome environment is hazardous for the average elementary school child.

(3) There are no indoor toilets.

(4) The playground space is inadequate.

(5) There is insufficient natural lighting and ventilation.

(6) The overall floor space is not large enough to accommodate the minimum teacher load.

(7) There will be an increase of disciplinary problems because of crowded classrooms.

Needless to say, no sane person will contradict these claims. That these inequalities of which Negroes are the victims constitute a glaring violation of the Fourteenth Amendment, the "separate but equal" doctrine, and the principles of human decency, no member of any school board can deny.

But these conditions are typical of Negro schools in the smaller cities and in the rural sections of Florida. They are found not only in Orange County, in the city of Winter Park; in Volusia County, in the city of Daytona Beach; in Brevard County, in the city of Melbourne; in Columbia County, in the city of Lake City, but also in several other counties in Florida.

Equal School Facilities Seen In Florida Within Five Years

Journal and Constitution

Official Says Goal Possible If Segregation Is Maintained

14d Fla.

By CHARLES HESSER
Staff Writer, Miami Daily News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., Jan. 24—School facilities in Florida for white and negro students will be comparable within five years, unless the U. S. Supreme Court knocks out racial segregation, is the belief of Thomas D. Bailey, state superintendent of public instruction.

Since 1947, when Florida enacted its Minimum Foundation School Program, rapid strides have been made in Negro education, Bailey said, but the pace will be speeded up with the advent of the state's new $100,000,000 building program, expected to get underway in March.

Sun. 1-25-53

Five Cases

Bailey said that should the court rule against segregation, "education in Florida would be set back most materially." The high court now has before it five suits involving South Carolina, Virginia, Kansas, Delaware and the District of Columbia.

Atlanta

The educator noted that "the people and the legislature have been most anxious to promote comparable facilities—not because of the threat, but because it was justified and needed. But, if the court should issue a mandate that the public school program in Florida must be operated contrary to the beliefs and philosophy of a majority of our citizens, I believe that resentment on the part of our citizenry would jeapordize the progress of education."

Bailey acknowledged there has been little advance planning on what steps to take in the event of an adverse decision by the court, "but the problem would not be as serious in Florida as in some other Southern states."

He explained that "Florida, being comparatively a young state, most of our Negroes live in areas, more or less, to themselves. Many counties would simply set up attendance areas. That is, the counties would determine which school a student would attend by where he lived."

Bailey added that this practice is already being followed in a number of counties for white students.

Georgia and South Carolina legislatures have enacted laws to do away with public schools in case of a segregation ban and Alabama solons are contemplating similar action.

Drastic Move

There is an indication that the Florida legislature, which begins a 60-day session in April, might make almost as drastic a move should the court rule out segregation.

During the administration of former Gov. Fuller Warren, the legislature whote into an appropriation bill for institutions of higher learning a provision that if segregation was abolished, no state funds could be used. Warren vetoed this provision of the bill.

"Before 1947," Bailey recalled, "great inequalities existed in public school education in Florida among the 67 counties with respect to educational advantages of both races. These inequalities were more accentuated for the Negro race than for the white, largely because Negro education left the starting post with a greater handicap of distance and of weight to carry on the course."

But, since that time, figures supplied by Bailey show that Negro education has been narrowing the gap with the rapidity of a crack sprinter.

Construction Bonds

During these years, current daily expense outlay for students has increased 96 per cent for Negroes and 44 for whites; capital outlay, buildings and equipment, has increased 1,891 per cent for Negroes, 623 for whites; enrollment, 16 per cent for Negroes, 25 for whites; average teacher's salary, Negroes 86 per cent, whites, 50.

For the current school year, Bailey estimates there are 451,000 white students being taught by 15,420 teachers. This compares to 136,000 Negroes with their 4,850 instructors.

In last November's general election, the voters of Florida approved a constitutional amendment which pledges the first portion of auto license tag money to underwrite $100,000,000 in school construction bonds. Because of this "guarantee" it is anticipated that the bonds will command a low interest rate.

14d(1)

As the big construction program gets underway, Bailey envisions wholesale consolidation of substandard, Negro one, two and three-room schools.

"Not only will this reduce the cost of operation, but it will enable us to give the Negroes a much broader educational program," Bailey said, "with emphasis on vocational courses, which, really, are more important to the Negroes than to the whites."

It is planned to spend the $100,000,000 for construction over a two-year period. Bailey sees no discrimination, one way or the other. "There will be sufficient money for both white and Negro schools," he declared.

Bailey put it thusly:

"When a survey team goes into a county to determine its school construction needs, it will consider all facts and will make recommendations on a priority basis—what the greatest needs are, regardless of race."

'Impartial Facilities'

In summing up the question of segregation, Bailey said "we believe that the great majority of Negroes in Florida do not desire nonsegregation and will continue to have faith in the leadership which is providing impartial facilities for both races as rapidly as possible in a comparatively young state whose chief problem has been an adequate system of revenue for all purposes. We do not believe that the solution will come by edict from any source but by working together toward the accomplishment of an objective which we have mutually and freely pledged ourselves."

Dunbar Elementary School, already one of the best schools in the county, will receive $140,000.

U.S. Segregation Ruling Is Awaited Calmly

By JACK E. ANDERSON
Herald Staff Writer

The soon expected United States Supreme court decision which may order an end to segregation in the nation's schools, appears to be a bridge Florida school officials prefer to cross when they come to it.

There was a notable lack of anxiety or worry among officials contacted Saturday by The Herald in a poll of official opinion on the probable effect of such a high court ban on segregation.

And nary a rumor was in the air of any plan to start a stampede of state legislators to Tallahassee for a special session to deal with such an eventuality.

No emulation of Georgia's plan to deliver its public school system into private hands is in the offing.

State School Superintendent Thomas D. Bailey sounded the keynote with the statement that "we've done no thinking or planning about it."

"Everybody I've talked with, not only in Florida but in other southern states," said Bailey, "is of the opinion that if the court rules against segregation, it won't be effective immediately.

"I think enough time is going to be allowed to work out the problem and avoid confusion and shock. We've enjoyed excellent relations between White and Negro citizens in Florida and I see no reason why this problem should do anything to disturb those relations.

"I haven't had the first instance of any of our Negro people demanding anything in expectancy of a favorable court decision and I doubt if I'll have any.

"If we must end segregation then we'll go about it with common sense and careful deliberation."

In Pensacola, G. F. Wiggins, president of the Florida Teachers Association, the State's organization of Negro teachers, had much the same statement to make.

Wiggins is principal of Pensacola's Washington Junior College and although born in Florida was largely educated in non-segregated northern schools and colleges.

The possibility of an end to segregation will be discussed, he said, at a meeting later this month of the FTA's board of directors, either at Jacksonville or Daytona Beach.

"The court's decision will throw a tremendous responsibility on us," said Wiggins, "and we intend to meet the challenge calmly and like good citizens.

"There is no question in my mind but that Florida will make the transition easier and more sensibly than any other southern state. It simply calls for mutual cooperation and understanding."

Dade County's school superintendent, W. R. Thomas, said he believes the end of segregation will be accomplished gradually and without trouble.

"I don't think it's going to be too big a problem," he said, "if the court will allow us to work it out over a period of years and not expect an overnight change."

Thomas pointed out that with the completion of the current school building program which provides another new Negro elementary school and a Negro vocational school there will be no more substanded Negro schools here.

Louis S. Sheffield, chairman of the Duval county school board, reported his county also has brought its Negro schools up to standard and the high court's decision is not worrying Jacksonville.

"I think we've done a good job here of providing equal facilities for Negroes," Sheffield said, "and if the court ends segregation, then we'll map our course accordingly. But we're certainly not worried about it."

Orange county is awaiting the court's decision too without rising blood pressure. School Superintendent Judson B. Walker said in Orlando that nobody is perturbed

Negro Schools Shame State!

MIAMI—In comparing another phase of expense for education in Florida, that is, the expenditures for support and maintenance of buildings already in existence, and the expenditures for new buildings, new equipment, sites and ground improvements and school buses, you get another picture of inequalities between Negro and white expenditures that are out of proportion to the population of the two races.

The inequalities in some counties are appaling. For instances, in that 1951-'52 period when more money was spent in Florida education than in any other period up to that time, the counties of Bradford, Calhoun, Gilchrist, Hardee, Holmes and Lafayette spent 0 cent in this phase of Negro education. But these six counties spent respectively, for white education of that nature: $103,849.72, $31,417.16, $29,234.40, $60,842.68, $102,049.78 and $22,492.72. In these counties there are thirty-three white schools, and fourteen Negro schools.

In seven other counties, Baker, Citrus, Clay, Dixie, Flag-are: Alachua, Broward, Escambia, Gadsden, Jackson, Lake, Leon, Palm Beach, St. John, Volusia and Wakulla.

The University of Florida and Florida State University continue to bar Negroes. The cases of five Negroes who have applied for admission and been refused, are pending before the United States Supreme Court. They had applied for admission to study law, advanced engineering, graduate agriculture and pharmacy.

State school officials have attempted to furnish them with these courses in schools of law, pharmacy, agriculture and engineering which they have created at Florida Agriculture and Mechanical College and made this Negro college a university.

The powers-that-be at the state capital seem to feel that the newly created Florida A. and M. University will answer any requirement for equal educational facilities that the nation's highest tribunal might order.

To bring Negro schools of Florida within striking distance of the white schools, many millions of dollars have been spent in recent years, and are still being spent today as the handwriting is seen on the walls by Florida politicians. However, even the most sanguine will admit that the two systems are far from equal at this moment.

What the Florida Legislature and the school authorities seem to forget, or do not want Negroes to remember, is what the Constitution of the United States says about equal protection under the law, and what the Constitution of Florida says about "impartial provision" for both white and Negro children in schools.

Legislature Is Divided On School Race Problems

Stand-By Legislation Is Advocated By Some But Others Maintain Wait And See Attitude

By REX THOMAS
Associated Press Writer

The Supreme Court's failure to rule on school segregation has left the Alabama legislature divided over the best course to follow until the decision does come.

Some House and Senate members advocate passage of stand-by legislation now while the lawmaking body is in session. Others prefer to wait and see what the outcome is, returning in a special session if necessary.

The problem is a matter of timing.

Barring a long recess, which seems unlikely, the legislature will wind up the present session in August or September, weeks before any ruling can be expected from the Supreme Court. Additional arguments ordered by the court won't be heard until October.

Thus the decision is almost certain to come after the 1953 legislative session ends and months before the next regular term in 1955.

Rep. Sam Engelhardt of Macon County is one House member who wants to go ahead with a stand-by law. He served notice he will try to push through his "Free Private" school program which turns the schools over to private corporations made up of parents.

The schools would be operated on funds "donated" by the state, and each corporation would have authority to say who can attend its school. Thus patrons of white schools would restrict them to white students.

Engelhardt's plan would become effective if and when the Supreme Court knocks out classroom segregation.

Reluctant Legislators

Other legislators are reluctant to pass any remedial measure until they find out what the verdict is on segregation. They prefer a wait-and-see policy and a special session later on if the court's decision calls for immediate action then.

Lt. Gov. James B. Allen, who presides over the Senate, is committed to that policy, and he says most of the other members feel the same way. There's just too much guesswork in trying to legislate on the theory that the court may do one thing or another, Allen pointed out.

The lieutenant governor isn't sold either, on Wilcox County Sen. J. M. Bonner's suggestion for a long recess.

Bonner offered a resolution Friday to quit work after the 21st legislative day (probably July 14) and return in October, a layoff of three weeks.

The idea is to hold back 15 legislative days to keep the legislature ready to act when the segregation question is decided. If Oct. 27 is too soon to return, the Black Belt senator says he will agree to a later date.

Lukewarm Sentiment

Sentiment in the Senate appeared lukewarm toward the idea, however. Most members said they would rather get through with their work this summer and meet the segregation problem when it comes.

Bonner said that he will try to put a cutoff provision in the school appropriation bill to stop the appropriation of state funds any time the racial bars were hauled down.

He said he will offer two alternate proposals:

1. Limit grade school and high school appropriations to six months instead of the full two years when the biennial budget is adopted.

2. Go ahead with a regular two-year appropriation with a provision that state funds will cease automatically 30 days after the Supreme Court hands down any decision outlawing separate classrooms.

Bonner, perhaps the most outspoken white supremacy advocate in the legislature, said he has scant hope that the traditional dual school system in the South will be allowed to continue.

And, he said, "assuming, as I do, that the Supreme Court will strike down segregation in our schools, then it will become evident that the legislature must do something to prevent an impossible state of affairs."

White Baptist Leader Says:

Public Schools Will Be Abolished If Racial Segregation Is Banned

Florida will abolish its public school system in favor of church and other private schools if the United State Supreme court bans segregation, one of the states's religious leaders predicted in Miami Tuesday.

The court is expected to rule momentarily on a suit brought by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People attacking the "separate but equal" school setup in South Carolina.

Dr. John Maguire, executive secretary of the Florida Baptist Convention, said Southern religious leaders are expecting an anti-segregation ruling and that a movement to establish segregated church schools in Florida will result immediately.

Florida's legislature will follow the Carolinas and Georgia in doing away with its public school system, he believes.

The air base schools are an integral part of the county school systems and receive state funds for operations and paying teachers through the Minimum Foundation Program.

"The Florida Constitution would not permit the use of state or county funds for the support of non-racial schools," Ervin said.

State funds denied mixed base schools

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — State Attorney General Richard Ervin declared recently that non-segregated schools at air bases could not be given state support.

Any move by the Department of Defense to end racial segregation in schools on air bases in Florida would mean immediate withdrawal of state funds from their support, he said.

The Defense Department has announced the fall of 1955 as the "target" for establishing non-racial schools at military bases throughout the country.

GENERAL

Negro Teachers And Desegregation

The spring edition of the Journal of Negro Education has come forth with a very interesting editorial on the subject of the "Negro Teacher and Desegregation of the Public Schools." The subject is a current and highly controversial one here in Missouri as a result of several bills introduced in the State Legislature.

There are a number of Negro teachers who fear that desegregation of public schools will mean certain dismissal for them and they are strongly opposed to any change in the present setup. The editorial in the Journal tends to show their fears groundless using what has happened in five other States as example.

The States mentioned are Indiana, Arizona, New Mexico, New Jersey and Southern Illinois. The article goes on to point out that all of these are northern or border States and have fairly decent tenure laws. Both of these conditions are true at least in St. Louis.

In each of the above States, according to the editorial, "the experience has been very little, if any, adverse effect upon the status of Negro teachers . . ." In some cases, there are towns with Negro teachers where none had been hired before.

The picture would probably not be the same in the South where tenure laws are not up to par. Thus, the fears of some southern teachers, should desegregation take place have some basis.

As we have previously stated, we take the position that desegregation should not be jeopardized by the fear that Negro teachers would be jobless notwithstanding we favor desegregated faculties. In consideration of our tenure laws which in St. Louis are believed by some to compare favorably with those of other northern and border States, it would appear this problem is solved before it arises.

Whatever prevails, we view dimly any organized teacher resistance to desegregation as has been reported. It would appear uncalled for and entirely in poor judgment.

Report Shows:

Teachers Not Affected In Desegregation

". . . There has been very little, if any, adverse effect upon the status of Negro teachers" resulting from desegregation of public schools, according to the spring edition of the Journal of Negro Education.

In editorial comment on the Negro teacher and desegregation in the public schools volume XXII of the Journal takes a critical look at a subject much discussed in recent weeks.

The Journal editorial refers to studies made by three persons in as many states where desegregation has taken place. It concludes that in border and northern states, Negro teachers have not been turned away from their jobs and in some cases, they have been employed in towns that previously did not hire them.

The states mentioned in the editorial are Indiana, Southern Illinois, Arizona, New Mexico and New Jersey.

The fact that Negro teachers have not been ill-affected is credited to strong tenure laws and the northern or border location of cities concerned.

"A special study of the Indianapolis situation by Jeanne Rogers," the editorial reports, "revealed that while there had been little integration of tachers, no casualties had resulted among Negro teachers or principals because of racial integration. . . ."

It was further noted that a similar situation prevails in Illinois where integration has taken plaee and residential segregation has resulted in predominantly Negro schools.

In Arizona where the most recent instance of desegregation has taken place, the attorney-general ruled that the tenure of Negro teachers and principals would be protected.

No teacher casualties were reported in New Jersey. However, ported a 3-year period, the number of Negro teachers increased nearly 35 per cent, and in most cases, the Negro principal was retained as principal, while faculty and students were integrated.

The Journal points out that "In the South, a little less than half of the States have any real tenure laws, and, any sort of fair educational practices act is unthinkable. Hence, the approach to a consideration of the future status of Negro public school teachers under desegregation in the South is the status of teacher supply and demand, and the operation of residential segregation which obtains in most Southern cities and towns."

Miss Williena Torrence, testifying a second time, told Judge Ralph Pharr's court that she had inherited all of her mother's possessions.

She identified a series of articles including a recording certificate for an auto from a local firm, and declared that the signature of her mother was genuine.

The state had previously charged Bailey and Mrs. Torrence had lived together and shared a portion of their wealth, including dual ownership in the 1950 green Ford. This had been denied vigorously by the defense which had maintained that the auto was owned by Bailey alone.

Miss Torrence also identified a series of bank books which she said comprised several local savings accounts jointly owned by she and her mother. Other items identified by Miss Torrence included a pair of shoes, which were discovered at the scene of the alleged crime, a belt from a coat Mrs. Torrence was reportedly wearing when she was slain and several pictures.

Whatever prevails, we view dimly any organized teacher resistance to desegregation as has been reported. It would appear uncalled for and entirely in poor judgment.

Here is the argument of Mr. Thompson on that point: "Just looking at these figures alone would suggest that it would be very difficult to replace any appreciable number of the 71,361 Negro teachers with white teachers. But we do not need to rely upon casual observation and common sense. For, recent studies of teacher supply and demand indicate conclusively in some areas that not only is it impossible to replace Negro teachers with white, but it is not possible in many instances to meet the current demand for white in the white public schools alone.")

(It has long been the view of many enlightened and clear-thinking leaders of the South that de-segregation of schools would improve the status of good Negro teachers, widen their opportunities and expand their number. We believe that there is a deliberate campaign being conducted by unseen hands to instill fear in the minds of Negro teachers. This is a device used to trick Negro teachers into holding their group back. E. O. J.)

School Cases Called Court Hot Potato

Noted Sociologist Gives Views In Talk At Howard

WASHINGTON

The school segregation cases pending before the Supreme Court Justices were called "one of the hottest potatoes that the court has ever had to handle," by Dr. Guy B. Johnson in an address at Howard University, Thursday.

Speaking to members and guests of the Association of Former Internes and Residents of Freedmen's hospital at their annual luncheon, the prominent sociologist from North Carolina University gave the effects of any decision which may be handed by the high tribunal.

Dr. Johnson asserted that no matter which decision the Court makes, whether for "separate but equal" schools, or for complete integration, it will be a victory for the minority group.

"Separate But Equal"

Explaining the "separate but equal" victory, he said: "The South would at once find itself faced with a tremendous financial burden. . . There would be the increased cost of operating and maintaining the non-white schools at the new level, probably half a billion dollars a year.

"Certain things begin to happen. For example the South suddenly gets completely converted to the idea of federal aid to education. It also begins to look at the price tag on segregation . . Here and there segregation begins to go. . . The change is not dramatic, but it is inevitable and it is progressive."

Effect Of Integration

Speaking of the effect of a court decision in favor of integration, Dr. Johnson declared that he was convinced there would be a rather general effort in the south to evade the coming of complete integration of the races in the public schools.

He added that the border states and the upper southern states would accept the new situation graceful but reluctantly.

Speaking of the threats of violence made in Georgia and South Carolina and their plans to abandon state support of public schools if the High Court approves integration, Dr. Johnson asserted:

"I think they are merely hoping there will be violence in order to get support for their plans to abandon the state support of public schools."

"Segregation is groggy and can't win. It is just a question of whether it loses the decision on points or goes down under a knock-out punch," he declared.

New Day

Optimistically, Dr. Johnson spoke of a new day dawning in the South, adding that Ralph Bunche can speak to unsegregated audiences in public auditoriums in Raleigh, Miami, and Atlanta. He also referred to the election of Rufus Clement to the Atlanta School Board.

He warned that the leadership of the colored group needs to be strengthened and expanded in order to meet with the competition from whites which will result from integration.

Four Functions

There are four functions which a leader must serve, he declared, listing the functions as follows:

"1. He must be able to interpret the needs and aspirations of our community to the white community in such a way that the majority groups sees the total situation.

"2. He must be willing to stand up for justice and equal rights for all even when this means sacrificing some of his popularity.

Relieve Tensions

"3. He should contribute his tact and good judgment in relieving the interracial tension situations that will inevitably rise now and then.

"4. He must be active in voluntary civic associations such as the PTA, civic clubs, forums and committees, which will, as time goes on take on more and more of an interracial character."

Doctor Johnson appealed to the members of both races to act in a spirit of justice and cooperation. He declared that at

...r best, we are hard to beat, and the time has come when we need "very much to be at our best."

A wise decision

The decision of the Supreme Court to postpone reargument of the five school segregation cases from October 12, until December 7 is the best thing that could have happened.

Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr., was wise in making the request and Chief Justice Vinson displayed good sense in granting it.

Thus a badly needed two-month grace period has been given both the NAACP and the government to complete the exhaustive research needed to answer the five questions posed by the court on June 8.

Only careful and studious research can supply the answer to the court's request for evidence that the congress which submitted and the state legislatures and conventions which ratified the 14th amendment contemplated or understood that it would abolish segregation in public schools.

A second question is whether it is within the judicial power to interpret the amendment as abolishing segregation "of its own force" or whether the court in construing the amendment, has the power to abolish segregation in the schools.

The other three questions deal with the kind of decree the court should issue if it should hold that segregation in public violates the 14th amendment.

"These questions" Mr. Brownell said in seeking the delay, "require intensive study of a large range of legal and historical materials."

The truth of that statement can be attested to by Thurgood Marshall, chief NAACP counsel.

He has found it necessary to seek the services of ten scholars, experts in history law and education, to help determine the status of schools in the various states during the Reconstruction period.

Also to be determined are the history and politics of the 14th amendment and the Civil Rights Acts in an effort to learn what the framers of this legislation sought to accomplish.

Futher research and study are required to determine whether it was the understanding the 14th amendment was to give full political and civil equality to the newly freed citizens.

In addition, Mr. Marshall must be prepared to present a plan under which public schools can be integrated with emphasis on the ease with which integration has been accomplished in those states where segregation has been ended.

It's a tremendous and expensive task.—so expensive in fact that almost $50,000 MUST be raised at once to finance the project.

If the cost were $100,000, it would still be a cheap price to pay for victory. Of even greater importance, the end of Millions of children, because of color, separate schools could well knock the very could no longer be consigned to schools in props from under the entire evil structure ferior in both curriculum and physical of segregation in American life. plants.

Decade of struggle is climaxed by school cases, Marshall Says

Dean tells race relations institute not to fear end of separate ols

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — The cases now pending before the U.S. Supreme Court which seek to determine the constitutionality of segregation in the public schools represent the climax of a decade of legal strategy, Thurgood Marshall, special counsel for NAACP declared in an address before the annual Institute of Race Relations at Fisk University.

Mr. Marshall was among 30 consultants giving leadership to the Institute, which recently concluded its 10th year under auspices of the American Missionary Association of the Congregational Christian Churches.

Earlier in the proceedings the Institute heard presentations by Drs. G. W. Allport, chairman of the department of psychology and Clyde Kluchohn, professor of anthropology, both members of the faculty of Harvard university.

The human relations workshop has been the focal point for more than 100 community leaders throughout the nation who have been convening during the two-week period to consider strategy to be followed in achieving "Next Steps In Integration."

Provides A Base

The conclusion of the move to expand opportunities in the areas of education, housing, and voting will not come until community awareness and action supplement favorable court decisions, Marshall said. Legal edict provides a positive base upon which direct action may be taken in the community, he declared.

Fear that colored teachers may experience widespread dislocation from their positions in the event U.S. Supreme Court decisions should declare segregation unconstitutional was held groundless by Dr. Charles H. Thompson, dean of the graduate school of Howard University.

"During the past three or four years desegregation has been attained in Southern Illinois, Indiana, Arizona, New Mexico, and New Jersey. Taken as a whole, the experience has been that there has been very little, if any, adverse effect upon the status of colored teachers," Dr. Thompson declared.

Pervasive changes within the South during the past decade are reshaping the nature of intergroup relations, Dr. George S. Mitchell, director of the Southern Regional Council stated. Among the factors particularly significant in the development has been that of the broadened base of political participation, in which the number of registered colored voters in the South has increased 440 per cent.

Remarkable Success

In light of this the new colored electorate is having remarkable success in putting candidates into city councils, as well as turning the tide away from the old demagogic appeal to race prejudice in election issues, Dr. Mitchell stated.

Although FEPC is now nonexistent on the federal level, it has been initiated in 11 states and 28 municipalities covering some 60 million people, Dr. John Davis, professor of political science at Lincoln University, Pa. declared.

Experience has shown, Dr. Davis said, that the time has passed when employers conceive fair employment legislation as being an unwarranted interference by government. State FEPC commissions have investigated more than 5,000 alleged cases of discrimination, yet, due to a high degree of public acceptance and conciliatory efforts, only five public hearings against employers have been held to force compliance, Dr. Davis assested.

Successful experience with fair employment programs has convinced many industrial leaders that FEPC has resulted in more flexible labor force has led to healthier ec conditions. A review c ence with fair employment legislation during the past ten years has shown it to have been an era of unrealized fears, Dr. Davis said.

Alabama Couple Proposes School Integration Plan

Editor's Note: The following article on integration in public schools, was written by Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Quarles, a young couple, for publication in the letters to the editor section of the Chicago Defender. However, because of the caliber of their letter, the editor felt the article should be presented in a more conspicious place and in its entirety.

Quarles was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., and reared in Winston Salem, N. C. Mrs. Quarles, a school teacher, was born and reared in the little town of Sylacauga, Ala. Both are graduates of Talladega college. He has served in the U. S. Air Force since his graduation in 1950.

By MR. AND MRS. T. J. QUARLES

We are acutely interested in this whole problem of integration in public schools.

By the whole problem we refer not only to the physical herding of white and black together in the same schools, but also to the psychological ramifications that are bound to be produced by the tremendous re-direction of energies, patterns of life, concepts of life, and philosophies of life.

Physical herding can at worse lead to feelings similar to those felt by the South prior to and during the Civil War. At best, physical herding can lead to a mere toleration of one race for the other.

Is this what we want? No.

We want complete integration, something above and beyond tolerance, something that will not breed complexes in the deep recesses of the brain, something that will achieve the dignity and worth of each individual.

Forcing the races together will not achieve this. How, then, can this transition be accomplished with minimum friction, with greatest efficiency, and maximum respect to all individuals?

Our thinking has been focused by an analytical approach to the problem as we see it. With the above premises in mind, it occurred to us that an abrupt dissolution of the present segregated public school system in the South (presumably only in the South) under duress from the Federal Government could lead to chaotic conditions similar to those following the Emancipation Proclamation. In view of this, we offer the following proposition:

URGE PRIMARY INTEGRATION

If integration were begun in the first grade or the primary grades, we feel that many of the psychological adjustments can be more harmoniously attained.

What are these psychological adjustments We answer:

1. Children 6 to 8 years old are highly adaptable and largely unprejudiced.

2. The elementary and high school students who have already become adapted to the dual system would be only slightly and indirectly affected.

3. We feel that few teachers would express animosity toward such young children and, too, the teachers' jobs should be jeopardized only by their own choice or by inadequate preparation.

4. We consider the parents to be the biggest problem. However, mature citizens should be amenable and their adjustment should be eased by the gradual transition inherent in our plan.

The foregoing are primary effects which we wish to induce by this proposed method of integrating public school systems. However, there are secondary and tangible factors or values inherent in this plan. Of great importance is the characteristic of gradual transition.

If integration were begun in the first three grades, in five years our elementary schools would have been completely integrated and our high schools would have been prepared for integration. This would allow time for an efficient alteration of administrative procedures and facilities by the school boards.

It would provide a period of trial for teachers undecided as to their desire to continue teaching in the integrated system and it would allow time to weed out those inadequately prepared to teach in an integrated system. This method prevent the problem presented by students of differing previous training suddenly forced into a new standard of achievement.

Thus evaluated, we feel that this plan offers a solution to the real problems of integrating our public school systems.

Dixie Fearing School Suits Rushes Equalization Program

Richmond, Va. (ANP).—The public school segregation cases pending before the U. S. Supreme court and the widespread battle of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People against segregated schools is speeding the program of various localities for school equalization.

Gov. Hugh White has called a special session of the Mississippi Legislature for Nov. 3 to lay plans for the equalization of Negro and white schools. He even announced that nothing short of his death would stop it.

White's anxiety for the special session of the Mississippi Legislature is due to his deep seated desire to find a way to keep segregated schools in his state. In announcing the special session, Governor White told newsmen:

"This is it, gentlemen, nothing but my death will keep the session from being called." Mississippi is hoping by rushing its school equalization program, it can prevent the court from forcing the state to operate non-segregated schools.

Meanwhile, the program for equal school facilities for both races is being pushed in other states. Virginia is a good example of the progress being made toward equalization. A new Susie G. Gibson high school is nearing completion in Bedford County, Va., to bring the county's high school facilities up to par with those for the whites.

In Louisiana the evidence is equally apparent. Announcement of new schools in rural areas are being announced almost weekly. Typical of this is the recent announcement of almost $2,000,000 of school construction being scheduled in Scotlandville, Phoenix and Plaquemines parish school boards.

A Negro grade and high school estimated at $650,000, will be built at each of the three sites, according to William R. Burk, associated architects and engineers. The schools will be similar in construction.

Each program will provide 20 academic classrooms, two libraries—one for high school and one for grade school, home economics department, science laboratory, agriculture shop and administrative suite.

Segregation Ruling Will Affect More Than Schools

THE grief that an unfavorable Supreme Court decision on segregation this year may cause Alabama is probably not well understood yet. The time is at hand to brace for a reverberating blow.

The truth is, we Alabamians have become dulled to these civil rights crises because there have been so many since 1948, commencing wih the Truman civil rights explosion.

After all this time, the tide in Congress is now running with the South.

But the struggle in the courts is not abated. The cases pending before the court now test the power of a state to maintain segregated schools if they are "equal". If the court rules that segregation violates the Constitution despite the equality of the separate schools for white and colored, that is going to cause the Lord knows what.

But such a decision would presumably affect more than Alabama's schools. Presumably it would likewise affect other public facilities such as swimming pools, tennis courts, golf courses, auditoriums, public toilets, community houses and athletic stadiums.

City officials in Alabama are quite concerned. If there must be overnight equalizing of these facilities under the terms of the court's ruling, a tremendous and probably impossible expenditure of public funds will be called for. If segregation is destroyed by the court's ruling, the difficulties to be encountered in Alabama facilities are too obvious to require review.

The cities are already the low man on the totem poll insofar as revenues are concerned since the federal government and the state have preempted so many tax sources. An abrupt demand for equalization of these facilities means a discussion of new tax revenues for Alabama cities.

The truth is, of course, that we have been inexcusably laggard in providing colored citizens with equal public facilities. This is their unchallengeable due.

But even when this is conceded, the question of where the money is to come from is not answered.

The day of reckoning is evidently approaching with long swift strides. The court postponed its ruling until December, but its decision will not be long in coming.

Its nature and its mode of application cannot be foretold. But we do know that the ruling, however it goes, involves very heavy expenditures for equalization (such as we now witness in South Carolina) and the tranquility of race relations.

School Segregation Is Top Issue Facing New Chief Justice

BY CHARLES LUCEY
Scripps-Howard Staff Writer

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30—No American school kid will have more homework to tote home at night than California's Gov. Earl Warren after he takes over as chief justice of the United States.

Governor Warren knows the law and is long experienced in trial work, but he will have an immense task in familiarizing himself with important issues to be before the Supreme Court.

The new chief justice is expected to participate in at least one history-making case in the court's upcoming session—that involving race segregation in public schools.

It is an issue of grave political, economic and social implications and has stirred deep feeling in the South. More than a dozen states will be affected. Some of the nation's most renowned legal counsel is engaged in the case.

On this score, the record seems to show that Governor Warren has been a consistent advocate of racial equality throughout his political career.

He repeatedly sponsored laws proposing a California Fair Employment Practices Commission, and later a milder race relations study commission. The State Legislature would have none of either.

Campaigning for governor in 1950, Mr. Warren said Californians "want schools that afford the opportunity of sound education for every child in our state, regardless of race, color or creed and regardless of the economic status or residence of his parents."

He said that had been his guide as governor and observed that one-third of the state budget that year went for education.

In 1948, as a vice presidential aspirant, he said:

"I would insist every American child regardless of creed, race or residence be given the basic education which will enable him to make a living in the field of his choice, to appreciate the rights of others and to understand his own rights in the life of our nation."

It is also a fact, though, that Governor Warren has been strong at times in his assertion of a states' rights point of view that social programs should be rooted in the states rather than in the federal government.

The states' rights issue is linked strongly to the segregation case. The South Carolina case was argued in the last court session by John W. Davis, Democratic presidential candidate in 1924. At its base is a state constitutional provision which says:

"Separate schools shall be provided for children of the white and colored races, and no child of either race shall ever be permitted to attend a school provided for children of the other race."

This is the object of attack in the case, held over to the new term for further study and argument. From Gov. James F. Byrnes, himself a former Supreme Court justice, has come a suggestion that if such segregation is held to be a violation of the U. S. Constitution, South Carolina should abolish its public school system.

Puerto Ricans Ask Mixed U. S. Schools

Advise 15,000 Migrants Not To Work In Dixie

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — The Puerto Rican government refuses to allow Puerto Rican workers to be employed in the South and a problem has arisen in Dixie over Puerto Ricans already living there going to white and colored schools.

This information was revealed during hearings on Labor Department appropriations, released Friday by the House Appropriations Committee.

The committee was told that some Puerto Ricans, light of color were attending white schools while others, with dark features, were forced to attend colored schools.

American Citizens

Puerto Ricans are American citizens and have freedom of movement.

During 1952, over 15,000 Puerto Ricans were brought to the mainland for farm employment.

E. L. Keenan, deputy director of the Employment Security Bureau, disclosed that the Puerto Rican government will not permit Puerto Ricans who have come into the United States under contract to work south of the Mason-Dixon line.

No Change In Policy

He said the question has been discussed with the Puerto Rican director of labor, but there is no indication of a change in policy.

At present, there are about 1,500 Puerto Ricans working in Florida, but they were not brought to the mainland under contract. Some of them, Mr. Keenan said, were contracted for work in New Jersey, and after they finished their contracts they joined a crew that was going south.

In an agreement with Mexico, there is a provision against discrimination against Mexican nationals. Mr. Keenan said the Employment Security Bureau offered to give Puerto Rico assurances that there will be no discrimination against Puerto Rican contract labor in local communities, but Puerto Rico has not agreed to such an arrangement.

High Official In Incident

Robert C. Goodwin, director of the Employment Security Bureau, revealed that an incident involving one of the higher officials of Puerto Rico "aggravated the situation somewhat."

He added that the "approach to the problem which is worked out in the local communities we are getting the assurance of the mayors and the local officials that there will not be discrimination against these workers. We are getting the same kind of assurance from employers and the associations."

"What about the case of the Puerto Ricans who have established permanent homes in some of those states below the border?" asked Rep. John E. Fogarty (Dem., R.I.).

"As to what?" Mr. Goodwin asked.

Asked About Schools

"Well, for instance, in allowing them to attend white schools," said Mr. Fogarty.

"There is a very difficult problem involved there," replied Mr. Keenan. "I was talking the other day to a gentleman from Florida about this question, and I cannot give you a categorical answer, Mr. Forgarty, because Puerto Ricans vary a great deal in color."

"They are still Puerto Rican-American citizens?" asked Mr. Fogarty.

Some In White Schools

"Yes," replied Mr. Keenan, "but some of them appear to be more Negroid than others, and you get quite a difference in the south. There are cases where the children of Puerto Rican families have gone to white schools in the south.

"I am quite sure, from some of the things I have been told, that you will find other cases where Puerto Rican children are going to colored schools in the south because those children happen to look colored."

"Some of them are," said Rep. Antonio M. Fernandez (N. Mex.)

Towns Accept Some

"Some of them are," echoed Mr. Keenan. "There are cases where there may be one or two families in the town who become accepted in the community, and in other cases they will have difficulty.

"This gentleman I spoke of told me that in Florida there are instances where Puerto Ricans are using the same facilities in the town, like stores. They are permitted to go to the stores, where the white families go, and yet they eat in the restaurants where the colored families eat, which results in a confused situation."

"Would you say the Puerto Ricans are colored?" Mr. Fogarty asked.

"There are colored Puerto Ricans," Mr. Fernandez said. "There are many born and raised there, who speak the Spanish language, who are Puerto Ricans of the colored race.

Unaccustomed To It

"As to them among the whites there has not been too much segregation, so they are not accustomed to that kind of segregation here."

"But Puerto Ricans are not colored?" asked Mr. Fogarty.

"Not necessarily, most of them are not, many of them are colored of course," said Mr. Fernandez. "There are many families that are."

"What is a Negro?" asked Mr. Fogarty.

"A Negro is a descendant of the African race," replied Mr. Fernandez. "Many of them were brought into Puerto Rico just as they were brought here. In Puerto Rico, of course, there has been more intermarriage, I suppose."

Jitters Over School Segregation

By Henry Lesesne

COLUMBIA, S. C.—It will probably be June before the United States Supreme Court answers the question that has given the South a severe case of jitters: does segregation in public-school systems violate the Constitution? It is futile to speculate what the decision will be. It is about as futile to speculate upon possible consequences. Yet certain conclusions can be made even now.

In some of the seventeen segregation states—those with relatively large Negro populations—racial separation will never be just thrown out the window. The end of segregation will come, when it does, gradually. Some Southern states are already hatching evasive schemes to maintain the status quo for as long as possible in event segregated schools are ruled unconstitutional.

Another conclusion is that the bringing of this clear-cut issue before the courts has shortened by probably a decade or even a generation the time until the minority race gets something of an even break. This is not to deny that tremendous progress has been made even prior to the forcing of the issue.

Now, by and large, the South seems to realize that it will be compelled to have adequate facilities for both races, regardless of the Supreme Court decision. This may not be true all over the South but is true in a good part of it. If the long-standing separate but equal principle is reaffirmed, the South knows it must demonstrate its good faith, and quickly.

A FEW in the South believe that changing world attitudes on racial separation may bring an end to segregation sooner than most people think and that the South might accept it with more grace than is generally supposed. The great majority of Southern people are not inclined to such a view. Yet many do not consider segregation as the ultimate solution, but rather as an interim solution, a modus vivendi that permits the races, where they are somewhat equal in number, to live side by side.

Attitudes, of course, vary according to the size of the Negro population. This applies even within a single state. In states where the Negro population is heaviest, expressed official attitudes and preliminary legislative maneuvering would indicate the public school system, as such, would be scrapped if necessary to maintain separate schools for the races.

Thinking and planning along such a course isn't very definite. The general idea is, however, that some sort of private or quasi-private systems would be set up. The money now spent for state-supported schools would simply be parceled out individually as subsidies for children to attend these schools.

THE first of the school segregation cases that the Supreme Court is now considering in bulk originated in a Clarendon county, South Carolina, district where Negro students outnumber white three to one. Since then facilities have been equalized beyond any argument but the fundamental question remains as to whether segregation per se is unconstitutional.

Urgency and expediency were, it can be assumed, important factors, but since the suit was filed South Carolina has embarked on what is probably the most sweeping school improvement program ever undertaken by a state in so short a time. A 3 per cent general sales tax was imposed to finance a $75 million bond issue which is helping counties to build new schools. For efficiency, school districts in this relatively small state have been whacked from 1,600 to about 100, or a little more than two to a county on the average.

The program is less than two years old but projects under way total more than half the $75 million and two-thirds of this money is being spent for Negro schools, though Negroes constitute less than half of the population. Transportation has been provided for 60,000 more pupils—30 per cent of the Negro. Next to its sister state of North Carolina, where the problem was never so acute, South Carolina has probably done more than any other segregation state in the last two years to get its house in order.

NORTH CAROLINA, which over a decade ago became the first Southern state to equalize salaries of white and Negro teachers on a state-wide basis—and without even the threat of a legal suit—a few years ago issued $50 million bonds for school construction and the districts themselves more than doubled this amount. It now looks as though the people of the state will approve another $50 million bond issue this summer. The larger part of the money has been and is being spent on Negro schools.

Projects in Georgia approved under a new school-building program will represent $126 million when finished. Nearly half the amount has been allotted for Negro schools though there are two white students for every Negro student. Florida, too, plans to spend $100 million in the next two years on such a program.

Conditions now are much better everywhere than they were a decade ago. But recent fact-finding surveys in some of the states preliminary to doing something about the situation point up the size of the remaining job. In Alabama, for instance, a fact-finding survey recently cited a $300 million need for new building facilities, particularly for the minority race. A Mississippi legislative committee finds conditions "shocking," particularly the disparities in the amounts spent on white and Negro pupils in counties with preponderant Negro populations. Generally in the Deep South the situation respecting racial matters is far worse in rural areas, and Mississippi is largely rural and agricultural with the heaviest Negro population of any state.

Report From the South

What Happens If School Segregation Is Wiped Out?

BATON ROUGE, La.—Governor Robert F. Kennon said last week that any decision by the United States Supreme Court on racial segregation in public schools "will not pose a critical problem for Louisiana."

The educational system in Louisiana, he told a news conference, "has recognized the need for additional educational opportunities for Negroes.

Louisiana has segregation in its public schools, he said, "But we have equalized our school facilities ahead of many other states.

"The newest high schools in Shreveport and Alexandria, for instance, are for Negro students.

"I feel Louisiana largely has met the problem, and already has accomplished what some other states are planning to do."

Since 1948, Negro teachers in Louisiana have been paid salaries equal with white teachers, according to qualification and experience, however, the initial movement in this direction was made by the NAACP.

JACKSON, Miss.—Governor Hugh White admitted last week he is convinced that a United States Supreme Court ruling against segregated schools would create a serious problem in Mississippi for which he has no remedy.

The Governor said that he disagreed with State Representative Ney Gore of Quitman County who recently said in a public forum that if the decision is against segregation, Mississippi's best bet would be to go ahead with its equal facility program to persuade Negroes to attend their own schools.

"I don't agree with that at all," White said. "If the decision is against segregation, I don't believe persuasion would have any effect. I've said before that an adverse decision would create a serious problem in Mississippi for which I have no remedy. It will take a smarter man than to find the solution."

The Governor said he intends to discuss the proposed state equalization program with the Mississippi Education Association, Negroes, and other interested groups some time soon.

Ruling delayed on segregation in U. S. schools

BY PAUL M. YOST

WASHINGTON, June 8—(AP) — The Supreme Court ruled today that Washington restaurants must serve well-behaved Negroes at regular prices so long as an 80-year-old law remains on the books.

But the tribunal put aside until its next term any decision on whether segregated public schools are constitutional.

It called for new arguments starting Oct. 12 on a series of questions put in advance by the justices dealing primarily with the 14th Amendment to the Constitution.

THAT AMENDMENT, adopted after the Civil War, says no state may abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens. In the school cases, Negro parents have argued that the act of segregation by itself denies Negro pupils equal educational opportunities and thus violates the amendment.

Actually the highest tribunal was dealing only with legal technicalities—not the issue of segregation itself—in the restaurant case. The 8-0 result was to declare valid at least on of two old laws forbidding racial discrimination in District of Columbia eating places.

Lower courts had held variously that the laws were (A) illegally enacted, (B) repealed by later legislative action or (C) unenforceable because of long disuse.

BUT IN THE PUBLIC school cases involving four states and the nation's capital the tribunal came face to face with the question of whether to stand by or throw overboard its separate-but-equal doctrine established 57 years ago.

What it decides eventually will be of historic importance.

A ruling against segregation could mean an end to the public school systems as they exist today in South Carolina, Georgia and Virginia.

Gov. Herman Talmadge of Georgia has direly predicted that bloodshed will follow such a ruling. Actually Georgia is not one of the states involved in the pending cases. They came to the high court from Kansas, South Carolina, Virginia and Delaware.

The cases were argued last December for three days.

IN OTHER ACTIONS today the high tribunal:

Declared 4-3 that the U. S. is not liable for some $200 million damages claimed as the result of the 1947 Texas City, Tex., ship explosion disaster.

Decided 6-2 that the Ralston Purina Co., of St. Louis, is subject to registration requirements of the Federal Securities Act in offering its stock to employe purchasers. The majority said the employes are entitled to the act's protections in view of "obvious opportunities for pressure and imposition."

Decided 5-3 that confidential FBI reports need not be given Selective Service registrants at Justice Department hearings on claims for exemption as conscientious objectors. The decision applied specifically to Harry Gray Nugent, of Brooklyn, and Lester Packer, of the Bronx. They got prison sentences for refusing to submit to induction.

An 1873 statute was primarily involved in today's restaurant case.

What Other Papers Say

Paradox Of Segregation

(From the New York Times)

When last week the Supreme Court called for reargument in October of the five cases on segregation in the public schools it bared the searching of its own mind. It said to the nation that faces the perplexities of segregation and the paradox it poses in our democracy that on this question as it applies to the public schools there is no doctrine of infallibility available. The action calling for the reargning of the cases, which the court has had under consideration for six months, was not alone one of the Supreme Court justices disclosing the depth of their search into a constitutional question. It was also an act of men of goodwill looking toward the social impact of a possible decision of vast importance.

It was no chance conspiracy that carried the cases on segregation in the schools from South Carolina, Virginia, Kansas, Delaware and the District of Columbia to the court at about the same time so that they could be bracketed together. Segregation has been legally disintegrating under one court decision after another. Scores of Negro students are now studying in Southern universities at the graduate and professional level because a series of decisions of the Supreme Court have established the principle that "separate" facilities that are "equal" cannot be provided at that level. There are, the court has held, important intangible factors in ed by the presence of the segregation barrier. The legal issue has descended to the public schools by a logical sequence of events.

The perplexity of the court is not strange. The scholar of the law knows that mores and social practice crystallize into law. When the process is reversed by the law always there are risks. Both our social philosophy and our social history uphold this principle. Yet change in race relations in the South, where the Negro has been swift in recent years. Some change, notably in higher higher education that are destroying education, has come under the most significant gains in race relations in the region have been the voluntary steps the South has taken in the abandonment of segregation. The Supreme Court will render that divided the races have been public schools in a climate of crossed. Negroes have taken their growing tolerance that is one of places in the governmental structure as law enforcement officers times. The climate suggests that, and as members of governmental whatever the decision of the court bodies. The church's leadership may be, democracy has nothing has been notable. Professional associations are opening their doors to Negroes and the worth and dignity of Negro achievement are being recognized.

Equal school facilities held South's alternative

BY MIRIAM GANN HILL
News staff writer

Equalization of public school facilities for Negroes and whites is the South's alternative to abolishing segregation.

However, believes Pulitzer Prize-Winning Editor Hodding Carter, even if the Supreme Court should rule against segregation, there won't be any mass rush of Negroes to white schools, except perhaps in "fringe areas." At least this has proved true in non-segregation regions, he said.

The editor of the Delta-Democrat-Times of Greenville, Miss., was in Birmingham today to address the Birmingham Branch, American Assn. of University Women. With him was his pretty wife, Betty, who has gained a journalistic reputation herself by taking over the editor's desk during her husband's absences.

MR. CARTER strongly opposes abolition of the public school system, in the event the Supreme Court rules against segregation. He doesn't think Gov. Earl Warren's appointment to the nation's highest tribunal will in any way influence the outcome of the pending decision. Warren and the late Chief Justice Vinson, he says, are men of like minds.

The Supreme Court's lengthy consideration of the segregation issue, believes Mr. Carter, may indicate a split decision.

"The ultimate answer to the problem," he says, "will be a human answer and not a legal answer."

He added that a special legislative session is coming up in Mississippi in November to consider the problem of equalization of Negro and white school facilities. Equalization of school plants alone, he believes, would require expenditure of from $50 million to $100 million in every Southern state.

DISCUSSING "The World from Main Street" before the AAUW this afternoon, Mr. Carter voiced warnings that the U. S. is losing the battle against communism in Asia "because of the tremendous job the Communists are doing in spreading the Big Lie."

The genial newspaper editor and author spent four months in Asia last Winter and Spring.

"The Communists," he declared, "are capitalizing on the most glowing symbols of our democracy—our newspapers, churches, city halls, public libraries and schools and courts. They're twisting and distorting these symbols of Main Street into weapons of terror."

MR. CARTER said the U. S. "self-help program" and economic aid have definitely won friends. "But our psychological efforts are handicapped by inexperience and the Oriental's age-old suspicious attitude toward the West.

"Our efforts are further handicapped," he added, "by a lack of morale among our own people overseas — a lack of morale resulting from the blanket indictments made against our State Department and other governmental agencies by politicians in Washington."

MR. CARTER said this country's most effective weapon in combatting these dangers lies in bringing increased thousands of representative people of Southeast Asia to the U. S. on exchange tours.

It would be a mistake, he added, for these exchange tourists to see only the large cities—"Take them into the smaller cities and towns so they can see the real heart of a democracy."

Mr. Carter is author of several books and countless magazine articles. He is currently working on a new book, "Robert E. Lee and the Road of Honor."

Church Women Oppose Public Schools Segregation

New York Times News Service, Special to The Atlanta Constitution

ATLANTIC CITY, Oct. 8—The United Church Women, representing an estimated 10,000,000 Protestant churchgoers in all sections of the country, overwhelmingly recorded here today its opposition to racial segregation in the public schools of America.

The action of the women's organization came in the form of an amendment to a formal resolution calling the delegaes, attention to five cases now pending before the U. S. Supreme Court relative to segregated schools. The original resolution merely urged them to acquaint their constituents with the implications of the court decision, whatever it may be.

The amendment calling for an end to segregated public schools caused a flurry of spirited debate when it was offered from the floor by a delegate from Virginia. It was finally passed over the opposition of several women who cautioned against "confuing" the issue before the Supreme Court had an opportunity to act.

While all of the opposing voices made it clear that they held no brief for discrimination, some delegates expressed the opinion that the timing was not propitious and others held that equality of education should not be hastily "pushd down people's throats."

Says Dixie Will Except Integration

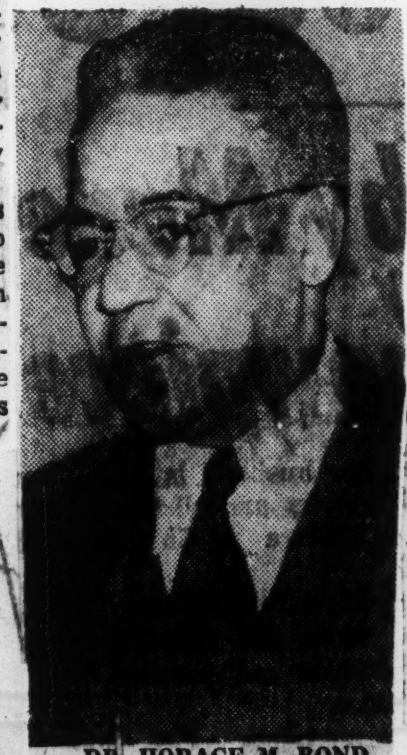
"The middle class people of the South with deep religious convictions won't lift a hair at integration in education," Dr. Horace Mann Bond, president of Lincoln (Pa.) university, predicted last week.

Dr. Bond, an alumnus of Lincoln, has headed the school for eight years. He was among the presidents of 31 private colleges in Chicago last week attending the fourth annual convention and convocation of the United Negro College Fund, held at the Sheraton hotel.

Lincoln university, which marked its 100th birthday last Tuesday, has set the pattern for racial integration since 1862.

NO RECORDS KEPT

'We don't keep records by race, but whites have attended Lincoln since 1862," Dr. Bond pointed out. 'We now have 17 white students out of an enrollment of about 300," he continued. Nine of the students are enrolled in the theological seminary and one is a girl, the educator added.



DR. HORACE M. BOND

Dr. Bond describes the all-male school as "a Negro college historically but for all people." The wives of students and faculty members, as well as the children of faculty members are allowed to attend classes. The students chose a white girl as Lincoln Homecoming queen in 1952.

MAKES PROPHECY

Dr. Bond forsees the survival of the traditionally Negro college in an integrated society. "Negro colleges are here to stay," he explained. "In the South you'll find a large number of white students in the same social and economic class as Negroes."

The distinguished educator was born, Nov. 8, 1904, in Nashville, Tenn. He was graduated from Lincoln in 1923 with a bachelor of arts degree. He received the master of arts degree from the University of Chicago in 1926 and a PhD degree from the same institution in 1936.

Proposal gets support of all persons there

Group represents 10 million in all U.S. denominations

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — The nation's largest organization of churchwomen has gone on record as opposing the continuation of racial segregation in the public schools of America.

Meeting at the final session of its sixth national assembly, the United Churchwomen, of the National Council of Churches passed a resolution on Thursday, that called for an end to the dual school system found in some 27 states.

The action came after an amendment was introduced to a previous resolution that had called attention to the five school cases now pending before the Supreme Court, relative to segregated schools.

In Outspoken Opposition

The original resolution had merely urged the delegates to acquaint their constituents with the implications of the court decisions, whatever they might be, involving schools in Kansas, South Carolina, Virginia, Delaware and the District of Columbia.

The amended version however, placed the group, which represents some ten million Protestant and Eastern Orthodox women in the U.S., in outspoken opposition to segregated schools.

It was introduced by Mrs. W. Elmo Walker of Sandston, Va., and urged the 2,000 members and local and state councils to be prepared to carry out local educational projects designed to effect racial integration in American public schools.

Spirited Debate

A flurry of spirited debate greeted the introduction of the resolution, but it was finally passed over the opposition of several women who cautioned against "confusing" the issue before the Supreme Court had an opportunity to act.

All of the opponents made it clear that they held no brief for discrimination, but some of them insisted that equality of education should not be hastily "pushed down people's throats."

"I'm sure that there isn't a woman in this room who does not long for the end of segregation," declared Mrs. Norman Vincent Peale, wife of the famous minister of Marble Collegiate church, reformed.

Miss Thelma Stevens of New York, executive secretary of the Christian Social Relations Department of the Women's Division of Christian Service of the Methodist church, described consideration of the coming court decisions as a "clarion call to Christian women to do our job. The issue relates not only to us in the United States, but reverberates around the world."

The group also dedicated itself to "eternal vigilance" against any curtailment of the Constitution or the Bill of Rights either by a totalitarian government or by certain "undemocratic activities on the part of our law makers."

AFSC SURVEY REVEALS:

Mixed teaching staffs successful in 55 cities

WASHINGTON

A recent survey has disclosed that at least 55 cities in the United States have integrated their teaching staffs successfully and without unusual incidents.

The report, prepared by the American Friends' Service Committee, of Washington, revealed that 31 cities hired teachers on merit and without restrictions; 16 cities employed mixed staffs with limitation and reservation; while eight cities fail to state their policy other than that they have a successful interracial staff.

However, the committee reported that all the cities stated that their policy is successful. With some cities, the policy is relatively new, the committee, added, but pointed out that the replies were typical.

No Discrimination

"The policy of the Board of Education has consistently been one of selecting and assigning employees on the basis of qualifications and fitness for the position," one city replied.

Another city said: "We have no discrimination whatsoever and both faculty and students are assigned without regard to geographical area, race or origin."

The committee said that the query reflected considerable awareness on the part of the superintendents of the policy of employment on merit. Several city school heads stated the procedure of hiring without discrimination with notable clarity;

Taken From List

"All teachers are appointed from a regular certificate list without discrimination to race, color or creed," one declared.

Another stated:

"The employment of teachers in the public schools is solely on the basis of educational background and professional competence. We raise no question in our application for a position. Photographs are not required."

In the overwhelming majority of cases, a calm community acceptance of interracial policy prevails. Only a few of the superintendents reported that there were some complaints in hiring minority group teachers, the committee said.

Overcame Objections

However, the serious objections were overcome in the course of experience. One superintendent said:

"At the beginning there were a few complaints from white people who had come from the South about having their children with colored teachers. When they understood that the teachers were of excellent quality, their objections were soon overcome."

In the hiring of minority group teachers in white schools one superintendent said:

Some Are Superior

"There are many superior individuals, regardless of race, and given comparable educational advantages, these individuals will naturally come to the top. So long as such individuals are recoginzed because of merit, the position of a school administrator is entirely defensible. Any other position will lead to endless controversy in our opinion."

The American Friends Service Committee expressed hope that District school officials would take cognizance of this survey as it clearly shows how integration of teaching staffs can best be accomplished.

The report does not attempt to disclose that there are only 55 cities in the United States which do not practice discrimination. The 55 replies are from the cities which chose to return the questionnaire.

Governors Hail Plea To Uphold Segregation

Chairman Talmadge Says Adverse Ruling Would Be 'Suicide'

HOT SPRINGS, Va., Nov. 2 (AP)—The chairman of the Southern Governors Conference today called upon the Supreme Court to uphold segregation in schools and to let the South solve its own racial problems.

Gov. Herman Talmadge of Georgia declared in a speech, roundly applauded, that a ruling against segregation would be unconstitutional, the "most foolhardy sociological calamity in our national history," and "nothing less than a major step toward national suicide."

The racial issue came up again when Gov. James F. Byrnes of South Carolina said the Ku Klux Klan on one side and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) on the other had fought a program for building Negro schools in his state.

Even with this opposition, Byrnes said, some 62 million dollars out of 89 million available are being spent on Negro school construction in South Carolina.

Byrnes remarked dryly: "I guess you know why the Ku Klux Klan is against it."

Opposition of NAACP leaders, he said, is based on the idea that Negro educators won't plug so hard against segregation if they get improved segregated schools.

Byrnes later told newsmen that Klan opposition was applied in 1951 when the school program was before the legislature. He said he doesn't believe the Klan is still active in his state since several of its leaders had been imprisoned.

Agricultural Program Urged

Talmadge opened the business session with a bid to the Eisenhower administration to adopt "a definite agricultural program" and to consider a cut in foreign aid.

In advance of the appearance tonight of their principal guest speaker, Secretary of Agriculture Benson, the Dixie executives split over Benson's decision today to go ahead with a reorganization plan which will abolish seven regional offices of the Soil Conservation Service.

Most of the Southern governors have been saying that Eisenhower's political popularity is fading, chiefly because of farmer dissatisfaction with low prices and high costs.

Dr Nabrit Warns Courts Would Keep Public Schools Open

Lighthouse & Informer
14 d (1) General

By JOHN H. McCRAY

ORANGEBURG — Governor James F. Byrnes will get absolutely nowhere with his promise to wipe out public schools should the U. S. Supreme Court ends racial segregation in them, is in substance what a Law School Dean and crack NAACP attorney said in an address before Tuesday night's general session of the American Teachers Association, meeting here Sunday through Tuesday.

Dr. James M. Nabrit, dean of the law school and college secretary ,at Howard University Washington, D. C. tossed out this challenge in a hour and five minute address which received prolonged applause at its conclusion.

Speaking under the 3 subject "What Next", Dr. Nabrit, a native of Augusta, Ga. by the way, and brother-in-law to Dr. A. B. Johnson of Columbia ,in whose home he is a guest this week, said, "Governor Byrnes and his legislature may decide to give all the schools away. But I want you and him to know that we'll be over there in them just the same."

He went on to recall that South Carolina had before attempted to subvert a federal court ruling in the primary case. (In 1944 Governor Olin D. Johnston convoked a special legislative session to wipe laws governing primaries off statute books, hoping this would evade the Smith vs. Allwight Texas case. The Elmore case followed a few months later and in 1950 revised laws governing primaries were returned to the statutes).

That experience ,he said is no different from what can be expected should South Carolina attempt to banish public schools just to get around a court ruling.

Outlines Responsibilities

In the main, Dr. Nabrit's address was an outline of obligations to school teachers in the event jimcrow schools are outlawed. He cited figures from Dr. Charles Thompson in a recent edition of the Negro Journal of Education to show that at present there is a shortage of some 27,000 elementary teachers, with no relief in sight as enrollments increased each year. After the next term he said, there would also be a increasing shortage of High School teachers. He pointed to these figures as the answer to teachers who have been fearful of losing their jobs under integration.

School tenure laws cover about two-fifths of the involved states, he said, another guarantee of job security.

De-segration, Legal Effort

He divided the presentc ontroversy segregation into two sections. First, he said lawyers are working to "de-segregate" various codes and laws which make segregation possible. Secondly, integration after the laws are changed is the job of the community. A de-segregated integrated nation he went on, would be similar to inter-group activity.

Dr. Nabrit said Negroes shouldn't get angry "Because the other side fights so bitterly to retain segregation. They are just as sincere about their views as we are about ours; and it would be a mistake to despise or hate them for what they honestly think. We've got to understand that they aren't just being mean. They think they are actually right."

His lament, however, was that opponents to de-segregation, are like the "Pilgrims who settled on Plymouth Rock. They said they came over here so they could worship God as they wanted to. (Some of them also came over here to stay out of jail). But actually, they wanted what they wanted to make you want the same thing."

He saw a serious bid by the South now to return Negroes to their status under the Dred Scott decision, a decision Congress sought to repudiate under the civil rights ammendments.

As to the conduct of Negroes themselves, he warned that many of them fail to make use of opportunities once they have them. He recalled an unnamed school which heretofore denied entrance to Negroes, but which now has one student. There are vacancies 16 others could fill, he said. "But in two years we haven't been able to find one person. And the school is begging us everyday to find somebody."

He also charged that some of the Negroes entering integrated schools are finding that they are woefully unprepared to compete successfully with white classmates.

Dr. Nabrit has long since been one of the behind-the-scene brain of the NAACP's legal staff, his work on arguments and briefs being considered without parallel. He was introduced by dent of Alabama State College, Dr. H. Council Trenholm, presi- Montgomery, Ala., who served as secretary of the ATA.

Campus Round-Up

BY ANP

SOUTH WILL ACCEPT INTEGRATED SCHOOLS, SRC PREDICTS

The Southern Regional Council, an interracial organization of church, labor, business and professional people in some 13 southern states, last week came up with some interesting highlights on possible aftermaths to the forthcoming U. S. Supreme court decision on segregation in public schools.

First off the group predicted the South would accept any decision offered in a peaceful manner and that attempts to circumvent a ruling outlawing Jim Crow schools-- such as abolishing public schools- probably would be unworkable.

The organization came up with other pertinent observations. In a pamphlet issued, the SRC said:

1. That in the event the high tribunal orders the end of segregation, integration will not come overnight; the transition would be gradual.

2. That if the court upholds the separate-but-equal system, the financial strain to provide "equal' schools would force many southern counties to abandon the system.

3. That a decisin against segregation would affect only those areas involved in the five school suits. Other suits would be necessary to get decisions affecting other areas.

4. The end of segregation would not mean the end of Negro teachers. The general shortage in this profession would make any mass discharge of colored teachers unlikely.

SCHOOL BELLS RING FOR FACULTY, STUDENTS:

Campus activity began in full swing last week as the 1953-54 term opened at colleges and universities throughout the country.

A workshop was among features during opening week at Lane College, Jackson, Tenn. 'Re-studying the Teacher Education Program at Lane College," was the theme of the three-day session for faculty members.

President C. A. Kirkendoll also announced the addition of some eight new members of the faculty and administrative staff. Among new teachers was Dr. Mitchell B. Southall who will head the music department.

At Florida A and M university, Dan McCarty, governor of Florida, opened the first convocation of the new year at the institutin which officially opened as a university this fall.

Some 2,000 students were expected to matriculate at the school this year. The top enrollment last year was 2,093.

Dr. R. O'Hara Lanier, president of Texas Southern university, urged the first conference of teachers to take advantage of the opportunity offered to build a first-class university in the state.

"A first-class university can only be built by people who care to do a good job," he said.

A guest at the meeting was Cpl. Richard Barnes, a TSU graduate who spent more than two years in a Korean prison camp. He related some of his experiences while a PW.

A series of faculty, staff and committee organizational meetings featured the opening of school at Jackson college, Jackson, Miss.

In an address to the faculty members, President J. L. Reddix urged them to "use every art of teaching in leading the student to an understanding of the subject being taught."

Jackson college primarily is a teacher-education institutin.

The college also announced the addition of some 15 new faculty and staff members. Among them was Dr. Charles C. Mosley, professor of education.

Discussion of School Segregation Seen at Governors' Meet

Southern governors may discuss what steps they can take to preserve segregation in their common schools when they convene at Boca Raton, Fla., Nov. 1, Georgia Gov. Herman Talmadge, chairman of the Southern Governors Conference, said yesterday.

Talmadge announced a round-table discussion at the conference on the subject of "the organization and operation of our elementary and secondary schools." Gov. John Battle of Virginia will preside.

Asked if the discussion would deal with the development of the South's educational facilities or if it was scheduled in view of the segregation suits now pending in the United States Supreme Court, Talmadge replied:

"It was scheduled as a routine discussion on educational problems and development. However, some of the governors may take this opportunity to talk about how to preserve segregation in event the court should rule adversely to the South's traditions."

Governor Talmadge already has announced he would move to abolish public schools in Georgia should the court outlaw segregation in public schools. A similar plan has been announced by Gov. James Byrnes of South Carolina.

Chairman Talmadge announced roundtable discussions for the conference on mental health and federal-state relationships. Gov. Frank Clements of Tennessee will preside over the mental health discussion. Gov. Alan Shivers of Texas, immediate past chairman of the National Governors Conference, will be in charge of the panel on federal-state relationships.

Ruling on schools won't cause riots

ATLANTA (ANP) — Without foundation are fears that racial disorders would flare up through the Sohth if the U.S. Srpreme Court rules that segregation in the nation's elementary schools is unconstitutional.

This is the finding of the Southern Regional Council, which declared in a press release last week that the high court's decision will be received with "calmness and restraint."

In a pamphlet which was released last week end, the interracial council, which has racial amity as its goal, points out that even if segregation is strictly banned by the court's edict, it will not transform schools in the South overnight.

Gradual Transition

First off the group predicted that attempts to circumvent a ruling outlawing Jim - crow schools by such as abolishing public schools — probably would be unworkable.

The organization came up with other pertinent observations:

1. That is the event the high tribunal orders the end of segregation, integration will not come overnight; the transition would be gradual.

2. That if the court upholds the separate - but - equal system, the financial strain to provide "equal" schools would force many southern counties to abandon the system.

More Litigation

3. That a decision against segregation would affect only those areas involved in the five school suits. Other suits would be necessary to get decisions affecting other areas.

4. The end of segregation would not mean the end of colored teachers. The general shortage in this profession would make any mass discharge of colored teachers unlikely.

SUPREME COURT, PUBLIC SCHOOLS:

3 states react to pending decision

CHARLESTON, W. Va. — The reactions of three states last week toward the pending decision of the U.S. Supreme Court in the five segregated school cases was as varied as the distances between them.

Charles A. Williamson, president of the West Virginia State Board of Education, was quoted as saying that West Virginians await the court's decision in the pending school cases with a "wise calmness."

Other leaders of both races in the state are also reported unworried by the possibility of a change in the present pattern of segregated education.

Other Educators Agree

One educator who declined identification, expressed the opinion that "race relations in this state are too good for public officials to echo southern chants of bloodshed or to attempt to sidestep the court's decision by switching from public to private schools."

Meanwhile, the possibility of school segregation suits in the state was indicated by Willard L. Brown, president of the Charleston NAACP branch and state legal adviser, while efforts to bring about integration through negotiation have been initiated by the Bluefield branch.

Expects 'No Disturbance'

James W. Robinson, state supervisor of colored schools, was quoted as saying that "The Constitution must be upheld and segregated schools infringe upon it."

W. W. Trent, state superintendent of free schools, reportedly said that he did not anticipate "any great disturbance" in the event of abolition of segregation, "if the transfer of pupils is made gradually as building conditions permit."

State institutions of higher learning, West Virginia university and Marshall college, have voluntarily admitted colored graduate and professional students. Two private institutions, West Virginia Wesleyan and Bethany college, likewise, have opened their doors to all.

Tennessee To Go Along

A similar reaction was registered by Tennessee's Gov. Frank Clement, who stated tsat Tennessee's public schools will continue to operate as public schools irrespective of the high court's decision in the pending school segregation cases.

The governor made the statement in a nation - wide radio broadcast over the Mutual Broadcasting system. It was his first public statement on the controversial topic that has riled South Carolina's James F. (Jimmy) Byrnes and Georgia's Herman (Hummon) Talmadge.

Governor Clement said officials in his state "are doing everything we can to prepare for any eventuality which concerns the public interest."

The Tennessee governor added:

Sour Note From Dixie

"There is nothing that concerns the public interest more than the education of our children and the school system of our state. I don't like to comment upon what the Supreme Court might do. I can only say this:

"We will watch with interest for their decision. The public schools of Tennessee have been operating since the first flat boat came and they will continue to do so."

From farther south, however —Mobile, Ala., to be exact — came a sour and discordant note.

There, Judge Horace C. Wilkinson, one of Alabama's leading advocates of white supremacy, outlined in a National Citizens Day speech, his plan for maintaining racially segregated schools in the South despite the Supreme Court.

'Subvert Constitution'

Judge Wilkinson, who espoused the cause of the League for White Supremacy several years ago, proposed that the Dixie states, in the event jim-crow schools are outlawed, reconstruct the separate school system by acting under the clause in the Federal Constitution ppermitting the states to enter into compacts.

He attacked the Bill of Rights as one of the most badly "mutilated" sections of the Constitution.

The speaker, a former Birmingham City attorney, was counsel for that city in an unsuccessful attempt to have the courts uphold Birmingham's racial zoning laws. He called the Supreme Court justices "ministers of miscegnation."

That same day, in Montgomery, State Sen. Jimmy Faulkner of Bay Minette, addressing the junior Chamber of Commerce, said the pending school segregation cases, from Dixie's viewpoint, were hurt by the death of Chief Justice Fred M. Vinson.

Vinson's Death 'Hurt Dixie'

Mr. Faulkner described Chief Justice Vinson as a "friend of the South" and warned against rash plans to get around a decision outlawing segregated schools "since the high tribunal might make a ruling that would preclude the action we plan."

He estimated that it would cost the State of Alabama upwards of $250 millions to bring the colored public schools of the state up to a plane of equality with those provided for white children.

New York Times Story Untrue, NAACP Says

NEW YORK — Arthur B. Spingarn, president of the NAACP, representing the statement of Arthur Krock, correspondent of the New York Times, to the effect that the Department of Justice is doing all it can to [illegible] of the research in favor of the abolition of segregation in education, said here last [illegible] that 130 experts have been working with the NAACP since [illegible] on the case.

Mr. Spingarn said the Krogh's statement was not only inaccurate but definitely gave the impression that the NAACP was doing

RACE SEGREGATION IN SCHOOLS OPPOSED

Protestant Women Call for End to Educational Bar in Public Institutions

By GEORGE DUGAN

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ATLANTIC CITY, Oct. 8—The United Church Women, representing an estimated ten million Protestant churchgoers in this country, overwhelmingly recorded today its opposition to racial segregation in public schools.

The action came in the form of an amendment to a resolution calling attention to five cases pending before the United States Supreme Court relative to segregated schools. The original resolution merely urged the delegates to acquaint their constituents with the implications of the court decision, whatever it may be.

The cases before the court involve judicial decisions in Kansas, South Carolina, Virginia, Delaware, and the District of Columbia that in one form or another sanction segregation.

The amendment, calling for an end to segregated public schools, caused a flurry of spirited debate when it was offered by a delegate from Virginia. It was finally passed over the opposition of several women who cautioned against "confusing" the issue before the Supreme Court had an opportunity to act.

While all of the opponents made it clear that they held no brief for discrimination, some delegates held that equality of education should not be hastily "pushed down people's throats."

Delegates Ask Arms Cut

The assembly, at its final business session, also endorsed the United Nations, called for a reduction and regulation of armaments, and urged the Government to "make Point Four aid to other nations independent of their military or economic commitments to the United States."

This morning the Rev. Dr. Henry P. Van Dusen, president of Union Theological Seminary in New York, in describing issues that will confront the second general assembly of the World Council of Churches in Evanston, Ill., next summer, said that "never has there been a time when it has become so difficult for our guests to come from all over the world to a world Christian assemblage in the United States."

These "embarrassments" spring from the "very facts which are creating disquiet among our friends overseas," he asserted.

A nation so preoccupied with questions of internal loyalty and disloyalty, he added, "whose press gives front-page prominence almost daily to investigations and inquisitions, in which even the most mature and trusted leadership of our churches are involved, creates a difficult atmosphere in which to welcome a great Christian world gathering."

Delegates to the Evanston meeting will include church leaders from nations all over the world, and grave fears have been voiced by American church officials over entry permits for religious leaders behind the Iron Curtain.

Tonight, in an address ending the biennial convention the Rev. Dr. Ralph W. Sockman, minister of Christ Church, Methodist, New York, predicted that the "next great revival of religion" in this country would come "through the pew rather than the pulpit."

He said the church "should always welcome honest and intelligent investigation." "But it should be done," he added, "by competent spiritual leaders and not by political vote-seekers or disgruntled splinter sects. Since the dust of current investigations has been largely stirred up by windy apostles of discord, we believe that it will soon be settled by the sanity of the American people."

Call For Prayers In Jim Crow School Cases

CHICAGO, Ill. — The executive committee of the National Fraternal Council of Churches, in a one-day meeting at the Carter Temple CME church here recently, designated Sunday, Dec. 6, as a special day of prayer, preceding the legal arguments before the U. S. Supreme Court for the elimination of segregation in public schools throughout the South.

The committee unanimously adopted a recommendation presented by the council's executive secretary, George W. Lucas of Dayton, Ohio.

The resolution reads:

"The decision of the Supreme court will be one of the most momentous in the history of our nation. The full emancipation of Negro people, the help of our democracy at home, and our moral influence abroad are at stake. Southern governors have already issued threats to defy the decision of the court if they rule in favor of abolishing segregation.

"Sadly some of our Negro leaders are coinciding with the efforts of prejudiced whites to forestall integration in our public school system. A favorable verdict from the court will only mark the beginning of the arduous task of accomplishing the goal of non-segregated schools in a non-segregated society.

"Men who are stubborn in their backward opinion must be converted to the necessity and propriety of practicing full democracy within the bounds of our Nation. Fearful and selfish people of color must be enlightened and motivated to follow the line of progress whatever the cost. Our churches have a tremendous responsibility in this connection.

"Let us pray that God will guide the nine men of the court to decide in favor of justice and equity and the purpose of God and that He will guide our Nation in reverence and humility to conform to His pattern of freedom for all the children of men."

The National Fraternal Council of Churches is made up of representatives of 14 denominations with an aggregate of more than seven million members.

How Southern States Reacted To U.S. Brief

'A Blow To GOP in South'

LOVEJOY, Ga. — (INS) — Gov. Herman Talmadge said that the administration's request that public school segregation be ended by the Supreme court "will be a tremendous blow to the Republican party in the South."

Talmadge, who recently said he will "stand on all" as governor on a promise to maintain segregation in the state's schools, added:

"I think the attorney general's position as expressed in the brief filed Friday will solidify the South behind the Democratic party."

When apprised of the administration decision to ask the high court to end segregation "forthwith," the governor said:

"This is exactly the action I have been asking the general assembly and the people of Georgia to go on and do something to be ready for an adverse decision."

He referred to two measures his administration pushed through the House of Representatives last week despite opposition, and which opposition is expected next week in the senate. One, winning general approval, sets up a commission to study and find ways of maintaining segregation despite the possible adverse supreme court ruling.

The other is a constitutional amendment that would permit the legislature to grant state, county and municipal tax money to individuals for educational purposes.

Behind it is Talmadge's plan to subsidize individual children to attend private schools of their own choosing.

In effect, the plan calls for abandonment of the public school system in Georgia.

Gov. Talmadge said the position taken by the administration, as evidenced in the brief submitted to the court, is no surprise to him, nor does it change his outlook on what Georgia should do.

By Laureen White

New York, (GLOBAL) — The United Church Women, representing ten million members, recently recorded its opposition to segregation in public schools. In doing so, the group is helping to complete a job started by their forefathers years ago.

It was the church that started institutions of learning. It was also the church that started hospitals and charitable organizations. All of these worthy organizations were brought into existence to make the world a better place for all. If hospitals had been organized to preserve the health of a certain few so they could take advantage of others, the value of hospitals would be questionable. In the same way, charitable organizations would lose their effectiveness if they had been organized to help only a certain group.

Schools lose some of their usefulness when large groups of worthy individuals are denied access to them. Schools can actually be a detriment to society when they are used to place one segment of the population in a position to take advantage of another segment. In a segregated school system, this is exactly what happens. That part of the population that is favored with the best facilities for learning, is placed in a better position than those not allowed the best facilities for learning.

The church and church people have always been aware of this, yet all too often have acted as though they had lost the power of speech or the ability to protest when the situation was brought forcefully to their attention.

The job of the church was not over when it brought schools into existence. The church owes it to civilization to see that schools are properly managed. When the average laymen see the church silently approving of segregation in schools, they can easily form the opinion that segregation is proper.

Since the fruit of segregation is always discrimination, the segregated are handicapped.

The United Church Women who recently recorded their opposition to segregation in schools rendered society a great service. We are indebted to them.

Two States Argue For Segregation

Kansas and South Carolina Say It's Not the Business of U.S. Courts

WASHINGTON —(AP)— Kansas and South Carolina contended to the Supreme court Monday that the Federal Courts lack power to outlaw racial segregation in the public schools.

Both states filed briefs preliminary to oral argument before the high tribunal next week of a series of cases attacking segregation of Negro and White pupils.

Pending before the court are cases from Virginia, Delaware, Kansas, South Carolina and the District of Columbia, attacking segregation on the grounds it violates the 14th amendment.

South Carolina and Kansas argued the 14th amendment was not intended to end segregation.

The Kansas brief said it was the intent of the framers of the 14th amendment that the management of public schools should be left to the state legislatures.

"The federal judiciary may not now assume jurisdiction over this phase of state activities in disregard to the framers' intent," the brief said.

"The people of Kansas, through the normal processes of local government, are demonstrating their willingness and capacity to deal with local race problems in a manner most beneficial to all concerned.

"Federal interference is neither necessary nor justified."

Baptist Ministers Urged To Pray For Anti School Bias Decision

Ministers attending the weekly session of the Atlanta Baptist Ministers' Union, Rev. D. A. Dixon, president, Tuesday at Wheat Street Baptist Church were urged by Attorney A. T. Walden, high ranking Baptist layman and politician, to mention the significance of the impending decision in the U. S. Supreme Court on segregation in Education, a ruling expected in the not distant future.

Col. Walden, who is also attorney for the National Baptist Convention, USA, Inc. (Dr. J. H. Jackson, Chicago, president) requested the ministers to pray Sunday for a righteous decision by the highest court in the land, stating that such a decision will meet a new day for the American Negro if it outlaws segregation in our public schools. The ministers gave the idea their genuine support and many of them will cooperate with the request Sunday.

LAWSON SAYS "VOTE"

Rev. E. D. Lawson called attention to the fact that all ministers should go to the polls today and vote their convictions. The polls will open at 7 a. m. and close at 7 p. m.

FINEST NEGRO EDIFICE

Rev. Taschereau Arnold and Rev H. M. Smith have just returned from Jacksonville, Florida, where they attended the dedication of the great Shiloh Metropolitan Baptist Church, Dr. A. B. Coleman, pastor. Rev. Arnold stated that the church is valued at one half million dollars and is perhaps the finest Negro church edifice in America. The church has a seating capacity that goes far beyond Wheat Street Baptist Church, Atlanta; Olivet Baptist Church, Chicago and Abyssinnia Baptist Church, New York City and other big churches across the country.

Pilgrim Life and Health Insurance Co. of the church have over $100,000 to finance the edifice. Mr. Hornsby, president of Pilgrim, presided during the services and Dr. R. L. Riley, Nashville, president, American Baptist Seminary, delivered the sermon on Sunday afternoon and Dr. W. H. Gray, pastor of Baptist Church in Philadelphia, Pa., and former president of Florida A. and M. College, spoke on Sunday night.

DID THE IMPOSSIBLE

Rev. Arnold shot 200 feet of moving pictures of this occasion on his 16 mm Keystone camera at no cost to Dr. Coleman and church. He was in Jacksonville for a much needed rest and merely took in this grand event.

Rev. A. Bell who is heading a Home Mission Board drive for General Missionary Baptist Convention, announced progress in plans for same. Meanwhile, Dr. W. W. Weatherspool announced the coming Appreciation Service for Dr. W. F. Paschal Tuesday December 8. He has lived 90 years and preached 63 years. Every preacher is asked to remember him with a contribution by all means next Tuesday. The services will be held at Wheat Street at 12 noon and Mt. Vernon at 8 p. m.

DR. KING IN REPORT

Dr. M. L. King, critic, made a report. Rev. Arnold, chairman of the Christmas Gift for President Dixon announced that he is making headway in the drive. He reports that Hooper's Crystal Market has contributed a turkey for his gift. Edwards Grocery Store, $5.00; Mr. W. A. Scott, III, of Atlanta Daily World, $2.00; Mrs. Esther Smith, $1.00. Several of the ministers have made contributions. Please make your gift to this effort by next Tuesday if possible. Dr. G. W. Jordan made a strong plea for the Dixon Xmas gift.

SOUTHLAND IN UPROAR ABOUT INTEGRATION IN EDUCATION AS HIGH COURT PONDERS QUESTION

Indiana Editor Who Favors Interracial Dating Ousted From Richmond College

FORMER FISK PRESIDENT IN HOT WATER

ATLANTA.—(ANP)—Supporters of racial segregation won minor victories in four states last week.

Bills designed to maintain segregation in education were passed in Georiga and in Mississippi; a segregated white school was dedicated in Texas, despite the protests of Negroes, and an editor of a college newspaper in Indiana was ousted from his position because of his approval of an article on interracial dating at his school.

In Georgia, the House State of the Republic Committee approved two Talmadge endorsed bills designed to maintain segregation in education in the state.

One of the bills would call for a constitutional amendment to permit the state to abolish its public educational system; it would allow for a private, tax-supported school set-up.

The other bill would establish a "Committee of 21" to study methods of transferring public schools to private ands.

Both bills were passed in preparation for a possible U. S. Supreme Court ruling outlawing segregation in the nation's public schools. The high tribunal will receive arguments on five cases challenging segregation Dec. 7.

The Mississippi senate, by a vote of 29-15, passed a bill calling for a bond issue refinancing construction of new school facilities without having to wait for a pay-as-you-go plan.

Opponents of the bill are in favor of a pay-as-you-go plan to bring about Mississippi's version of separate-but-equal schools.

The current session of the state legislature is a special one called to discuss the equalization program. It now has been in session for three weeks.

Deep in the heart of Texas—Ft. Hood, that is — an elementary school for white children was dedicated over the protests of the NAACP.

The NAACP protested to the Pentagon in Washington the participation of Maj. Gen. William S. Biddle in the dedication ceremonies. In a telegram to Dr. John A. Hannah, assistant secretary of defense, the NAACP said his presence gave governmental approval to the jim crow school. Among other things, the telegram said:

"The presence of this high-ranking officer gives the impression the Defense Department is fully in accord with this disgraceful form of humiliating colored military personnel by excluding their children from educational facilities on government property."

Earlham college, Richmond, Ind., long considered a liberal institution, last week removed Stephen Wersan from his position as editor of The Earlham Post, campus newspaper, because of a story urging more interracial dating.

An advisory board of five students and a faculty member, which controls the publication, took the action against Werson because of what it termed his violating "principles of good journalism." In a letter to Wersan, the board said in part:

"Wersan violated principles of good journalism by permitting a student not identified with the staff of the paper to write an unsigned article which appeared on page 1 of the Nov. 18 issue in which partisan opinion was presented as news."

Interracial dating has been an issue at the college ever since a white student married a Negro coed last spring. Shortly afterward tighter regulations regarding dating between members of different races were installed at Earlham.

The couple which married and started the uproar is Mr. and Mrs. Robert McAllister. She is the former Miss Grace Cunningham.

Earlham, when many institutions preferred not to discuss the racial issue, was practicing democracy on its campus. During slavery it wa one of the stations along the underground railroad. Its president, Dr. Thomas E. Jones, formerly was president of Fisk university at Nashville.

School Segregation Crumbling Across Nation

(Reprinted from The Louisiana Weekly)

With the momentous United States Supreme Court hearing on public school segregation still several months away the barriers of racial segregation in private and public school continued to crumble.

Last week here in our own state Sacred Heart College, a Catholic school, lowered the bars and admitted two Negro girl students. This marked the first time in the school's history that Negroes were permitted to enroll.

Out in Fort Worth, Texas, two Negro girls were enrolled in a Catholic High School, Our Lady of Victory. Their enrollment made the school the first mixed high school in the state.

Despite the withdrawal of five white students it has been reported thusly: "There's been no fuss about it. They are just there. I'm in the same class with one of the Negro girls and everything is all right."

Loyola University of the South, located here in the Crescent City has also indicated signs of moving in the same direction. Several years ago they enrolled Negroes in Industrial Relations classes in the evening school. However, at the college or graduate level nothing has been reportedly done.

The action by the above mentioned Catholic schools is in keeping with recent Papal decree. Catholic schools throughout the nation have been steadily accepting Negroes as normal human beings and in the true spirit of Christian principles where once this was not true. Similarly, Protestant schools and seminaries have been steadily lowering the barriers and accepting Negro students.

This positive action is convincing that enlightened public opinion favors the removal of segregation barriers in the field of education despite the rabid pronouncements by Governors Byrnes and Talmadge.

Thurgood Marshall, chief NAACP legal counsel speaking at a recent NAACP meeting in South Carolina, wisely sumed up the situation when he said, "The best minds in America. . .know that segregation is dead and that it is just a matter of time before it is buried. . .Were it not for a group of diehard politicians and people of goodwill but little faith, segregation would have been eliminated long ago."

We are therefore quite happy to see that the Catholic administrators of the above mentioned schools are people of goodwill WITH FAITH, and have eliminated segregation in their respective schools.

Segregation Ban Bids Chaos, Talmadge Says

Special to The Constitution

HOT SPRINGS, Va., Nov. 2—Gov. Talmadge, in a fiery speech here today, told his fellow Dixie governors that a Supreme Court decision against segregated schools would result in "the most foolhardy sociological calamity in our national history."

Bringing the segregation issue to the forefront at the Southern Governors' Conference which he heads, Talmadge said a high court decision against segregation would "obliterate" the "solid gains" made in race relations in the South and constitute a "step toward national suicide."

Although segregation was not on the official agenda of the conference, Talmadge's opening address and various questions concerning the regional education setup indicated that the issue will figure prominently in the discussions.

Declaring that race relations in the South are "better than they have ever been," Talmadge told the conference that the court should take notice of the unprecedented progress and "let us work out our own problems."

"Nothing could injure our national strength more than a blatantly unconstitutional and wholly unrealistic ruling by the Supreme Court outlawing state control over public education," he said.

The Georgia governor pointed out that Southern states are spending millions now to equalize schools, adding that the governmental programs of all Southern states are now being administered "for the benefit of all our people, both white and colored."

Nation awaits Ike's stand on school cases

Brownell's brief seen key to views of administration

By JAMES L. HICKS

NEW YORK—The most accurate indication of just where the Eisenhower administration stands on the question of civil rights will be shown by the amicus curiae brief which U.S. Attorney General Herbert Brownell will file with the Supreme Court in the reargument of the school segregation cases set for Dec. 7.

Mr. Brownell's brief, which will be filed on behalf of the United States Government and which, because of that fact, will presumably reflect the position of President Eisenhower as head of the government, will offer a direct comparison between the attitude of the Republican administration on civil rights and that of the Democrats under former President Truman.

The comparison will be drawn between Mr. Brownell's brief and the brief filed for the Truman administration in 1952 by the then U. S. Attorney General James P. McGranery and his special assistant, Phillip B. Perlman.

Fair Comparison

If Mr. Brownell's brief is stronger and argues more aggressively for an end to segregated schools than Mr. McGranery's, it would appear correct to assume that Mr. Brownell and the Republican administration are actually bent on bringing an end to second class citizenship, as Mr. Eisenhower has frequently stated.

On the other hand, if the brief is weaker and directly or indirectly avoids pointedly asking the court to end segregated schools, Americans interested in putting an end to segregation will be justified in assuming that Mr. Brownell and the Republicans are still using civil rights as a political football.

The weight and influence of the brief to be filed by Mr. Brownell cannot be underestimated by anyone interested in the case, particularly colored Americans.

No. 1 Case Of Century

In the first place, the school cases are generally looked upon as being one of the most important cases to come before the Supreme Court in this century.

Secondly, the brief filed by Mr. Brownell will be "as a friend of the court," which is to say that the United States Government, itself is sufficiently interested in the case to ask the court to allow it to come in and take part in the argument on the side of colored people who are complaining about school segregation.

The weight of Mr. Brownell's argument may be likened by some unto a situation where the president of a firm enters the personnel officers of his personnel manager and attempts to give argument as to why he does not feel that his personnel manager should fire a subordinate employee of the firm.

His Word Strong As Law

In the normal routine of business practices, it would be generally assumed that the president's argument on behalf of his employee would automatically assure him of not being fired.

But the relationship of the Supreme Court to the people of the U.S. and to the Government itself cannot accurately be stated as being that between a personnel manager, an employee and the president of a firm.

On the contrary, the Court is expected to hear the arguments of all concerned and hand down its decision purely on such arguments, and not because of the influence of those making the arguments.

This, then, is the importance of the Brownell brief.

Despite the influence which Mr. Brownell will carry to the Court as the representative of the United States Government, such influence will avail him nothing unless he brings forth a strong concise legal argument showing why segregated schools should be put to death.

Democrats Posted Target

The brief which Mr. McGranery filed on behalf of the Democrats in 1952 gives Mr. Brownell and the Republicans something to shoot at and leaves little to be desired insofar as strong arguments for the ending of segregation are concerned.

Mr. McGrannery, representing the United States, hit at the hard core of segregation which the Supreme Court itself has not seen fit to face in recent years.

The Democratic attorney general stood before the Court and argued in no uncertain terms that segregation per se is unconstitutional. This goes to the dead center of the cases and is one of the points on which NAACP lawyers are staking their chances of victory.

McGranery Brief Quoted

In his 32-page brief, Mr. McGranery said:

"The Government submits that compulsory racial segregation, is, in itself, without more, an unconstitutional discrimination. Separate but equal is a contradiction in terms. Schools or other public facilities where persons are segregated by law, solely on the basis of color, cannot in any circumstances be regarded as equal.

"The constitutional requirement is that of equality, not merely in one sense of the word, but in every sense. Nothing in the language or history of the 14th Amendment supports the notion that facilities need be equal only in a physical sense."

This language of the Democratic brief could have stopped right there for it left no doubt to the court that the Truman attorney general felt segregated education is unconstitutional.

Drove His Point Home

But in order to nail down and make his brief strong, Mr. McGranery went to the law to make his case in point.

"People who are compelled by law to live in a ghetto do not enjoy equality, even though their homes are as good as, or better than, those on the outside," Mr. McGranery argued. He cited the case of Buchanan vs. Warley, 245 US 60 to the court.

"The same," he continued "is true of children who know that because of their color the law sets them apart from others and requires them to attend separate schools specially established for members of their race.

"The facts of everyday life confirm the findings of the district court in the Kansas case that segregation has a 'detrimental effect' on colored children; that it affects their motivation to learn; and

"that it has a tendency to retard their education and to deprive them of benefits they would receive in integrated schools."

Cites Court's Own Rulings

He told the Court that similar considerations are reflected in the Supreme Court's own decisions handed down in the Sweatt and McLaurin cases.

Mr. McGranery's brief made it plain to the Court that he did not feel that the fact that most of the favorable opinions handed down by it in educational cases made it possible to have mixed graduate and professional schools and still maintain segregated public schools.

On the contrary, he argued that the 14th amendment made no distinction between graduate and public schools.

"The broad principle underlying the decisions of this court from Missiouri ex rel Gains v. Canada, 305 US. 337 to the Sweatt and McLaurin cases is that the 14th Amendment forbids the classification of students on the basis of race or color so as to deny one group educational advantages and opportunities afforded to another.

"To be sure," he continued, "those cases involved university graduates and professional schools, but nothing in the language or history of the 14th Amendment could support a constitutional distinction between universities on the one hand and public elementary or high schools on the other."

Separate-Equal Theory Myth

In his brief, Mr. McGranery attacked the Plessy v Ferguson case on which proponents of segregation in education base their present case.

In that case, the Supreme Court held that the separation of white and colored persons in the use of public facilities does not violate the 14th Amendment so long as the separate accommodations are "equal."

Mr. McGranery said "this judicial contraction of the constitutional rights secured by the amendment is irreconcilable with the body of decisions which preceded and followed Plessy v Ferguson and is not justified by the considerations adduced to support it."

Summing up his argument against the Plessy vs. Ferguson decision, the Democratic attorney general said:

Unwarranted Assumption

"In sum, the doctrine of separate but equal is an unwarranted departure, based on dubious assumptions of fact, combined with a disregard of the basic purposes of the 14th Amenment from the fundamental principle that all Americans, whatever their race or color, stand equal and alike before the law."

He then cited the case of Smith vs. Allwright to state that the rule of "stare decisis" does not give the separate but equal theory immunity from "re-examination and rejection."

There was one other point which Mr. Brownell's brief may or may not take up, dependent upon its desired strength.

This is the question of what procedures the court will follow in the event that it does strike down segregation.

The question, of course, revolves around whether all schools will be immediately integrated or whether there will be certain arrangements made for a gradual integration.

For Immediate Execution

The Democrats, under Mr. McGranery, left no doubt as to their stand on this matter. Thus he says in the brief:

"We agree with the Supreme Court of Delaware in No. 448 that in cases where separate schools are found physically unequal, the particular plaintiffs should not be required to attend inferior schools until such time as the state may complete an equalization program."

In summary, the Democrats, under Mr. McGraney, went into court with an argument designed to win the case.

The brief filed by Mr. Brownell will indicate whether or not the Republicans are out to do the same thing.

RESEARCH FOR SUPREME COURT:

130 experts work on 5 school cases

NEW YORK — More than 130 experts have been working all summer and fall with the NAACP legal department in preparation of briefs to be submitted in the reargument of the public school segregation cases before the U.S. Supreme Court in December, Arthur B. Spingarn, NAACP president said last week.

Mr. Spingarn's statement was in response to an article in the New York Times of Oct. 27 in which Arthur Krock of the newspaper's Washington bureau made an allegation.

Mr. Knock stated that "the Department of Justice ... is doing all the research work for those who hold" that segregation in public education violates the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

The Krock article went on to report what the Department of Justice and the attorneys for the states were doing by way of preparing for the case.

Ignores NAACP Lawyers

The omission of any mention of the work being done by the NAACP lawyers, Mr. Spingarn said, "cannot help but give the impression" that they are "not doing anything on the cases or the work they are doing is so unimportant as not to be worth mentioning."

As a matter of fact, the entire NAACP legal staff gave up vacations in order to work on the constitutional questions raised by the Supreme Court.

"While we do not wish to detract from the work being done by the U.S. Department of Justice and the lawyers representing the several states," Mr. Spingarn asserted, "we believe mention should have been made of work being done by others.

"The truth of the matter is that the lawyers representing the colored school children in the five cases involved have been continuously working on these cases since June 8.

Formed Group of Experts

"They have organized a large group of more than 130 experts, including lawyers, law professors, historians, political scientists, sociologists, economists and anthropologists who have been working on a voluntary basis throughout the summer and fall.

"Many of these men and women, of both races, are from the faculties of such universities as Columbia, Fisk, Harvard, Chicago, Howard, Johns Hopkins, Lincoln, Wisconsin and Yale. The lawyers working on these cases include men and women from 34 states.

"This research has been completed and is now being used by the lawyers preparing for the reargument."

Mr. Spingarn also pointed out that the Times columnist was incorrect when he said in his article that the Supreme Court had put no time limit for the filing of briefs.

The rules of the court, the NAACP official pointed out, require filing of briefs on behalf of parties appealing from lower court decisions three weeks before the case is called for hearing. Lawyers on the other side must file at least one week before the argument.

'LET CHILDREN FORGET COLOR':

Ga. educator says South ready for mixed schools

RICHMOND

A southern white educator this week declared that the South is "slowly coming to see that the best education is education together."

"I am sure that is not enough" the educator, George S. Mitchell, executive director, Southern Regional Council, Atlanta, declared before 400 loudly applauding teachers.

Speaking at the 53rd convention of the Virginia Teachers association, Mr. Mitchell chided those in his race who are fearful of the consequences of integrating schools and told the southern society means T. Brooks, assistant to the president at Alabama State college.

"If an industrial society left Mr. Brooks spoke in place of that everyone with swollen H. Council Trenholm, executive ears can't have jobs, he declared that those secretary, American Teachers with swollen cars, et cetera association.

left ear. A. G. Richardson of the state department of education presided at the session. Greetings from the State of Virginia were brought by Gov. John S. Battle, who praised the teachers for their efforts "to give every boy and girl a good education."

One of 3 Speakers

Mr. Mitchell was one of three speakers in a symposium on "Facing Up to Our Ideals of Peace, Freedom and Justice."

Other speakers were Rep. J. Vaughan Gary (D., Va.) who spoke on foreign policy and J. T. Friday.

14TH AMENDMENT PROVIDES POWER:

High court can end Jim Crow schools

By LOUIS LAUTIER
(By NNPA)

The NAACP, in its brief on reargument of the five school segregation cases, flatly tells the Supreme Court that it has the power in construing the 14th Amendment, to abolish segregation in public schools.

This contention is made in answer to Question No. 3—one of five questions which the court, in ordering the cases reargued, directed the lawyers to discuss in their briefs and on oral argument.

The question of the judicial power to abolish segregated public schools is basic to the issues involved in the five cases, the NAACP says, and for that reason it gives in answer to Question No. 3 first.

Basic To Issues

The five cases involve state laws requiring segreated schools in South Carolina, Virginia and Delaware, and a Kansas law which permits first-class cities in that state to maintain separate elementary schools for white and colored children.

Under the Kansas law, the city of Topeka had segregated schools through the first six grades. Junior and senior high schools in Topeka are not segregated. Since these cases were argued a year ago, the Topeka Board of Education has abolished its segregated schools.

The fifth case involves segregated schools in the District of Columbia, which has no specific law requiring racial segregation in the public school system.

The District of Columbia case involves certain acts of Congress, which the Board of Education has construed as requiring segregated public schools. It differs from the state cases in that it was brought under the Fifth Amendment which prohibits the federal government from depriving anyone of life, liberty or property without due process of law.

The state cases were brought under the 14th amendment which declares that no state shall deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, or deny to anyone the equal protection of the laws.

In its argument concerning the judicial power to hold that segregated schools violate the 14th Amendment, the NAACP contends that the constitutional provisions and statutes of South Carolina, Virginia, Delaware and Kansas are invalid and should be struck down.

"That the Constitution is color blind is our dedicated belief. We submit that this court cannot sustain these school segregation laws under any separate but equal concept unless it is willing to accept as truths the racist notions of the perpetuators of segregation.

"We respectfully submit that it is the obligation of this court to correct that error by holding that these laws and constitutional provisions which seek to condition education opportunities on the basis of race and color are historic aberrations and are inconsistent with the Federal Constitution and cannot stand."

McLaurin Case Cited

Among the cases which the NAACP cites in support of this argument are the McLaurin and Sweatt cases.

In the McLaurin case, the court held that the University of Oklahoma could treat George W. McLaurin, former professor at Langston university, no differently than it treated other students after admitting him to its graduate school.

In the Sweatt case, the court ruled that a jim - crow law school set up by the State of Texas did not afford Heman M. Sweatt educational opportunities equal to those offered white students in the law school of the University of Texas.

Considered In Entirety

The Sweatt and McLaurin cases, the NAACP asserts, "teach that the court will consider the educational process in its entirety, including, apart from the measurable physical facilities, whatever factors have been shown to have educational significance."

The statutes and constitutional provisions requiring segregated public schools must fall, the NAACP contends, because they are contrary to the basic premise of the Supreme Court that as a matter of law, race is not an allowable basis for discriminating in governmental action.

Such provisions are clearly within "the category of racism in state action" specifically prohibited by the Sweatt and McLaurin decisions.

The NAACP maintains that the South Carolina, Virginia, Delaware and Kansas cases are controlled by the decisions in the Sweatt and McLaurin cases.

Hit "Separate-Equal

NAACP attorneys also argue that the jim-crow school laws of these states cannot be validated under any separate-but-equal concept.

Except for the "mistaken belief" that the "separate-but-equal" doctrine is a correct expression of the meaning of the 14th Amendment, the NAACP asserts, the school segregation cases would present no difficult problem.

Ever since the Supreme Court announced the "separate-but-equal" doctrine 57 years ago, the NAACP says, proponents of segregation have repeatedly relied on it as justification for racial segregation as if "separate-but-equal" had become an amendment to the Constitution.

Limited Application

A careful reading of the cases where a state scheme of racism has been deemed susceptible to rationalization under the separate-but-equal formula show that that doctrine has had very limited application.

"Whatever appeal the separate-but-equal doctrine might have had," the NAACP delcares, "it stands mirrored today as the faulty conception of an era dominated by provincialism, by intense emotionalism in race relations by local and temporary conditions and by the preaching of a doctrine of racial superiority that contradicted the basic concept upon which our society was founded."

The NAACP also argues that racial segregation cannot be squared with the rational foundation of the early cases interpreting the reach of the 14th Amendment.

14 d (1)

Early Cases Discussed

The brief points out that the first time the question came before the court, racial segregation in transportation was specifically disapproved.

The first case to come before the court after adoption of the 14th Amendment was Railroad Company v. Brown, 17 Wallace 445. In that case, segregation was struck down.

While the 14th Amendment was not before the court, the NAACP notes the decision was in line "with the spirit of the new status that the colored man had gained under the 13th, 14th and 15th amendments.

Frustrates Purposes

The NAACP also argues that the "separate-but-equal" doctrine marked an unwarranted departure from the main stream of constitutaional development and permits the frustration of the very purposes of the amendment, as defined by the Supreme Court.

It maintains that that doctrine was "conceived in error." The fallacious and pernicious implications of the doctrine were evident to Justice John M. Harland, who wrote a brilliant dissenting opinion in the Plessy case, the brief says.

"Our constitution," said Justice Harlan in his dissent (excerpts from which are quoted in the NAACP brief), "is color-blind and neither knows nor tolerates classes among citizens."

It is the dissenting opinion of Justice Harlan, rather than the majority opinion, says the NAACP, that is in keeping with the scope and meaning of the 14th amendment as consistently defined by the Supreme Court.

No Valid Yardstick

The NAACP also contends that the "separate - but - equal" doctrine has not received unqualified approval in the Supreme Court.

While the doctrine has not been specifically repudiated as a valid constitutional yardstick in the field of public education, the brief states, in cases in which the Supreme Court has determined whether a state had performed its constitutinal obligations to provide equal educational facilities, the doctrine has never been used to sustain the validity of the state's jim-crow-school laws.

The necessary consequence of the Sweatt and McLaurin decisions is repudiation of the separate - but - equal doctrine, the NAACP asserts.

Separate Status Set Up

The history of segregation laws shows that their main purpose was to organize the community upon the basis of a superior white and an inferior colored caste, the brief states.

It adds that such laws were conceived in a belief in the inherent inferiority of colored people—a concept taken from slavery.

The operation and effect of such laws, the NAACP adds, has meant inequality consistent only with the belief that the people segregated are inferior and not worthy, or capable of enjoying the facilities set apart for the dominent group.

Feudal Social Order

Segregation originated as a part of an effort to build a social order in which colored people would be placed in a status as close as possible to that they had held before the Civil War, says the NAACP.

The "separate-but-equal" doctine furnished a basis from which those who sought to nullify the 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments were permitted to operate in relative security.

Administration Seeks End To Segregation In Schools

By DOUGLAS B. CORNELL

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8 (AP) —The Eisenhower administration called upon the Supreme Court today to outlaw racial segregation in America's public schools.

It went straight down the line with the Truman administration in declaring that separate schools for Negro children, even if they are equal to those for white pupils, are illegal under the Constitution.

But Virginia's attorney general, J. Lindsay Almond, told the high tribunal that it was being asked to make "a decision contrary to the spirit and intent and purpose of the 14th Amendment."

The amendment provides that no state shall deprive any citizen of due process of law or deny him equal protection under the laws.

The white-haired attorney general thundered that opposing lawyers were asking the court to amend the Constitution.

"They are asking you . . . to go farther than the Congress ever intended this court should go," he cried.

Have Power, Duty

Asst. Atty. Gen. J. Lee Rankin had told the nine black-robed justices they have "the power and the duty" to rule that segregation violates the 14th Amendment.

"It is the position of the Department of Justice," Rankin declared, "that segregation in the public schools cannot be maintained under the 14th Amendment."

Rankin took this stand under a barrage of questions from the jusment said Rankin was speaking for the Eisenhower administration.

The assistant attorney general went to bat against segregation midway in three days of momentous debate on the issue in the marble-columned Supreme Court chamber.

The momentous question before the court is whether to junk an 1896 decision that segregation is valid if equal facilities are provided for Negroes and whites, and to rule now that segregation under any conditions is unconstitutional.

Attorneys for Negro parents are demanding that the Supreme Court strike down segregation as such. Lawyers for four states and the District of Columbia contend that the court has no power or legal basis to take such a position.

Four Directly Concerned

The four states — Virginia, South Carolina, Kansas and Delaware— and the District of Columbia, are directly concerned in the cases now before the court.

But 14 other states which make school segregation compulsory will be affected by the court's decision. A ruling isn't expected for months, perhaps not until late next spring.

T. Justin Moore, a Richmond attorney representing Virginia, told the court the segregation issue calls for judicial restraint "if any issue ever has."

"In our humble judgment," he said, "there isn't anything you could do that would be worse than an adverse decree."

Atty. Gen. Almond supported him with the contention that opposing lawyers were asking the court to "destroy and tear down" the separate but equal doctrine, which he said does not offend the Constitution.

But Thurgood Marshall, New York Negro attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), said the question is "whether or not the wishes of these states shall prevail or whether our Constitution shall prevail."

The only way the court can rule for segregation, he said, "is to find some way that Negroes are inferior to all other human beings."

Lawyers for the states involved, Marshall contended, are "making the same kind of argument that was made before the Civil War." Today, he said, Negroes vote, attend colleges and universities with whites, and Negro children play with white children.

"But if they go to the same lower school and high school," he said sarcastically, "the world will fall apart."

Rankin said the Justice Department has accepted the arguments of James P. McGranery, the last attorney general in the Truman administration, who told the court a year ago that "segregation imposed or supported by law" in itself is unconstitutional.

McGranery asked the court to reexamine and overrule the separate but equal principle. He said it was wrong "as a matter of constitutional law, history and policy."

A brief filed by the new administration Nov. 27 had not gone that far. It said the purpose of the 14th Amendment "was to secure for Negroes full and complete equality before the law and to abolish all legal distinctions based on race or color."

But it didn't ask the Supreme Court to rule outright that segregation in itself is unconstitutional. Justice Reed pointed that out.

Rankin explained that the Justice Department's November brief didn't go into that because it was limited to an attempt to answer a series of questions the Supreme Court had asked.

The court set forth the questions after hearing three days of debate a year ago and then calling for rearguments. It asked the Justice Department and the opposing attorneys to tell it whether they thought Congress and the states intended to ban school segregation in putting the 14th Amendment into effect, whether the court has the power to abolish segregation, and, if it does end segregation, whether a period of gradual adjustment could be permitted.

Segregation near death: Ralph McGill

ATLANTA, Ga. — "Segregation is on its way out," Editor Ralph McGill of the Atlanta Constitution, wrote last week in his daily column.

Anyone "who tries to tell the people otherwise," McGill continued, "does them a great disservice. The problem of the future is how to live with the change."

Admit Segregation End

Commenting on the current segregated school cases, Editor McGill said bluntly, "What the various Southern state legislatures are doing as they busy themselves with plans to carry on school segregation without legal compulsion, is admitting segregation by law is finished."

"As a matter of fact," conceded McGill, "segregation has been on its way out for a long time.

Two Great Forces

"Two great forces,' declared McGill, have been at work on the problem of race One is secular, the other religious.'

"The Christian brotherhood cannot help but wince at the full implications and the jarring clash of his creed, with discrimination against any person because of color."

An Impossible Contradiction

"To send missionaries to colored peoples and then to argue that because of the color of skin the two races may not . . . worship the same God together is an impossible contradiction.

"It is this very fact which causes our Communist enemies, McGill warned, "to be able to present us in a bad light before the Oriental and Asiatic peoples.

Segregation Implies Inferiority

"They can say that our claims to Christian brotherhood and democracy are hypocritically untrue. Christianity cannot well afford to be on the wrong side of a moral force.

"The other influence is secular. Segregation implies inferiority," added McGill. Across two great wars now we, along with other free peoples, have preached the rights of men to be free and equal—we have encouraged long-oppressed peoples to rise.

"They have done so," McGill concluded, "and to date the Communists, with great shrewdness have exploited successfully many of these nationalistic revolutions."

Eisenhower signs bills extending Federal school aid for two years

Administration left free to implement promise to end segregation by September

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON — (NNPA) — Two laws extending for two years laws enacted in 1950 to provide federal assistance to schools in federally - affected areas leave the Eisenhower Administration unshackled in its efforts to end segregation in such schools.

President Eisenhower signed the two bills before leaving Washington for a vacation in Colorado.

One of these laws which would have expired in 1954, provides financial assistance for the maintenance and operation of schools in areas where Federal activities have brought a heavy increase in the school population.

The other law authorizes further Federal assistance in meeting school construction needs in localities overburdened by school membership increases since June 30, 1952 and up to June 30, 1954, which are due to new or increased defense and related Federal activities.

Promises Integration

Mr. Eisenhower sent to Secretary of Defense Charles E. Wilson last March 25 a memorandum stating that the "process of integration" in all schools operated by the Army will be concluded prior to the opening of schools in September.

Mr. Eisenhower disclosed in this memorandum that Army commanders were in the process of making a survey of schools operated by state authorities on Federally-owned property with a view toward bringing about agreement with local authorities for integrating such schools.

"If integration is not achieved," Mr. Eisenhower declared, "other arrangements in these instances will be considered."

Had Reservations

Interesting enough, Rep. Adam C. Powell, Democrat, of New York, a member of the House education and labor committee, had reservations to both bills, although he voted against neither one.

He voted in favor of the bill providing operating expenses of school districts affected by Federal activities, he said, because not to do so would hurt 400,000 school children in such districts and, indirectly 4,000,000 more who are attending schools built and operated under the two laws.

In a statement of his individual views, Mr. Powell said the bill providing operating expenses of schools in Federally-affected areas "clearly leaves integration up to the heads of the Federal department or agency which may be involved.

"In other words, where there is Federal property and a school is built and maintained on that property, the head of that property may proceed to set up a school system on the basis of integration, as long as the free public education which is provided is equal to that of comparable communities within that state.

'Implements Purpose'

"This section, therefore, directly implements the announced purpose of the President of the United States to do away with segregation in schools built and operated with Federal funds on Federal property."

Mr. Powell also said the bill did not "in any way condone segregation and is so worded that if and when the Supreme Court abolishes segregation by judicial verdict this bill will be just as valid."

Criticizes Bill

The New York Congressman criticized the bill providing school construction assistance in Federally-affected areas because "the funds allocated to the critical areas for the construction of schools are not in any way controlled by the United States office of education," He added:

"This means that schools can be, have been, and are being built for whites only in areas where there are large numbers of new colored workers and therefore large numbers of new colored school children.

"There is absolutely no guarantee in this bill that new construction will aid the problem of the children of colored workers coming to these critical areas," he said.

Of the 21 segregated schools on military installations but operated by local school authorities for the children living on the reservation, eight are on Army post, three are at Navy installations, and ten are at Air Force bases, as follows:

Maxwell Field Air Force Base, Alabama; Pine Bluff Arsenal; Arkansas (Army); MacDill Air Force Base, Florida; Elgin Air Force Base, Florida; Tyndall Air Force Base, Florida; Andrews Air Force Base, Maryland; Naval Air Station, Patuxent, Maryland; Naval Power Factory, Indianhead, Maryland; Fort Sill, Oklahoma.

Fort Jackson, South Carolina; Shaw Air Force Base, South Carolina; Fort Bliss, Texas; Fort Hood, Texas; Fort Sam Houston, Texas; Randolph Air Force Base, Texas; Reese Air Force Base, Texas; Sheppard Air Force Base, Texas; Fort Belvoir, Virginia; Langley Air Froce Base, Virginia; Fort Monroe, Virginia.

Court May Now Revise Calendars

School Segregation Cases Were Set For Re-argument Dec. 7

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA)—Due to the death of Chief Justice Fred M. Vinson on the morning of Sept. 8, the five school segregation cases, set for reargument Dec. 7, may be further postponed, the NNPA learned last Wednesday.

An informed source intimated that the whole calendar of the Supreme Court is now subject to change.

THE SCHOOL segregation cases were originally set for reargument on Oct. 12, but at the request of Attorney General Herbert Brownell, they were postponed until the December date to give attorneys more time for research and preparation of briefs on the questions which they were asked to discuss on reargument.

In addition to Governor Earl Warren of California, others who are being mentioned as possible successor to Mr. Vinson include:

GOVERNOR Thomas E. Dewey, of New York, a strong supporter for General Dwight D. Eisenhower for the Republican Presidential nomation and in the election campaign last year.

Chief Justice Arthur T. Vanderbilt of the New Jersey Supreme Court, who is being backed to succeed Mr. Vinson by Paul L. Troast, Republican candidate for Governor of New Jersey.

CHIEF JUDGE John J. Parker of the Fourth United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

Secretary of State John Foster Dulles of New York, a distinguished international lawyer.

John J. McCloy, of New York, former United States High Commissioner in Germany.

Regional Council Gives Answer To School Issue

The Southern Regional Council today gave its answers to some of the questions people are asking about public school segregation.

The Southwide interracial organization presented its views in a pamphlet called "Questions and Answers: The Schools and the Courts."

Dr. George S. Mitchell, executive director of the Council, announced that the pamphlet was designed to aid local discussion groups. "All over the South," he said, "people are wondering what the impending Supreme Court decision will mean in their communities. This booklet is intended to give them the background information they want in handy, readable form."

The Council's pamphlet describes the school cases now pending before the Supreme Court and summarizes the arguments made on each side. It also discusses the likely effects of the various possible decisions.

Here are some of the Council's conclusions, in brief:

Even the most extreme anti-segregation decision would have only a gradual effect on the South's school systems.

A decision upholding the "separate but equal" idea might create such a heavy financial strain that some Southern counties would voluntarily abandon segregation—particularly where the Negro population is small.

If the court orders de-segregation, the general teacher shortage will make any mass discharge of Negro teachers unlikely.

State plans to abandon the public schools, in event of an anti-segregation decision, would probably be unworkable.

Southern opinion is prepared, in the Council's opinion, to receive the ultimate decision of the court with calmness and restraint.

The Southern Regional Council is made up of white and Negro church, civic, labor, business, and professional people in 13 Southern states.

Future Bright For the Negro Teacher

Will someone please page the frightened Negro teachers in the southern section of the United States? We have news for them. Thirty million students returned to the classrooms of America this week, to be crowded into school facilities designed for only twenty million. In addition to this acute situation the United States census shows that the population is now increasing at a rate of more than two million annually.

But the main picture so graphically drawn by authoritative figures assembled by organized government is that in addition to inadequate classrooms for the mounting hordes of young people in this country, there is considerable scarcity of instructors. School authorities estimate that this semester between 500,000 and 650,000 students will get their lessons in shifts, because of the fact that while the population of the United States has leaped forward by 20,000,000 in the last decade, those who teach have for various reasons saw fit to leave the teaching profession, and potential numbers, who under ordinary circumstances would have prepared themselves for this field, are by-passing school work.

From the figures above, which cannot be disputed, Governor Murray and others who shed crocodile tears publicly because they allege integration of the schools will lose the Negro teachers their jobs, belong to that class who the Apostle Paul talked about when he admonished, "For now we see through a glass darkly." Such argument is the last resort of dissemblers and hypocrites. They know better but they seek to delude the black man struggling up to freedom with such specious argument.

White people from Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma, who have moved to California, are daily, without protest, sending their children to schools on the Pacific coast to schools manned by Negro teachers, and it will be the same way in Oklahoma when conditions become acute enough to warrant such action. It is because of this very situation a brilliant Negro girl is today teaching nursing art at the State Nursing School up on 23rd street in Oklahoma City, a unit of the University of Oklahoma.

The schools are just beginning to reap the post-war baby crop of World War II, and the national hysteria, to marry and produce children continued through the long police action in Korea. We are in for a long seige on classroom space here in America and Negro teachers are going to be the chief beneficiaries because of this internal situation here in America.

One of the reasons why Negro teachers will benefit just at this time eminates from the fringes of deep-seated race prejudice. In the industrial world, despite the ultimatums of President Eisenhower, there is grave reluctance to upgrade and place into white-collar positions Negro workers, who aside from their skin color, are qualified for skilled and technical labors. This field beckons to the white teacher each day. There is a type of independence aside from economics in the industrial world not enjoyed in the teaching profession and because of this white teachers are leaving the educational structure like rats leaving a sinking ship. In addition, many of them are entering jobs where ofttimes they make twice to thrice as much as they have traditionally acquired in school jobs.

One of the reasons why whites are leaving the school rooms is because of their love for academic freedom. McCarthyism, plus minor witch hunts now in vogue in almost every hamlet in the land, has made the smart white teacher who believes in free speech and free assembly, make the decision that has made this vast aching void in the teaching profession.

We are going to list here some of the tabooed subjects which patriotic breast-beaters have banned from classroom discussion. The rise of intolerance in this country has caused righteous indignation among many well-meaning members of the populace against the discussion of religion, sex, socialized medicine, race relations communism, United Nations and a score of other controversial subjects in the classroom. People who want to close their eyes to truth do not care to have their children coming home from school venturing views upon matters of this character. They have suddenly discovered when their children ask embarrassing questions that their traditional prejudices are grounded in unreason, so as a defense technique they demand that teachers broach no such subjects to their offsprings.

Now the Black Dispatch believes every one of the subjects catalogued above should be faced squarely in the schoolrooms of America. As an individual this writer has always felt he could affirm and defend any of his beliefs and convictions anywhere and at any time and that is the position America should take regarding its democratic practices. Solutions to problems are acquired and achieved through facing them and not through cowardly running away from the opposition. Reaction in this country should recognize that in fleeing from such discussions, admission is made that the fugitive does not have the answer to his opponent's interrogations.

In this dilemma in which America finds herself, the black teachers can find a haven of refuge, for whether he admits it in the open or not, down deep in his heart the white man recognizes the black man as the most loyal unit of this Republic. They tell a story about President Woodrow Wilson, regarding an experience of the Negro soldier during World War I. Up to the time of the disagreement the President had with the Kaiser, visitors to the nation's capitol and the White House could expect to find a uniformed white soldier standing guard at both places. The story, well authenticated, says the next morning after declaration of war, every white soldier was gone, and his presence was substituted with that of a black soldier. Woodrow Wilson, despite his southern leanings, had far more confidence in a black face than white. A black face was proof positive of non-Teutonic extraction. It was to him a symbol of loyalty.

Just now when America trembles because of the threat of subversion, those who are suspicious of what is taught in the classroom, will be more inclined to permit a loyal black man or woman to teach his children than to allow someone whose name ends with "xty" or "khox." Just plain old Mose Johnson or Hannah Brown is going to from here on out have a far different connotation to American white folk than ever before. Do you remember how white folk immediately started to employing Negro girls as maids following the kidnaping of Lindburgh's child? This is the type of thing we are talking about.

The white man may stick his head up in the air as he passes you, but that important person knows more about you than you think he does. He knows from the time of Crispus Attucks, up to the present moment, that there has been a trail of black blood that loyally has been spilled by black men from Boston Commons on down to this present moment. He knows through all of this scare about communism the black man has been invulnerable and steadfast. Even Herman Talmadge and Jimmy Byrnes would expose this fact if they were suddenly shoved off into a hassel where Woodrow Wilson found himself during World War I.

Already grown up

While Georgia's Governor Herman Talmadge was predicting before a nation-wide television audience that blood would flow in the streets if the Supreme Court ended segregated schools, another event of far greater significance was occurring in Charlotte, North Carolina.

Pupil delegates from Charlotte's six high schools passed without a single dissent a resolution urging the immediate abolition of racial segregation.

The pupils, assembled in an all-day human relations institute under the sponsorship of the Charlotte chapter, National Conference of Christians and Jews, agreed that "segregation is not something that should be argued for."

The youngsters, wise beyond their years, expressed puzzlement over why so many of their parents get so angry when the subject of racial discrimination is brought up.

"We hope that one day all prejudice will be destroyed," they concluded, "Maybe then we can grow up."

The future of harmonious human relations in Charlotte is assured in the hands of these clear-thinking young people.

Obviously, they have already grown up.

South Unprepared, Educators Told

End of Segregation Called Inevitable

GAINESVILLE — (UP) — A University of Florida professor told the Southern Political Science Association Saturday that the United States Supreme Court will find racial segregation unconstitutional.

But he added that the South is not prepared for the abolition of segregation on the primary and secondary school level.

Dr. Ernest R. Bartley, a member of the host University of Florida faculty, said from the standpoint of graduate school and professional levels, racial segregation "is dead."

This, he said, is not a matter of "policy" but one of "legality."

Discussing "the current status of elementary and secondary education segration cases," Dr. Bartley described the five suits now before the Supreme court.

"From the tenor of the question," he said, "the court is ready, I believe, to meet the segregation question head on.

"However, any decision handed down by the court may be neither fish nor fowl. I believe the court will find school segregation to be unconstitutional, but will try to word its decision in such a way that a gradual shift may be made in the areas now practicing segregation. And by gradual, I do not mean a matter of a year, but of 10 or perhaps 20."

Other members of a panel discussion on the question were Dr. Robert J. Harris of Louisiana State University, Dr. Charlotte Williams of Vanderbilt and Dr. David G. Monroe of the University of North Carolina. Dr. Thomas I. Cook of Johns Hopkins University was moderator.

Dr. Harris, speaking on the "equal but separate facilities" edict, said:

"I have concluded that once the Supreme court looks beyond the fictions of equal but separate educational institutions, the fiction cannot stand because disparities between the facts of higher education for the two races in the South are so great that even the most obtuse must recognize them."

He added "accordingly, in recent cases dealing with higher education, the court while retaining the separate but eqqual formula has applied in such a way as virtually to demand identical facilities."

Friday, the political scientists blamed "presidential Republicans" and internal squabbling at the local level for the GOP's failure to rally behind the Eisenhower victory.

The association, which ends its 25th anniversary conference here today, concluded that the GOP has lost much ground and prestige in the South since the November election.

Speakers observed that the situation was particularly prevalent in Florida where the GOP is bogged down in a series of factional fights.

Dr. Thomas J. Wood of the University of Miami said that the principal effect of the Eisenhower victory in Florida appeared to be "a rash of law suits among Republicans fighting with Republicans."

Delegates heard detailed reports on GOP and Democratic situations in Texas, Tennessee, Virginia and Florida.

They concluded that while those traditionally Democratic states went Republican in the last presidential election, the GOP has failed to exploit its advantage.

Church Women Fight School Segregation

By the United Press.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Oct. 8. —The United Church Women of America went on record today as favoring the end of segregation in all of the nation's public schools.

A resolution stating this stand was passed by 2000 delegates attending the group's annual assembly. The UCW represents 10,000,000 Protestant Church women in the 48 states, Canada and Hawaii.

Several delegates from Southern states said they also are in favor of ending segregation in public schools. But they said if the U.S. Supreme Court bans segregation and if immediate attempts are taken to enforce such a decision they would cause "more trouble than good."

Southern Views Of Eisenhower's Stand On Bias

The announcement of the Eisenhower administration's policy opposing segregation in public schools has been met with joy and sorrow in the South.

Leaders, white and Negro, Democratic and Republican, have aligned themselves for and against the administration's stand as could be expected of persons of divers political persuasions and racial connotations. Negro leaders have marked the administration's stand as heralding a "new day" for the nation. Southern Democratic congressmen took an expected unfavorable view of the president's stand as revealed by Attorney General Herbert Brownell in his brief urging the Supreme Court to declare racial segregation in public schools unconstitutional.

NEGRO LEADERS VIEWS

Negro leaders in the South handed the administration an endorsement on its stand. At Birmingham, Aurthur Shores, who heads Alabama's Negro Democrats, described the attorney general's stand "commendable." A similar view was taken by C. L. Harper, Atlanta NAACP branch president, who also criticized public officials planning to evade the issue if the Supreme Court declared segregation unconstitutional.

Mr. Harper, asking churches to pray for "divine guidance" of the court, said "We are not going to evade any decision of the United States Supreme Court. We are going to abide by the decision, and we think it out of place that public officials, who have taken the oath of office to enforce the law, should plan evasion of the law."

Mr. Harper's observation is based on announcements in some states that public schools as such will be abolished should the court declare bias in opposition to the constitution.

Dr. W. R. Strassner, president of Shaw University, Raleigh, NC, took an optimistic view, predicting that the high tribunal will decide in line with the attorney general's reccommendation of gradual abolition of segregation." The South will adjust heroically to a gradual change, he said.

LAUDED BY GOP LEADER

J. Wesley Dobbs, vice-chairman of the central committee of the Republican Party in Georgia, heartily approves the administration's policy. Of Mr. Brownell's brief, Mr. Dobbs who also heads Georgia's Masons said "I approve Mr. Brownell's stand and admire his statement. It is in line with those American democratic principles upon which this nation is founded.

"Enjoyment of these principles was not originally granted to Negro slaves," Mr. Dobbs continued, "but the 13th, 14th and 15th amendments to our Constitution were designed to give the American Negro equal rights of citizenship. They were put into the Constitution for that purpose.

"The trouble has been that the the Southern states have failed to obey these amendments among which is the 14th. For these reasons I think Mr. Brownell is imminently correct with the logic of his brief."

Brownell based his argument to the court on the 14th Amendment to the Constitution, declaring that its "primary and persuasive purpose" was "to secure for Negroes full and complete equality before the law and to abolish all legal distinctions based on race or color."

The amendment, adopted in the Post-Civil War period, bars any state from making or enforcing laws which abridge the privileges and immunities of any U. S. citizens.

GOV. TALMADGE'S VIEW

Gov. Herman Talmadge of Georgia said he feels that the stand taken by the Eisenhower Administration will solidify the South anew in the Democrat ranks.

Gov. James F. Byrnes, who supported President Eisenhower's candidacy but stands as a stout defender of segregation, said nothing about the brief of Brownell. Byrnes claimed that comment from him would be unbecoming while he is a delegate at United Nations.

A South Carolina law department official, asking his name be withheld, remarked that the Brownell action was "expected—unhappily so."

Tennessee's Republican chairman, Guy L. Smith, at Knoxville declined comment.

Dr. M. D. Collins, Georgia State School Superintendent, said that "any transition period" ordered by the Supreme Court for a changeover to non-segregated schools in Georgia would "not be long enough."

A North Carolina educator, Dr. G. H. Ferguson, director of his state's division of Negro education asks the high court to "go slow" determining a transition period. He contends that the ruling should consider the fact that state's plans "do not call for bankruptness" and that he does not believe "the court will take an abrupt course."

Representative E. C. Gathings, Democrat, of Arkansas, denounced the brief as an attempt to circumvent the will of Congress which, he said, has "consistently" refused to pass anti-segregation laws. He called for legislation to prevent the court from passing on the cases.

"The power to enact laws or to amend laws rests exclusively in the legislative department and not in the judical branch of the Government," Mr. Gathing said. "Congress has refused consistently, year in and year out, to pass laws destroying segregation."

LOUISIANA VIEW

Gov. Robert F. Kennon of Louisiana expressed confidence that the Supreme Court will rule that "control of schools is essentially a state function."

Senator Olin D. Johnston, Democrat, of South Carolina said Mr. Brownell was "out of place" and declared "the Justice Department has plenty of cases of its own without going into others."

"I can't see why the Attorney General's office should enter the case when the State of South Carolina is a party," he added.

Senator Clyde Hoey, Democrat, of North Carolina, also joined the chorus of southern protests. He termed Mr. Brownell's action "highly improper."

Progress In The National Capital

(From The New York Herald Tribune)

President Eisenhower, in his State-of-the-Union message last February, pledged himself to "use whatever authority exists in the office of the President to end segregation in the District of Columbia." There has been steady and substantial progress toward this goal. The latest development is the order of the District Board of Commissioners against discrimination in personnel matters. Merit and fitness are to be the only considerations; twenty-three local government agencies have been instructed that "there shall be no discrimination because of race, creed or color." The same policy applies to the use of various institutions, facilities and services.

All this is very much on the credit side, even though the commissioners did not go quite as far as they might have. The Fire Department, for instance, remains on a segregated basis, but only temporarily. Hope is officially expressed that racial integration of fire companes can be achieved in a few months. Segregation also unfortunately continues in schools and recreation, but these happen to be outside the board's control. Here the bars will fall in time, too, for it is an indefsible contradiction that any part of the national capital should maintain racial distinctions.

The fact is that the District of Columbia has been moving ahead step by step. One big change is that Negroes may now eat where they please, thanks to the Supreme Court. The Attorney General took an energetic interest in this case. Movie theatres no longer draw the color line; this is voluntary acceptance. The same policy is being increasingly applied in the District's public housing. Another item is that government contracts all contain a non-discrimination clause. These things have happened in less than a year. Taken together, they are a considerable achievement.

While much remains to be done, it is nevertheless plain that where the will exists a calm, bit-by-bit campaign leads toward the desired end. The will is there and the action as well. Thus the republic moves forward to insure the practice of equal rights and opportunities for all its citizens.

What About Segregation?

(From The Anniston (Ala.) Star)

Whatever decision the U. S. Supreme Court reaches after hearing oral argument starting next Monday in five cases involving racial segregation in public schools, matters won't be helped any by adopting an attitude such as has been taken by Roy C. Harris, Georgia political power and Talmadge supporter.

In a recent issue of his weekly newspaper published in Augusta, he lashed out at the liberal view with respect to segregation that had been expressed in an editorial written by student editors for The Red and Black, University of Georgia student publication.

Describing the students involved as "a handful of sissy, misguided squirts," Mr. Harris revealed a sad lack of discriminating taste when he declared that "everytime I see one of these little sissy boys hanging around some college, the more I think every one of them ought to be made to play football."

His philippic went on to say:

"But the time has come to clean out all of these institutions all Communist influences and the crazy idea of mixing and mingling of the races which was sponsored in this country by the Communist Party."

It also was argued that if the State of Georgia is willing to pay "a big price to educate its college students," it has the right to control "what is taught and what is done at the University."

The trouble with this sort of approach is that it substitutes emotion for fundamentals. It proceeds on the assumption that the South's institution of segregation, whose worth has been proved, now is being threatened by Communists, when the fact is that a complex point of constitutional law is being argued.

Opponents of segregation in South Carolina, Virginia, Kansas and Delaware have invoked the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, which provides that "no state shall make or enforce any law that shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States."

The District of Columbia case differs from the four others in that it was brought under the Fifth Amendment, a part of the Bill of Rights, on the ground that segregation results in a deprivation of "life, liberty and property without due process of law."

Also at stake, although indirectly, are laws of 16 other states, 13 of them, including Alabama, in which segregation is required, and three others in which it is permitted.

There is, of course, no way of knowing at this time what the decision in the five test cases will be. It well might uphold the "separate but equal" doctrine laid down in 1896 in the case of Plessy versus Ferguson, the Court's reasoning being that if further action is needed to serve the ends of fairness and justice, the legislative branch of the Federal Government has the responsibility of enacting appropriate legislation.

Or the Court might concur in the basic argument of the inflammatory brief filed last week by Attorney General Brownell, who held that the Fourteenth Amendment compels "a state to grant the benefits of education to all its people equally, without regard to differences of race or color."

At all events, the great need will be for members of both races to continue to show the good will and forbearance that have made possible a gradual and an orderly lowering of segregation barriers in recent years. Segregation, it might as well be admitted by everyone, is destined to be discarded eventually in our democracy, if that is the political system under which we wish to live.

But the authority of local officials to define school districts means that here in the South public school education will be, for the most part, on a segregated basis for some time to come, regardless of what the Supreme Court decides. And no member of either race ever will be required to meet socially with persons other than those of his own choosing.

Why, then, should a politician over in Georgia be so incensed at the liberal, factual way in which some young people have viewed the segregation issue?

N.Y. Congressman Attacks Government Appropriations For Jim-Crow Schools

WASHINGTON (NNPA)— The effort of Rep. Adam C. Powell (D., N.Y.) to keep the House from amending the Second Supplemental Appropriation Bill to provide $24,000,000 for payment to school districts for the maintenance and operation of schools in federally impacted areas failed last Thursday.

Mr. Powell opposed federal aid to schools in federally impacted areas on the ground that it was federal subsidization of segregation.

As the Second Supplemental Appropriation Bill finally passed the House it carried the sum of $20,500,000, added to the measure on an amendment offered by Rep. John E. Fogarty (Dem., R.I.).

Passed While Away

Mr. Powell told the House that the law authorizing appropriations for maintenance and operation of schools was reported out of the House Education and Labor Committee, of which he is a member, while he was away from Congress on a three-month sick leave.

Under the law, he said, sons and daughters of colored men in the armed forces are not allowed to go to schools built with federal funds. He also charged that there has been "a tremendous waste of taxpayers' money to support separate schools on the basis of race" under the law.

Powell said he was surprised to find how many requests had been made for funds to build colored schools by officials from South Carolina and Georgia when the Atomic Energy Commission began building its Savannah River plant.

Raid On Treasury

"The problem of inadequate schools for colored children had been there all the time," he said, "but these State officials apparently decided that while everybody was excited about spending money to make the H-bomb, it would be a good time to raid the Federal treasury to do a job they should have been doing all through the years out of their own State and local taxes."

Powell said he had complaints from families of servicemen who are forced to send their children to segregated schools outside the military post, at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, Fort Bliss, Texas, Fort Sill, Okla., and Fourt Belvoir, Va.

The fundamental question facing members of Congress, Powell said, is whether the Congress shall "continue to use tax money collected from the entire country to support a wasteful system of segregation in schools such as those located in Arlington County and nearby Maryland?"

"If we assume that the money is to be divided in half for the purpose of providing duplicate buildings, extra teachers, and extra equipment for colored children," Powell said, "It means that we are called upon to take at least a quarter of a million dollars out of the pockets of taxpayers who live in those parts of the country where there is no segregation in schools to pay for racial segregation in Maryland and Virginia."

Would Have U. S. Foot Bias Bill

WASHINGTON — A measure introduced in the House of Representatives by Congressman Wallace F. Bennett (D., Fla.) would make the Federal Government foot the bill for the building of equal education facilities for Negroes and Indians. Congressman Bennett said he felt that the government should provide equal facilities for these minorities.

Southern States Get Federal Funds To Build, Operate Jim-Crow Schools

Government Fights Separate Schools In Court While Appropriating Money Sustaining Same

By LOUIS LAUTIER
(For NNPA)

WASHINGTON

The federal government has crept into a program of federal aid to public schools without setting up any safeguards to prevent racial discrimination in the administration of the program.

Bills providing for federal aid to education, which have never been able to gain congressional approval because of race and religious controversies, carried at least two safeguards:

1. They would have required "a just and equitable apportionment" of federal funds to colored public schools in states having dual school systems, without reduction of the proportion of revenues derived from state and local sources.

2. They would have required such states to make available all sources to each local public school district or state school board for current expenditures an amount for each colored pupil in average daily attendance not less than the amount fixed as the minimum per pupil to be spent on white pupils.

2 Laws Lack Safeguards

But there are no safeguards in the two laws providing for federal assistance for the construction, maintenance and operation of school facilities in federally affected areas. Local school districts or state school boards may spend none of the federal monies they receive for colored schools.

At the time these two programs were set up, the estimate for school construction was approximately $225,000,000, and the estimate for maintaining and operating such schools was approximately $32,000,000 — and these are recurring expenditures each year in ever increasing amounts.

A total of $51,070,000 was appropriated for the fiscal year ended last June 30 toward operating costs of schools in federally affected areas. A total of $40,000,000 was made available for the current fiscal year, and the U.S. Office of Education is asking for a supplemental appropriation of $24,000,000 to bring the total for the current fiscal year to $64,000,000.

School Districts Increase

A total of 2,300 school districts are now sharing in these programs, while at the peak of World War II only 500 districts were sharing in them.

The awkward situation exists of the government joining with the NAACP and parents of school children in the District of Columbia in asking the Supreme Court to declare unconstitutional segregation in the public schools of South Carolina, Virginia, Kansas. Delaware and the District of Columbia, while, at the same time, it is contributing millions of dollars annually for building, maintaining and operating jim crow schools.

The extent to which states having dual school systems are enabled to equalize their schools for colored children with those provided for white children, with federal funds, may be gleaned from the first annual report of Dr. Earl J. McGrath, U.S. Commissioner of Education. on the programs for providing federal assistance to schools in federally affected areas included.

'Jim-Crow' States

According to this report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1951, "jim-crow" States receiving federal aid toward operating costs of schools in federally affected areas included.

Alabama, $413,197.61; Arkansas, $828.052.25; Florida, $497,091.14; Georgia, $2,341,528.82; Kentucky, $385,510.22; Missouri, $295,189.08; North Carolina, $116,670; Oklahoma, $1,215,317.79; South Carolina, $240,190.86; Tennessee, $216,810.14; Texas, $2,111,269.47, and Virginia, $1,905,430.99.

Under the law providing for federal assistance for the construction of public schools in federally affected areas, funds reserved for construction projects in the fiscal year 1951 included the following:

Alabama, $510,368; Arkansas, $1,357,863; Florida, $500,000; Georgia, $3,691,787; Kentucky, $871,827; Louisiana, $709,494; Mississippi, $714,505; Missouri, $2,050,865; North Carolina, $513,312; Oklahoma, $1,795,923; South Carolina, $3,078,847; Tennessee, $968,892; Texas, $6,436,924; Virginia. $2.719.848.

Huge Sum Needed To Bring Schools Up To Nat'l Standards

MONTGOMERY, ALA.— (SNS) — Some $3,305,000 are needed to bring the Negro schools and $70,000 the white schools of Wilcox County up to approximate national standards in school plant facilities and constructions. The State Board of Education made this report public this week.

This means that the Negro schools are about $3,235,000 behind the white schools within the frame work of the separate but equal doctrine.

These estimates were contained in a fed.-state school survey made of Wilcox County. About 80 percent of the population is Negro. Not since the adoption of the 1901 Alabama Constitution has any Negro voted in this county.

The vote commission of the Alabama State Teachers Association has as its goal increasing the voting power of the more than 8,000 Negro school teachers in Ala. Whether any effort has been made to break through the Negro ballot blackout in Wilcox County is not known. The ASTA vote commission headed by Prof. Henry J. Williams of Birmingham is expected to make its report at the March 26-27 teachers convention here.

NAACP officials here were silent on these revelations spotlighted in the figures released by the State Board of Education.

'Let's Quit Clowning About Segregation'

By Allen Rankin

WHAT'S the South going to do if the U. S. Supreme Court rules that school classroom segregation is unconstitutional?

Nothing, we hope, just nothing at all. Except, of course, accept the ruling, whatever it be, with quiet good grace.

Threats of violence are criminal stupidity. Trying to dodge the decision is slapstick comedy stuff. The two dodges suggested for Alabama so far propose that a state stick its face in the custard pie to avoid being hit by the tomato. They are:

1) That we abolish our whole public school system and replace it with "free private schools" financed by the state.

2) That we substitute a state-owned television system for our classrooms. "There would be no problem of segregation if instruction were beamed directly into homes," say this gag's sponsors.

Rankin

Ha, ha.

Number one dodge is about as subtle as a meat-axe. How long would it take the Supreme Court to throw it out? What sort of mess would our school system be in if it did? Or, for that matter, if it didn't?

Number two, the television dodge, far outstrips even the most optimistic TV addict's estimate of the powers of his play-pretty at present, and is otherwise dream stuff.

Of course, say its backers, there would have to be TV school reception centers spotted over the state for the convenience of families who could not afford private television sets.

Would anything prevent Negroes from attending these centers? Or whites from attending Negro centers?

And if so, would only those white children rich enough to have television sets in the home be exclusive enough to attend "Negroless" TV schools? Would only TV-affluent Negroes be exclusive enough to attend "whiteless" schools?

SCHOOL FOR SNOBS?

Wouldn't this plan turn out to be for the exclusive benefit of the well-heeled, tending to produce exclusive snobs?

Will children with big-screen TV sets be more amply educated than those with small-screen jobs? Will those with high-priced clear-vision screens grow up more clear-headed than those with cheaper, blurrier models?

Will any school teacher be able to survive her Hooper rating?

Only "the best" teachers will be chosen for television. But who'll say who "the best" are? Will one mastermind stamp his English, his history, his politics on a million children? Heil Hitler.

There's another reason we believe parents of both races would march to the capitol to protest the television plan. It has taken a couple of hundred years to evolve a school system that gets our children out of our hair for at least seven hours a day. Is anyone going to give up this Great Sixth Freedom and substitute, therefore, the parent-peonage home-school plan?

MOUNTAINS OF MOLE HILLS

Personally we think mountains are being made of mole hills on the segregation issue. We have long since lost this fight, if we consider it a fight. While some die-hards bawl about the "impossibility" of anti-segregation laws, the South is quietly becoming unsegregated. In many places in Montgomery Negroes work side by side with whites at the same job. Nobody says, or even thinks anything about it anymore.

While our separate public schools are desirable to both races, certainly the segregation tactic in education has been abused at adult level. It has always seemed to me wasteful if not inhumane that Negro medical students are not allowed to enjoy the advantages of our State Medical College. This duality at high technical level is expensive in more ways than one. In this particular case it impedes the Negro race in developing its own doctors. Thus we maintain a heavier medical burden on our own race.

Even if the court does rule that Negroes may attend white schools, we believe that, barring stupid violence, there would be no major change in the status quo.

Most Negroes would, by preference, go on attending their own schools, just as would most whites. We believe this would be particularly true in predominantly black counties.

Some few Negro children might be pushed into white schools by agitators. We hope these would be treated with the tolerance they would deserve as children.

White and Negro children associate amicably elsewhere, and do so in the oldest Southern tradition. Why should the presence of a few Negroes in white school or a few whites in a Negro school precipitate a major crisis?

Let us quietly—and uncomically—accept whatever ruling the Supreme Court may hand down. To do otherwise may be to execute a slapstick pratt-fall that will hurt more than the decision.

High Court Must Wipe Out School Segregation – Mays

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—"It would be a terrible thing for the United States if the U. S. Supreme Court confirms segregation in the school cases now," Dr. Benjamin Mays, president of Morehouse College, Atlanta, declared in a speech at the banquet of the eighth annual convention of the Homer G. Phillips Hospital Internes Alumni Association.

Stating that it would be a disappointment if the segregation of schools is upheld, the speaker emphasized that "it would do democracy no good in the minds of 2 billion Asiatics."

THIS STATEMENT was based upon observations made by the speaker during a recent trip to India, Ceylon and Egypt as a member of the central committee of the World Council of Churches.

Dr. Mays pointed out that the "old deal" was based on the theory that the racial situation in America could best be solved by complete separation in every area of American life.

The "new deal," Dr. Mays characterized as the "effort to make real the doctrine that there can be equality in a segregated economy."

There is a concentrated effort on the part of many persons, he stated, "to concede the fact that Negroes should have as good of everything as whites—but still should be separated.

"Such persons are sincere but mistaken and misguided," he declared.

"Equality in segregation is impossible because human nature being what it is, the group that has all the power and exercises it, has all the money and distributes it, makes all the policies and administers them, can never deal as fairly with the group not represented as it deals with its own members."

HOWEVER, points of view are hastening the end of the system, said the educator:

(1) The religious approach which sees segregation as incompatible with the best that there is in the Christian gospel;

(2) The point of view which finds it inconsistent with our democratic pronouncements as found in the Federal Constitution, and

(3) The world-view, which sees that America, the greatest democracy in the world cannot assume the spiritual leadership of the world in segregated economy."

Dr. A. M. Townsend presided as master of ceremonies at the banquet which featured as a guest of honor, Dr. J. L. Dickey, recently cited by residents of Taylor, Tex., as the most outstanding member of his community for the year 1953.

Other speakers included: Dr. Wells B. A. Forde, Los Angeles, outgoing president of Homer G. Phillips Internes Alumni Association; Dr. Robert Elman, chief of staff, H. G. Phillips Hospital; J. Glennon McKenna, director of public welfare, St. Louis, and Dr. William H. Sinkler, medical director, H. G. Phillips Hospital, who introduced special guests.

Named to succeed Dr. Wells B. A. Forde of Los Angeles, Dr. P. W. Beal of Los Angeles, Calif., was elected president of the Homer G. Phillips Hospital Internes Alumni Association for the ensuing year during the closing business session of the organization's eighth annual convention which closed here Friday, May 1. President-elect is Dr. Earl G. Robinson of Evansville, Ind. New vice presidents are: Dr. William C. Sessions, Clairton, Pa.; Dr. F. Earl McLendon, Atlanta, Ga.; Dr. W. A. Fingal, Cairo, Ill., and Dr. U. G. Gibson, Fort Arthur, Tex.

Dr. E. A. Dumas, Chicago, and J. M. Burnett, Fort Worth, were elected to membership on the Scholarship Committee. Other members of this committee are: Drs. T. C. McFall, Charleston, S. C.; A. M. Townsend, St. Louis; J. M. Walker, Winston-Salem, N. C., and Nolan N. Atkinson, Byrn Mawr, Pa.

Dr. Owen Bische, 4924 Lotus Ave., St. Louis, Mo., was elected secretary and Dr. William E. Allen Jr., 4951 Maffitt Place, was named treasurer. The new members were named to the board of directors: Drs. Frank Jordan, Dallas, Tex.; R. E. Tisdale, Montgomery, Ala.; W. E. A. Forde, Los Angeles. Other directors are: Drs. G. C. Lewis, Danville, Ill.; William H. Sinkler and L. B. Howell, St. Louis, and Mayo A. Harris, Toledo.

GENERAL
DISCRIMINATION

Decade of struggle is climaxed by school cases, Marshall Says

Dean tells race relations institute not to fear end of separate schools

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — The cases now pending before the U.S. Supreme Court which seek to determine the constitutionality of segregation in the public schools represent the climax of a decade of legal strategy, Thurgood Marshall, special counsel for NAACP declared in an address before the annual Institute of Race Relations at Fisk University.

Mr. Marshall was among 30 consultants giving leadership to the Institute, which recently concluded its 10th year under auspices of the American Missionary Association of the Congregational Christian Churches.

Earlier in the proceedings the Institute heard presentations by Drs. G. W. Allport, chairman of the department of psychology and Clyde Kluchohn, professor of anthropology, both members of the faculty of Harvard university.

The human relations workshop has been the focal point for more than 100 community leaders throughout the nation who have been convening during the two-week period to consider strategy to be followed in achieving "Next Steps In Integration."

Provides A Base

The conclusion of the move to expand opportunities in the areas of education, housing, and voting will not come until community awareness and action supplement favorable court decisions, Marshall said. Legal edict provides a positive base upon which direct action may be taken in the community, he declared.

Fear that colored teachers may experience widespread dislocation from their positions in the event U.S. Supreme Court decisions should declare segregation unconstitutional was held groundless by Dr. Charles H. Thompson, dean of the graduate school at Howard University.

"During the past three or four years desegregation has been attained in Southern Illinois, Indiana, Arizona, New Mexico, and New Jersey. Taken as a whole, the experience has been that there has been very little, if any, adverse effect upon the status of colored teachers," Dr. Thompson declared.

Pervasive changes within the South during the past decade are reshaping the nature of intergroup relations, Dr. George S. Mitchell, director of the Southern Regional Council stated. Among the factors particularly significant in the development has been that of the broadened base of political participation, in which the number of registered colored voters in the South has increased 440 per cent.

Remarkable Success

In light of this the new colored electorate is having remarkable success in putting candidates into city councils, as well as turning the tide away from the old demagogic appeal to race prejudice in election issues, Dr. Mitchell stated.

Although FEPC is now nonexistent on the federal level, it has been initiated in 11 states and 28 municipalities covering some 60 million people, Dr. John Davis, professor of political science at Lincoln University, Pa. declared.

Experience has shown, Dr. Davis said, that the time has passed when employers conceive fair employment legislation as being an unwarranted interference by government. State FEPC commissions have investigated more than 5,000 alleged cases of discrimination, yet, due to a high degree of public acceptance and conciliatory efforts, only five public hearings against employers have been held to force compliance, Dr. Davis assested.

Successful experience with fair employment programs has convinced many industrial leaders that FEPC has resulted in a more flexible labor force and has led to healthier economic conditions. A review of experience with fair employment legislation during the past ten years has shown it to have been an era of unrealized fears, Dr. Davis said.

CAN'T REPLACE THEM:

Desegregation won't cost southern teachers jobs

(Editor's Note: This is the second in a series of articles being published by the AFRO to let its readers know that colored teachers need have no fear of the effects that abolishment of the dual school system would have upon their tenure, opportunities for advancement, etc.)

Although our article of last week pointed out that all studies made of the desegregation of schools in the various states had no adverse effect on the status of colored teachers, the Journal of Negro Education, its Spring, 1953, edition, was quick to point out that all of these studies had been made in northern or border states.

What would be the effect of such a Supreme Court blessed situation in the south? the publication asks, and goes on to make the following observations:

The approach to a consideration of the future status of colored school teachers under desegregation in the south is the status of teacher supply and demand and the operation of residential segregation which obtains in most southern cities and towns.

It was pointed out that in the 17 states and the District of Columbia which have dual schools, during the year of 1949-50, there were 1,963 supervisors, 1,588 white and 375 colored; 15,117 principals, 12,295 white and 2,822 colored;

Elementary school teachers, 226,527: of whom 173,275 were white and 53,280 colored; high school teachers, 109,313; white 91,231, colored 18,083. Total: 329,840 teachers, exclusive of supervisors and principals, 258,479 white and 71,361 colored.

Training On Par

In addition to the numbers and types in the segregated schools of 17 states and D.C., it should be observed that the training of colored teachers is almost equal to that of white ones."

Some 76 per cent of the white elementary school teachers and 68 per cent of the colored ones possessed 120 or more semester hours of training.

In six of the states and D.C. the percentage of colored elementary school teachers who had such training exceeds that of the white, almost 83 per cent of the colored teachers possessing such training as contrasted with 78 per cent of the white.

Replacement Impossible

Just looking at these figures alone would suggest that it would be a very difficult task to replace any appreciable number of the 71,361 colored teachers with white teachers.

But we do not have to rely upon casual observation and common sense. For recent studies of teacher supply and demand indicate conclusively in some areas that not only is it impossible to replace colored teachers with white, but it is not possible in many instances to meet the current demand for white teachers in the white public schools alone.

Kill-Segregation Plea Assailed by Talmadge As a Stab in the Back

Brownell's Stand Called Blind Hatred

Atty. Gen. Brownell yesterday filed a 118-page brief with the U.S. Supreme Court urging that it ban segregation in the public schools.

Georgia Democrats immediately branded the act as "blind hatred of the South," "a stab in the back" and "divisive," although state Republican spokesmen remained noncommittal.

The Brownell brief charged the high court with the duty and the authority to ban segregation in the common schools.

PREVIOUS RULINGS

In answering questions put by the court, Brownell in effect told the tribunal that its ruling would be no more of a "political or legislative" decision than previous rulings outlawing segregation in Southern colleges.

But Gov. Talmadge and other leaders of the Georgia Democrats said the brief is wholly political and predicted the South is now forever lost to the GOP.

The court had asked last June whether Congress or the states in ratifying the 14th Amendment meant to outlaw segregation. The 14th Amendment forbids states to deny citizens "equal protection of laws."

The court also had asked if the judiciary could assume "judicial responsibility" for vindicating rights secured by the amendment rather than leaving it up to legislative or executive procedure in the states.

DETAILED "YES"

The Brownell brief—first expression of the Eisenhower administration on school segregation—answered both questions with a very detailed "yes."

The United States is not involved in the school segregation struggle except as "a friend of the court."

Talmadge issued a statement which charged "Radical elements are vying with each other to see who can plunge the dagger deepest in the back of the South.

"That is exactly why I asked the General Assembly to make plans now to insure the house before it is burned down," he continued. "If the General Assembly approves legislation now before it and the people of Georgia ratify the action in 1954, we will maintain segregation in Georgia schools, come what may."

PLAN BEFORE SENATE

The Georgia Senate now has before it a House-approved constitutional amendment that would allow the state to "make such laws as are necessary to operate a school system." South Carolina and Virginia legislators are considering similar legislation.

State Democratic Chairman James Peters said in Manchester that Negro school children are now discriminated against in the "Eastern and Northern states —some places driven out of the schools."

"If the court follows Brownell's reasoning, our 8,000 Negro teachers and 2,000 Negro bus drivers will be jobless and our state school program in a turmoil."

"RECKLESS, POLITICAL"

Peters, who is vice chairman of the State Board of Education, said the Brownell brief is "divisive, reckless and political."

House Floor Leader Frank Twitty said: "It is the exact thing you would expect from a man like Brownell — reckless, blind hatred of the South and wholly political in approach to a grave national problem."

Only Republican leader to be reached for comment in Atlanta was the editor of the Georgia Republican, James Hollingsworth, who earlier told a luncheon meeting the GOP "is making large gains in the South." He had no comment on the attorney general's brief.

"NO CURBSTONE OPINION"

GOP National Committeeman Roscoe Tucker of Dawsonville said he would offer "no curbstone opinion" on the Brownell answer to the court.

But Alabama's Lt. Gov. James B. Allen was quoted as saying that "many people believed General Eisenhower was going to be in favor of handling segregation on a state basis and they will be disillusioned. . . ."

Neither South Carolina's Gov. James Byrnes nor Louisiana's Gov. Robert Kennon, both of whom were among prominent "Democrats for Eisenhower," would comment.

5 CASES

The Southern Democrats joined in branding as "absurd" a nominal time limit of one year within which the 17 states practicing school segregation should comply with the Supreme Court ruling. The attorney general conceded that a "transition period" might be needed with such a sweeping decision.

The brief was submitted to the court preliminary to the reopening of hearings on Dec. 7 on five cases involving the segregation issue. The cases concern separate school facilities in the District of Columbia, South Carolina, Virginia, Delaware and Kansas.

Gathings Condemns Anti-Segregation Brief Of Brownell

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27 (AP)—Rep. Gathings (D-Ark) said today the Justice Department is attempting to circumvent the will of the people by holding that the government now has the power to abolish school segregation in the South.

"Congress has refused consistently year in and year out to pass laws destroying segregation," he declared.

Gathings said in a statement he "condemns" the Justice Department for filing a brief with the Supreme Court "which says in effect that the government at the present time has all the power it needs without any special legislation to do away with school segregation in the South."

"The power to enact laws or to amend laws rests exclusively in the legislative department and not in the judicial branch of the government," he said.

Asserting that he could not go along with the philosophy of those who would argue that all segregation of the races should be forbidden," Gathings said the constitution does not give the federal government any jurisdiction over the education systems of the states but that such jurisdiction rests exclusively with the state.

The Congress of the United States should enact laws especially providing that no court of the United States shall ever have jurisdiction to entertain any suit directed against the continuation and maintenance of separate schools for both white and colored races in those states whose laws provide for such dual systems," Gathings said.

Congress Refused

"Congress has refused consistently, year in and year out, to pass laws destroying segregation."

Gathings, a lawyer, further contended that the Constitution does not give the federal government any jurisdiction over educational systems of the states and that such jurisdiction rests exclusively with the states themselves.

Brownell himself cited arguments against federal invasion of states' rights in connection with the 14th Amendment.

He said that before the amendment was adopted on July 28, 1868, it was "attacked, not so much on the ground that it extended rights to the Negroes, but that it . . . enlarged the powers of the federal government to such an extent as to destroy the rights of the states."

However, Brownell contended there could be no question "as to of public school systems as they now exist in those states.

Gov. Herman Talmage [illegible] said bloodshed would follow such a decision.

118-Page Brief

On behalf of the government, Brownell submitted a 118-page brief in which he argued that it is the responsibility of the Supreme Court—rather than Congress—to enforce the "equal rights" provisions of the 14th Amendment by banning racial discrimination in the schools.

Brownell's statement brought a quick challenge from Rep. Gathings (D-Ark), who accused the Justice Department of trying to circumvent "the will of the people" in contending that the Supreme Court has the power to abolish segregation.

"The power to enact laws or to amend laws rests exclusively in the legislative department and not in the judicial branch of the

In Supreme Court Brief—

Brownell Asks 'Year Of Grace' In End To School Segregation

WASHINGTON, Nov. 27 (AP)—Atty. Gen. Brownell advised the Supreme Court today it has full authority and the duty to outlaw racial segregation in the nation's public schools.

Brownell noted, however, that some Southern leaders have predicted in pursuance of "popular antagonism" if the court should strike down the age-old barriers —and he suggested a one-year transition period with allowance for a "reasonable" extension.

The attorney general also noted in a thick brief laid before the tribunal that an anti-segregation ruling would have "national significance and consequences" requiring the revision of school laws in at least 17 states and the District of Columbia.

Arguments Due Dec. 7

The high court is scheduled to hear final oral arguments on the issue beginning Dec. 7. If customary procedure is followed, the court will hand down its momentous decision some time before the end of its current session next summer.

Leaders in South Carolina, Georgia and Virginia have declared that [illegible] against segregation would lead to the abolition this court's power and obligation to enforce all rights arising under the 14th Amendment, without awaiting exercise of the independent enforcement power granted Congress.

"Congress and the court have concurrent power, each within its own proper sphere, to enforce the 14th Amendment," he continued.

Judicial Specific

"Judicial remedies are specific and directed to particular cases and parties; legislative remedies are necessarily general."

Brownell emphasized that the Justice Department was submitting its views at the request of the high court itself and "solely as an amicus curiae" or friend of the court.

Cases now before the court involve segregation practices in four states — Kansas, South Carolina, Virginia and Delaware—and the District of Columbia.

Thirteen other states require segregation of Negro and white pupils in public schools, and three others permit it.

The pending cases were originally argued in December, 1952, when the Truman administration filed a brief opposing segregation in the schools. Then, last June 8, the high tribunal asked the Justice Department and all interested parties to submit additional arguments designed to answer questions in the mind of the court.

These questions chiefly concerned the original intent of Congress toward abolishing segregation in the schools when it passed the 13th Amendment, which abolished slavery, and the 14th Amendment.

The 14th Amendment provides, among other things, that "no state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States."

Followed Civil War

It was adopted after the Civil War primarily to protect newly freed Negroes.

The court also sought opinions as to whether, if it does decide to strike down segregation laws, it should permit a "gradual adjustment" rather than any immediate or drastic enforcement of the ruling.

Brownell clearly indicated he favors a go-slow attitude "to permit orderly solution of the problems which may arise" and to cope with "the difficulties which may be met in carrying out transition to non-segregated school systems."

Nevertheless, he said the court's decision should be carried out "as expeditiously as the particular circumstances permit."

In some cases, he said, the change-over should require only a few months. In this category he names the District of Columbia, Kansas and Delaware. In others, he said, "a longer period of time may be needed."

At Governors' Conference

Talmadge Warns Court Against 'Suicidal' Ruling

By Don Irwin

HOT SPRINGS, Va., Nov. 2.—Southern Governors, meeting here in conference today, pointedly refrained from commenting on a warning by Gov. Herman Talmadge of Georgia that invalidation of racial segregation in public schools would be a major step toward "national suicide."

Gov. Talmadge, chairman of the conference of thirteen Southern Governors that began here today, opened the meeting with an address vigorously assailing the prospect that a forthcoming Supreme Court decision might upset segregation laws prevailing in seventeen states and the District of Columbia.

The theme was not picked by any of the other Governors at an afternoon panel discussion of regional school problems. Gov. James F. Byrnes of South Carolina, a former Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, declined to comment on the issue in any way, but gave no indication that his state has altered standby plans to set up a system of "private" schools for white pupils if segregation is outlawed.

Gov. Talmadge's comments made up part of a general discussion of progress in the South, in which he declared that all government programs in the South "are being administered for the benefit of all of our people, both white and colored." He emphasized that "hundreds of millions" are being spent to provide "equal" school facilities.

Blaming the current action, to be argued next month before the Supreme Court, on "base political activity" aimed at upsetting "seventy-five years of sound judicial precedent," Gov. Talmadge sid an adverse decision would "destroy every last vestige of state's rights and constitutional government."

Farm Action Demanded

"These people might just as logically be petitioning the learned justices of the Supreme Court to rape the Constitution and desecrate the sacred shrine where it now reposes," Gov. Talmadge said. Such action, he added, "would divide our country in this grace hour when the whole world totters on the brink of cataclysmic destruction."

Speaking before a group that heard Secretary of Agriculture Ezra Taft Benson address a formal banquet session tonight, Mr. Talmadge was emphatic in demanding that the Federal government act promptly to "devise a system under which the farmer will receive a reasonable and fair return for his labors." He termed development of a "sound" and permanent new farm program "almost mandatory for the benefit of all our citizens."

Gov. Talmage's implied criticism of Secretary Benson's failure thus far to present a new farm price support program was not echoed by Gov. Byrnes in a later talk with reporters.

Voicing doubt of the validity of demands that Secretary Benson be dropped from the Cabinet, Gov. Byrnes recalled that "a lot of politicians predicted 9-cent tobacco and 5-cent cotton" before last year's elections, but prices of both these leading South Carolina products remain at or above 90 per cent of parity.

"If I'd made speeches predicting such a slump last year, I'd be mad with him, too," Gov. Byrnes said. He said he believed President Eisenhower would back high farm price supports.

Unlike some of his Democratic colleagues, who said yesterday they sensed that public confidence in the Eisenhower regime is slipping, Gov. Byrnes said he thought it is "doing well." The nation, he said, "can rejoice that we do not publish casualty lists now."

Discussing the school segregation question with reporters, Gov. Byrnes recalled that the South Carolina Legislature has before it a proposed constitutional amendment striking out the constitutional provision requiring the state to maintain public schools. The proposition has been approved by the voters and needs only legislative sanction to place it in effect, with the result that further state action on schools would be based only on statute.

Asked whether this is a step toward creating an alternative to the public school system, rumored since the segregation cases moved toward the Supreme Court, Gov. Byrnes replied: "That's the $640 question." He termed it a "preparedness measure," but declined to elaborate.

School Building Program

At this afternoon's school panel meeting, headed by Gov. John S. Battle of Virginia, Gov. Byrnes told in detail of the new $86,000,000 school building program his state has embarked on. Of this total, he said, 70 per cent has gone for Negro schools. He said no funds are alloted to localities unless they make provision for equal facilities for Negroes. The state, he said, now has 7,500 Negro teachers, paid on the same scale as white teachers.

Gov. Byrnes observed that the program had been opposed during the developmental stage both by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Ku-Klux Klan. This combination, he said, led him to think "I must be right."

At its morning session the conference heard reports on progress of work to improve Southern college and graduate schools through a regional education compact by which special technical schools are built up in the various Southern colleges.

STATE ATTY-GEN'L SAYS COURT WON'T KILL BIAS

BY PAUL W. BURTON

ATLANTA — (INS) — Georgia Attorney General Eugene Cook declared Tuesday that he does not believe that the U. S. Supreme Court will abolish segregation in the public schools.

Cook's statement was the first public opinion of any high Georgia State official on the segregation cases now pending in the court.

The Attorney General, who has prepared a "brief" to submit in arguments on the case in the fall, said:

"It is my firm conviction that the U. S. Supreme Court will deny the petitions of the complaintants in those five (segregation) cases, and reaffirm the doctrine of separate but equal facilities in the field of Education."

Cook, head of the National Association of Attorneys' General, expressed the belief that "two of the Supreme Court judges" would strongly oppose the remaining members of the high tribunal on the "separate but equal" doctrine.

He did not name the two. He said:

"It is my opinion that two members of the Supreme Court bench, whose names I must withhold as a matter of propriety, will dissent in very strong language."

He added:

"This speculative conclusion as to the dissenting opinions is based on my study of the thinking of these two justices in their past dissenting opinions regarding application of the 14th Amendment to segregation."

CITES 14TH AMENDMENT

Cook has just completed preparation of information that will be used in arguments in the case next fall. It presented evidence that the same Georgia legislature that ratified the 14th amendment also set up segregation in the schools.

This legislature, meeting in 1868, had 37 Negro members. The Governor at that time was a Republican as were the majority of the members of the General Assembly.

Cook's brief, asked for by Gov. James Byrnes of South Carolina, will be filed with the high court "as a friend of the court in response to questions propounded by the Supreme Court."

The Supreme Court, when it postponed an opinion on the segregation cases last spring, asked for such information from the five states involved.

CLAIMS "EXCLUSIVE"

Cook said no other state has documentary evidence that state legislatures which adopted the 14th amendment did not intend for the amendment to apply to education.

Speaking further of his belief that the court would not abolish segregation, Cook stated:

"It is difficult for me to see how the court could strike down a consistent doctrine they have followed for more than 50 years."

In case the court should strike down the doctrine, Cook said, it would operate "contrary to the legislative history of the free common school system of Georgia."

The Attorney General said such a decision would also eventually become a heavy burden on the taxpayers of Georgia, "who, through the present administration, are affording equal facilities for the Negro children in every city in the state at a cost of more than one quarter billion dollars."

Georgia is not directly involved in the cases now before the high court.

Cook explained that the quarter billion figure included local and state support of schools and the $140 million building program.

"NEGROES WON'T ATTEND"

He declared that should segregation be ordered out by the court, Negroes of Georgia would not attempt to attend public schools as long as Georgia provided equal facilities, he said:

"It's inconceivable to me that the Negroes of our state will further irritate the racial situation and place a heavy tax burden on the people."

Governor Herman Talmadge has refused to predict the outcome of the segregation case, contending that he could "not tell what they might do."

Georgia's senior senator, Walter George, has expressed the opinion the high court will abolish segregation. He said he based his opinion on the court's action in postponing the decision and requesting further arguments.

Southern States Get Federal Funds To Build, Operate Jim-Crow Schools

Government Fights Separate Schools In Court While Appropriating Money Sustaining Same

By LOUIS LAUTIER
(For NNPA)

WASHINGTON

The federal government has crept into a program of federal aid to public schools without setting up any safeguards to prevent racial discrimination in the administration of the program.

Bills providing for federal aid to education, which have never been able to gain congressional approval because of race and religious controversies, carried at least two safeguards:

1. They would have required "a just and equitable apportionment" of federal funds to colored public schools in states having dual school systems, without reduction of the proportion of revenues derived from state and local sources.

2. They would have required such states to make available all sources to each local public school district or state school board for current expenditures an amount for each colored pupil in average daily attendance not less than the amount fixed as the minimum per pupil to be spent on white pupils.

2 Laws Lack Safeguards

But there are no safeguards in the two laws providing for federal assistance for the construction, maintenance and operation of school facilities in federally affected areas. Local school districts or state school boards may spend none of the federal monies they receive for colored schools.

At the time these two programs were set up, the estimate for school construction was approximately $225,000,000, and the estimate for maintaining and operating such schools was approximately $32,000,000 — and these are recurring expenditures each year in ever increasing amounts.

A total of $51,070,000 was appropriated for the fiscal year ended last June 30 toward operating costs of schools in federally affected areas. A total of $40,000,000 was made available for the current fiscal year, and the U.S. Office of Education is asking for a supplemental appropriation of $24,000,000 to bring the total for the current fiscal year to $64,000,000.

School Districts Increase

A total of 2,300 school districts are now sharing in these programs, while at the peak of World War II only 500 districts were sharing in them.

The awkward situation exists of the government joining with the NAACP and parents of school children in the District of Columbia in asking the Supreme Court to declare unconstitutional segregation in the public schools of South Carolina, Virginia, Kansas, Delaware and the District of Columbia, while, at the same time, it is contributing millions of dollars annually for building, maintaining and operating jim-crow schools.

The extent to which states having dual school systems are enabled to equalize their schools for colored children with those provided for white children, with federal funds, may be gleaned from the first annual report of Dr. Earl J. McGrath, U.S. Commissioner of Education, on the programs for providing federal assistance to schools in federally affected areas included.

'Jim-Crow' States

According to this report for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1951, "jim-crow" States receiving federal aid toward operating costs of schools in federally affected areas included.

Alabama, $413,197.61; Arkansas, $828,052.25; Florida, $497,091.14; Georgia, $2,341,528.82; Kentucky, $385,510.22; Missouri, $295,189.08; North Carolina, $116,670; Oklahoma, $1,215,317.79; South Carolina, $240,190.86; Tennessee, $216,810.14; Texas, $2,111,269.47, and Virginia, $1,905,430.99.

Under the law providing for federal assistance for the construction of public schools in federally affected areas, funds reserved for construction projects in the fiscal year 1951 included the following:

Alabama, $510,368; Arkansas, $1,357,863; Florida, $500,000; Georgia, $3,691,787; Kentucky, $871,827; Louisiana, $709,494; Mississippi, $714,505; Missouri, $2,050,865; North Carolina, $513,312; Oklahoma, $1,795,923; South Carolina, $3,078,847; Tennessee, $968,892; Texas, $6,436,924; Virginia, $2,719,848.

School Segregation In Doubt Despite South's Turmoil

By JOHN R. HENRY
International News Service Staff Correspondent

The question still remains today whether the United States Supreme Court will abolish segregation.

Observers of the southern political scene agree that neither the action of Mississippi's Governor this week nor the statement of Georgia's Attorney General can be interpreted as forecasts of the future.

ERUPTION—The controversial issue pending before the high court seemed relatively dormant for the summer until Gov. Hugh White proclaimed he would summon Mississippi's Lawmakers into Special Session to deal with the equalization of schools for white and Negro pupils.

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook, meanwhile, predicted the Supreme Court will uphold the present law requiring separte but equal school facilities for both races. Cook pointed up earlier how segregation in Georgia was established by the so-called "Carpet-Bagger" Legislature that approved the fourteenth amendment establishing full citizenship for ex-slaves.

LEGISLATION—Just what can be accomplished to solve the segregation question by a Special Session of the Legislature apparently was not clear even in Mississippi. It was less clear elsewhere.

Governor White summoned the Legislature for Nov. 3 on the presumption that the U. S. Supreme Court decision will be handed down by such date.

He said that nothing short of his death will stop the special session, leaving the presumption that it will be held regardless of further postponement of the court's decision.

The Governor said the lawmakers will be expected to further equalize the facilities of Negro schools with those now provided for white children.

Equal schools for both has been the law of the land for, lo, these many years and, no matter if Mississippi and other southern states have failed to provide the same sort of schools for Negroes as for white pupils, it has little to do with the question of segregation itself.

Observers point out that regardless of how equal the schools for each race may be, the high tribunal now must decide whether white and Negro pupils may be educated separately.

They conclude that Governor White's legislature may be shadow-boxing with itself should the Supreme Court delay a verdict past No. 3.

OPINION—The prediction by Atty. Gen. Cook, meanwhile, can be no more than what he said it is—"A speculative conclusion."

Prevalent opinion in Georgia was voiced earlier by Gov. Herman Talmadge when he said it appears impossible for the Justices in Washington to disregard historic legal precedent or risk the social dislocations that an anti-segregation decision may cause.

Cook has been in cooperation with the Attorneys General of Virginia and South Carolina in offering added legal defense for the segregation system.

Despite his belief that segregation will be upheld, the Georgia law chief believes it would be unwise for southern states to take any decisive action which anticipates the Supreme Court decision.

COOK EXPLAINED: . . "If, by astretch of the imagination, the court rules out segregation as a system, then certainly the southern states will be given ample time in which to change over from operation of white and Negro schools to a non-segregated school system.

"That will give every state ample time in which to make whatever arrangements are necessary."

HOLD FIRE—Except for quiet preparations of stronger arguments to present to the justices in October when they have ordered further discussion of the case, most southern states are "holding their fire," so to speak, until they can see what, if anything, there is to aim upon.

Governor White probably can explain somehow that this idea is the intention of a special legislative session in Mississippi, but, in any case, the segregation question can not be answered until the Supreme Court has its say-so.

End of segregation in schools urged

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Oct. 9—(AP)—Elimination of racial segregation in the nation's schools was called for yesterday by the United Church Women's sixth assembly.

"Christian women face the immediate urgency of finding ways to meet the impact" of a decision on segregation in schools now pending in the U. S. Supreme Court, a resolution adopted by the delegates said.

The UCW is a department of the National Council of Churches in the U. S. A. and is said to represent 10 million Protestant and Eastern orthodox church women in the United States, Canada and Hawaii.

'BIG SHOTS' NEEDN'T TREMBLE:

Mixing schools won't hit principals, supervisors

(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fourth in a series of articles being published by the AFRO to let its readers know that colored teachers need have no fear of the effects that abolishment of the dual school system would have upon their tenure, opportunities for advancement, etc.)

Although we have shown in our first three articles that any attempt to replace colored school teachers with white ones would be practically impossible, it is pointed out that the situation relative to the future status of colored principals and supervisors is not so clear and so certain.

The Journal of Negro Education, in its spring, 1953, edition lists 17 segregation - education states and the District of Columbia, with at least 1,588 white and 375 colored supervisors, and 12,295 white and 2,822 colored principals.

What of their future? The article asks and answers that frankly the answer to that question cannot be much more than a reasonable conjecture.

It points out, however, that in seven of those states and the District of Columbia, there are tenure laws which would make it impossible for authorities to remove these officials merely for "capricious reasons."

In the second place, the article goes on, the fact of residential segregation will in the beginning result in a majority of colored schools remaining predominately colored, with predominantly, if not exclusively, all-colored faculties.

In such an event, it is quite likely that the colored principals and many of the colored supervisors will be continued, as was done in East St. Louis.

To be perfectly candid about the matter, the Journal states, this would be done not so much because of any consideration of the merits or seniority of colored principals as the fact that most white principals would not prefer the jobs except as stepping stones to better jobs in predominantly white schools.

Thus there will probably not be much competition for these positions from whites.

From an analysis of all available data, the study goes on to say, it seems unquestionable that the future status of the colored school teacher and principal, under desegregation of public schools, should not cause concern.

Ike Ready To Oppose Segregation

By W. H. LAWRENCE
New York Times News Service
Special to The Atlanta Constitution

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8—A high Eisenhower administration source said today it is a reasonably safe assumption that the Justice department will oppose segregation by color in the public schools.

There are five major cases attacking segregation now before the Supreme Court, which has requested the government's views in arguments which will be heard one month from yesterday.

This has brought the federal government directly into the cases for the first time.

An official, familiar with the legal study being given these cases under the direction of Herbert Brownell Jr., attorney general, said that he had never heard it suggested that the administration would support segregation.

HOT POTATO

This decision is likely to have important political as well as legal repercussions because of the explosive nature of the question of separate schools for Negro and white children throughout the South.

It was President Truman's persistent advocacy of F.E.P.C. and other civil rights legislation that caused the Southern revolt against him and the Democratic Party in 1948 and again in 1952.

However, the Truman administration never argued the school segregation issue before the high court, nor did it have the opportunity to take a position there formally in the matter.

CRACKS SOUTH

President Eisenhower, an advocate during the 1952 campaign of what he called "gradualism" in dealing with civil rights issues, was able during the election to crack the "Solid South." He carried Virginia, Florida, Texas and Tennessee, and came very close, indeed, to victory in South Carolina and Kentucky.

Democratic leaders believe that if the Eisenhower administration opposes segregation it will remove many of the causes for North-South tension within the Democratic Party and will, to a large degree undermine the gains the Republicans have been making in the South.

The Eisenhower administration was brought into the school segregation question shortly after it took office because the Supreme Court apparently was unable to decide cases that had been brought before it before the Republicans came back in national power.

If the court had been able to decide these cases on the basis of the arguments heard originally last December—one month before Eisenhower's inauguration—it would not have been necessary for the Eisenhower administration to face up to these ticklish legal and political questions.

The cases attacking the legality of separate schools for Negroes and whites were brought under provisions of the Fourteenth Amendment, adopted in "reconstruction days," which provides that no state may make or enforce any law abridging the privileges or immunities of any citizen, depriving any person of life, liberty or property without due process, or in any way denying any person the equal protection of the laws.

Just before adjournment last June, the Supreme Court posed five major questions to counsel on the segregation issue and invited the attorney general's views on behalf of the federal government. With the reargument only about a month away, the Justice department hopes to complete its answers within the next two or three weeks so the court and interested parties may have its views in advance of the second hearing.

In general terms, the legal questions to which the attorney general's staff now is preparing answers are:

1. What evidence, if any, is there that the Congress or the state legislatures or conventions which ratified the Fourteenth Amendment understood that it might or might not abolish segregation?

2. If the Congress and the state legislatures did not understand that compliance with the Fourteenth Amendment required immediate abolition of segregation, was it the understanding of those who wrote the amendment that future Congresses might abolish segregation or that it would be within the power of the judiciary to construe the amendment by itself as abolishing segregation?

3. Is it within the judicial power to abolish segregation?

4. If so, must a decree necessarily be ordered immediately admitting Negroes to schools of their own choice in their own geographical school districts or is it possible for the court to permit a gradual adjustment from existing segregated systems to a system not based on color distinctions?"

5. If the court decides that segregation is unconstitutional, should the court hand down its own detailed decree or should it appoint a special master to decide the issue or should it send it back to the lower courts to fix the exact details of the changeover?

Baptists Bar Study on Segregation

MACON, Ga., Nov. 19 (AP)—The Georgia Baptist Convention today tabled a motion calling for a study of segregation in public schools.

The Rev. Ed A. Holmes of Conyers presented the resolution, which was tabled by a standing vote.

CHRISTIAN POLICY

Holmes had suggested the study be made to determine "the relation of the forthcoming Supreme Court decision on racial segregation in public schools to a Christian policy regarding the education of Georgia's children."

Before the annual session adjourned shortly after noon, the convention passed a resolution charging that the United States has "unwittingly given approval to religious intolerance" in making a military alliance with Spain.

The resolution charged that there is no religious liberty in Spain (which is predominantly Catholic) and that the country has allowed religious persecution.

Another resolution was passed expressing opposition to gambling in all forms and complimenting Fulton County Sol. Gen. John D. Kelly for destroying a large number of slot machines in his county.

FULTON GAMBLING

However, the resolution drew an amendment and comment from Dr. Louie D. Newton, pastor of Atlanta's Druid Hills Baptist Church.

"I want to amend that resolution so that people won't get the idea that all the slot machines in Fulton County have been destroyed. The report of the number destroyed was only a minority report and there are still 479 one-armed bandits now being operated in the county," the delegate said.

He charged that Atlanta newspapers sent photographers to Hinesville to take pictures of the recent gambling situation there "but there are 479 operating within the shadow of the newspapers in Atlanta and they didn't take any pictures of that."

The resolution as passed was amended to include the hope that all slot machines in the Atlanta area would be destroyed.

COMMITTEE ELECTION

Elected to the executive committee of the convention were C. DeWitt Matthews; Macon; Charles Davis, Kingsland; M. C. Gardner, Americus; Henry Wilkinson, Sandersville, and C. T. Ward of Montezuma.

Atlanta's Mayor Hartsfield and Roy Sewell and Paul Ackridge, also of Atlanta, were elected to the board of trustees of the Georgia Baptist Hospital.

Dr. Dick H. Hall Jr., pastor of the First Baptist Church in Decatur, told messengers of the convention that six colleges supported by the denomination in Georgia are not receiving sufficient funds to meet the competition of state institutions.

He said Baptists are investing $100 per student in their schools as compared to $810 a student in the University System.

A Time of Decision

Eisenhower Is In A Dilemma Over Segregation In Schools

By ROBERT L. RIGGS

WASHINGTON—The hour is virtually upon the Eisenhower Administration when it must decide under which banner it will march on the segregation issue—civil rights or States' rights.

That choice must be made, certainly before early January, and probably before December 7. That first Monday in December is the date set by the Supreme Court to hear arguments a second time on the issue of abolishing racial segregation in the public schools of 21 states and the District of Columbia. There is a strong probability, however, that the case will be put off until January.

One thing is sure—President Eisenhower and Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Jr., can't be in favor both of States' rights and of federal action to forbid separate schools for Negroes and whites.

It is, of course, a political issue of importance far beyond its effect upon the success of the Democratic or Republican Party. The Supreme Court frankly recognized it as a political problem when it delayed the original hearings until a month after the 1952 presidential election.

Political Issues Recognized

The court again recognized the political issues involved when it set new arguments for December 7 on five points raised by the court. The fact that there are to be new arguments gives the court a chance to find out whether the Eisenhower Administration is going to take its stand, as did the Truman Administration, in strong support of ending segregation in public schools, whether it will join Governor James F. Byrnes and Governor Herman Talmadge in opposition to a federal ban on segregation, or whether it will stand neutral.

The Supreme Court doesn't operate in a vacuum; nor does it give out edicts without some thought to their results. If the President and the Attorney General display an inclination to stand aloof from the school-segregation issue, their attitude might very well influence the stand to be taken by the court.

Certainly the court would be hesitant about giving a decision which held segregation to be unconstitutional unless it had some assurance that the Federal Government would be interested in enforcing that decision. Nothing would be gained if an antisegregation ruling were left for enforcement in the hostile hands of officials of Southern states.

On the other hand, it is obvious from at least one of the five questions on which the court wants more light that it is concerned over whether the Federal Government would insist, after a court decision, that the Southern schools be made over in 24 hours, or whether the states would be given time to meet the issue in an orderly manner.

May Hold Up for Warren

Because the attitude to be taken by the Chief Justice toward the school cases is so important, it is considered likely that the new arguments will be put off until the Senate, meeting in January, has confirmed Earl Warren as successor to the late Fred M. Vinson.

Ideologically, President Eisenhower is in a difficult spot. He probably has talked more about giving the Government back to the States than has any President since the Civil War. Yet he is a firm supporter of full citizenship for Negroes.

Which it shall be—civil rights or States' rights—is a question that Brownell obviously would not try to decide without full consultation with the President.

If Eisenhower tells Brownell to argue before the court against school segregation, he will deeply offend those Southerners who were so ardent in his support in 1952. He might put an end to the blossoming hopes for an effective Republican Party in the South.

But if he has Brownell reverse the stand taken by the Truman Administration, or if he has him do even less than Truman's Department of Justice did against segregation, Eisenhower will be extending an open invitation to the Negro voters of Northern and border states to renew their New Deal allegiance to the Democratic Party in next fall's Congressional elections.

The Move To Abolish The Public Schools

When Abraham Lincoln was elected president of the United States the South didn't wait. It jumped the gun and immediately seceded from the Union. This was done on the premise of state rights, where the state righters claimed too much—the right to secede from the Union.

Despite the assurance of President Lincoln that "I have no intention of interfering with slavery in the states," the South went right on and set up an independent government, with a president and an official family. There were on the scene many strong southerners who sensed that the South could not succeed in a rebellion against the Union and opposed secession. Among these was Alexander H. Stephens of Georgia, who despite his opposition to the cause, took over the vice-presidency of the seceded states.

President Lincoln undertook to whip the South back into the Union and in the course of this struggle he seized the slaves as contrabands of war and issued his famous Emancipation Proclamation. The South had won its Dred Scott case; this time Mr. Lincoln responded with a war.

Now, somewhat in a similiar pattern, for many months before the Supreme Court began its hearing on the segregation case, some southern states began to discuss ways and means of setting up private schools to circumvent the decision of the Supreme Court to abolish segregation, which they anticipate.

Georgia, South Carolina and Mississippi officially have taken steps toward setting up private schools. These schools would be run by private interests under leases, just as warehouses, ginneries and naval stores.

Just as Stephens and men of his school prophesied, the Confederacy was to collapse with all the attendant poverty, devastation and internal strife inevitable to a conquered country, there are citizens in Georgia who contend that the scheme is unworkable and will eventually be laid aside.

We are today witnessing an arm of that crisis left in segregation, a holdover meant to be an ever reminder that if slavery itself had gone, there was still a boundary to divide citizens in first and second classes.

The public school system was hailed upon in its establishment as one of the greatest strokes of this country. A free education offered to the citizens of the nation was the foundation to a real Democracy. The schools were called public, a meaning that said of itself that no citizen would be barred.

Now, we come to the sad plight of a threat to abolish the public school system. These schools would from now on be known as private schools. Every one knows what the little word private means. Private property, whether owned or leased, is private just the same. An individual or corporation is vested with certain individual rights in the regulation of private interest and is fully in authority to set up what might be termed as trespassing.

Again, the leasee of public property, to a large extent will have a say as to who occupies the premises. As the purpose is to keep one group out of a certain place, the leasee can as easily and legitimately eject white children if and when he so desired. In other words, a two-edged axe cuts both ways—that's all.

Surely the citizens of Georgia are not yet ready to take a gamble in the dark at something so untenable as the letting of the public schools to private operators.

There must be a Department of leases, Commissions to regulate the system, accreditation agencies to clear with the educational systems for rating, an independent standard as to the certification of teachers (as private interest might choose to do their own selection of teachers). There is also the problem of fixing retirement schedules and requirements, to say nothing about the many other agencies that are bound to dig deep in the taxpayers' pockets for this venture that is bound in the end to be overtaken by the courts if segregation is actually outlawed!

Flirting a certain disaster, that admits on its face that its purpose is to circumvent the courts, is the offing placed before the people of Georgia in the form of an Amendment for the abolishing of the public school system.

On the face this is bad faith; it is the casting of an aspersion at the court even before it renders a decision. It runs exactly the pattern set up by the southern states back in the sixtie. when even before the Emancipation of the Negro, they "jumped the gun" and pushed "States' Rights" over the borders into the "the right to secede." That right was tested on the field of battle and every man and woman know the disastrous results.

The Governor and the General Assembly have spoken. Now it's up to the people to speak. The decision now is up to the voters of the state and the verdict will be made at the ballot box. The public school is the life vein of Democracy. It is one of the state's most precious heritages and must be preserved for humanity.

Let every voter see that his registration has not been overtaken by the statute of limitation, to the end of being ready to strike in defense of what it took years to create and perfect.

Next November the people will speak.

SEGREGATION ARGUMENTS PUT BEFORE HIGH COURT

First Briefs Discuss Constitutional Points and Power of the Court

By LUTHER A. HUSTON
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21—An issue that has an overlay of civil rights, an undertone of politics and a hard core of constitutional law faces the Supreme Court in the school segregation cases now before it.

The issue began to sharpen this week as first briefs were filed in response to the court's request in June that the parties involved discuss it in written and oral arguments from certain specific premises. Additional briefs are to be filed and the oral arguments are set for Dec. 7.

Some inkling of the lines that the principals will take in setting forth their views has been afforded by the briefs already filed.

There are some observers who profess to see in the court's decision in the baseball cases, handed down Nov. 9, a possible indication of how it will rule in the segregation cases. Those who had the hardihood to predict, however, coupled with their forecast a reminder that the crystal ball always fogs up when called upon to tell what the Supreme Court will do.

Gist of the Amendment

There are five cases before the court in which the constitutionality of racial segregation in public schools is involved. Except in one case in Delaware, they came to the high tribunal on appeal from lower court rulings that state laws or constitutional provisions did not violate the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

This amendment provides that no state shall make or enforce any law that abridges the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States.

Parents or guardians of Negro school children in South Carolina, Virginia, Kansas and the District of Columbia are contesting in the Supreme Court lower court edicts that segregation laws of those states and the district do not offend the Federal Constitution. Delaware is appealing from a decision of its State Supreme Court ordering Negroes admitted to white schools in New Castle County.

Although the suits, except that by Delaware, were filed in the names of individual Negroes in the three states and in the District of Columbia, they are being pressed in the Supreme Court by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and other groups, some of them composed of white people, which are in the forefront of the civil rights movement. Negro lawyers predominate in the legal battery that will participate in the oral arguments on the non-segregation side.

Lawyers for the civil rights groups stated the basic issue in a consolidated brief filed with the Supreme Court last Monday. They put it this way: "The substantive question, common to all [of the cases] is whether a state can, consistently with the Constitution, exclude children, solely on the ground that they are Negroes, from public schools which otherwise they would be qualified to attend."

Questions by the Court

The court asked the participants in the controversy to discuss two major questions:

1. Whether Congress, in submitting the Fourteenth Amendment, and the states, in ratifying it, understood that it would abolish segregation in the public schools.

To this question the response of the lawyers representing the civil rights groups was:

"The evidence makes clear that it was the intent of the proponents of the Fourteenth Amendment, and the substantial understanding of its opponents, that it would, of its own force, prohibit all state action predicated upon race or color."

The Attorney General of Delaware, in the only brief yet filed on behalf of a state, asserted, however, that the debates in the Thirty-ninth Congress, which submitted the Amendment in 1866, "afford a clear indication" that neither Congress nor the states intended it to outlaw public school segregation.

2. Whether the court has power to order abolition of segregation.

The lawyers for the civil rights groups said that it did. Delaware's Attorney General told the court that it had no power to do by judicial decree what Congress had not done by legislation. He contended that the problem was a legislative, not a judicial one.

This argument is regarded as a line that probably will be followed by other states in briefs that are yet to be filed and in the arguments before the justices on the bench. It strengthened a belief prevalent among many who have followed the cases since they first came to the Supreme Court, that the nine justices would be urged to leave the segregation problem where it stands, so far as the courts are concerned, and put it up to Congress to make changes in the laws if it wants to.

Doctrine That Is at Issue

The Court is being asked to set aside a doctrine established more than half a century ago in the case of Plessy vs. Ferguson—that segregation did not violate the Constitution if separate but equal facilities were provided for the white and Negro races. Segregation in railway cars was the issue in the Plessy case. School segregation was not involved, but the Plessy ruling has been a principal defense in all school segregation cases that have been in the courts since that time.

Counsel for the civil rights groups in the present cases argue that the decision in the Plessy case was erroneous when it was made, and that the separate but equal doctrine should now be overruled.

The states have argued previously, and apparently are preparing to argue again, that public school systems that have been developed in the belief they conformed to doctrine promulgated by the Supreme Court should not now be outlawed by a reversal of this doctrine.

The fact that the intent of Congress was emphasized in the questions the Supreme Court asked lawyers to discuss was seen by some as having given a cue to lawyers for the states. The argument already appearing on the states' side of the case, that segregation is a legislative and not a judicial problem, shows, it is contended in this view, that the lawyers were quick to catch the cue.

This reasoning led to prophesy. In the ruling two weeks ago that professional baseball did not come under the anti-trust laws, the Supreme Court pointedly noted that if baseball was to be brought within the scope of those laws Congress should do it. There, said the prophets, was the position the High Court probably would take in the school segregation cases.

Brownell to File Brief

The Department of Justice was asked to file a brief, stating the position of the Federal Government on the segregation issue. Herbert Brownell Jr., the Attorney General, said this week that the brief was in the final stages of preparation.

A view expressed in some quarters was that Mr. Brownell's problem was about as much political as it was legal.

The Federal Government, it was argued, could not take a position favoring segregation in the public schools. That would be a repudiation of positions taken by President Eisenhower on other forms of segregation and on the broad question of civil rights.

On the other hand, advocacy of the outright abolition of racial segregation will be resented in Southern states that gave strong support to the Republican national ticket in the 1952 elections. South Carolina and Georgia have threatened to abolish their public school systems if segregation is declared unconstitutional and set up a system of subsidized private schools.

South Carolina, led by Gov. James F. Byrnes, was in the forefront of the Southern revolt against the Democratic party, although it failed to join the states of the region that gave their electoral votes to General Eisenhower for President. The margin, however, was only a little more than 14,000.

Thus, some see Mr. Brownell confronted with a possibility of alienating, by means of a legal document, political support that might be important to the Republicans in their drive to set up a two-party system in the South. How Mr. Brownell will get off the horns of this dilemma is a matter of considerable speculation in Washington.

Southern educators decline comment on segregation row

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Nov. 30—(AP)—Some 1500 educators from 11 Southern states opened their annual conference here today but steered clear of the touchy issue of racial segregation in schools.

A. J. Geiger of Atlanta, executive secretary-treasurer, said the controversy is not the concern of the Southern Assn. of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

Most delegates declined comment on Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell's message to the Supreme Court noting that the court has full authority and the duty to stop segregation in public schools.

"We don't tell people what kind of schools we shall have," said one delegate. "We just try to make the schools better."

Theme of the five-day meeting is: "Education's Role in the Advancing South."

The association covers most qualified schools in Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Texas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Virginia and North and South Carolina.

The association's Negro affiliate, the Assn. of Colleges and Secondary Schools, opens its four-day program here tomorrow.

fect, abolish Georgia's public school system if the U. S. Supreme Court decides racial segregation violates the federal Constitution. The House passed both bills last week.

End of segregation 'would be disastrous'

EARLE, Ark., Nov. 30—(AP)—An Arkansas education official says it would be disastrous if the U. S. Supreme Court rules an immediate end to segregation in public schools.

"If you try to put Negroes into white schools, particularly in East Arkansas, it won't be good," added Marvin Bird of Earle, chairman of the Arkansas State Board of Education.

Bird's comment was in connection with U. S. Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell's opinion that the high court has the power to eliminate racial segregation in schools.

Georgia making laws to keep segregation

ATLANTA, Nov. 30—(AP)—The Georgia Legislature is moving swiftly toward approval of measures advocated by Gov. Herman Talmadge to insure continued racial segregation in the schools.

The state Senate is expected tomorrow to approve two Talmadge segregation measures, one setting up a study commission and the other a constitutional amendment allowing the state to make outright grants to students.

Southern Governors Agree Segregation Is Expensive

BY JOHN R. HENRY
INS Staff Correspondent

HOT SPRINGS, Va. — (INS) — Southern Governors agreed Tuesday in a discussion of public school financing that racial segregation is a tremendously expensive item.

That was the underlying theme, if not directly expressed, in the conclusion that schools for Negroes are being placed on a par with those for white children.

Gov. James F. Byrnes of South Carolina said that 70 per cent of the state's 86 million dollar building program has been earmarked for Negro schools.

He recalled how his 1951 promise to finance this expansion through a sales tax bond issue drew fire from the Ku Klux Klan and the National Association for the Advancement for Colored People.

"I knew that when both extremists opposed me, I must be right. And we prevailed even though the now extinct KKK and the NAACP were working opposite sides of the street together."

Gov. John W. Battle of Virginia keynoted the discussion, pointing out that his state successfully used the foundation plan to finance educational progress.

Salaries for Negro teachers are the same as for white teachers, according to Battle.

Byrnes pointed out there are more Negro teachers than white in South Carolina than in New York City.

UNDER STAFFED SCHOOLS

Byrnes reported that expansion of facilities has eliminated scores of small, understaffed schools. He recalled that 34 such outmoded school buildings were advertised for sale recently in a single edition of a South Carolina newspaper.

Gov. Theodore McKeldin of Maryland, meanwhile, outlined efforts in his state to place primary responsibility for financing public schools upon the 23 counties and the city of Baltimore.

TIGHTER CONTROLS

In contrast, Gov. William B. Umstead of North Carolina explained the state has taken over financing entirely and as a result must insist upon tighter control of the schools.

Gov. William C. Marland of West Virginia emphasized the difficulty of financing an expansion of schools in his state, but was encouraged by his fellow chief executives.

KEYNOTE ADDRESS

The Governors never really mentioned the matter segregation openly. None had any comment for the record even on the keynote address address of their meeting by Gov. Herman Talmadge.

Gov. Talmadge urged the U. S. Supreme Court to recognize Southern Educational progress by upholding separation of the races. The court is scheduled to hear further argument in the case early in December.

Higher education through the Southern Regional plan was discussed during the morning session, and the Governors, meanwhile, received a report on freight rates from Gov. Hugh White from Mississippi.

Gov. White was unable to attend the meeting, he said, in view of a special legislative session he summoned to deal with the segregation problem.

Dixie Welcomes Time To Equalize Education

Postponement by the U. S. Supreme Court of a decision on segregation in public schools brought varied reactions in the South, with most leaders indicating the delay gives time for states to develop equal school facilities for both races.

In Georgia, Governor Talmadge said: "Any comment on my part would be premature."

However, he said he has not changed his mind on Georgia's future action should the Supreme Court finally decide against segregation.

Under Talmadge's plan, Georgia's public schools would be leased to private operators and the state would supply money for the students to pay their "tuition" with admission gained by meeting racial qualifications.

Gov. Hugh White of Mississippi said the postponement "has me in a quandary."

"If we go ahead and provide for two equal systems and the court abolishes segregation then where would we be?" he said.

Alabama Gov. Gordon Persons adopted a "wait and see" attitude and declined comment, but he recently indicated a large amount of school construction may be necessary in the South if the court rules for continued segregation on a basis of equal facilities.

Gov. James F. Byrnes of South Carolina also declined comment but has previously stated that, if necessary, South Carolina "will abandon the public school system" before permitting mixing the races in classrooms.

Jesse T. Anderson, South Carolina's superintendent of education, however, viewed the delay as an opportunity for the South, and said, "It gives South Carolina more time to complete its development of adequate facilities for white and Negro school children."

He added that units for public school administration have been reorganized and the state has made available sufficient funds to provide equal facilities.

Echoing this thought was Ed McCuistion, Arkansas director of Negro education, who said the postponement will give Arkansas a chance to maintain "the fastest pace ever set by the state in improving Negro schools."

Arch Ford, Arkansas commissioner of education, agreed the postponement would provide the state with additional time to improve Negro school facilities.

In Louisiana, Gov. Robert Kennon said the delay "makes absolutely no difference to us."

He said: "We have already met the situation as far as I am concerned. Louisiana schools and colleges have come a long way toward providing adequate facilities for Negro citizens. The state has anticipated the problem by giving equal salaries to Negro teachers and making vast improvements in recent years in our Negro schools."

"Free Choice," A Device For Transition

By DR. JOHN B. HENDERSON

WITHOUT DOUBT, integration is the issue of the hour that must be faced and reckoned with here in America. For some months now the whole country has waited with abated breath for the Supreme Court to decide the segregation issue. The speculation as to the effect the end of segregation would have has run the gamut all the way from predictions of revolution with much bloodshed to the position that it would make positively no difference at all.

The action of the court in requesting additional arguments on the matter has only postponed for a while the issue that inevitably must be dealt with. In the meantime, everything possible should be done to insure as harmonious an adjustment as it is possible to make. The real leadership of the South should assert itself and indicate the way to go. Talmadge and Byrnes have attempted to take the leadership but what they propose is neither Christian, democratic nor even sensible. Their proposals are the idiotic rantings of unregenerate rebels. They are headed up a blind alley from which they must retreat.

DR. HENDERSON

A MUCH MORE realistic and sensible solution has been proposed by Lydel Sims, a feature writer for the Memphis Commercial Appeal. Writing in the May 27 issue of the Christian Century, he makes the observation that there is "evidence of a major shift of opinion on the part of many white Southerners. Increasingly the question is no longer whether segregation will end, but how." He makes the further observation that "the South bitterly opposes 'force laws', proposed federal legislation which would supercede state laws . . . But we apply force laws of our own by forcing segregation in areas where people do not wish to be segregated. We do to the individual just what we do not want the federal government to do to the state: we deny the right of individual choice, the right to work out an individual solution to a problem."

He proposes what he calls a "Free Choice" plan as a device for transition. It sets up a third level of public contact in racial matters, Free Choice. The other two levels are already well known, the segregated and the unsegregated. His proposal calls for the "naming of free choice areas in time and space for those who have objection to a shared use of facilities."

HE ILLUSTRATES WHAT he means by citing the arrangement made in Memphis with reference to the use of the zoo. There are certain days restricted for white people only. There are certain other days restricted for Negro use only. Then there are certain days open to all and those who have no objection to members of the opposite race may visit it on those days.

Such an arrangement could be instituted with reference to the schools also. In addition to the all-white and all-Negro schools as we now have them designate certain schools as free choice where those who are ready for integration may attend.

THIS FREE CHOICE arrangement provides a way for gradual and peaceful change. It affords the diehards a chance to get the feel of a new situation with a minimum of friction. The extremists on both sides will not be satisfied with this but at least it is a sensible proposal that has much in it to commend itself to the consideration of thinking people.

As strongly as we desire the immediate end of all forms of segregation we must admit that attitudes change slowly, even more slowly than the Supreme Court moves. A change as momentous as the end of segregation should evoke the best thought and planning of the best people so that we can get started on what is inevitable.

I REGRET IT MUCH THAT I must admit that nothing has been proposed by the religious leaders in the South that indicates a readiness to take the leadership in this matter. Perhaps right there lies the reason for the present situation. There is more segregation in Christian America when Christians meet to pray "Our Father" and pay lip service to the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man than at any other time.

Until a better plan is proposed I am casting my vote in favor of the one suggested by a newspaper man, for it seems to me to be an honest proposal to get started on the effort to bring about the desired change. As a device for transition I think it is tops.

I see by the papers that the Norfolk School Board is conducting three workshops for the school teachers. One for Negroes at a white school. One for whites at a white school and both whites and Negroes at a white school. Already it has gotten started with an area of free choice.

Publisher Itemizes His Opposition To School Bias

BALTIMORE, Md. — Carl Murphy, president of the Negro Newspaper Publishers Association has issued a public proclamation on the hearing of five school segregation cases October 12 by the Supreme Court.

The proclamation reads:

"I am opposed to segregation, titled "Why I am opposed to segregated schools," was issued because:

"In which all of us must contribute to freedom with our dollars and the public expression of our beliefs," Murphy declared.

It is a relic of slavery.

A badge of servitude.

Only colored people are segregated.

It is inhuman and unconstitutional.

"We are accustomed to think only of the 14th Amendment as guaranteeing our equal rights.

"But the 13th Amendment was adopted three years before the 14th and was originally designed to do the whole job.

"It says: Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude . . shall exist within the United States.

"The 13th Amendment does not permit the withholding of any right inhering in freedom.

"It not only strikes down slavery as bondage, but it prevents the imposition of any burdens, or disabilities that constitute bridges of servitude.

"An end of slavery must mean universal freedom.

"The end of slavery can only mean citizenship and personal liberty for one and all everywhere the same.

"Racial sepaartion was the key pillar in the slave system. It survives today as racial segregation.

"The theory that a person is free when he is barred by law from public institutions is a fiction and a delusion.

"Segregation is a form of slavery.

"A free man hates to wear the badge of servitude in his face, and the 13th Amendment to the Constitution forbids it."

The Paradox Of Segregation

WHEN last week the Supreme Court called for a reargument in October of the five cases on segregation in the public schools it bared the searching of its own mind. It said to the nation that faces the perplexities of segregation and the paradox it poses in our democracy that on this question as it applies to the public schools there is no doctrine of infallibility available. The action calling for the rearguing of the cases, which the court has had under consideration for six months, was not alone one of the Supreme Court justices disclosing the depth of their search into a constitutional question. It was also an act of men of goodwill looking toward the social impact of a possible decision of vast importance.

It was no chance conspiracy that carried the cases on segregation in the schools from South Carolina, Virginia, Kansas, Delaware and the District of Columbia to the court at about the same time so that they could be bracketed together. Segregation has been legally disintegrating under one court decision after another. Scores of Negro students are now studying in Southern universities at the graduate and professional level because a series of decisions of the Supreme Court have established the principle that "separate" facilities that are "equal" cannot be provided at that level. There are, the court has held, important intangible factors in higher education that are destroyed by the presence of the segregation barrier. The legal issue has descended to the public schools by a logical sequence of events.

The perplexity of the court is not strange. The scholar of the law knows that mores and social practice crystallize into law. When the process is reversed by the law always there are risks. Both our social philosophy and our social history uphold this principle. Yet change in race relations in the South, where the Negro population is concentrated, has been swift in recent years. Some change, notably in higher education, has come under the compulsion of the courts. The most significant gains in race relations in the region have been the voluntary steps the South has taken in the abandonment of segregation. Many cultural bridges that divided the races have been crossed. Negroes have taken their places in the governmental structure as law enforcement officers and as members of governmental bodies. The church's leadership has been notable. Professional associations are opening their doors to Negroes and the worth and dignity of Negro achievement are being recognized.

The Supreme Court will render its decision on segregation in the public schools in a climate of growing tolerance that is one of the most heartening signs of our times. The climate suggests that, whatever the decision of the court may be, democracy has nothing to fear from more democracy. —New York Times editorial, June 15, 1953.

Dr. Nabritt conceded integration would mean the loss of jobs for about one-third of the 3,800 Negro school supervisors in this area.

"But," he added, "if they are good supervisors they should be able to teach and if they can teach they can get jobs as teachers."

Vinson death may delay 5 school cases

Supreme Court calendar may now be changed

WASHINGTON (NNPA) —Due to the death of Chief Justice Fred M. Vinson, on Sept. 8, the five school segregation cases, set for reargument Dec. 7, may be further postponed, the NNPA learned on Wednesday.

An informed source intimated that the whole calendar of the Supreme Court is now subject to change.

The school segregation cases were originally set for re-argument of Oct. 12.

However, at the request of Attorney General Herbert Brownell, they were postponed until the December date in order to give attorneys more time in preparation of briefs on the questions which they were asked to discuss on reargument.

In addition to Governor Earl Warren of California, others who are being mentioned as possible successor to Mr. Vinson include:

Governor Thomas E. Dewey of New York; Chief Justice Arthur T. Vanderbilt of the New Jersey supreme Court; Chief Judge J. Parker, Fourth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals; Secretary of State John Foster Dulles, and John J. McCloy, former U.S. High Commissioner in Germany.

Raps Negro Teachers Who Fear School Integration

ST. LOUIS — While the United States waited re-argument of the critical school segregation case before the Supreme court, the lawyer who has commanded the legal battle gave the lie to the theory that integration will cause Negro fearing loss of their jobs.

At a special feature of the NAACP convention, a lawyers' workshop, Chief Counsel Thurgood Marshall blasted Negro teachers who oppose integrated schools, fearing loss of teir jobs.

JOB PROTECTION

"The schools in which they are now working are going to be integrated," Marshall declared.

"It is to their best advantage — in fact it is protection to their jobs — that they enroll in some integrated school like their state university and rub shoulders with white teachers so that when integration comes their jobs will be easier because the white people will have become used to them."

Marshall said these Negro teachers must "stop a few summers of majoring in Harlem and minoring at Columbia university and majoring on the Southside of Chicago and minoring at the University of Chicago and must apply to their state universities so they can help this fight along and do their race some good."

FACTS AND FIGURES

Dr. James M. Nabritt, secretary of Howard university, cited facts and figures to show that integration would not result in unemployment of Negro teachers.

"Quoting from a recent study conducted at Howard, Dr. Nabritt said there are 329,000 teachers in the 17 states and the District of Columbia which segregate their schools. Of this number 71,000 are colored.

Declaring that the survey showed that school enrollments are increasing 20 percent faster than the states can find teachers, Nabritt said there is now a shortage of 27,000 teachers in the study area and that it would be a physical impossibility to teach the children if Negro teachers were fired.

TENURE LAWS

He said two-fifths of the colored teachers in question are covered by tenure laws in seven of the 17 states and could not be arbitrarily fired.

Segregation Goes? Strife ---Talmadge

Constitution State News Service

SAVANNAH, Oct. 14—Gov. Herman Talmadge today blasted the federal civil rights program and attempts to end segregation in public schools before 700 cheering members of the Peace Officers Association of Georgia.

He referred to a suit now pending in the U.S. Supreme Court to end school segregation, and said:

"If they strike down the principles of segregation, then in my opinion, there will be more trouble and strife in this country than there has been since the Civil War.

The association re-elected without opposition Lt. Col. E. S. Burke, deputy director of the Georgia Department of Public Safety, as president; G. Allen Maddox, chief Fulton County probation officer, as vice president, and Lt. E. D. Mink, treasurer of the State Patrol, as secretary-treasurer.

Members voted to ask the legislature for a revision of the pension law, which would permit officers with 20 years' service to retire at 60 percent of their regular pay up to $100 a month; those with 24 years service to retire at 70 per cent of their pay up to $112.50 and those with 28 years service to retire at 80 percent of their pay up to $125.

Holds Debate With Talmadge On Public School Issues

BY LIN HOLLOWAY

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Georgia's Governor Herman Talmadge has reiterated his belief that the people of the South — especially in the state of Georgia — would take the extreme measure of abolishing the public school system if the United States Supreme Court rules that segregation of the races in the schools is unconstitutional.

The Georgia governor made his stand clear on the matter in a televised debate on "Segregation in the Public School" Monday night. Speaking in favor of integrating the public school by Supreme Court edict was Aubrey Williams, former director of the National Youth Administration, editor of the Southern Farmer, and president of the Southern Conference Educational Fund.

MR. WILLIAMS BELIEVES:

Mr. Williams believes that public school segregation could be abolished without bothering unduly southern customs and habits. He believes that only a clear-cut decision by the Supreme Court will settle the issue once and for all. He believes that the institution of segregation, itself, is harmful, and —in view of the dictates of the Constitution—laws requiring segregation are more dangerous than any others.

He further feels that customs and habits would not be two radically upset by outlawing segregation in schools. Indicative of the fact that the world would not come to an end should bias in schools be eradicated, he noted, was the fact that little if anything untoward has occurred since segregation on railroad dining cars was abolished.

In fortifying his stands, Mr Williams noted that a Supreme Court justice has already said that he believes that reports that the Negro favors segregation is just so much talk.

That Negroes actually favor the end of segregation, Mr. Williams noted, has been clearly demonstrated in Alabama where teachers have been unstinting in their support of the NAACP's current "EE" (equal education) drive, and that only recently South Carolina churches donated $5000 to the NAACP's fight. Mr. Williams noted that no segment of the Negro populace has failed to go along with the anti-segregation forces.

Not only does Gov. Talmadge feel that Georgia would do away with its public school system and institute a means of subsidizing each student, he also feels that, according to previous Supreme Court decisions, segregation in the public schools is the law of the land anyway.

UPHOLDS STATE'S RIGHTS

The Georgia high executive indicated that he felt that past decisions of the Supreme Court do not hold the context of the 14th amendment guaranteeing equality of privilege to all citizens to be all inclusive in relation to state's rights. He contended in his observations of the matter that the state should act as the supreme power to keep or abolish segregation of races in any sphere as long as the state felt that segregation was "best" for its citizens.

In reply to a direct question, Gov. Talmadge said that during Georgia's current extensive school program the major portion of the $200 millions being spent is earmarked for the equalization of Negro schools. The governor, however, contends that the building program is not meant to bring weight to the "separate but equal" doctrine, but is rather intended to merely give Georgia students of all races good schools.

On the other hand, Mr. Williams (who once made a South-wide tour with Dr. Mary McLeod Bethune to determine first-hand the status of the Negro in education) was forthright in his beliefs.

Talmadge's state that the public schools in Georgia would be abolished if the Supreme Court ruled segregation unconstitutional, was strongly attacked by Aubrey Williams. Mr. Williams pointed out that the school system has become a definite part of the American system and to alter it in this fashion, would destroy the system itself.

Talmadge Aides Push Segregation, Red Bills

By BERT SPENCER

Administration forces in the General Assembly yesterday began action on school segregation and subversive activities, even before Gov. Talmadge formally recommended the proposals to the legislature.

The governor, in his address to the assembly at noon today, is expected to recommend legislation aimed at preserving school segregation and cracking down on subversives.

In the House of Representatives yesterday, Talmadge forces dropped two segregation measures into the hopper. A bill amending and strengthening the present state Subversive Activities Act was introduced in the Senate.

The House resolutions, offered by Rep. Frank Twitty of Mitchell County, administration floor leader, will be formally introduced today.

One resolution calls for a constitutional amendment that would give the state and its subdivisions the right to appropriate funds to private schools. If the amendment were approved by the people, it would give the General Assembly the power to legislate at any time a system of school taxation and educational appropriations that would bypass the public school system in Georgia.

Such legislation presumably would be passed to avoid mixed schools if the U.S. Supreme Court rules against segregation in public schools in the five cases before the court.

A second resolution introduced by Twitty calls for creation of an education commssion which would draft legislation necessary "to maintain separate education of the white and colored races under all circumstances."

The administration floor leader in the upper house, Fourth District Sen. Homer Edenfield of Kingsland, introduced a bill amending the Subversive Activities Act passed in February.

Lamar Sizemore, special assistant attorney general appointed under the original act to investigate Communist and other subversive activities in the state, said the major changes deal with loyalty checks of state, county and municipal employes.

If the act were amended by Edenfield's bill, Sizemore explained, it would require a loyalty pledge of persons applying for Georgia government jobs and of all persons employed by the state and local governments as of Jan. 1, 1954.

The loyalty pledge would be similar to that now required by the Federal Civil Service Commission, Sizemore added.

The proposed amendments also classify as confidential, information obtained in the investigation of subversive activities, with only the attorney general and the governor holding the authority to release the records. At present, legislative committees have access to the information, Sizemore said.

Investigation of subversive activities in Georgia would continue under the special assistant attorney general.

Earlier, Gov. Talmadge abandoned a plan that would have set up a legislative investigating committee to investigate subversive activities.

The governor said he believed the committee plan would have interfered with similar investigations by the Congress.

Educators Tell 10-Yr. Plan Today

Assembly To Get 'Adequate' Scheme

By BILL ALLEN

A group of educators and laymen headed by Roy Harris of Augusta will outline a proposed "adequate program on education" at 2 p.m. today before a joint meeting of House and Senate committees on appropriations, education and the university system.

The new plan involves an estimated $30,000,000 increase in state school expenditures over a 10-year period. It is intended to replace the "minimum foundation for education" plan under which the schools are now operating.

FOR FUTURE

Political observers said the program is being laid before the legislature this November without expectation of increased school appropriations at this time.

The timing of the presentation, they say, is designed to lay the groundwork for a serious appeal for more money next session and to make the "adequate program" an issue in the 1954 gubernatoria and legislative races.

The plan was drafted without consideration of the segregation issue or Gov. Talmadge's plan to turn public schools over to private ownership if the U.S. Supreme Court rules segregation out, observers said.

LOYALTY BILL

Meanwhile, the anti-subversive loyalty questionnaire bill appeared likely to be the first piece of administration - sponsored legislation to pass both houses of the General Assembly. It is scheduled for House approval today.

The bill, already approved by the Senate, would require all persons paid in part or in whole with state tax money to fill out a loyalty questionnaire which would be filed in the office of the attorney general.

Persons giving false information would be subject to trial and conviction for perjury as already provided by statute.

CLEAR ROAD

No opposition to the legislation is expected, according to Speaker Fred Hand.

Also, a compromise was rumored in the making on what had promised to be the most potentially explosive issue up for consideration at this session of the Legislature—school legislation.

Speaker Fred Hand introduced a bill that now is on the House calendar which would allow local boards of education to consolidate schools by grades or by pupils as they see fit, in order to facilitate school construction under the state building authority.

REMOVE BLOCK

The bill is designed to remove a stumbling block placed in the way of the school building program by a recent State Supreme Court decision holding schools could not be merged by grades but "only two or more whole schools into one."

Rep. C. C. Perkins and others in the House oppose the speaker's bill on the grounds that "discrimination" might arise within local school systems and consolidation might "virtually ruin" small communities centered around a school.

But legislative sources said last night that there would be no floor fight, and the bill would not be brought up until a compromise was reached with opposing legislators.

However, Hand indicated that two vitally important proposals to provide more money for local school systems will be considered today.

The resolutions call for constitutional amendments that would:

1. Remove the 15-mill limit on school taxes and allow counties or municipalities to levy as much ad valorem tax as they see fit for education purposes.

2. Remove the $2,000 homestead exemption from application to ad valorem taxes for educational purposes.

School officials calling for increased expenditures recently were answered by administration leaders, including Gov. Talmadge, with a plea that further pay raises at the present would have to be provided locally.

NEW SOURCES

The two constitutional amendments, if approved in the Legislature and ratified in 1954, would open up new sources of revenue to local schools.

Many counties and cities already have begun moves to raise their school tax limit and remove the homestead exemption.

The Senate will be faced this week with Gov. Talmadge's proposed constitutional amendment allowing the state to subsidize education by pupils if necessary to circumvent an expected U.S. Supreme Court decision outlawing school segregation.

Also up for passage in the Senate is a resolution calling for an investigation of Insurance Commissioner Zack D. Cravey.

'Adequate' Schools Are Up to People

Article VIII, Section 1, of the Georgia Constitution reads as follows:

"The provision of an adequate education for the citizen shall be a primary obligation of the State of Georgia, the expense of which shall be provided for by taxation. Separate schools shall be provided for the white and colored races."

In the General Assembly Monday actions were considered affecting both these provisions. In both cases the final decision must be made by the people through their elected representatives.

While the Senate studied the measure that would make it possible for the Legislature to abolish the public school system, a nonpartisan group of legislators and laymen were laying out their plan for making the Minimum Foundation Program for Education into an "adequate" program. The latter objective, they maintain, can be attained within the framework of the Minimum Foundation Program.

The citizens' committee proposed a 10-year program that would cost the taxpayers of the state millions of dollars.

The adequate program for Georgia schools is thus put before the people of Georgia through the General Assembly. It becomes now an issue in next year's election. The people must decide whether they are willing to accept responsibility for furthering the present program. In short, they must define "adequate" and decide whether they are willing to pay for it.

The Talmadge administration has, without doubt, accomplished more in the field of public education than any in modern history. It has fulfilled, too, its promises to effectuate the Minimum Foundation Program. Having raised taxes to do this job, the governor feels that the line must be held and the Assembly feels the same way. Any further moves must await a new administration and a new Legislature. It is well that the people start thinking about them now.

In the meantime, certain measures are being offered that would enable local communities to increase their efforts in the field of education. These include a measure that would make homestead exemptions for school tax purposes optional to communities and another that would lift the ceiling on bonded indebtedness. Both measures would encourage greater local participation in school financing and should be approved.

In the meantime, Georgia educators and leaders in every field hope that no hasty action will be taken that might destroy the vast progress that has been made.

Building Bill Outlines Plan for Negro Schools

Better Facilities in Concentration Urged in Report of State Authority

The small rural Negro school will disappear from the Georgia scene within the next three years, and Negro education will be concentrated in 511 schools, most of them new.

Sounding the death knell for the old-fashioned frame schoolhouse located on many a Georgia country road will be the State School Building Authority, an Education department report to the General Assembly says.

Dr. M. D. Collins, state superintendent of schools, says in the report that about 2700 of the 3,205 Negro schools that existed in the state in 1941-42 will have disappeared by September, 1955.

Almost every school in the state having less than seven teachers will have been consolidated when the $200,000,000 school building program now underway is completed, Dr. Collins said.

SUCH COUNTIES as Charlton, Echols, Lee and Long will have only one centrally located elementary and high school for Negroes. In other counties, there will be a different pattern. In Sumter, for example, there will be a centrally located high school and six elementary schools out over the county.

At least five counties—Towns, Union, Dawson, Gilmer and Forsyth—will have no Negro schools at all. The few Negroes who live there will go to nearby counties to school under special arrangements.

"Except in heavily populated areas, there will be only one high school in a system with a sufficient number of pupils to warrant enough teachers to offer a broad and diversified program," Dr. Collins said.

"UNDER the reorganized program, the holding power of the schools should be greater and the instruction more effective."

As a necessary component to the centralization process, Dr. Collins to the Assembly in his report that new legislation is necessary in the field of student transportation.

"In June, 1952, 290,537 students were being transported," the school superintendent stated.

"When the school building program is completed . . . approximately 400,000 pupils will be transported," he added. "This will make it necessary to provide additional funds for this service."

The first new school buildings being constructed by the State School Building Authority should be ready for occupancy by September, 1953, Dr. Collins said.

All buildings should be completed and ready for occupancy by September, 1955.

Boyd Assails Laws Upholding Bias In Secondary Schools

14d(1) Georgia

BY GEORGE COLEMAN

Segregation was described last night to the Atlanta public by political analyst William Boyd as an outmoded practice which denies equal opportunity and protection of laws, while it was defended with equal vigor by a southern white attorney as a traditional practice which should be left entirely to individual states, "who know what is best for their own people."

The absence of segregation was detailed as a world in which "student one school to go five miles to academics would not have to pass by other," by Dr. Boyd, while his opponent, Atty. William Schroeder, held that racial segregation was no different from separate classification of boys and girls institutions.

Dr. Boyd, chairman of the Political Science Department, Atlanta University and News Analyst for WERD, appeared on WLTV on "The Big Question" sponsored by the Junior Chamber of Commerce.

He was opposed by Attorney William Schroeder on the question "Is Segregation in Secondary Schools Legal?"

The program was moderated by Joseph Wyatt, while a three-man panel consisting of David Grambrel, Charles Smith and Clifford Oxford fired questions at the two speakers.

Dr. Boyd held that segregation carried with it the badge of inferiority for the Negro and "denies to all Americans their equal chance for opportunity under the law."

Citing specific cases to prove his points, Boyd laid down three specific faults of segregation:

1. Legally enforced segregation is a denial of the 14th Amendment."
2. Segregation is a denial of equal opportunity.
3. The 'doctrines of separate but equal' are not applicable today."

Dr. Boyd held that equal opportunity "can be obtained only in the absence of segregation."

DEFENDS SEGREGATION

Attorney Schroeder, defending the tradition of segregation, declared that "The Fourteenth Amendment does not outlaw or declare segregation unconstitutional."

He based his argument on the "common understanding" in 1868 when the amendment was adopted. The lawyer said that 23 states ratified the amendment, and that 17 of them followed the pattern of segregation when it was passed, "and many still do."

GRADUATE SCHOOLS DIFFERENT

Asked by Clifford Oxford if he considered segregation in schools of higher learning in a different light from secondary ones, the attorney declared that gratitude students are attending school "because they want it and are paying for it in many cases."

He said that secondary students attend school "because the state law says they have to."

He admitted, however, that a Negro who qualified for admission to the University of Georgia would have to be accepted "unless we could prove beyond a reasonable doubt" that equal opportunity does exist for both races.

LIVING DOCUMENT

Dr. Boyd, however, described the federal constitution as a "living document susceptible to various conditions from time to time. He said that courts have to interpret the Constitution basically on specific cases. He offered examples of cases in past years that met the needs of the nation which could not apply today.

Dr. Boyd declared, the Constitution may be interpreted to meet conditions in everyday life. He aded that, while there are no prohibitions of various statutes regarding racial classification, "there is a clear obligation of the government to provide equal protection of the law."

Gov. Cheered On Segregation Speech To Solons

BY PAUL W. BURTON
International News Service Staff Correspondent

Gov. Herman Talmadge was wildly cheered yesterday when he told the Georgia Legislature as long as he is governor there will be no non-segregated schools and colleges in the state.

He [illegible] legislation aimed at maintaining school segregation should the U. S. Supreme Court give an adverse opinion in suits now pending. Bills covering this recommendation— one permitting the state to finance children in private schools and the other setting up a study group—were introduced yesterday.

The governor also urged extension of efforts to weed out Communists in the state government, asked the lawmakers to give "consideration" to a superhighway running north-south through the state, recommended a fixed primary date in September, asked for reforms in the Workmen's Compensation laws and urged a hold-the-line policy on spending.

Both houses adjourned for the day soon after the address, but the day's activity included:

1. The Senate Highway Committee eliminated a controversial inspection section from the Uniform Trafic Code proposal, and prepared to bring the measure to the Senate floor Wednesday.

2. Abolition of the State Milk Control Board was demanded by a resolution submitted by Rep. J. Willis Conger of Decatur County. He said the present set-up gives the distributor too much profit in proportion to what the dairyman gets and also keeps retail prices up.

3. The House voted to create a committee to probe charges against Flint Circuit Solicitor General Ben Garland. The investigation, asked by Rep. Bill Freeman of Monroe County is the first step toward impeachment of Garland, which was demanded by a grand jury.

Gov. Talmadge reviewed accomplishments of his administration, then turned to recommendations for this 25-day session. He said he cannot believe the high court will override segregation, but added: "Nevertheless, we must be prepared with a plan to save our constitutional system of separate education in the calamitous event of an adverse decision."

Talmadge Ready To Abolish Schools If Segregation Ends

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., March 23—(AP)—Georgia's Governor Talmadge told a Jacksonville television audience tonight he would take steps to abolish the present public schools of Georgia if the U. S. Supreme Court fails to uphold segregation in the nation's public schools.

The Georgia chief executive said he would call an extraordinary session of the Legislature and recommend such action.

He said however, he would not attempt to force the issue in areas under jurisdiction of the Federal Government because "the Federal Government has more troops than the state of Georgia."

Talmadge outlined his position on the issue on a Junior Chamber of Commerce forum.

If Court Bans Segregation

Herman Talmadge Says He Will Scrap School System

BY INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE

Gov. Herman Talmadge reaffirmed his intention yesterday of abolishing Georgia's Public School System should the U. S. Supreme Court abolish racial segregation in the schools of South Carolina.

The court decision is now pending.

The Governor declared:

"I would be reluctant to abolish the public school system, but it would be my duty as Governor to prevent killings, bloodshed and possible lynchings. I haven't got enough troops in Georgia, and neiher has the U. S. Army got enough troops to prevent bloodshed if segregation in the common schools in this state is destroyed."

Talmadge said the ruling in South Carolina would not have an immediate effect on Georgia, but contended that it would create a precedent which could also abolish segregation in his state within a short time.

Gov. Talmadge has arranged for a meeting of state education, financial and legal authorities in the event the high court abolishes segregation in the pending cases.

Under the Governor's plan, educational facilities would be leased to private individuals. Money which now goes to public school systems would be distributed equally to each student as a subsidy for his education at the "private" schools. The Governor said:

"I think I have arrived at the only solution to maintain an excellent school system for all people rich and poor alike, and at the same time maintain segregation."

School Bonds Delayed By Segregation Issue

Georgia School Building Authority bonds won't be adversely affected by the expected United States Supreme Court ruling on segregation.

However, State Auditor B. E Thrasher said the pending decisions are delaying the sale of the second issue of school bonds The Authority previously has sold a $32,700,000 issue and is now ready to sell another issue of about 65 millions.

The case before the U. S. Court directly attacks segregation in public schools and has brought a threat that if prohibited, Georgia will cease operating a school system, lease the schools for private operation on a segregated basis, and make state education grants directly to individual students.

The School Building Authority has been ready to go ahead with its second bond issue for some time, but investment firms have been advising delay until the Supreme Court rules or recesses without handing down a decision.

Thrasher said "The bond people tell us they understand the situation and know that the money will continue to be available from the state."

"But they say it is too big a job to explain all that to each individual prospective bond buyer."

ed press conference statement, said that state subsidization of private schools for both white and Negro children would be the only way to prevent "strife and bloodshed" if segregation is banned.

How a "bunch of mad men could force such beliefs on us is beyond my comprehension," he said. Adoption of mixed classes, he added, would take the nation "one step closer to the policies of the Kremlin."

However, the governor said, in the event of such a ruling he would call the Legislature into an immediate special session so that it could pass minor amendments to existing laws and put the schools in private hands.

He restated his belief that "you cannot legislate the social thinking of a people" and that the answer to segregation should be solved at the local level. Talmadge said Georgia is spending 53 per cent of its income on education including a $200,000,000 building program to equalize schools for white and Negro children.

At a mass meeting in Florence, S. C., 35 Negro parents signed a petition to have their children admitted to Florence County white schools because the Negro schools are not equal to the white schools and "never can" be equal.

The petition presented arguments similar to those in the Clarendon County suit which is before the Supreme Court and a petition in Beaufort County. Negro leaders said both petitions were preliminary to court action.

The Supreme Court has directed that certain points of the Clarendon suit be re-argued next December. The Negroes basic contention is that segregation in itself is a denial of equality.

South Carolina like Georgia has made preliminary plans to shift schools to private management if public school segregation is outlawed. The state voted in a referendum last fall to strike out of the Constitution the clause that a free public school system must be provided. At the suggestion of Governor Byrnes, the Legislature has not ratified the referendum vote, as required in the state, pending a decision on the Clarendon case.

Talmadge: East Shift If Segregation Banned

Governor Talmadge said Monday that Georgia can transfer public schools to private operation in "a few days" if the U. S. Supreme Court bans classroom segregation.

At the same time, a third action was started in South Carolina to challenge segregation of schools, the main case, before the high court—one that is expected to provide the key to future color line policy in schools throughout the South—originated in South Carolina.

Talmadge, in a strongly word-

Talmadge Insists Schools' Fate Tied to Segregation

Restates Private Setup Pledge On Nationwide TV Program

Gov. Herman Talmadge told a nationwide television audience last night Georgia will abolish public schools and subsidize the individual child if the Supreme Court orders an end to segregation in the South.

Opposing his view on "The Big Issue" over WLW-A, which originated in Washington, D.C., was Aubrey Williams, publisher of Southern Farms and Homes Magazine. "The time has changed when an issue such as this (segregation) can be decided over a long period of time," Williams said, "it must be done decisively and clearly by the Supreme Court."

"The Supreme Court ruled 75 years ago," Talmadge argued, "that the matter of segregation in public schools is up to the individual states. I don't think we have any justices on the bench today who have a better understanding of human beings than those gentlemen did 75 years ago."

BASED ON CONSTITUTION

When asked if his segregation views were based on the predication that Negroes are inferior, Talmadge replied: "There are inferior people in every race. My opinion is based on the Constitution which says that every state has the right to determine the kind of schools it shall have. If the courts interfere, we'll have a police state. After all, if you set up schools by sex that doesn't mean one sex is inferior to the other."

Talmadge also stated that nowhere does the law regulate public schools. When told it is a matter of "public consent," he answered: "You don't run a government on public consent."

Williams upheld that the matter of public school segregation was a violation of the public rights of Negroes.

"It's an individual thing," he said, "their rights are being violated. If a child is refused the right to go to a public school he has the right to appeal to the highest court in the land."

DEFINES EQUALITY

"Segregation does not mean a violation of the rights of anyone," said Talmadge, "and equality doesn't mean that races should have to go to school in the same building and in the same room, either."

In stating that Georgia would abolish the public school system and set up private schools, Talmadge remarked: "It will not be in violation of any state or U.S. law."

Later Williams said there was no merit to claims that Negroes themselves did not want segregation ended. He pointed out that recently in South Carolina and Alabama Negroes of churches and schools contributed heavily to assist in the fight against separate but equal school systems.

At one point in the program a questioner stated that at one time Massachusetts, New York, Ohio and other states had segregation and that it had been abolished without any serious problems by state legislation. He suggested that possibly the state level would be the best way to decide the issue.

"This is a matter to be decided by the highest court in our land," Williams asserted. "The problem of inequality and segregation begins in the school, but you produce a situation there which is carried out and maintained from then on."

East Point To Dedicate Negro School

The new 24-classroom East Point elementary school for Negroes will be dedicated Nov. 8 with ceremonies at the school, corner of East Washington and Bayard streets.

One of the first projects financed under the current state school building program, the elementary school will accommodate 692 children now attending classes at the high school. Total cost of the building, which includes a cafeteria and auditorium, is estimated at $496,000.

Elementary classes at the high school have been jammed since September with the first grade running on a daily schedule of triple sessions.

For the Negro high school at East Point, a $125,000 gymnasium-auditorium will be completed about Nov. 20. It was financed through local bonds and will seat about 900.

Another such building will be dedicated Nov. 24 at Russell High School, largest in the county system with 1,300 students. The building, also erected with bond funds, at a cost of $280,000, will accommodate 1,200 spectators and has six adjoining classrooms.

Legislators Hail Segregation Plan

By M. L. ST. JOHN

Gov. Talmadge's address yesterday won legislative praise as a "sound approach" to the problem of continued segregation in schools and a deterrent to communism in Georgia.

Legislative supporters and critics of the governor endorsed Talmadge's plan to appoint a committee to study any U.S. Supreme Court decision handed down on segregation. They also were pleased at the plan to continue an anti-subversive investigation by the State Law Department in lieu of "any witch-hunt" by legislative committees.

FOR ASSEMBLY

The segregation and anti-subversive proposals highlighted Talmadge's address to the General Assembly—an address made on the fifth anniversary of his first inauguration, and his final speech before the General Assembly unless a special session is called. Talmadge got his biggest applause when he reiterated his oft-repeated promise that "as long as I am your governor there will be no mixed schools in Georgia." He said race relations in Georgia today are better than those of any other state.

Rep. Marston Dunaway of Polk County yesterday followed the governor's example in dropping a request for a state un-American activities committee. Dunaway had a resolution pending from the session earlier this year. Yesterday he said he had withdrawn his request for creation of a legislative committee.

HE'S PLEASED

A member of the University of Georgia committee, Rep. Phil Campbell of Oconee County, said he was pleased that no "witch-hunt" would be conducted. The Law Department's investigation cast suspicion on the backgrounds of four or five University System teachers. Talmadge disclosed in his speech that those of suspected backgrounds have been or are now being removed from the state payroll. He was applauded when he promised to fire any others found on the payrolls.

Talmadge proposed that all state employes be required to take a loyalty oath such as the U.S. Civil Service Commission has for federal employes. Erle Cocke Jr., former national commander of the American Legion who was in the audience, said this was a good plan and that if the federal government had enforced it "there wouldn't be any Harry Dexter White furor now."

Rep. Porter Carswell of Burke County, where the Negro population is four times as great as the white, said the governor's plan to name a study commission on any court decision was good.

RACE AMITY

"We have never had any racial trouble in my county," Carswell reported. "We have 70 Negro schools to five white schools. We are improving the educational facilities for the Negroes. There is no question, however, that if an adverse court decision comes we must be prepared to do something to avoid trouble in our peaceful race relationship. The social impact would be tremendous on poor rural counties where people are unable to send their children to private schools. It would undo the progress we have made in race relationship."

Rep. Odel Ingell of Murray County, where only 18 Negro children are in school, said his county is not up against the problem that Burke County faces because there are so few Negroes in his county. He believed that the problem will work itself out if given time, and he said he thinks the governor's plan for a study commission is a good idea. The problem is more serious than many people think, he added.

Fulton Rep. Hamilton Lokey termed a study committee to study constitutional courses of action and make recommendations to the Legislature "a splendid and intelligent approach to the segregation problem."

House Floor Leader Frank Twitty of Mitchel said the governor is to be commended for making this "sane and sound suggestion" instead of acting in a manner of hysteria.

In event Supreme Court acts—

Gov. Talmadge asks laws to keep schools segregated

ATLANTA, Nov. 18—(AP)—Gov. Herman Talmadge said yesterday he cannot bring himself to believe the United States Supreme Court will outlaw racial segregation in public schools.

But he urged the Georgia Legislature to "be prepared with a plan to save our constitutional system of separate education in the calamitous event of an adverse decision by that court."

Two administration measures embodying such a plan were read for the first time in the House.

One would amend the constitution to permit support of private schools by taxation and the other would create a commission to draft necessary enabling legislation.

Talmadge devoted most of his speech to a review of his administration.

On the segregation issue, Talmadge warned the Legislature that "our constitutional system of separate schools and colleges is in grave danger."

Five cases directly attacking racial segregation in schools are forthcoming, he said "there is no reason to believe such a decision would apply under any circumstances to private educational institutions.

Concluding his remarks on segregation, he repeated his "solemn promise . . . that as long as I am pending before the U. S. Supreme Court, which has called for more argument this month.

Talmadge said he could not bring himself to believe the court would "make a scrap of paper out of our federal Constitution."

"But if an adverse decision is your governor, there will be no mixed schools and colleges in Georgia."

Several cases attacking public school segregation on the ground that if it violates the Fourteenth Amendment—or "equal protection" clause—of the Constitution now are pending before the U. S. Supreme Court.

Talmadge wrote that the court's 1896 ruling setting up the "separate but equal" doctrine disposes of the "equal protection" argument, and that the Tenth Amendment governs.

That amendment reserves to the states all powers not specifically delegated to the central government. "but we maintain," he said, "under the same national constitution the unfettered and heretofore unquestioned right to classify school children according to age, sex, race, mental capacity or any other reasonable qualification or characteristic which may be determined to be in the best interest of the state and its citizens."

"To Late to Say"

Saying it is rather late to say that segregation violates any fundamental rights, he argued that "if conditions have so changed, then it is a matter to be considered by our state legislature and not the courts."

And he declared "judges have no right to proclaim their views on sociology as the law of the land," adding that if segregation is outlawed "it will be the most foolhardy sociological calamity in our national history."

As others have done, he listed three possible decisions by the court: Upholding segregation, outlawing segregation, or "a schizophrenic decision which would rule separate schools unconstitutional per se but specify that the ruling would be enforced gradually over a number of years."

Only the first would have legal basis, he said, but "of the latter two, the last is the most vicious. It is absolutely foreign to any concept of American law and jurisprudicence. If something is wrong it is wrong and should be stopped. If it is right, it should be upheld."

Segregation Steps Taken In Georgia

ATLANTA —(UP)— The Georgia senate Tuesday passed and sent to Gov. Herman Talmadge two house-approved measures designed to preserve segregation in Georgia schools if the United States Supreme Court outlaws public school segregation.

The senate approved, 51 to 2, a proposed constitutional amendment which, if approved by the voters, would permit the state to use its education money to support students in a "private" school setup.

Earlier, the senate approved 49 to 0 a resolution creating a 21-member commission on education to plan a defense of Georgia's traditional segregated schools.

Both measures were proposed by Talmadge.

Talmadge Threatens To Dissolve System Of Public Education

ATLANTA, Dec. 5 (AP)—Gov. Herman Talmadge said today if public school segregation is outlawed he "will not hesitate one second" to act on his plan to abolish public schools and subsidize individual pupils.

In an article written for the Atlanta Journal and Constitution magazine, Talmadge said all details of the plan have not been worked out.

But he added "essentially it will call for the abolition of public schools and substituting in lieu thereof a program of subsidies to individual pupils.

"The counties and other local districts will lease their school systems to private individuals for nominal sums and the state will send the tuition fees to the institutions on much the same basis as the federal government did for veterans under the GI Bill of Rights following World War II."

The governor declared the same minimum standards now required of public schools would be followed or even exceeded under regulations governing private school operation; that teacher pension plans will not be affected; and that both white and Negro teachers will be employed in the private schools.

Plans to Call Legislature

"In the event so dark an hour comes upon us in this enlightened age," he said, he would call the legislature immediately into session to enact the private school plan.

SCHOOL PLAN STYMIED BY FUNDS LACK

BY MARGARET BREWER
International News Service

Georgia political leader Roy Harris was challenged Monday to provide the funds to finance his elaborate $40-million adequate education program.

Harris offered the 10-year plan at a joint meeting of the State House and Senate Committees on Appropriation, Education and University System.

He called on several state educational leaders who backed him in what he termed an "educated guess" at the cost of operating an adequate school system within the general framework of the Minimum Foundation Law.

But Committee Chairman Herschel Lovett, of Dublin, concluded the hour and one-half session by saying to Harris:

"Now tell us how to get the money you want."

"SOME KIND" OF TAX

Lovett advised the Augusta leader to advocate some kind of tax program to provide the money for the proposed improvements, expansions and teachers pay raises.

Harris' plan would require the expenditure of $24,403,000 more than the $99,640,000 Minimum Foundation budget for 1953-54 alone.

Lovett observed that "all those interests now absorbing educational funds" will not give up one dollar.

The Augustan's far-reaching plan included kindergarten and the 13th and 14th grades in high schools.

The extra two years, which he dubbed "peoples college" or "community college," would be added in 30 centers located geographically throughout the state at a cost of $2,430,000 annually.

However, all students would continue to receive a high school diploma at the end of the 12th grade.

VOCATIONAL TRAINING

Vocational training drew special attention from John H. Woodall, Sr., president of the Georgia School Boards Association.

Speaking in support of Harris' program, Woodall said:

"We have fallen down in this state on vocational training more than any other thing."

He also complained of "too much emphasis on agriculture and not on industry." Woodall added:

"New industries coming into the state doesn't suit me at all. The profits go back to the mother plant. We should educate our own boys and girls to carry on industry in Georgia."

James S. Peters, vice chairman of the State Board of Education charged:

"It is easier to get money for any program in the state than it is to get it for teachers."

He pointed out that Georgia is losing teachers to death and retirement, marriage, and better paying jobs.

STUDENT ACCEPTS SCHOOL BUILDING

L. to R.: N. A. Bridges, Paul West, R. L. Cousins, Robert Render W. L. Robinson Sr.

$500,000 East Point Negro School Dedicated

The new $500,000 East Point Elementary School was "presented to the pupils" yesterday and dedicated to "the interest of education," by W. L. Robinson Sr., president of the Fulton Board of Education.

The modern brick, steel and concrete building is the first Negro school facility to be completed under the state School Building Authority.

Robinson said "the character and reputation of the building" is more important than the building itself. He warned the several hundred parents, teachers and students that it is "the people who use the building that determine its character and reputation."

The building was received on behalf of the student body by Robert Render, seventh grade student who said, "We hope this building will be an inspiration, urge to drive for greater conquests."

Paul D. West, superintendent of the Fulton County Board of Education, said "we are not only presenting a new building but a faculty and school program that is just as fine as the building. You must have a good program or the building is worthless."

The program was directed by N. A. Bridges, principal of the school, who introduced the faculty and "friends of the community."

Music was furnished by the East Point Negro High School band and chorus.

Among the guests attending the ceremonies were members of the county board of education and East Point city officials.

The building houses 24 class rooms, multi-purpose auditorium, kitchen, cafeteria, library, offices, clinics and teacher lounges.

Anti-Red and Segregation Measures Clear Hurdles

Anti-subversive and school segregation bills—two of Gov. Talmadge's top requests to this General Assembly—passed legislative milestones with ease yesterday.

The State Senate endorsed the administration's call for stronger anti-subversive laws by a 32-to-0 vote; and the House State of the Republic Committee stamped its approval on two bills which the governor hopes will answer any U.S. Supreme Court ruling outlawing school segregation.

The anti-subversive proposal would require that every person who receives a state pay check (including college professors and public school teachers) fill out under oath a detailed questionaire about his activities and affiliations.

"COMMITTEE OF 21"

The House Committee approved a bill filling Talmadge's request for a "committee of 21" to study methods of transferring public schools to private hands in case the U.S. Court outlaws segregated schools.

Meanwhile, Rep. Hamilton Lokey of Atlanta announced plans to amend the commission resolution so that it would be authorized merely to study the situation if public school segregation is banned.

"I think it shouldn't be required to recommend a legislative program," he said. For instance, if there is an adverse decision, the commission might think it best for us to drag our heels and do nothing for a while, to see if a lawsuit directly attacking the Georgia Constitution might be necessary to end segregation in Georgia schools."

Administration leaders indicated they probably will bring the two proposals to the floor for House action early next week. Opposition already announced assures a hot floor battle.

On the proposed amendment to authorize "private" schools, the committee by substitute deleted the reference to "private schools" and races.

The legislation now reads:

"The General Assembly may provide by law for grants of state, county or municipal funds to citizens of the state for educational purposes in discharge of all obligations of the state to provide adequate education of its citizens."

Rep. John Greer of Lanier County, who opposes the administration's proposed method of maintaining separate schools, said the committee substitute was "no better and possibly worse."

Talmadge tabled Greer's plan to allow only local boards and the University System to say which school a student should attend as "unconstitutional on the face of it."

STRIKE AT LAXITY

Only two senators, Mrs. Iris Blitch of Homerville and Everett Millican of Atlanta, spoke on the anti-subversive bill. Both struck at laxity in employing persons in the University System. Mrs. Blitch added that persons "found suspect" in the system will be leaving the state soon.

Other important assembly action yesterday included:

1. Unanimous Senate approval of a bill strengthening kidnaping laws by labeling intrastate as well as interstate abductions as "kidnaping."

2. Unanimous House approval of Rep. Hershel Lovett's bill providing that members of county boards of education shall be chosen by the last grand jury preceding the expiration of a member's term.

3. House passage of Rep. Mel Turner's proposal to permit judges, solicitors and city court employes to participate in state merit system on a voluntary basis.

4. Senate approval of a bill to improve 700 acres of Okefenokee Swamp as a state park.

SEGREGATION FIGHT STILL FACES SOLONS

Criticism Sharp But No New Answers Offered

By CHARLES POU

The controversy over how best to answer a court case that hasn't been decided continued Saturday while Georgia lawmakers took stock on a weekend recess.

It—the pending decision on the school segregation case—has become the main issue of this 17-days-to-go legislative session and probably the gubernatorial campaign that will begin after January.

No new answers had been proposed for a possible adverse ruling on the explosive issue Saturday, but sharp criticism of what has been suggested kept coming in from all directions.

Gov. Herman Talmadge has offered two legislative proposals, both of which lay the course for his own solution of abolishing the public school system and substituting "private" institutions in the event of "a bald, adverse decision" by the U.S. Supreme Court.

He suggests a "Commission of 21"—educators, state officials, attorneys and citizens — which would study the ruling and "prepare drafts of suggested laws" to provide "adequate education for the white and colored races in separate" schools.

THE SECOND Talmadge proposal, which originally pretty much spelled out his idea for "subsidizing the child, not the school," now merely says the General Assembly can let "citizens" educate Georgia's children if the U.S. Supreme Court outlaws segregation.

There were indications the study commission idea, which has won general approval, may be changed soon in the House to put more emphasis on the "study" proposition. Some solons have objected that the measure, as phrased, tells the commission what to recommend in advance.

Rep. John Greer of Lanier, a House minority leader, again lashed out at the constitutional amendment measure. It puts it up to a vote of citizens whether the General Assembly may "provide for grants of state, county or municipal funds to citizens of the state for educational purposes."

"THE SCHOOL people of the state of Georgia and particularly the local and county boards should fully realize what the substitute amendment will do to county authority and county tax money," said Mr. Greer.

"It completely takes it out of their hands—and that makes it worse than the original amendment."

He again hit at the "speed and secrecy with which they have tried to ram this down our throats," adding:

"Proof of this is that the governor had plainly stated before the General Assembly met that he didn't intend to do anything about it before the court rules."

He said "many state school leaders" had told him the private school plan "would be catastrophic."

The Lanier solon has suggested instead the enactment of a "firm statute" giving city, county and college school boards the sole responsibility to say which schools Georgia school children must attend, a sort of "gerrymandering" proposition.

BUT LT. GOV. MARVIN Griffin, who is solidly behind Gov. Talmadge on the "citizens" education answer, quickly joined the governor in saying the Greer answer was "unconstitutional on the face of it." Gov. Talmadge also accused his old political foe of always voting "with the National Association for Advancement of Colored People on every issue."

Mr. Griffin said antisegregation suits against the Atlanta Board of Education and the State Board of Regents have been aimed right at boards. He said he favors the constitutional amendment proposal, which he isn't sure is necessary, "out of an abundance of caution" and to let the people decide on it.

Atty. M. Neil Andrews, a Talmadge political opponent, also took out after the Talmadge constitutional amendment proposal Saturday. He said it seemed to him that if the Legislature and citizens adopted it, "no enabling legislation could be enacted that would not infringe both the State and Federal Constitutions.

"THERE ARE in the neighborhood of 800,000 school children," he went on. "To take care of them would require that the present facilities be delivered to private ownership.

"This would effect a plain violation of the state constitutional provision against donations and gratuities by the Legislature. And if they were given away or sold for less than their value they could be recovered at the suit of any interested taxpayer."

Meanwhile, although school people have remained silent on the legislative controversy, it was reported that State School Supt. M. D. Collins is on the verge of issuing a blast against any proposal to abolish the state's public school system.

A SECOND controversial Talmadge proposal—an enabling act for setting up a "Georgia Bridge and Turnpike Authority"—surprisingly has picked up no announced opposition from the solons themselves so far.

The governor's legislative lieutenants have indicated that he won't be pushing it to the "head-knocking" stage, any way. It would enable Georgia to join in planning for a north-south superhighway with representatives of four other states.

Meanwhile, the Senate-passed Uniform Traffic Code measure, which stirred up such a furor at the February session, was headed for a joint conference committee for a try at settling differences.

IN THE SENATE, one of the first orders of business next week is a public hearing on pending loan shark bills. Senators felt they did a good first week's work by getting rid of the uniform traffice code bill, changes in the anti-subversive law and a new fair trade act.

Major bills pending in the upper chamber which grew out of between-sessions investigations include revisions in habeas corpus law to take jurisdiction from ordinaries, and to keep convicted persons from being released on bail while habeas corpus petitions pend.

Georgia House Approves Plan To Keep School Segregation

ATLANTA, Nov. 25 (AP).—Gov. Herman Talmadge's two-part "Be Prepared" plan to maintain race segregation in schools was approved by the Georgia House today, one part unanimously and the other after three hours of hot debate.

The House adopted, 144-0, a resolution creating a commission to study means of circumventing a possible United States Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in public schools.

But it argued long, and sometimes fervently, before giving a nine-vote margin to a proposed constitutional amendment to authorize grants of State, county or city funds to citizens "in discharge of all obligations of the State to provide adequate education." The vote was 146 to 37, with a two thirds majority necessary.

Both measures now go to the Senate, where they are expected to encounter little or no difficulty. Administration leaders said they probably will be called up there about Tuesday.

The proposed amendment is in line with Talmadge's announced determination to maintain segregation, if necessary, by reverting to private schools and subsidizing the child instead of the school.

The administration floor leader, Rep. Frank Twitty of Mitchell, told the House, however, that "there is not one thing in the amendment that says anything about any specific plan, not one thing that says we will do away with the school system."

He conceded that "I do not know the solution to the problem lfacing us," and added: "We don't know that we can preserve segregation with this" amendment.

"Al we are doing," he declared, "is trying to promote separation of races. It may be that we can't. But all we are saying is that if therei s a way, we want to preserve segregation."

Leading the fight against the amendment was Rep. John Greer of Lanier, who said it "reverses the constitution under which we have built up our education system."

Collins Sees Delay Till Judgment Day

Dr. M. D. Collins, Georgia state school superintendent, said that any "transition period" ordered by the Supreme Court for a change-over to non-segregated schools in Georgia would not be long enough.

Commenting upon Atty. Gen. Brownell's request that states be allowed a year to make the transition, Collins commented that such a change-over in Georgia would require a transition period of "from now to judgment day."

Women's Group Opposes Gov.'s Proposals

Women's groups are looking in askance at Gov. Herman Talmadge's proposal to abolish public school systems in the state if the U. S. Supreme Court outlaws school segregation following rehearing of issues in the case on Dec. 7.

Two white women's groups have taken stands contrary to that presented by the governor. The executive board of the Georgia Women's Society of Christian Service of the Methodist Church has announced itself unalterably opposed to the governor's position, while the Georgia League of Women Voters has requested legislators to look before they leap at the proposal.

The Methodist women, in announcing their stand said: "Ours is a nation founded on respect for law and the courts. Attempts to defy or evade the law of the land attacks the very foundation of our republic. Such subterfuges have not succeeded in the past and are unworthy of a great state and a great people." The Women Voters raised 20 questions in requesting a critical study of the governor's proposal which—in its amended form—would authorize granting of state aid to individuals instead of schools which would—according to the governor's stand—be private instead of public.

GEORGIA LEGISLATORS IN SPECIAL EDUCATIONAL SESSION DUBIOUS OF GOVERNOR TALMADGE'S PLANS

White School Teachers Worried About Pensions and Minimum Salaries Under Private Control

FEDERAL AID WOULD ALSO BE LOST

ATLANTA — (ANP) — The lull which followed wild cheers greeting Gov. Herman Talmadge's plan for maintaining school segregation, has found some legislators not quite so enthusiastic toward the proposals.

When the Georgia chief first called for a constitutional amendment and a fact finding commission as prerequisites to keeping segregated schools, the legislators applauded it as a sane approach to the school issue. However, today several dissenting opinions were voiced.

In reiterating his promise that as long as he is governor of the Cracker state there will be no mixed schools, Talmadge supported a bill for a constitutional amendment to permit transferral of public schools to private ones. He also supported a bill calling for a study and fact finding commission to draft necessary legislation for countinuing segregated schools.

However, some legislators do not wholeheartedly support the Talmadge proposal.

Rep. Miggsy Smith of Fulton county said the governor's plan would have tough sledding if it is brought to a referendum. He said in part:

"I think it would be doomed to failure because it involves many considerations—pensions—people, federal aid, issuance of school bonds and other things.

School teachers already are worried about the proposal. They are wondering who would be the trustees to the private corporations who would control their destinies."

Rep. John Greer of Lanier county said the governor's proposal would interrupt financing of school bonds and would present the state with problems in maintaining minimum salaries for teachers, free textbooks, teachers retirement plans, nine-month school terms and separate relations with already-established private and church schools.

Greer then offered an alternative to the Talmadge plan. He called for a "firm statute" giving to local boards of education and the university system Board of Regents total responsibility for determining which schools pupils should attend.

Both Greer and Smith agreed that the Talmadge plan would lead to what they termed "chaos." One weakness is that the proposal would require a referendum. "Chaldean King Nabonidus (606 B. C.) opened sea routes between Babylon, China, India and East Africa, and the Hinus then migrated to Africa.

"Lt may be that the Indian corn first reached Africa via the Pacific and China," it was said.

If Georgia does approve a commission to study the school situation, it will be the second southern state to do so in reecnt years—or since the school suits were filed challenging segregation.

The first state to do so was Mississippi which authorized a legislative committee to make a study of the school setup in that state and recommended ways to improve it.

A special legislative season now is meeting to study the proposals recommended by the Mississippi legislative committee. The Mississippi solons also are considering other proposals in an effort to bring about their version of separate but equal facilities.

The underlying motive in both states is the desire to maintain segregation. Whereas in Georgia and Mississippi there are those who disagree with the plans proposed, all are in agreement with the desire to keep jim crow schools.

State NAACP Brands School Plan 'Big Steal'

CORDELE, Dec. 8 (AP) — The Georgia branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People regards as a "big steal" the state's plan to preserve segregated schools in the event of a U.S. Supreme Court decision outlawing them.

The group passed resolutions at its annual conference this weekend at Mt. Zion Baptist Church pledging to use "every legal weapon" to prevent Georgia's turning its public schools over to private hands.

The group, and its affiliated youth chapters meeting at the same time, praised two student editors of the University of Georgia newspaper, the Red and Black, for attacking segregation.

The editors, Walter Lundy and Billy Shipp, resigned after Regent Roy Harris of the university took issue with them for the editorials.

"We commend all students who insist upon their democratic rights of freedom of thought, freedom of speech and freedom of the press; and we especially commend student editors who recently resisted an effort at thought control," a resolution read.

The measure to turn the state's schools over to private sources to preserve segregation has been passed by the Georgia Legislature.

The Georgia NAACP branded the plan as a diabolical scheme being fostered by professional politicians with "distorted minds."

Dr. W. M. Boyd of Atlanta University was re-elected president. Other officers named were C. L. Harper, Atlanta, vice president; the Rev. J. F. Mann, Brunswick, secretary, and the Rev. M. F. Adams, Albany, treasurer.

The resolutions adopted were presented by a committee headed by J. H. Calhoun of Atlanta and attorney F. A. Dilworth, Savannah, and A. T. Walden, Atlanta.

Fight To Retain Dixie Customs

WASHINGTON—As the nation's highest tribunal was hearing arguments this week in the controversial cases seeking to outlaw segregation in public schools, the South's two most outspoken anti-Negro governors mapped plans to preserve traditional separate educational facilities in Georgia and South Carolina.

Last week the Georgia legislature completed action on two measures urged by Gov. Herman Talmadge to preserve the state's lily-white schools in event of a United States Supreme court decision banning public school segregation.

The Senate passed, 51 to 2, a proposed constitutional amendment which, if approved by the voters, would [illegible] the state constitutional provision against appropriating money to private schools to "citizens of the state"

DEFENSE GROUP

The Georgia Senate also passed 49 to 0, and sent to Talmadge a house-approved measure creating a 21-member education commission to "plan defense" against a possible adverse Supreme Court decision on segregation.

Talmadge has promised that as long as he is governor white and Negro children will not attend the same schools in Georgia.

Meanwhile South Carolina, the baliwick of race-baiting Gov. James F. Byrnes, prepared to defy the high tribunal should it reverse the decision of the special three-judge Federal District court which upheld the provisions of South Carolina's constitution and statutes requiring racial segregation in public schools.

South Carolina declared in a brief that neither the high tribunal nor the trial court can tell South Carolina how it shall remodel its public school system on a racially mixed basis The brief was on reargument of the Clarendon County school segregation case—one of five such cases being heard this week.

In addition to South Carolina, the cases involve the District of Columbia, Virginia, Delaware and Kansas.

Dixie racists were infuriated when Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell filed a 188 page brief declaring that the high court has the authority to outlaw bias in public schools.

HERMAN TALMADGE

Byrnes, chief United States delegate to the United Nations, has vowed to turn over South Carolina's public schools to private organizations and individuals if the Supreme Court should outlaw segregation.

The opposing briefs of all five cases contended that they were within their legal rights to carry out a dual school system.

The most blunt and arrogant in language was South Carolina's 230 page brief.

The Virginia brief contended that the framers of the 14th amendment did not contemplate or understand that it would abolish segregation in schools. However, it conceded that if the Supreme Court should ban segregation, it should make provisions for carrying out the order in as orderly a manner as possible.

The Kansas brief did not argue the question of segregation but took strong issue with the high court over the question of states rights.

Delaware, apparently readying for an integration order, was concerned with the method of carrying out the order and difficulties which might go with it.

Talmadge Pushes Public School Ban

By the Associated Press.

ATLANTA, Nov. 17.—Gov. Herman Talmadge said today he can not bring himself to believe the United States Supreme Court will outlaw racial segregation in public schools.

But in an address prepared for a joint session, he urged the Georgia Legislature to be ready "to save our constitutional system of separate education in the calamitous event of an adverse decision by that court."

Bills Before House.

Two administration measures embodying such a plan have been read for the first time in the House. One would amend the Constitution to permit support of private schools by taxation and the other would create a commission to draft necessary enabling legislation.

Gov. Talmadge warned the Legislature that Georgia's system of separate schools and colleges "is in grave danger."

Cases Before Court.

Five cases directly attacking racial segregation in schools are pending before the Supreme Court. "But if an adverse decision is forthcoming," he said, "there is no reason to believe such a decision would apply under any circumstances to private educational institutions." He repeated his "solemn promise . . . that as long as I am your Governor there will be no mixed schools and colleges in Georgia."

Asks Federal Aid To Separate Schools

MACON, Dec. 21 (AP)—John D. Mattox, president of the Bibb County Young Republican Club, has proposed a plan for the Eisenhower Administration to follow in dealing with school segregation in the South.

Mattox's proposal would consist principally of federal aid to Southern states to be used in providing better school facilities for Negroes.

Citing the Negro schools in Bibb County as an example of equal facilities, the Macon attorney said, "We have provided school for colored children that are at least equal by just about any objective comparison . . ."

"But Southern states are not financially able to make the schools in every county equal for white and colored in the immediate future or even in the near future," Mattox declared.

"Therefore it is proposed that a survey be made to determine where the schools for colored children are not equal," he explained "and that special funds be appropriated by the federal government to make them equal."

In Atlanta, the chairman of the Georgia Federation of Young Republicans, J. M. Nichols, said the plan "sounds like a pretty good idea. It would bear investigation to learn the possibilities."

GOV. TALMADGE TALKS

Georgia Governor Says Segregated Schools Do Not Violate Constitution

Here's The Other Side Of Crucial School Cases

An issue even more fundamental than that of maintaining our traditional system of separate but equal public schools is at stake in the litigation now pending before the United States Supreme Court.

It is a question as basic as our liberty.

It is the proposition of whether the Constitution of our United States means exactly, word for word, what it says or what the nine men occupying our highest bench at any given time say it says; whether it is to be construed in literal, impartial legality or along the line of any radical, political pressure which may be applied.

Those who clamor for the court to outlaw our pattern of education take the position that the Constitution is putty to be molded according to the personal whims of the judges. They would have the jurists disregard the law, sweep aside 75 years of judicial precedent and lower this body to the level of common politics. They would resort to legislation by judicial decree to attain ends not countenanced by even the most liberal interpretation of our governing articles.

The notion of those who would abolish segregation is that conditions have changed, and with them the meaning of the Constitution. Pursued to its logical conclusion this would mean that we do not have a Constitution at all but only a series of judicial decisions subject to change without notice. It would destroy the rights of the states, the rights of the individual and the Constitution itself.

There is no statute, no precedent to support this position. The Constitution is an inflexible document, relaxed only by a fixed method of amendment. The greatest legal minds of our age — Oliver Wendell Holmes, Charles Evans Hughes, William Howard Taft, Louis D. Brandeis and others — held the view that the document was drawn in anticipation of the future and was not intended to be alternately twisted or ignored to meet each changing demand of the times.

The Constitution defines in plain language which can be understood by laymen the powers delegated to the Federal Government. By the individual states.

Education is one of the many functions left exclusively to the states. Nowhere does the Constitution deprive, by direction or innuendo, the states of their right to conduct separate but equal schools for different races.

Four of the five cases before the High Court seek to knock out this long-established principle under the language of the Fourteenth Amendment. They seek to have the court interpret the phrase "equal protection of the laws' as ruling out segregated education.

But that phrase does not mean the same schoolhouse and the same schoolroom for all. It means equal facilities for all and the Supreme Court so held in the case of Plessy VS. Ferguson in 1896 from which our "separate but equal" doctrine stems. Separate schools have been upheld without deviation ever since. In Gong Lum vs Rice the tribunal unanimously ruled that public school segregation had been "many times dedecided to be within the constitutional power of the state legislature to settle without intervention of the federal courts under the Federal Constitution."

The legal question involved in the current cases actually turns, not on the Fourteenth, but the Tenth Amendment which reserves to the states all powers not specifically delegated to the central government.

We, in Georgia, grant without reservation that every child, regardless of color, is entitled, under the Constitution of both the United States and this state, to an education equal in all respects to that received by any other child. But we maintain under the same national Constitution the unfettered and heretofore unquestioned right to classify school children according to age, sex, race, mental capacity or any other resonable qualification or characteristic which what it does not say it draws a plain and unmistakable line between those things the national authorities may do and those left to may be determined to be in the best interests ot the State and its citizens.

The question of classification is one for the legislative and educational authorities of the individual states to decide and not for federal courts. There may be states in which segregated education neither is feasible nor desirable, but there is a large body of respectable expert sociological opinion that separate schools in the South are in the best interests of both races as well as the community at large.

Therfore, the issues raised by these suits are a strained afterthought without legal basis and should be dismissed. It is a late day in our national history to say that segregation violates any fundamental constitutional right. If conditions have so changed, then it by our state legislatures and not the courts. Judges have no right to proclaim their views on sociology as the law of the land.

There is no better indication of the original intent and interpretation of the Fourteenth Amendment than the circumstances under which Georgia's laws requiring educational segregation were first enacted. They were passed by a legislature composed of Negroes, carpetbaggers and Republicans in 1870 and signed by Republican Governor Rufus Bullock.

We of the South in general and Georgia have been accused of prejudice and discrimination in the position we take on this fundamental point. Nothing could be further from the truth and this is borne out by the record of my administration.

The Negro race has made the greatest advancement in history during my years in office. Teacher salaries have been completely equalized and once the present $200,000,000 school construction program is complete, facilities, too, will be equalized. Anyone who doubts has but to look at new schools like Hunter Hills Elementary School and East Point Elementary School here in Fulton Country and to additions like those to Wesley Emenentary School, Slater Elementary School and Cox Elementary School, all of which are here in Atanta and have been competed by the State School Building authority. Scores of other new buildings and additions are going up and stand as proof of the substantial progress we are making toward equalizing facilities.

At the present time 781 projects are under way or in the final planning stages of our building program.

Another example of this progress is contained in the recent dedication of the new half-million dollar Academy for Negro Blind at Macon and similar buildings at the School for the Deaf in Cave Spring. These improvements have been hailed as the most modern in the nation.

For the first time in history the state's three senior Negro colleges are fully accredited and the state is granting scholarships to the nation's best universities to those colored students who wish to pursue courses of study not offered for them in Georgia. In Georgia's segregated public school system there are 7,000 Negro teachers who are being paid a total of $15,000,000 while in non-segregated Connecticut there are less than 25 Negro teachers and a relatively similar condition exists in New York.

Not only under our school programs, but also in the phases of welfare, health, highways and others, our colored population has benefitted immensely from the fiar way these benefits have been administered.

Race relations in Georgia and the South are better now than they have ever been. If left alone we can work out our own problems within the sphere of state jurisdiction, within the traditional pattern of segregation and to the satisfaction, benefit and advancement of both races.

I cannot bring myself to believe that the Supreme Court will make a scrap of paper out of the Constitution nor can I believe that the justices will repudiate the precedents which bind them. I cannot concede that the men who sit on the highest bench in this land will abandon sound judgment to destroy the sovereignty of every state and set the stage for a police state which eventually will regulate the lives, liberties, actions and conduct of all people.

More than that, I cannot believe that in this time of grave international peril, when distrust and recriminations stalk the entire earth, that our Supreme Court would be so foolhardy as to divide our nation.

But men of more experience and wisdom than I are convinced to the contrary and their warnings cannot be ignored. Congressman James C. Davis of the Fifth District, who was one of Georgia's most distinguished and able jurists before being elected to Congress, declared just last August:

"This present court has trifled with the Constitution so long and so much that no one knows with certainty what can be relied upon as law. The law has been tinkered with so much that one cannot be certain now that the court would hold that water is wet or fire is hot."

If the sound principle of separate but equal schools is struck down all the solid gains we are making will be obliterated with one stroke of the pen. It will be the most foolhardy sociological calamity in our national history and unless there is decisive action on the state level I fear there will be strife, disorder and even bloodshed.

As I see it there are three possibilities: The court can uphold precedent. I can completely overthrow segregation. Or it can issue a schizophrenic decision which would rule separate schools unconstitutional per se but specify that the ruling would be enforced gradually over a number of years.

There is legal basis for only the first course. But of the latter two, the last is the most vicious. It is absolutely foreign to any concept of American law and jurisprudence. If something is wrong, it is wrong and should be stopped. If it is right, it should be upheld.

Georgia will not be without a plan of decisive action in the event so dark an hour comes upon us in this enlightened age. A sound plan will be reary and in the event of an adverse decision I will call the General Assembly into session immediately to enact it. Every effort will be made to forestall any violence.

The details of this plan still are to be worked out but essentially it will call for the abolition of public schools and substituting in lieu thereof a program or subsides to individual pupils. The counties and other local districts will lease their school systems to private individuals for nominal sums and the state will send the tuition fees to the institutions on much the same basis as the Federal Government did for veterans under the GI Bill of Rights following World War II.

The same minimum standards now required of public schools will be followed, or even exceeded, under the regulations governing private school operation.

All established school teacher pension funds will be continued unabated and given full protection. Both Negro and white teachers will be employed in the system of private schools, dependent upon what race the institution is certified to teach. Such details as this will be worked out for the benefit and protection of all concerned.

Both white and Negro children will receive identical amounts. Everyone will be treated alike. The requirement of the Georgia constitution of 'provision of an adequate education" will be met in every respect and met outside the jurisdiction of the court decision.

I would be reluctant to see Georgia required to take such a step but I will recommend and push it as the lesser of two evils in the event of the overruling of education. I will not hesitate one second to act.

I pledged as a candidate for the office I now hold, and I have repeated the promise numerous times since, that I will uphold the Constitution of Georgia and will preserve our way of life.

'Separate But Equal' Schools Called 'Farcical'

Multi-Millions 'Stolen' From Ga.'s Negro Children by State

By WILLIAM A. FOWLKES and A. M. RIVERA JR.

ATLANTA, Ga.—You could call it "The Big Cheat!" Or, you could dub it "The Great Steal!"

But, whatever dramatic terms you use would never describe the multi-millions of dollars which have been stolen, or kept from—if you prefer to say it like that—little black children in Georgia under the farcical "separate but equal" school system.

And, if Georgia started right now—and it won't—to appropriate every nickel of its $225,000,000 budget to bring Negro facilities and cultural heritage up to equality—it would take forty years to construct the buildings and equip them at present-day prices. There is the matter of withheld principal and compounded interest!

IT IS unbelievable, heart-rending and trying to trace the story of the lopsidely unfair appropriations, grants and provisions for poor Georgia black children on the overall state school front.

In every item of provision—buildings and grounds, libraries and teaching aids, equipment, teachers' and mantenance salaries and administration—in every item since Reconstruction Days, the investment and expenditure for the white child compared to "expenses" for the Negro child ranges from 100,000 to 1 down to 2 to 1.

Year after year since 1870 this "Big Cheat," this "Great Steal" has gone on, perpetrating a race of people always on the short receiving end and measuring up with greater and greater difficulty in a small number of fields.

Nearly always "miseducated," as Carter G. Woodson put it.

AND WITH all this background of giving the Negro the least, there is no sign that Georgia will truly "try" to build a separate but equal school system.

Even though Gov. Herman Talmadge and House Speaker Fred Hand pushed through the present School Building Authority to "keep Negro pupils out of white schools," by the count of the contracts let and the buildings outlined, white pupils are getting and stand to get more from the authority than Negroes.

Although Negro pupils have constituted approximately one-half of the school population for decades, and although one out of every three persons in Georgia is colored, they have never shared equally in the distribution of funds to the separate schools.

Their schools have been one-teacher, two-teacher and three-teacher contraptions in the large majority.

ONLY IN the past four years has there been an appreciable decrease in one- and two-teacher schools, where only geniuses came out on top, or even stayed in overloaded, wretched situations of poor instruction.

It is no accident that these situations have produced Americans who cannot speak its true language, or master its industrial arithmetic. They haven't had a chance at the fundamental learning because they and their fathers and mothers have been victims of "The Big Cheat." Or maybe you will call it "The Great Steal."

The words "educational equality" can be found no where in this state but in the dictionary.

Most Southern states have at least subscribed to the theory of equal educational opportunity for all citizens within the past few years, but Georgia has never officially expressed such a belief—they just don't believe in it and make no pretense of providing equal facilities for white and Negro school children.

AS LATE as 1945, during Georgia's "Good Government Era" under the leadership of Ellis Arnall, a new state constitution was adopted which called for the "adequate" education for the citizens at state expense.

Unlike South Carolina and some of the other more socially conscious (more frightened) Southern states, Georgia is not even committeed to any policy of equalization.

This is expressly significant in view of the fact that there are more Negroes in Georgia than in any other Southern state.

The ratification of a new state constitution in 1945 represented an awakening of Georgia to the state's responsibility to guarantee for all people comparable educational opportunities, but any examination of the progress made toward implementing this philosophy will reveal this "new concept" to be sheer statements of educational platitudes.

IN 1949 the state activated a minimum foundation which was enacted by the 1949 General Assembly, and according to the annual reports of the Department of Education for 1951-52, the foundation will spend $180,000,000 over a period of twenty years on a school building program.

A Federal Government survey, made during the summer of 1951 revealed, however, that present needs (not equalization), including new construction, rehabilitation of exisiting buildings and additional capital equipment for transportation, would cost approximately 237 million dollars.

Georgia's attitude toward Negro education is pointed out in the 1950-51 expenditures for capital outlay (land, buildings, new equipment, additions and alterations of old buildings).

During this two-year period, $14,114,109.01 was spent on the white schools and $1,916,261.81 was spent on the Negro schools.

These figures take on added significance against the backdrop of a study made in 1947 which reported 90 per cent of the Negro schools in Georgia unfit for school purposes.

SEVERAL COUNTIES, fifteen according to the latest State Department of Education's annual report, have no high school, and twenty-four counties provide no tranportation for Negroes.

All the counties in the state provide high schools for whites and only six are under four-year schools. Forty-two of the high schools provided for Negroes were not four-year schools.

In 1946 there were 312 Negro one-teacher high schools. Georgia calls these union schools with some high school students.

There are only seven Negro librarians employed in the entire state.

Another key to the attitude of Georgia toward the education of Negroes is shown in the expenditure of $7,124,348.81 to operate and maintain 1,304 white schools, and only $1,337,627.87 to operate and maintain 1,655 Negro schools.

THESE FIGURES further suggests the pigpen-castle comparison of the Negro and white school. To operate and maintain fine buildings and grounds requires adequately trained personnel.

However, the Negro schools, with the exception of a few of the larger city systems, are soused by whites to maintain a pseudo-superiority and janitorial services are of little use.

Georgia points out that Negro children, who comprise 32 per cent of the school population, are housed in more schools than whites.

This is one of the many interesting patterns of chicanery dilapidated and crude that maid Where there is a density of Negro population, all the Negro children are packed into one school and the bulk of the money is spent transporting the 'Picture Windows'—The Sonia (Ga.) school, a run-down relic of the Rosenwald era, boasts plenty of window space in keeping with the 1953 picture window style now prevalent in most modern school buildings, but that's all that can be said for the dilapidated structure which needs more than a paint job to put it in top shape.

Atlanta Privy—This is a privy, believe it or not, within the city limits of the Georgia capital, Atlanta, for the use of children attending the Bush Mountain School. The school is the last remaining dilapidated school for Negroes located within Atlanta's city limits.

sparse white population to consolidated schools.

When the population is reversed, however, and the Negroes are sparsley populated, one- and two-teacher schools are established for them.

In 1952, of the 1,755 Negro schools, 1,235 were less than four-teacher schools, and 70 per cent of the Negroes enrolled were in attendance in one of these "schools"; whereas only nineteen per cent of the whites were attending schools with less than four teachers.

During this same period, 713 schools for Negroes were one-teacher affairs, which means that one teacher instructs seven grades in all subjects. It further means that if a teacher gives each class the same amount of time, each grade would reseive one-seventh of a day's instruction—or one full day each week.

In many of these sub-standard schools Negro children are taught "good housekeeping," how to make fires and do the janitorial work.

IN 1945, the total value of buildings for white children was $64,292,304, with a per building value of $26,755, or a per pupil value of $128.

For the same period, the total value of the Negro schools was $7,992,576, with an average per building value of $2,599. The per pupil value was just $29.

Seventy-three per cent of the white schools had electricity, compared to 15 per cent of the Negro schools.

Approximately 67 per cent of the Negro schools had no electricity at all. Forty-seven per cent of the white schools had flush toilets, while only 7 per cent of the Negro schools had this type toilet, and ten per cent had no toilets at all.

In an effort to improve the education systems, not equalize them, Georgia has levied a sales tax on everything but flower seed and chicken feed and some progress has been made.

The differential between the value of school property for white and Negro on a statewide basis has dropped from $99 in 1946 to $55.41 in 1952.

Negroes generally throughout the state express the feeling that if the State Department of Education were free to do so, it would remedy the situation. They point out that the attitude in the department, for the most part, is not the same as that of Gov. Herman Talmadge.

THERE ARE members of the State Department of Education who know the problems of Negro education and have studied and could remedy them if given an opportunity.

People in this state with whom the writers talked blame the politicians for Georgia's poor schools. "Too much ignorance in high places," they say. "Too many poorly trained, opportunistic politicians."

Since the county is the administration unit for education in Georgia, a state-wide evaluation of school property does not tell the story. In fact, Georgia has three school systems— a state school system, a county system and an independent (city) system, and they are all related to the State Department of Education in different ways.

The relationship between the county system and the State Department of Education is very loose and herein lies much of the skuldullery. It is in the counties that the mores and attitudes are more super-charged with emotion and racial antagonisms.

OF GEORGIA'S 159 counties, forty-six have Negro populations in excess of the white. It is in these areas that the Negro experiences his greatest opposition, economically, socially, and educationally.

For a picture of the pattern in these areas the Courier examined six counties in Georgia with populations over 10 per cent Negro: Burke, Clay, Hancock, Lee, Terrell and Stewart.

Lee County has a school population of 1,741, of which 1,244 (711.4 per cent) are Negroes, and 479 (28.6 per cent) are white; but believe it or not, of a total current expenditure for 1951-'52 of $234,012.76 the whites received $134,055.29, or 57 per cent of the money.

On a per pupil basis the whites received $269.72 and the Negroes $80.35.

THE WHITES had no school in the county with less than four teachers, but twenty-three of the twenty-five Negro schools were one, two or three-teacher facilities.

The school property value for Negroes on a per pupil basis was $29.87, and $930.28 for each white child, or an expenditure of only three cents for each dollar spent on whites. Lee is one of the twenty-four counties which make no provision for transporting Negro school children.

One-half of all the counties in Georgia do not own buses for transporting Negro children, while all counties make provision for transportation of white children. Some counties give Negro children a per diem in lieu of providing buses and leave it up to them to get to school the best way they can.

Some buses make as many as five morning trips a day, which means that many children are after dark getting home. This transportation pattern is beginning to shape up as an established Southern custom.

UNTIL RECENT years, all cash balances went into sinking funds or building funds that were used almost exclusively for whites. And only in the larger cities of Georgia were bonds voted for Negro schools, hence, millions each year for principal, interest payments for white schools.

The uniform tax structure and supervision in recent years has changed much of this, and under Georgia's School Building Authority Program, an expenditure of some $200 million was planned.

Revenue certificates for some $55 million have been sold, but the second issue has not been sold to New York investors who are awaiting the Supreme Court ruling before buying.

If and when this money is made available there is still no assurance that Georgia will be Separate But Unequal—The Negro school in Haralson, Ga., shows up well the disadvantages which tots of color have to face in receiving an education. The school's water is obtained from the well in the foreground Behind the school is a basketball "court" with eight or ten seats and some shabby outdoor toilets.

'Chapel' Entrance—Imagine the inspiration that children receive when they enter the Smith Chapel, located near the Newnan (Ga.) school. Although Georgia's Negroes represent a little over one-fourth of the state's population, they have received the short end of a 100,000-to-one ratio in the handing out of educational benefits.

Cook Sees Rule Hitting Segregation

Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook yesterday foresaw the end of legal segregation in Georgia's schools, and, at the same time, he expressed the opinion that Georgia legally can abolish public schools and make educational grants to the individual children.

Speaking to the Atlanta Veterans Club, Cook said the appointment of Earl Warren as chief justice would tilt the U.S. Supreme Court to ruling against segregation in schools over the nation. When the late Fred Vinson was chief justice, Cook predicted the court would uphold separate but equal schools.

The attorney general said he believes the court will give the 17 states in which segregation is practiced a sufficient time to conform to the ruling. He thought it would take Georgia 25 years to do so—"and some sections of Georgia will never abolish segregation."

Approval of New Schools Reaches 70 Pct. Mark

The State Board of Education has approved construction of enough new school buildings to put 70 per cent of Georgia's white and Negro children in adequate classrooms.

This was announced by Claude Purcell, director of administration of the department, Friday after the board had approved projects in five more school systems.

Start of construction of most of this huge school building program is being delayed by slow work of the architects, however. The board Friday called on the architects to speed up their drawing of plans. Of the 29 systems whose building programs were included in the first $32,000,000 bond issue sold by the School Building Authority, Purcell said final plans have been received for only nine.

The projects approved to date by the board will cost the state $116,919,805. Total cost of construction will be $148,936,209 with local systems supplementing state funds. The buildings will be constructed by the State Building Authority and leased to the local systems until the annual rentals pay off the construction cost and interest.

THREE-FOURTHS COMPLETE

"We are almost three-fourths through with our approval of new school projects to be financed through the School Building Authority," Purcell said. The total program will cost $187,000,000.

Projects already approved by the board comprise 5,002 new classrooms for white students and 4,470 new classrooms for Negroes. They include improvements or new buildings in 912 school areas. Purcell said 133 of Georgia's 201 county and independent school systems have had projects approved.

The board Friday approved $2,236,680 worth of new school facilities for Gwinnett County after rejecting a citizen group's protest of proposed school mergers in the county. The projects include 125 classrooms for white students and 12 for Negroes.

11 CUT TO 4

In launching its new building program, Gwinnett County will consolidate its 11 white high schools into four high schools. Snellville, Grayson and Centerville schools will be merged into South Gwinnett High School at Snellville. Duluth and Norcross will be merged into West Gwinnett High near Norcross. Dacula, Lawrenceville, Sunny Hill, Bethesda and Lilburn will be consolidated into Central Gwinnett High at Lawrenceville. Harmony, Sugar Hill, Sewanee, and a school near Buford will be merged into North Gwinnett High at Sewanee. Gwinnett will build combination elementary and high schools for Negroes at Lawrenceville and Norcross.

Existing high school buildings for white children will be converted into elementary schools.

The state board approved $2,757,169 worth of buildings for Bibb County. This will provide 85 new white classrooms and 59 Negro classrooms.

GORDON, CALHOUN

It approved $1,082,432 for 40 white classrooms in Gordon County and $244,800 for six white and nine Negro classrooms in the City of Calhoun.

It okayed $474,157 for 28 white and six Negro classrooms at Hogansville.

As it previously indicated, the state board Friday formally voted to abandon the "extended school program" which had provided special non-credit activities for children in the summer months. Courses offered were music, art, drama, reading, swimming and industrial arts. About 80,000 children and 1,528 teachers took part in this program.

The board voted to abandon this program in an effort to raise money to pay teachers their "earned" salary increases next year. The summer program cost $542,000. The board still is trying to raise an additional $3,900,000.

Solons Urged To Increase Funds For Negro Education

Two educational leaders yesterday asked the Georgia Legislature not to reduce appropriations at the expense of state education for Negroes, and announced that a request will be filed for 10 regional trade schools.

C. L. Harper, executive secretary of the Georgia Teachers and Education Association, said a request will be filed next week with the State Board of Education for the erection of trade school units at 10 regional schools.

Harper appeared before the Legislative committee Tuesday with J. S. Wilkerson, Jr., of Brunswick, president of the association, in an effort to keep funds for Negro education from being curtailed.

ASKS EXPANSION

He said that the legislature is working on "what government waste and is attempting to find out where unnecessary funds are being spent.

"We're in doubt," Harper said that bus transportation, visiting teachers and supervisors be expanded not curtailed.

He pointed out that most Negroes in the state can't afford to attend college and must prepare themselves on lower education levels. He said that no complete trade schools exist in the state for Negroes, and that when the Carver Vocational School plan is completed for 17 courses, it will be the only one of its kind in the state.

HIGH CRIME RATE

Harper said the association believes that Negro crime is predominate because a large number of Negroes have no means to prepare a vocation for themselves and raise their own standards.

Harper said the schools would be located in Atlanta, Rome, Athens, Augusta, Savannah, Brunswick, Waycross, Valdosta, Albany, and Columbus, and would offer free training to Negroes in masonry, carpentry, and other trades.

"If the request is granted, we would use existing facilities for the most part," Harper said, "though in some cases we would have to add a room or two in local high schools."

LABOR NEEDS

The officials stated that the problem of adequate training for Negroes who will be expected to help meet future labor needs is "most serious."

"There are 258,000 students enrolled in Negro public schools. If all the students stayed in school, this total would be 400,000", he said.

Harper warned that a cut in the 93 supervisors for Negro schools planned by the State Education Department will force "a drop in attendance, a weakening of education, and a dangerous lack of supervision."

"We are holding the reputation of education down in Georgia because we can't keep the Negro children in schools," Harper said.

J. S. Wilkerson, president of the association, added that many more state-paid visiting teachers are needed for Negro schools in Georgia. He said there are only six of these at present.

The State Education Department is planning to reduce its supervisory and visiting teacher program, along with other services, in the face of declining income.

Committee member Hershell Lovett, a member of the State Board of Education, said Negroes will be treated the same as whites in all phases of education in the state. Committee Chairman J. Battle Hall said there is no intention of increasing one educational service at the expense of another.

In his appearance before the committee, Harper had expressed appreciation to the legislature for the progress made in Georgia's Negro schools in recent years. He mentioned specifically the building program, transportation and school books.

School Dept. Consolidation Is Explained

The reorganization of the State Department of Education, announced by State School Supt. M. D. Collins, will consolidate the existing 13 divisions of the department into four divisions.

With the state board of education and the state superintendent topping the new organization chart at the policy-making and administrative levels, there will be an associate superintendent, Dr. J. I. Allman, and a chairman for Staff Resource Services, and three assistant superintendents.

Apparently the biggest of the three new divisions will be that of Total Program Services, including field services, instruction, Negro education, adult education and local level administration, along with libraries, audio-visual and adult education.

The new chairman for Staff Resources will have jurisdiction over personnel, research, public relations, specialists in child growth development, IBM services and specialists for professional preparation.

Under the assistant superintendent in charge of total program services will be chairmen for program resources (instructional materials, libraries, etc.); personal problems (tools of learning); vocational educational services, (home economics, agriculture, etc.); secondary social relationships (citizenship, government, etc.), and problems of local school administration.

The assistant superintendent in charge of total internal services will be over chairmen for central accounting, teacher certification, operations and procurement of materials.

The assistant superintendent for special services will have under him chairmen for technical services, field services, services for adult blind, the Academy for the Blind and the School for the Deaf.

Hummon Feels:

High Court Will Bow to State's Rights

ATLANTA, Ga. — In an apparent attempt to insure confidence of prospective investors in State Building Authority, Gov. Herman Talmadge last week expressed belief that the U. S. Supreme Court will uphold state control of schools. There has been delay in the sale of millions of dollars worth of Georgia school building certificates pending a decision of the Supreme Court on segregation in public schools.

Governor Talmadge ignored the views of Georgia's Senator George that the South's traditional dual system of schools for Negroes and whites faced an adverse decision from the nation's highest tribunal.

The state's chief executive wrote to the school building authority:

"There will always be in Georgia a system of schools for our children, established, controlled and managed by Georgians and feel that this will be true as it applies to every other state of these United States."

Ga. Senator Says New Hearing Indicates It

WASHINGTON — (NNPA) — Senator Walter F. George, Democrat, of Georgia, expresed the opinion last Wednesday that the United States Supreme Court, in ordering the five school segregation cases reargued next Oct. 12 on specific questions, indicated that it will outlaw segregation in public elementary and high schools.

His view was based on questions which the Supreme Court did not direct lawyers in the cases to argue at the rehearing, rather than the specific questions to which it asked them to address themselves.

Senator George, who is regarded as one of the foremost Constitutional lawyers in the Senate, said it was significant that the court asked for no further arguments on the dual form of state and federal governments, formed under the Constitution.

"This to my mind is the basic issue in the case," George said. "Yet the court in proposing a series of questions on which it wanted to hear further arguments before rendering a decision did not request any additional discussion of our dual system of government.

TELLS SOUTH, BE PREPARED

"It would indicate to me that a majority of the court thinks the states have no rights under the Fourteenth Amendment to order segregation in their public schools. Consequently, I anticipate that the system long practiced in the South of separating the two races in different schools will be held to be discriminatory and, therefore unconstitutional, as a majority of the present court sees it."

Senator George said the South might as well prepare itself for such a decision.

Under Senator George's concept of the dual form of government, all rights not delegated to the Federal Government are reserved to the states with strict limitation of the powers of the Federal Government.

"Why should the states continue to exist if they can't regulate their domestic and internal affairs?" asked George.

The five questions the Supreme court asked the lawyers to discuss on reargument of the cases relate to whether it was intended or understood that the Fourteenth Amendment would abolish segregation in public schools, whether the court has the power to abolish segregation under that amendment and the type of decree it should enter if it should outlaw segregation.

COURT SPLIT

George thought these questions were significant.

"The court," he said, "seemed to be concerned about how it should put into effect a segregation order, if one is issued. The emphasis thus raised on this phase of the matter may be indicative.

"Evidently there is some division in the court on the basic issues involved or else the further hearings would not have been ordered.

"But the tenor of the court's action, and especially its failure to propound any question on our dual form of government, warrants the assumption that a majority of the tribunal has made up its mind as to this phase. That, in turn, points to an anti-segregation decision."

South Carolina Governor to Go Along With Georgia in Fight Against Integration

CALLS LIBERALS "MAD MEN"

ATLANTA. — (ANP) — Herman Talmadge, Georgia's chief executive, last week reiterated his position on the school issue as it affects his state.

At a press conference here, the governor said that Georgia would transfer public schools to private operation in "a few days" if the U. S. Supreme Court bans segregation in public schools.

Talmadge, along with Gov. James Byrnes of South Carolina and Fielding Wright, then governor of Mississippi, earlier had threatened to abolish public schools in the event of the court's outlawing jim crow in classrooms.

In his statement at the press conference last week, Talmadge said that state subsidization of private schools for both white and Negro children would be the only way to prevent "strife and bloodshed" if segregation is banned.

In line with the thinking of many Southerners, the Georgia politician branded the move to democratize southern schools as communistic.

How a "bunch of mad men could force such beliefs on us is beyond my comprehension," he said. Adoption of mixed classes, he added, would take the nation "one step closer to the policies of the Kremlin."

Before the state could turn the schools over to private hands, the state law would have to be amended. Talmadge, however, said this would be no trouble. He promised to call the legislature into immediate session for this purpose if the high tribunal outlaws segregation in schools.

House Okays Stand-By School Segregation Plan

By M. L. ST. JOHN

The House of Representatives yesterday voted 146 to 37 to lay the groundwork for abolition of the Georgia public school system in event the U.S. Supreme Court outlaws segregation.

This was nine votes more than the two-thirds required to pass a constitutional amendment.

The House sent the proposal to the Senate after three and one-half hours of debate in which administration leaders frankly admitted they have no solution to the problem of maintaining segregation in schools, and in which opponents pleaded for delay until a study commission could report next year.

WHAT WILL HAPPEN?

Opponents raised numerous questions as to what would happen to school property, the 800,000 school children and the 27,000 school teachers. Proponents declared the amendment was simply opening the door for the Legislature to deal with the problem later.

The amendment, sponsored by Gov. Talmadge, says:

"Notwithstanding any other provision of this Constitution, the General Assembly may by law provide for grants of state, county or municipal funds to citizens of the state for educational purposes, in discharge of all obligations of the state to provide adequate education for its citizens."

Prior to the long debate—which was free of bitter tirades—on the constitutional amendment, the House unanimously approved Talmadge's request for creation of a commission to study any court decision on segregation in the schools and make recommendations to the Legislature.

CONFEDERATE TRADITION

There was a brief interlude of oratorical battling, otherwise calm debate. Rep. Peter Zack Geer of Miller County referred to Confederate tradition in his call for upholding segregation. This was met with a substitute bill, offered in jest and ruled out of order by Rep. Fred Bentley of Cobb County to have Georgia secede from the Union.

All speakers on both sides upheld segregation.

Putting the question squarely on whether Georgia will do away with education, and not on segregation, Fulton Rep. Hamilton Lokey told the House:

"I hope we can devise a plan within the framework of our state and national constitutions whereby segregation can be preserved. But I will never vote to destroy the common schools of Georgia under any circumstances."

Floor Leader Frank Twitty of Mitchell replied that the administration has no plan. The proposal is merely a constitutional amendment, subject to ratification by the people, which will permit the Legislature in the future to provide educational grants to children if it becomes necessary.

Glynn Rep. Charlie Gowen said Georgia school boards and the study commission could make rules which would hamstring "the National Association Against Cruelty to Colored People" for 50 years.

Another plan was offered by Rep. John Greer of Lanier. He suggested letting the local school boards practice gerrymanding, retaining segregation if necessary by zoning the school districts.

How They Voted On School Plan

Here's the roll call vote on the proposed constitutional amendment granting the Legislature the right to make grants of tax funds to individual children for educational purposes, in lieu of operating a public school system:

Educators Hit Proposed Plan Of "Private School" Segregation

ROME, Ga.—Although emphasizing they favor segregation and want it preserved, two education leaders denounced legislative proposals to preserve racial segregation in Georgia schools.

In an address delivered at a Seventh District GEA Public Relations [illegible] held Monday night at Model School in nearby Shannon, Kirkpatrick Anderson, Polk County school superintendent and former president of the Georgia Education (Teachers) Association blasted the proposals as "silly and monstrous."

Also attacking the proposals was J. Harold Saxon, executive secretary of the GEA, who said that he "had never been more concerned to see citizens stunned and benumbed, although the GEA itself had taken no action on the matter.

MOVE "INCONCEIVABLE"

Mr. Saxon declared it was inconceivable that anyone should propose to do away with the public schools and revert to private schools as the legislative measure is designed to do.

Mr. Anderson pointed out that it had taken 100 years to build up the public school system and asserted that if the legislative measure were put into force, "It would be the greatest calamity that ever befell the people of Georgia.

"I can't think of anything worse for the people of this state than to have public education abolished," he said.

"In the event the United States Supreme Court abolishes segregation in the public schools, the legislative move would have cleared the way to turn the schools over to private interests. After criticism, it was amended to eliminate reference to private schools and to authorize the granting of tax-financed aid to individuals instead of schools."

SEGREGATION VOTE TUESDAY FOR SENATE

Grant-to-Citizens Measure Clears In Record Time

By CHARLES POU

The Talmadge administration, cashing in on new GOP-fused resentment to any move to end school segregation, Saturday readied the governor's "grant to citizens" school proposal for a vote on Tuesday.

The Senate State of Republic Committee did that, in probable record time, amid considerable maneuvering by administration leaders, at a brief morning session of the upper chamber.

Also approved by the committee, as Georgians joined other Southerners in bitter reaction to Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell's entry in the school segregation case, was the governor's proposal for a 21-member commission to study the pending ruling of the U.S. Supreme Court.

THE TWO measures were passed by the House last Wednesday.

Action by the committee followed a hasty conference between Lt. Gov. Marvin Griffin and Sens. Iris Blitch and J. Douglas Carlise.

But the "grants to citizens" proposal, a necessary forerunner to the governor's idea for abolishing public schools, probably wasn't going to get much opposition in the Senate, any way. It passed the House on a vote of 146 to 37.

In the upper chamber, only Fulton Sen. Everett Millican has announced intentions to oppose it. He is expecting "some help."

THE COMMISSION proposal, which got unanimous approval in the House, likewise is expected to win full accord in the Senate.

The "citizens" measure says the General Assembly "may by law provide for grants of state, county or municipal funds to citizens of the state" for educational purposes.

A sizable number of the House members who voted against it took the microphone to say what they objected to about it. These objections included contentions that it would be "legally impossible" to do away with the state's public school and substitute citizen-operated "private" schools.

However, administration speakers described it as just another "safeguard" to have on the law books in the event the high court knocks out segregation. Speaker Pro Tem George L. Smith, almost reciting the language of the brief measure, said it would "fix it so the General Assembly will have the right to make grants to citizens for education."

THE HOUSE-PASSED version was a substute for an original measure which pretty much spelled out the governor's plan for supporting "private" institutions by taxation in the event of a "bald, adverse ruling" by the court in the explosive case.

Meanwhile, school segregation has become a sure issue in the coming governor's race. Lt. Gov. Marvin Griffin, siding with Gov. Talmadge, Saturday said if he has to choose between continuing public schools and having "mixed schools" he'll take a stand with segregation.

In another legislative action of the third week of this 25-day "holdover" session, a committee of citizens and educators will present their recommendations for an "adequate" school program for Georgia. The committee, which is headed by Augustan Roy Harris, will meet with House and Senate committees on appropriations at 2 p.m. Monday.

Mr. Harris and representatives of the Georgia Congress of Parents and Teachers, the Georgia Education Association and other school organizations will detail the cost of a "10-year" adequate school program.

And, along the same line, Rep. Charles Gowen of Glynn Saturday announced he is withdrawing his intention to legislate for a teacher pay raise at this session. He said the governor "now has both the money and the legal authority" to give teachers a pay raise.

Rep. Gowen said the attorney general had "advised" him the governor could use money from the emergency fund for the pay increase. And he said the treasurer's report on Nov. 1 showed "there was $17,504,948 in the emergency fund and this sum can be added to substantially if the administration will practice some economy.

"The transfer of only $8,000,000 from this surplus will give the teachers the money necessary to meet the increased cost of living," he said. "The governor has admitted that the teachers are entitled to the raise and I hope that he will act promptly to rectify this injustice."

Legislature Quickly, Easily Approves All Far-Reaching Talmadge Proposals

By M. L. ST. JOHN

WHEN THE GEORGIA Legislature adjourns next Thursday, it will have long since given Gov. Talmadge everything he asked for in his "State of the State" address—and without any trouble. The governor told the lawmakers in his talk the second day of their 25-day session that he didn't want much. However, the few proposals he outlined had very far-reaching effect.

Talmadge asked the General Assembly to make it possible for the state to abolish its public school system in event segregation is ended by the United States Supreme Court. The Legislature overwhelmingly passed a resolution creating a study commission and also overwhelmingly approved a constitutional amendment to be submitted to the people next November.

The governor asked the Legislature to continue the Law Department's antisubversive probe, adding a requirement for all state employes to take a loyalty oath. This was unanimously approved.

Talmadge asked for something the administration critics long had wanted—the fixing of the primary date by law for the first Wednesday in September. This was sailing through the Legislature.

As a last request, the governor, already operating the state on a 6 per cent budget cut from the appropriations set by Legislature earlier this year, asked the General Assembly not to increase appropriations. When the General Assembly adjourns this week, it will have held the line rigidly.

The various state agencies asked very little this time. They are meeting with varying degrees of success.

EDUCATIONAL BUDGET

The educational agencies joined a citizens group in outlining a $30,000,000 higher budget before the General Assembly to finance an Adequate Program of Education—but pointed out that they weren't asking the present group to attempt this impossible task. They just put up an issue for the 1954 legislative and gubernatorial campaigns. House leaders sponsored constitutional amendments designed to raise more money locally for schools, and these are moving through the Legislature.

Indications are that the Welfare Department will get its requests for laws to permit incorrigible juveniles to be transferred to prison and make it easier for former insane patients to have their rights restored. The courts, not the training school superintendent, would have to make the transfer of the juveniles.

A labor-management dispute apparently is killing hope for higher workmen's compensation benefits. A bill has been tied up in the House Industrial Relations Committee since early this year. The original bill asked for doubling of the benefits. Labor and management agreed to a compromise which would step up the payments some, but not double them. However, when management got a subcommittee to insert two provisions on widows and death benefits, labor balked. Labor said the new provisions would rob a worker's widow of all the benefits it seemed to be holding out to them. Management said it didn't mind paying more money to worthy cases but didn't want benefits to go to people not entitled to them.

M. L. St. John's column appears regularly in the daily Atlanta Constitution.

TOLL ROADS

While the Highway Department made no formal requests this time, Highway Commissioner Dixon Oxford and Gov. Talmadge were highly interested in getting the Legislature to permit toll roads. In the Agriculture Department, an optional system of state warehouses was passed by the House and is over in the Senate. A legislative prison committee is having success in tightening up on administration of county public works camps. The Health Department asked for no new laws.

Another legislative committee, a Senate group, undoubtedly will get its recommendations passed intc law to take habeas corpus jurisdiction from the ordinaries.

The General Assembly by adjournment time will have disposed of a lot of bills . . . but the session has been rather dull insofar as sensational news is concerned. Few highly controversial bills have been presented to the legislators. Those which did not have far-reaching significance have been disposed of with a minimum of debate and no name-calling. It is a harmonious meeting.

If they are called into extraordinary session next year because of any court decision on segregation in a Georgia election year, however, these peace-loving legislators may have stormy weather.

U. of Ga. Campus Editor Silent on 'Squirt' Label

ATHENS, Nov. 27 (AP)—Campus Editor Walter A. Lundy Jr. today had no comment on a regent's statement calling him and his staff members "squirts" for advocating an end of racial segregation in education.

But, on a Thanksgiving vacation at his home in Cairo, Ga., Lundy declared:

"We have not retracted our stand against segregation and we do not intend to. If we do not have anything more to say on the question, it will be only because we do not want to cause the University of Georgia further embarrassment."

The "squirt" jibe was the latest verbal blast by University System Regent Roy Harris of Augusta at Lundy and his associates on the Red and Black, university campus newspaper.

ROY HARRIS BLAST

His ire was aroused by a Red and Black editorial saying Gov. Herman Talmadge "has again shown the Mr. Hyde side of his political personality" by condemning "judicial efforts to give the Negro a chance to get an education equal to the white man."

"With Communism knocking at the Negro's back door, we cannot afford to let educational segregation barriers stand. . . . Continued segregation and repression can and will cause the death of democracy by the hands of its own leaders."

STATE FUNDS

Harris remonstrated with two Red and Black staffers covering a regents' meeting in Atlanta and the college paper later charged him with attacking freedom of the press.

He threatened to cut off state funds for the Red and Black, the paper reported, if its editors didn't stop writing against segregation.

Harris retorted:

"I didn't threaten those college boys. I just told them what was going to happen—that the University of Georgia is not going to be a party to operating a newspaper that advocates doing away with segregation in the school system."

ILLINOIS

She Deserves Attention

There is a school principal in Champaign, Ill., whose activities of late. deserve attention and applause. Her performance could easily have been different from what it was and would have caused her less difficulty, but she had the courage to hold to principle.

Mrs. Lizzie Johnson, after eighteen years in the Champaign system as a teacher and for the last two, a principal, submitted a letter of resignation to the Board of Education because of the manner in which segregated schools are maintained in Champaign.

Segregation in Champaign, Ill., is not maintained by law. In fact, the law forbids it. The authorities get around the law by allowing white children to transfer all over the school district. Negro children must remain where assigned.

And too, there is the little matter of school principals having to serve also as teachers for long periods of time. This, of course, is restricted to Negro principals.

Mrs. Johnson didn't like the situation and she said so. Her resignation was of her own choosing as a sort of protest and she let the School Board know it. She is supported by the League of Women Voters, the Employment on Merit Commission and most Negro teachers. There are some that have informed the Board they are satisfied with present conditions.

As we said before, she didn't have to do it, and she would still be getting a check. But as Mrs. Johnson pointed out, there is a principle involved which even a big check won't mitigate.

There are few people like Mrs. Johnson. She deserves attention and applause. We think, however, she most deserves to be followed.

Courageous Teacher Quits; Couldn't Stand Segregation

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (ANP) — A courageous Negro public school teacher recently resigned in protest against the manner in which Champaign schools are operated as far as colored citizens are concerned. Specific object of her disgust was the manner in which segregated schools are maintained, despite a state law designed to end this practice.

She is Mrs. Lizzie Johnson, principal of Booker T. Washington high school for the past two years, and a teacher in the local schools for some 18 years.

Mrs. Johnson said that "with regret" she submitted her resignation to the superintendent of schools, but felt that she could not compromise with her conscience and remain a part of a set-up which treats Negroes as second-class citizens. Her letter of resignation was directed to E. H. Mellon, superintendent of Community District 4.

DIFFERENCES MADE

White pupils living in predominantly Negro neighborhoods have been given permission to attend schools in other areas where there are no colored pupils. Negro pupils, however, must attend the school in their area. This has produced the same effect as legal segregation.

It is this failure to establish and enforce school boundaries that Mrs. Johnson protested against. She also disagreed with the manner in which colored principals are forced to do teaching as well as administrative work. In her letter of resignation, she said in part:

"Why did I resign and from what? I resigned from accepting second class citizenship in the schools of Champaign and I resigned from the dual role of teaching-principal when I did not have enough time to do either efficiently, thereby, rendering my service to boys and girls too low to be acceptable by either my standards or the standards of recognized administrators and supervisors.

OBEY THE LAWS

"I resigned bceause I believe that to be a citizen means to recognize and obey the laws of one's local, state and national government. I, in my present position, am not obeying the law which prevents school districts from accepting state reimbursement if the schools are segregated, and the school in which I am teaching is segregated by virtue of the failure of the local board to establish and enforce definite boundary lines while, at the same time, establishing restricting areas and then not living up to the establishment of those areas and permitting violations without censor.

"I can no longer, no matter how great is my financial need, accept this flagrant disobedience of the law and remain a part of the body which demands that I teach respect for those same laws . . ."

ILLINOIS HAS LAW

Illinois has a law which states that funds shall be withheld from any school district which segregates any pupil because of race, religion or national origin. It is known as the Jenkins Amendment after the Negro state representative by that name.

In regard to principals having to teach classes, Mrs. Johnson said:

"A year ago, principals in buildings of 12 or more rooms were given full time release from teaching for administrative and supervisory work. Principals in smaller buildings were given half time.

ONE-FOURTH TIME

"Then, when the Washington school was built, we three Negro principals were given only one-fourth time for administrative purposes. Our problems are more acute and the need for supervision is greater even though our total enrollment and teacher load is much smaller. Therefore, we asked this year that we be given at least half time. The answer was that the issue would have to wait until next year because the Board did not want to reopen the issue this year."

Cairo School Bias Ends

CAIRO, Ill. — For a second year more than 100 Negro children are attending public schools in this city with white children.

Cairo public schools open

Marks 2nd year of integrated classes

CAIRO, Ill. — For a second year more than 100 colored children are attending public schools in this city with white children.

The transfers to the schools nearest their homes have been made without incident despite dire predictions made when the Cairo NAACP branch opened its drive for an integrated public school system early in 1952.

Two national staff workers, Lester P. Bailey and Miss June Shagaloff, were assigned to assist the branch in its campaign to end segregation in the elementary and secondary schools of the city. The opening of that campaign was marked by violence and attempts to intimidate colored parents.

Refused Admittance

On January 28, 1952, after making written applications for transfers, 84 colored pupils, accompanied by their parents, were refused admittance to the all-white schools nearest their respective homes. At that time only 21 of the group received transfers.

In efforts to prevent integration, anti - colored elements resorted to cross burnings and gun shots at the homes of leading citizens, including the branch president; the bombing of a home of a prominent physician, and the false arrest of eight local NAACP leaders and the two national office representatives.

Six Illinois Areas Break Color Ban

Six more Illinois communities broke traditional color bars this Fall with the employment of Negro teachers, according to reports received by the Illinois Commission on Human Relations.

The communities include Champaign, Decatur, Kankakee, Peoria, Rockford and Springfield, where, for the first time, Negro teachers have been assigned to white or integrated schools.

Such changes in employment patterns represent significant gains in human relations during the last two-year period, according to Erwin W. Roemer, chairman of the state Commission. In 1950 a study made by the Commission showed that outside Cook County no Negro teachers were employed except in all-Negro schools, Mr. Roemer pointed out.

Reports from the school officials indicate that the change has been greeted with approval. No adverse reaction has been noted.

Typical of the comments from School Superintendents was:

"The change created hardly a ripple of protest while laudatory comment has come from numerous sources."

Other communities which have already put into practice employment on merit policies by hiring Negro teachers in integrated schools are East Moline, East St. Louis, Moline, North Chicago, and Waukegan.

White Women Object To Negro Pupils

CHICAGO — (ANP) — Racial violence flared anew here last week as some 150 irate whites, mostly women, threw stones and eggs at an elementary school near Trumbull Park housing project, site of racial disturbances for the past three months.

The latest flareup came in the wake of a false rumor that Miss Elizabeth Wood, executive secretary of the Chicago Housing Authority who has worked to integrate Negroes in CHA projects, was to speak to pupils attending the all-white schools.

As it turned out Miss Wood was not scheduled to speak. Instead a fireman spoke on fire prevention.

The crowd which gathered sented a petition demanding Negro pupils be barred fro tending the school.

When two CHA officials arrived on the scene, they were greeted with an avalanche of eggs and stones. While they were inside the school, the mob let the air out of their car's tires.

The officials, Edward Holmgren and Albert Rosenberg, were threatened with arrest on charges of unlawful assembly according to Rosenburg.

Trumbull Park housing project has been the site of racial disturbances since mid-summer when white residents objected to a Negro couple moving into the public housing project.

Since then some 340 policemen have been stationed at the project to maintain peace. It was part of this group of police that quelled the disturbances at the school last week.

100 Pupils Integrated In Cairo, Ill.

CAIRO, Ill. — More than 100 Negro grade, junior and senior high school students were admitted yesterday, the opening day of the 1953-54 school year, for the second year without incident to the schools nearest their homes, formerly attended only by white students. The policy of non-segregation was achieved through the efforts of the Cairo Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People assisted by Lester P. Bailey N.A.A.C.P. Field Secretary and June Shagaloff, Field Secretary, N.A.A.C.P. Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc.

PEACEFUL REGISTRATION

The peaceful registration and community acceptance was in marked contrast to the reign of terror and violence which accompanied initial efforts of Negro parents and the Cairo NAACP Branch to end segregation in the Cairo public school sysetm. On January 28, 1952, after placing written applications for transfers to the schools closest to their homes, 84 Negro students, accompanied by their parents, were refused admittance to the all-white schools. Protesting some of the parents kept their children out of school while awaiting transfers. Only 21 of the original 84 students received transfers.

CROSS BURNINGS

Cross burnings, gun shots at the homes of several leading Negro citizens, including the President of the local branch, and the bombing of the home of a prominent Negro physician accompanied the false arrest of 8 local N.A.A.C.P. leaders and the two National Office Field Secretaries in attempts to stop the de-segration program.

A first Alexander County Grand Jury cleared NAACP leaders of charges of "conspiring" to force Negro children to transfer schools. . . "thereby placing the life and health of said childen in jeopardy and danger." The same Grand Jury failed to return indictments against persons arrested for the violence. A second Grand Jury indicted five of the white persons as being responsible for the violence.

PERMANENT INJUNCTION

The NAACP suit for permanent injunction, filed on March 5, 1952 in the Circuit Court of Alexander County on behalf of those Negro students who had been refused admittance to the all-white schools and all other similiarly situated, is now pending in court awaiting settlement. The NAACP suit asks the court to order the defendants, Leo C. Schultz, Cairo Superintendent of Schools, the Cairo Board of Education and the Alexander County Superintendent of Schools, to "cease and desist from assigning pupils and excluding pupils on the basis of race or color;" seeks the withholding of state-aid fund by the County Superintendent of Schools and requests that Leo C. Schultz be discharged from his position as Cairo Superintendent of Schools.

Illinois school statutes prohibit segregation in public schools on the basis of race, color, religion or nationality. An amendment to the Distributive Fund Appropraition Bill, known as the Jenkins Amendment, states that state-aid funds may be withheld from any school district that segregated students according to race or color. State-aid funds to the Cairo School District and all other school districts in Alexander County were held up for several months during the spring of 1952 and since that time have been released only with the approval of NAACP attorneys.

Cairo, Illinois' southernmost community, is located at the junction of the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers. It is bordered on the west by Missouri and on the south by Kentucky.

CAIRO REVISITED – 1953:

Mixed schools accepted after reign of terror

CAIRO, Ill. — The second year of non-segregation in the city's schools opened last week, as more than 100 colored pupils attended formerly all-white schools with no reported incidents.

The peaceful registration and community acceptance was a far cry from the virtual reign of terror and violence which accompanied initial efforts of colored parents and the local NAACP branch to end segregation.

On Jan. 28, 1952, after placing written applications for transfers to schools nearest their homes, 84 colored pupils, accompanied by their parents, were refused admittance to the all white schools.

Kept From School

Several of the parents kept their children out of school while awaiting transfers but only 21 pupils were actually shifted. Cross burnings, gun shots at the homes of several leading colored citizens including that of the local NAACP president, the bombing of the home of a colored physician, accompanied the arrest of eight local NAACP leaders and two national office field secretaries.

An Alexander County grand jury cleared the leaders of charges of "conspiring to force Colored children to transfer schools" thereby placing the lives of the children in danger.

A second grand jury indicted five of the white persons involved as being responsible for the violence.

Used Injunction

The NAACP suit for permanent injunction, filed in March of last year, on behalf of those colored pupils who had been refused admittance to all-white schools, is now in court awaiting settlement.

The suit asks the court to order the defendants, Leo C. Schultz, Cairo superintendent of schools and the Alexander County superintendent of schools to "cease and desist from assigning pupils and excluding pupils on the basis of race or color."

Statutes Prohibit

Illinois school statutes prohibit segregation in public schools on the basis of race, color, religion or nationality. An amendment to the Distributive Fund Appropriation Bill, known as the Jenkins Amendment, states that state-aid funds may be withheld from any school district that segregated students according to race or color.

State-aid funds to the Cairo school district and all other school districts in Alexander County were held up for several months during the spring of 1952, and since that time have been relfeased only with the approval of NAACP attorneys.

Cairo, Illinois' southermost community, is located at the junction of the Mississippi and Ohio rivers. It is bordered on the west by Missouri and on the south by Kentucky.

Attorneys for the Cairo branch are William R. Ming Jr., member of the NAACP national legal committee; George Leighton, president of the Chicago branch Daivd Lansdon, local branch attorney.

3 School Boards Drop Race Bans

Three more Illinois School Boards tossed racial prejudice out of classrooms and hired Negro teachers to staffs previously held by whites.

The Illinois Human Relations Commision reported this week that the 1953-54 school term marked a turning point in the hiring pattern of several more communities where human relations groups have been campaigning.

In Rockford, Ill., a 120 year old color line was broken with the hiring of five Negro teachers to fill jobs previously held by white teachers. Officials of the Lincoln Park District, first to break the race barriers said that the move created little protest.

The Lincoln District, which has a 15 percent Negro student enrollment, hired two Negro teachers.

Peoria, long considered a thorn in racial equality, broke its traditional color barrier by offering contracts to two Negro elementary teachers. Through only one accepted the hiring of others in the future is almost a certainty.

In Decatur where a Negro teacher has been hired for the second and third grades, the superintendent said, "We were just looking for the best qualified teacher for the job."

Women Object To Negro Pupils

CHICAGO — (ANP) — Racial violence flared anew here last week as some 150 irate whites, mostly women, threw stones and eggs at an elementary school located near Trumbull Park housing project, site of racial disturbances for the past three months.

Groups Work Together In Common Cause

In Indiana—Much Work Yet to Be Done In Implementation of School Legislation

14 d (1) Indiana

By DAVID A. SAWYER

EDITOR'S NOTE: Last week, David Alan Sawyer outlined the work that led up to the 1949 legislation that brought about the complete integration of public schools in Indiana and specifically Indianapolis. This week he continues with the fascinating story of how right-thinking citizens joined in bringing about a democratic practice in what has been called "the most Southern of Northern cities."

Courier p. 2

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind.—So, the Indianapolis Community Relations Council set out to mobilize a sponsoring committee to conduct a survey of facts to determine among other things the proportions of Negro and white children who would attend each school if segregation were abolished and to determine whether equal facilities in education were being offered to Negro and white children.

Saturday Oct 10 53

And, because we live, in far too many instances, by the dollar-sign value, the council was anxious to seek out the financial implication of segregation in the schools.

Answers were needed—and the council set out to find out how much more money was being spent on transportation, for special teachers, for special schools which might be necessary, and for the building of new schools which might be expected in sections because of population shifts in the city of Indianapolis.

This was the hope. This was the attempt. But, with time always playing the favorite trick of "sneaking up on one," the Indiana Eighty-sixth Legislature was in session, and again we found that it had for its consideration a law to eliminate segregated school policy.

For the first time in a long time, groups of all faiths and of all colors worked together in a common cause. And, because they had faith in American traditions of liberty, justice and fair play, they were spurred on to success. A bill was passed, signed by the Governor, and today, a little over four years after its passage, is giving proof that segregated schools are out of order in the American way of life.

Then in a matter of days following the signing of this law, the segregated school policy, which was adopted under influence of KKK, was ended at an historic session of the Board of School Commissioners of the City of Indianapolis.

AT THIS meeting the School Board approved a plan for taking the first steps to end separation of pupils by race, beginning in the fall session of September, 1949.

What the board did was to set up a plan whereby children entering a kindergarten, and those entering the first semester of elementary school, and those entering the first semester of high school, were to be assigned without regard to race, according to the plan of the law.

The School Board realized that there might be some grievances and some dissatisfaction over the assignments of high school pupils and first graders, and went so far as to set up opportunities for appeals by dissatisfied parents for transfers to other schools. Significantly, however, the board said "transfers for various legitimate causes will continue to be granted, but not on the basis of race or color."

THE LAW said that the change in junior high schools had to begin by September, 1951 . . . and it began ahead of schedule.

Well, it's now 1953. The change has begun in all of the schools.

Crispus Attucks High School and other schools located in all-Negro neighborhoods are still all-Negro . . . neighborhood shifts may change this.

I had a letter from a Negro high school student who portrays from her vantage point, as a student, how well pupil integration is taking place.

She related her concern that the Negro press in Indianapolis had been unwilling to tell the story about the many Negro students . . . not only at her school . . . but at all the other non-segregated high schools, who were recognized as award winners, scholarship students or honor students.

She suggested that the Negro press would learn a lot for itself and its readers if it gave coverage in the future to all of Indianapolis' interracial high schools for the recognized outstanding work of Negro pupils. She pointed out facts that a lot of us have known . . . the four-year scholarships to universities . . . the participation in choral groups, school orchestras, recitals or presentations . . . the recognition for outstanding work in various study departments and attested that awards and grants were made on the basis of merit and irrespective of race, color or creed.

GRIER M. SHOTWELL
... contributed his bit

I asked officials of the Indianapolis schools about records on the number of Negro and white students attending individual buildings and was unable to secure such figures.

Was I unhappy about this inability?

NO, AND let me tell you why. Grier Shotwell, chairman of the Board of School Commissioners, as well as Dr. Herman Shibler, general superintendent of education of the Indianapolis public schools, had the following to say, "They are all children to us. We do not think in terms of Negro and white pupils anymore."

I think you will agree that I had no right for grievance.

Many say to me, "Pupil integration is working well, but how about the teachers?"

THESE FOLKS even go so far as to say that "nobody cares and that no attempts have been made to do something about this area of concern."

To these people I have a very simple bit of advice. "Look around and learn for yourselves that even in this area of integration a job has begun."

There are some Negro teachers now on the staffs of integrated schools.

Perhaps not as many as some would like, but the future will undoubtedly improve this situation. This plan has already brought about the selection, a first for Indianapolis, of a Negro principal in an integrated school.

We parents need a lot of education. We've got to get down to earth and understand our role as parents in a community-school partner relationship.

THIS NEED is brought home squarely in an incident reported to me by Dr. Shibler.

He related to me that a public school faculty with a 60 per cent Negro enrollment decided that it would be a "good idea" to have Negro colleagues on the staff. The staff wanted the parents to know it was to take place. There were only five isolated objectors of over two hundred families visited by teachers, P-TA members and the school's principal, who informed them of this plan.

One of these objectors was a Negro family. The head of this house told his visitors that he thought a white teacher could give his children better instruction.

A lot of credit must be given to many people and to many organizations for what has taken place in Indianapolis.

TWO SPECIAL credits in my humble opinion are due.

The first is to Dr. Herman L. Shibler, the school administration and the Board of School Commissioners.

Dr. Shibler, who was apopinted general superintendent of education in 1950, has many times told me of his pleasure at the small amount of parent protest over the plan of unsegregating the public schools. He, the School Board and the administrators have diligently stuck to school boundaries and have tackled problems in an exemplary manner.

They have disproved the fears expressed in the remarks of organizations and "ghost story" writers who were prompted to oppose and help defeat the legislation when considered in 1947.

The other credit is for Hoosiers—for all the fine citizens of Indianapolis.

As a native Easterner from Massachusetts, I find Hoosiers warm-spirited people.

I find the willingness of Hoosiers to do that which is right, always evident.

More important, I find that Hoosiers, with their native pride, are ever eager to right a wrong.

Perhaps, because of this, more than any other reason we may enumerate prejudice in the Indianapolis public schools is being erased by an effective school integration program.

Parents, pupils and teachers will develop as better Hoosiers and more important, we'll all be better Americans.

Students Quit Over Race Slur

14 d 01

Indiana

By GEORGE DANIELS

EAST CHICAGO, Ind. — A charge of shocking race slander Monday, led 500 Negro students to walk out of Washington high school here. They said their principal had referred to the Negro people as 'bums ... gutter trash."

The principal, Frank E. Cash, was accused of turning the interracial school into a nightmare of hatred and of slinging "dirty racial epithets" at Negro teen-agers by 500 parents and students Tuesday night.

Most of the students who took part in the walkout testified at an NAACP mass rally before their parents, city councilmen, state representatives and union officials.

The following is their account of incidents leading up to the race provoked walkout.

Monday morning Principal Cash held two assemblies — one for girls and another for boys. He stated during these assemblies, they said, that he had received several complaints from citizens that students were using their lawns as short-cuts to and from school.

Another student said that when the assembly for girls was over, she went to her 1:40 English class, and quoted her instructor, Cliff Frieberger, as saying, "I learned a long time ago not to tell N.....anything."

Following the student testimony, a committee was organized to lead action to oust Cash and Frieberger and several other instructors, who, on several occasions allegedly referred to Negroes as savages.

Among those on the committee are State Representatives James Hunter, author of a school bill in the Indiana Legislature setting a time limit for all public schools to abolish segregation with which Washington school must comply this year.

The Hoosier Story . . . a Ray of Hope

Indiana's End of Jim-Crow Schools Proves Integration Is Workable

By DAVID A. SAWYER

Hoosiers are setting the pace and demonstrating to the nation and to the world that a well-planned program can be used to heal the scars of a segregated public school system. Courier P. 12

It would be easy to say that Indianapolis, commonly referred to as the "most Southern of Northern cities," is merely implementing a law passed in 1949 which ended segregation, and that because people are law-abiding citizens, everything has gone smoothly. It would be very easy for me to say that the law having been passed, signed by the Governor, left no other course but that the Indianapolis public schools eliminate its policy of segregated public schools.

But that is too simple.

Day to day programs of literally hundreds of people . . . Negro and white . . . Protestant, Catholic and Jewish . . . have been working to make the job easy . . . have been working to make the law effective.

MANY TIMES these groups have been challenged by the skeptics and by the left wingers with statements such as: "Yes, what you say about pupil integration in this school is true, but . . . " or "There are just enough Negro pupils placed in which schools to cover the law" or as the extreme rightist puts it, "Indiana got this law by left-wing civil rights proponents who are seeking the ruin of America . . . ," or from the frustrated legislative opponent who denounces the law and its implementation at luncheon club meetings with "The Communists were behind the law," against which he as a legislator voted and then warns that "it behooves you men to be on the lookout."

The best test of whether the law works and the best demonstration that Hoosiers are generally concerned about the future of America was evidenced a few weeks ago during the ceremonies of high school graduation exercises. I saw proof that Hoosiers have learned that the only way to defeat programs of totalitarians . . . and I do not care whether they are called Communists, Nazis or Fascists (because they are all of the same ilk), is to make Americanism or democracy work.

I know that it must have been as much of a thrill to the hundreds of organizations and civic leaders, as it was to me, to sit through a joint vesper service for the graduating classees of the seven local public high schools, and to observe that Negroes were numbered among the candidates for graduation at every one of these high schools. These graduates were so integrated into the schools and classes that perhaps only a few of us were aware of the novelty of the situation.

There were none of the old taboos.

There did not seem to be any hesitancy to march beside this or that individual . . . not even to sit beside them . . . and as one of the Negro weeklies noted, 'there were no tremors shaking the earth as those whose skin were of different hues, bowed their heads together in prayer to Almighty God."

David Alan Sawyer

A graduate of the University of Massachusetts, he will complete his graduate work in social work administration, leading to a master's degree, from Springfield College. Prior to accepting his post in Indianapolis, he served as New England director for the American Jewish Congress, was director of the Massachusetts Committee for Equality in Education and directed a successful legislative campaign which led to the passage of the Massachusetts Fair Educational Practices Law in 1949.

MANY THOUGHTS ran through my mind at this service and then at the graduation exercises at the various schools.

I remembered the denunciations of as recent as four years ago.

I remembered some of the "cracks" from people in the "not in our time" group.

I remembered that there was a "hate strike" of a group of white parents which lasted about two weeks and remembered that at the peak 153 white children had been held out of classes by their parents, but, happily, I could not forget that this large number dwindled to a lone "diehard" in a very short time.

And as I sat through these exercises, I recalled that the Attorney General immediately after the bill had been signed into law by Governor Shricker, had said that the law would not outlaw discrimination in the public schools, and said that because the new law did not outrightly say that discrimination is unlawful, it would be ineffective in carrying out a policy for the State of Indiana to make available non-segregated opportunities.

I inwardly wished that these people were present to witness what was taking place.

I could not for the life of me forget the arguments presented in 1947 in opposition to the non-segregation bill then considered by the Education Committee of the House of Representatives of the Indiana Eighty-fifth Joint Assembly.

ONE STATEMENT made at that time kept running through my mind because I have not forgotten this from the first time I read it. It was a statement that would be unfashionable for Hoosiers today. What was said, was this, "The question of segregation in the public schools involves many factors of community-wide significance. It (repeal of segregation) cannot be considered wisely without reference to current local practices in race relations, in business and industrial life, in religious and fraternal organizations, recreation and character building agencies, and in neighborhood relationships."

At the same time a lot of names ran through my mind, names of organizations and names of people.

I hope that the bulk of these folks who worked in support of the law to end segregated schools in Indiana were present at these exercises, to reap a little joy in the "harvest" of the event.

I thought of such groups as the Indiana Council of Church Women, the CIO, B'nai B'rith, the Federation of Associated Clubs, the Indiana Council of Human and Civil Rights, the Indianapolis Jewish Community Relations Council, the American Jewish Committee, the Indianapolis Church Federation, the American Jewish Congress, the Indiana Visitors Conference, the Indiana Jewish Community Relations Council, the twenty branches of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the National Council of Jewish Women. I also thought of the Civil Liberties Committee of the state, IBPOE of W, the Indianapolis Community Relations Council, the Indiana Medical, Dental and Pharmaceutical Association, the Mayor's Human Rights Commission of Evansville, and also thought about the outstanding cooperation of the Indianapolis newspapers, of the Indianapolis Ministerial Association.

As I recall the names of individuals, I am deeply impressed with those hundreds of people—Negro, white, Oriental . . . Catholic, Protestant and Jew . . . poor man and rich man . . . business man and laborer.

And I'm even more impressed because they are still working to shore up the Bill of Rights for citizens of our fair state.

I AM HAPPY that these people in 1953 yet record as part of their contribution in the fight against totalitarianism, strong feelings that they must help make Americanism and democracy work.

I'm happy, too, that these people share my views that Communists are about as devoted to the Bill of Rights as Hitler was to the brotherhood of man.

I hope that the "frustrated legislator" has got over his disappointment . . . if only a little bit.

It will be of interest to cite a little about the background that has brought non-segregation for Hoosier schools.

I MENTIONED earlier in this article that attempts were made in the 1947 Indiana Legislature to end segregation. These attempts were unsuccessful. Rather than brood, a lot of people in Indianapolis, under the guidance of the Indianapolis Community Relations Council, set out to survey seegregation of pupils in public schools in early 1948.

The Indianapolis Community Relations Council is a nonsectarian organization on a community-wide basis, devoted to the development of better human relations in Indianapolis.

The council's officialdom were leading civic leaders of all faiths and colors; their primary task in May, 1948, was to conduct a survey in order to determine how segregation in Indianapolis public and parochial schools affected the city economically, socially and politically.

This group was systematic. Through the cooperation of the National Community Relations Advisory Council, the services of an outstanding social scientist (then in the employ of the Commission of Community Interrelations) were secured.

THE PURPOSE in undertaking this study was to find out whether the abolishment of segregation in the schools should be recommended to the community. The council wanted facts.

It wanted to know about hardships caused by segregation for both white and Negro children in relation to transportation difficulties . . . about shifts in population, and changes in school facilities required as the result of these shifts . . . it wanted to know the relative proportion of Negro and white children who would attend each school if segregation were abolished . . . it wanted also to determine whether equal facilities in education are offered to all children including minority groups.

A pilot survey showed that of eighty-one elementary schools here, thirteen were non-segregated, fourteen all-Negro and five all-white. Of the seven high schools only one was for Negro pupils.

The study showed considerable hardships among some pupils who had to go ten to fifteen blocks to attend a school out of their neighborhood . . . these hardships were affecting both Negro and white children.

The study pointed to several instances where a white school had been made an all-Negro school and that as a result many children had to ride buses to another neighborhood every day.

THIS GROUP of citizens was well aware that segregation in Indianapolis had begun in the elementary schools a little over seventy years ago, but was not generally practiced until the Klan era in the early twenties following World War I.

Many of these people remembered from their own high school days that the high schools were non-segregated until 1927 when the Crispus Attucks High School was built. This high school has since been open only to Negroes.

This group also knew that local authorities, operating under state laws of a permissive character had a right to decide for themselves whether they wanted to have a segregated school system.

5-1 Vote Kills Bias

Topeka School Segregation Out

KANSAS CITY, Kan.—Topeka's Board of Public Education wiped out discrimination in its elementary schools, Friday, during a debate on the providing of bus transportation for Negro children.

The sudden move came just as the board was on the verge of approving the transportation request when the president of the board, Jacob Dickinson, introduced a resolution calling for an end to all segregation.

The board approved the president's action by a vote of five to one.

THE ENDING of jim crow in the elementary schools of Topeka occurred during a session which lasted well into the early hours of morning. The one man who voted against the ending of jim crow felt that the move was ill-timed.

The board's about-face came shortly after three new members had taken up posts on the body. Mr. Dickinson, the board's president, has been trying for the past two years to wipe out segregation in the school system.

There has been no segregation in Topeka's high or junior high schools for a number of years. In addition, the board has been faced with a Supreme Court suit on the segregation issue that is still pending.

Surprise Action By Board, 5-1

No Date Set For End of Jimcrow In Elementary Units

WASHINGTON, D. C. —(NNPA) —Attaches of the United States Supreme Court believe that the Topeka, Kansas, school segregation case has now become moot.

They base their opinion on the action of the Board of Education o Topeka, which voted early last Friday morning to end racial segregation in the elementary schools. The vote was 5 to 1.

No date for ending segregation was set. A proposal that integrated elementary schools start no earlier than 1954, however, was defeated.

Jacob Dickinson, board president who had previously made several attempts to end segregation by resolution during his two years in office, offered the motion.

The motion is approved is: "Be it resolved that it is the policy of the Topeka Board of Education to terminate maintenance of segregation in the elementary grades as rapidly as practicable."

One of the five school segregation cases which are to be reargued Dec. 7, is against the Topeka Board of Education. It was brought by children attending elementary schools in Topeka and their parents.

Topeka has eighteen white and four colored elementary schools. Under Kansas law, Topeka's Board of Education was permitted to maintain segregated schools. But there is no segregation of colored and white pupils in junior and senior high schools, except in Kansas City.

The suit sought an injunction against enforcement of the Kansas statute which permits first-class cities to maintain segregated schools in the first six grades. A three-judge Federal District Court on August 3, 1951, denied the injunction.

Appeal of the case to the Supreme Court was prosecuted by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Assuming that the colored elementary schools in Topeka are not inferior to the white elementary schools, the NAACP contends that unconstitutional inequality exists in retarded intellectual development and distortion of personality which colored children suffer due to enforced insolation in school from the general school population.

The State of Kansas showed no interest in defending its Jim Crow school law until the Supreme Court requested the State to present its views in oral argument shortly before the case was to be argued last December along with school segregation cases from South Carolina, Virginia, Delaware, and the District of Columbia.

Until then, Kansas had not entered an appearance nor filed a brief in support of the validity of the law.

If Kansas did not desire to appear, the Supreme Court requested its Attorney General to advise whether the State's default should be construed as conceding that the law under attack was invalid.

During oral argument of the case, in reply to a question by Justice Felix Frankfurter, Assistant Attorney General Paul E. Wilson of Kansas said an order outlawing segregation in elementary schools in his state would have little or no effect. He said some administrative readjustments would have to be made because of the employment of colored teachers in the Topeka schools.

When the five pending school cases are called for reargument on December 7, it is expected that either Thurgood Marshall, special counsel for the NAACP, or the Attorney General of Kansas will bring to the attention of the court the action of the Topeka Board of Education and that Chief Justice Fred M. Vinson will dismiss the Topeka case.

Topeka board votes end to dual system

Supreme court may order dismissal of segregation suit

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — Attaches of the United States Supreme Court believe that the Topeka, Kan., school segregation case has now become moot.

No date for ending segregation was set. A proposal that integrated elementary schools start no earlier than 1954, however, was defeated.

One Of Five

One of the five school segregation cases, which are to be reargued Dec. 7, is against the Topeka board of education. It was brought by children attending elementary schools in Topeka and their parents.

Topeka has 18 white and four colored elementary schools. Under Kansas law, Topeka's board of education was permitted to maintain segregated schools. But there is no segregation of colored and white pupils in junior and senior high schols, except in Kansas City.

The suit sought an injunction against enforcement of the Kansas statute which permits first-class cities to maintain segregated schools in the first six grades. A three-judge Federal District Court on Aug. 3, 1951, denied the injunction.

Appeal of the case to the Supreme Court was prosecuted by the NAACP.

Little Effect Seen

During oral argument of the case before the Supreme Court, in reply to a question by Justice Felix Frankfurter, Assistant Attorney General Paul E. Wilson of Kansas said an order outlawing segregation in elementary schools in his state would have little or no effect. He said some administrative readjustments would have to be made because of the employment of colored teachers in the Topeka schools.

Kansas school case

The Topeka, Kansas, school board, by vote of 5 to 1, abolished segregation in the city elementary schools. This is the same Topeka school board which refused to mix the schools a year ago, an action which resulted in the NAACP taking the matter to the courts.

The federal court in the district ordered the schools in Topeka opened to all, thereupon the school authorities appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The Kansas case is to be re-argued on Dec., 7 together with four other school cases, including those of Delaware, the District of Columbia, Virginia (Prince Edward county) and South Carolina (Clarendon county).

Topeka, having done what they said they would not do, makes the Kansas case moot —that is settled and decided to the satisfaction of all parties and legally open to debate merely for discussion.

This is a suggestion to Delaware, the District or Columbia, Virginia and South Carolina that they can do the same thing.

Such action seems wise.

It would save time, money and create a wholseome atmosphere in which our children could receive their education.

A Credit To Any Faculty

An argument more eloquent than the most seasoned orator could make for the employment of Negro teachers in school systems which shift from segregation to integration was given when students, taught by Negro teachers, took top honors at the Greater Kansas City Science Fair. Two of the three highest awards went to Negroes, a tribute not only to the young people themselves and to their parents but to their teachers as well.

The white schools of Kansas should welcome such teachers as those at Sumner high. They would be a credit to any faculty. If the state of Kansas carries out its contemplated "purge" of Negro teachers when the U. S. Supreme Court rules against segregation, it will do an injustice not only to the teachers as individuals but to the pupils of Kansas of all races and to the state at large. The record made by Sumner students in the Science Fair in which high schools of both Kansas Cities and surrounding towns competed is evidence enough that color has nothing to do with a teacher's ability and competence.

Instead of "purging" Negro teachers, school boards throughout Kansas should be bidding for the services of the best qualified among them. They would find them assets rather than liabilities. The Negro teacher in many instances is of a higher calibre and is better trained than the white teacher because young white men and women have so many other avenues of employment open to them. Unfortunately, the field for Negroes is limited and more of our best minds enter the teaching profession.

The Topeka school superintendent who already has begun to "purge" his system of Negro teachers is laboring under the false assumption that, to quote a letter he wrote, "the majority of people in Topeka will not want to employ Negro teachers for white children."

The majority of American people, we have found, are honest, fair-minded citizens. The only reason many of them would object to having a Negro teacher for their children is that the idea is strange to them. They send their children to school to learn. Once the superintendent tells them that teachers are selected on the basis of ability, training and experience regardless of race, color or creed and sticks to it, the strangeness soon will disappear and Negro teachers will be accepted for what they know and can do rather than on the basis of their skin color.

Out in Portland, Ore., where there are few Negro people, a Negro not only teaches a seventh grade class made up mostly of white pupils, but this Negro teacher recently was named to the board of directors of the Portland Grade School Teachers association. He has been accepted by both students and teachers.

A few years ago, Dr. Ralph Bunche demonstrated to the world that it is the job that counts. When he went to Palestine to negotiate a peace between warring peoples, nobody looked at his color. He was given the Nobel peace prize because he did a job that nobody else was able to do.

The threatened "purge" in Kansas affects principally grade school teachers. With the exception of Kansas City, Kas., where the high schools are separate, Negro teachers have been "purged" from the high schools of the state for years although the high schools are integrated at the student level.

The grade school is the logical place to begin the integration of teachers into the school systems of the state. The young child has no prejudice. He accepts people as individuals on their merit. He learns to classify persons according to race and creed from his elders. If a child grows up accepting Negro teachers as a matter of course, there will be no "problem" when the child reaches high school age.

There must be no "purge" of Negro teachers in Kansas or anywhere else. Negro teachers are capable of performing too great a service to the whole population to let this happen. Qualified teachers at the high school level should apply now to teach in the high schools of the state. We must not only prevent a "purge" in the elementary schools but must erase it in the high schools.

Topeka Board Refuses To Re-Employ Teachers

TOPEKA, Kas. — The Topeka board of education Monday, April 20, turned down a plea of the N.A.A.C.P. branch to re-employ the six Negro teachers who have been notified that their contracts will not be renewed.

The board voted 3 to 3 on the motion made by Marlin Casey, a board member, to renew the contracts of the six who have been told that they will be dropped next year because the U. S. Supreme Court is expected to rule against segregation and "Negro teachers will not be hired for white children." The tie vote defeated the motion.

The vote was taken after nine members of the executive committee of the N. A. A. C. P. appeared before the board to ask that the six teachers be employed for next year.

Stirring pleas against the "purging" of Negro teachers when the Topeka school system becomes integrated were made by M. L. Burnett, president of the N. A. A. C. P. branch; and Charles Scott, attorney. Seven other members of the executive committee appeared at the board meeting. They were Mrs. Vera Forbes, Leon King, Charles Baston, Amos Booker, the Rev. U. S. Bowen, Mrs. Lucinda Todd and Sam Wilson.

Mr. Burnett and Mr. Scott pointed out to the board that teachers should be integrated into the system on a basis of qualification along with the students.

Board members who voted for the re-employment of the six teachers were: Mrs. David Neiswanger, Dr. Harold Conrad and Marlin Casey, maker of the motion.

Those voting against the motion were M. C. Oberhelman, Charles Bennett and Jacob Dickinson.

Dickinson attempted in vain to have the motion tabled and to have the board vote on a policy of segregation and the use to be made of Negro teachers when integration comes. Other board members were determined, however, not to vote on the matter until the U. S. Supreme Court hands down its opinion in the Topeka case now before it.

Board Will Not Rehire Teachers

TOPEKA, Kansas — The local Board of Education has turned down a plea of the Topeka branch NAACP that it rehire six colored teachers who have been notified their contracts will not be renewed next year.

The six were told that they would be dropped because the U. S. Supreme Court is expected to rule against segregation and "Colored teachers will not be hired for white children."

The board voted 3 to 3, defeated a motion presented after nine members of the executive committee of the NAACP appeared before the board to ask that six teachers be employed next year.

M. L. Burnett, president of the branch NAACP, and Attorney Charles Scott, pointed out to the board that teachers should be integrated into the system on a basis of qualifications along with the students.

An Open Letter To Six Topeka Teachers

The CALL served notice several weeks ago on the school boards of Topeka and other places where segregation persists that it will fight against the proposed plan to strip the state's school system of Negro teachers.

When we made this announcement, we naturally expected the cooperation of the general Negro public and, most of all, the support of the teachers involved as we launched our battle.

Imagine our surprise, then, when we learned that you, the six teachers who have been dismissed in Topeka, Kas., are not fighting for your rights.

We expected to have to fight those members of the Topeka school board who voted to dismiss you. We expected to have to put up a battle against white citizens who have so long followed the habit of segregation that they must learn anew the real meaning of American citizenship. But the thought that Negro teachers would back away from a fight in their own interest was a little beyond our imagination.

One of the arguments of those who favor the maintenance of separate schools is that Negro teachers have a greater interest in Negro children and that the colored child will learn more readily under such sympathetic tutelage.

Too Spineless To Teach Our Kids

But teachers who don't have enough good sense to fight for themselves have no business teaching our kids. Our boys and girls don't have a chance to grow up to be self-respecting and courageous men and women if their teachers are so spineless that they take insult and injustice lying down.

If only six teachers were involved, we would be inclined to forget the whole thing and say that if you are not interested in yourselves, why should the Negro public be bothered. But far more than you six teachers is at stake. It is the principle of the thing that we are fighting for. It is the employment rights of Negro people in general that we are defending.

The school board of Topeka has no right to dismiss teachers simply because they are Negroes any more than any employer has the right to fire workers simply because of the color of their skin. It is for the Negro's right to work at any job for which he is qualified that we are fighting—and will continue to fight in spite of the attitude of you six.

Should Have Courage in John Brown's State

What are you six teachers afraid of? You cannot lose more than you have lost already—your jobs for next year. And if you don't fight, you stand the chance of losing your self-respect and the respect of your fellow citizens. By your indifference to your own rights, you are proving that you would not be an asset to any school system. If you don't have courage in the state of John Brown, where could you be courageous?

But regardless of what you do, we are not giving up the fight. It does not follow that because some Negroes are not willing to fight for their rights that whites are not willing to grant those rights. There are plenty of white people in Topeka who believe in democracy and fair play and who must be alarmed that their school system is directed by bigots and manned by cowards.

Whether you six teachers join us or not, we are fighting this case through until we win.

While this fight is going on, we urge every reader of The CALL to send his paper to a white friend when he has finished with it. Then, buy another one and send it to a second white friend. In this way, we can gain the support of many a white citizen in Kansas who otherwise would not know what is going on.

Action Is Effective On Elementary School Level

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — Attaches of the United States Supreme Court believe that the Topeka, Kansas, school segregation case has now become moot.

They base their opinion on the action of the Board of Education of Topeka, which voted early last Friday morning to end racial segregation in the elementary schools. The vote was 5 to 1.

We Must Defeat The Kansas Purge

THE CALL will use all of its strength and influence to defeat the proposed plan of school boards in the state of Kansas to "purge" their school systems of Negro teachers once the U. S. Supreme Court has handed down its long-anticipated decision outlawing segregation in grade and high schools.

We were among the first to say that when integration comes—as come it will—Negro teachers will have to toe the mark and measure up to the highest standards in the teaching profession. It has been our contention that those who were well qualified by training and experience would find their places in an integrated system, maybe not all at once but in due time. Poor teachers would have to go.

We still say that. But we also say that we will not stand by and see Negro teachers as a group cast aside and thrown out of jobs wholesale just because they are Negroes. Such a method of solving what we admit to be a complicated problem doesn't make sense. It is neither fair, logical nor democratic.

The secretly-arrived at plan of the school boards in the 10 first-class cities in Kansas was brought to light this week by an article appearing in the Topeka Daily Capital. The article, signed by a staff writer on the paper founded by the late Senator Arthur Capper, implies that a state-wide plan is underway to "weed out" the Negro teacher.

The article goes on to say that since the boards of education believe that Negro teachers "would not be welcome" in mixed schools, the boards "are using several indirect means to anticipate this problem. As far as could be learned, no mixed public school class in Kansas presently is taught by a Negro."

Kansas may not have a Negro teacher in a classroom in which the pupils are predominantly white, but such a situation is no novelty in many states—Illinois, California and New York to name a few. It is quite commonplace nowadays for schools to have mixed faculties as well as mixed student bodies. Colleges all over the country have employed Negro instructors, not because they wanted to develop "Negro classes" but because the teacher was well qualified in a certain field of study.

George Freeman, a son of Kansas, is a member of the faculty of the Iowa State college. Most of his students are white. Dr. Ralph J. Bunche last year was invited to become a member of the faculty of Harvard university. White students would consider it a privilege to take a course taught by Dr. Bunche.

So, when the boards of education in the state of Kansas say that Negroes "would not be welcome" in a mixed system, they are not looking far enough down the road. In denying young Negroes an opportunity to teach in the state of John Brown because their skin is black, they may be depriving their own children of an opportunity to study under a future Ralph Bunche or George Freeman.

No, when segregation is ruled unconstitutional, as it is certain to be, school boards must find a more equitable means of solving the problem of "what to do with the Negro teachers." A fairer way to state the problem would be "what to do with our surplus teachers," for the boards should look at their teaching staffs as a whole and should build an integrated teaching staff, using the most competent and well trained teachers, regardless of race.

The surplus teachers in one city then could be absorbed in another city where there is a shortage. A plan could be adopted by the 10 cities involved whereby no new teachers would be employed until all of the old teachers who are qualified have been placed. In a few years, mixed faculties and student bodies would be accepted as a normal, natural thing. To dismiss all Negro teachers without regard to their qualifications or previous service is unfair, undemocratic and will not be tolerated. We shall fight to the hilt this concerted effort to remove Negro teachers from the classrooms of Kansas. And we call upon ministerial and civic leaders throughout the state to join us in this battle.

Here Is Letter Topeka Superintendent Of Schools Sent Six Negro Teachers

Dri. 4-17-53

The Public Schools of Topeka
Topeka, Kansas
March 13, 1953.

Dear Miss —

Due to the present uncertainty about enrollment next year in schools for negro children, it is not possible at this time to offer you employment for next year. If the Supreme Court should rule that segregation in the elementary grades is unconstitutional, our Board will proceed on the assumption that the majority of people in Topeka will not want to employ negro teachers next year for white children. It is necessary for me to notify you now that your services will not be needed for next year. This is in compliance with the continuing contract law.

If it turns out that segregation is not terminated, there will be nothing to prevent us from negotiating a contract with you at some later date this spring. You'll understand that I am sending letters of this kind to only those teachers of the negro schools who have been employed during the last year or two. It is presumed that, even though segregation should be declared unconstitutional, we would have need for some schools for negro children and we would retain our negro teachers to teach them.

I think I understand that all of you must be under considerable strain, and I sympathize with the uncertainties and inconveniences which you must experience during this period of adjustment. I believe that whatever happens will ultimately turn out to be best for everybody concerned.

Sincerely yours,
Wendell Godwin,
Superintendent of Schools

Note the word Negro is spelled with a small "n" throughout the superintendent's letter.

Preparing For End To Jim Crow

Mass 'Weeding Out' Underway in Topeka And 9 Other Cities

TOPEKA, Kas.—It was revealed here Monday that school boards in the 10 largest cities in Kansas are planning to "purge" Negro teachers out of the school systems of the state.

Negro leaders are mobilizing all of their forces to halt the "purge."

Anticipating the end of segregation by Supreme Court edict, school authorities are working toward the integration of pupils in the classrooms but plan to "weed out" the Negro teacher wholesale.

The unsavory plot came to light Monday of this week when an article appeared in the Topeka tate Capital revealing the plan of school boards in the first-class cities of Kansas which still have segregated schools.

Mass Weeding Out

Signed by Anna Mary Murphy, staff writer for the Capital, the article says that a "state-wide survey of first-class Kansas cities which still have segregation revealed a mass unannounced weeding-out of Negro teachers is taking place."

The article indicates that boards of education throughout Kansas expect the U. S. Supreme Court to outlaw segregation in the Topeka school case which is one of five cases attacking segregation now before the high tribunal. A ruling in favor of the Negro parents who sued the Topeka board of education would put an end to segregation in schools throughout

Throughout the article, the writer implies that the decisions to "purge" Negro teachers were made at executive sessions of the school boards and not in open meetings.

The article points out that there are 237 Negro teachers employed in the first class cities of Kansas. They teach 7,521 Negro students. In Topeka there are four Negro elementary schools with an enrollment of 779 pupils and with 27 teachers.

Contracts Not Renewed

The Topeka school board, the article says, has failed to renew the contracts of its most recently employed Negro teachers.

"When the March 15 deadline for notifying teachers of their contract renewals came," Miss Murphy writes, "the Topeka board did not notify several of the most recently employed Negro teachers. No action was taken authorizing any teacher renewals in a public meeting."

Kansas Launches Purge Of Teachers

Anticipates Court Ruling

Sees Segregation In Schools Ended

TOPEKA, Kan.— Anticipating the end of segregation in elementary schools, the school boards in the 10 largest cities in Kansas are planning to "purge" colored teachers out of the school systems of this state, it was revealed here last week.

School authorities are reported working toward the integration of pupils in the classrooms but plan to "weed out" the colored teachers wholesale, is the report.

The plot came to light when an article appeared in the Topeka State Capital, Monday, revealing the plan of school boards in first class cities of Kansas which still have segregated schools.

State-Wide Survey

Signed by Anna Mary Murphy, a staff writer for the newspaper, the article states that a "state-wide survey of first-class Kansas cities which still have segregation revealed a mass unannounced weeding-out of colored teachers is taking place."

The Topeka school board, the article says, has failed to renew the contracts of its most recently employed colored teachers.

The article points out that there are 237 colored teachers employed in the first class cities of Kansas teaching 7,521 colored students. In Topeka there are four colored elementary schools with an enrollment of 1,779 pupils and with 27 teachers.

No mass firings yet have taken place in other cities, the article says, "but the boards have anticipated the end of segregation for several years by filling all vacancies with white teachers."

Fill Vacancies With Whites

No mass firings yet have taken place in the other cities, the article says, "but the boards have anticipated the end of segregation for several years by filling all vacancies with white teachers."

The article says that Atchison has been preparing for several years for what it considers "the inevitable." Last year, segregation was discontinued in the eighth grade. Next year, it will be eliminated in the seventh grade. "Of course this means," the article continues, "that the affected Negro teachers are not needed."

Atchison has 140 Negro pupils and six Negro teachers in its elementary school system of 1,167 pupils.

Atchison also has another problem. Its only Negro school is located only two blocks from a white school and both are in good condition.

The article continues:

"Coffeyville which is closest to the real 'South,' has not decided what steps will be necessary should segregation go out. Supt. Victor A. Klotz said the school board has discussed the possibilities but made no decision. Coffeyville has two Negro schools with 330 students and 11 teachers.

"In Ft. Scott, the problem of replacing the present Negro school will face its school board. Only 80 Negro students and five teachers make up the Negro school population and faculty. Ft. Scott has 1,097 elementary students.

Leavenworth has two Negro schools, both in good shape and one only two years old, according to Asst. Supt. E. Paul Lessig.

To Keep Teachers

"Lessig said the board has agreed informally it will keep all Leavenworth schools open 'as they are' and retain all teachers, thus allowing the Negro students to attend their present school if they wish.

"Lessig said the segregation problem has been solved in the senior high schools by the pupils themselves. The students have mixed dances, only one junior-senior banquet and one cafeteria.

"The Leavenworth Negro students presently go through the eighth grade in elementary schools, though the white students have junior high schools for the seventh and eighth years. A change would mean that junior highs, which already are jammed, would have to absorb about 130 pupils next year in addition to the normal increase, Lessig estimated.

"The Leavenworth board has talked the situation over with its teachers and thinks it 'will be ready for any Supreme Court decision.'

"Parsons will have to handle the ticklish situation of a school with a great majority of Negroes and only a few white children, according to its superintendent, Wallace H. Guthridge. The only Parsons Negro school now is in an area pretty well surrounded by a Negro population, he explained.

"Guthridge declined to comment on the future of Negro teachers. He said none were used in other schools in the system.

"Salina probably has the least serious problem, with only one Negro school, 95 Negro students and five Negro teachers. The one school is 30 to 40 years old and probably would have to be replaced soon anyway, said Supt. W. M. Ostenberg.

"F. L. Schlagle, Kansas City, Kas., superintendent, had about 5,500 Negro students and nine Negro schools under his direction. About 22 per cent of the total school population of Kansas City is Negro.

'Like Own Schools'

"But about three-fourths of the Negro students live in one area and would attend the same schools as now," Schlagle explained. The remainder are now being transported from scattered parts of the city.

"Other states which have done away with segregation have found that Negro students prefer to go to their old schools, Schlagle said. Many ask to go longer distances to accomplish this.

"He cited one instance in rural Wyandotte county. This district has 100 Negro high school students. Though they may attend a white school if they stayed in their rural district, all but 14 of the 100 Negroes go into Kansas City to enroll in Sumner high school there which is one of the finest high schools in the state, Schlagle said.

"Integrating the pupils will not pose as much of a problem as realigning the facilities, several superintendents said. In many instances, the Negro schools are located within a few blocks of another school.

"Other than the blow to Negro teachers, the result of a reversal of the present segregation statute would not be too severe in Kansas, the superintendents said."

Kansas Begins "Purge" Of Negro Teachers

TOPEKA, Kansas — (SNS) — Amidst charges that ten of the largest cities in Kansas are planning to "purge" Negro teachers out of the school system, leaders began a huge mobilizing drive.

Reports indicate that the school systems, anticipating the end of segregation by Supreme Court edict are working toward the integration of pupils in the classrooms but plan to "weed out" the Negro teachers wholesale.

The unsavory plot came to light Monday of this week when an article appeared in the Topeka State Capital revealing the plan of school boards in the first-class cities of Kansas which still have segregated schools.

MASS WEEDING OUT

Signed by Anna Mary Murphy staff writer for the Capital, the article says that a "state-wide survey of first-class Kansas cities which still have segregation revealed a mass unannounced weeding-out of Negro teachers is taking place."

The article indicates that boards of education throughout Kansas expect the U. S. Supreme Court to outlaw segregation in the Topeka school case which is one of five cases now before the high tribunal. A ruling in favor of the Negro parents who filed the Topeka board of education would put an end to segregation in schools throughout the state.

The change would affect principally the 10 largest cities in the state since the smaller cities already have integrated schools.

The Daily Capital article discusses the school situation in the following first-class communities: Kansas City, Kas., Topeka, Atchison, Coffeyville, Fort Scott, Leavenworth, Salina and Parsons. No mention is made of the situation in Wichita, the largest city in the state, and Lawrence, the other first-class city.

CONTRACTS NOT RENEWED

The Topeka school board, the article says, has failed to renew the contracts of its most recently employed Negro teachers.

"When the March 15 deadline for notifying teachers of their contract renewals came," Miss Murphy writes, "the Topeka board did not notify several of the most recently employed Negro teachers. No action was taken authorizing any teacher renewals in a public meeting."

The article points out that there are 237 Negro teachers employed in the first class cities of Kansas They teach 7,521 Negro students. In Topeka there are four Negro elementary schools with an enrollment of 779 pupils and with 27 teachers.

FILL VACANCIES WITH WHITES

No mass firings yet have taken place in the other cities, the article says, "but the boards have anticipated the end of segregation for several years by filling all vacancies with white teachers."

The article says that Atchison has been preparing for several years for what it considers "the inevitable." Last year, segregation was discontinued in the eighth grade. Next year, it will be eliminated in the seventh grade. "Of course this means," the article continues, "that the affected Negro teachers are not needed."

Atchison has 140 Negro pupils and six Negro teachers in its elementary school system of 1,167 pupils.

Atchison also has another problem. Its only Negro school is located only two blocks from a white school and both are in good condition.

The article continues:

"Coffeyville which is closest to the real South, has not decided what steps will be necessary should segregation go out. Supt. Victor A. Klotz said the school board has discussed the possibilities but made no decision. Coffeyville has two Negro schools with 330 students and 11 teachers.

"In Ft. Scott, the problem of replacing the present Negro school will face its school board. Only 80 Negro students and five teachers make up the Negro school population and faculty. Ft. Scott has 1,097 elementary students.

Leavenworth has two Negro schools, both in good shape and only two years old, according to Asst. Supt. E. Paul Lessig.

File 2 More Petitions Against Educational Inequalities

The second in a series of petitions against the numerous injustices in the educational system and especially the state's inferior Jim-Crow set-up affecting Negro youths were filed by parents in two Louisiana parishes last week.

Handling the allegation for the aggrieved parents of Union and Rapides parishes is Attorney A. P. Tureaud, legal advisor of the local branch of the NAACP.

The first series of petitions were filed in September by five parishes which now ups the total to seven in the Pelican state. The other parishes are Lafayette, Webster, East Carroll, Madison and Lincoln.

Thirteen counts were included in the suit against the Union Parish School Board, whereas twenty-three were mustered against the Rapides Parish School Board.

In Union Parish, the payment for white instruction was two to one. The ratio begins to become more one-sided in new building sites, cost of seats and library equipment, vehicles for transportation and departments for business education.

These parents are taxpayers of Union Parish and are trying to obtain an education for their children that will meet the elementary and high school levels equal to that offered white children of the same parish, it was learned.

The action of the Union Parish School Board in closing the Farmerville school and sending the Negro children to school in Ouachita Parish which owes them no legal obligation, was arbitrary and denied the parents of their right to petition because while children attend school in Ouachita Parish, [illegible] parents are not citizens of [illegible] parish but of Union, the petitioners showed.

In Rapides Parish, the situation is equally lopsided, and out of proportion. The conditions there [illegible] from poor facilities to a lack of adequate transportation or none at all.

These two petitions, like the other five, glaringly point out educational inequalities within the state of Louisiana. Similar to the first series, the petitions call for an end to the practice and custom of discrimination against Negro children solely because of their race and color and admit them to public school heretofore restricted to the enrollment of white children.

"Cause" Could Better Be Served Without Negro Members Scheps Says

Replying to a letter written by officials of the Peoples Defense League which called the hand of the Orleans Parish School Board for its failure to name competent Negro leaders to a citizens committee to seek ways and means of securing badly needed funds, Dr. Clarence Scheps, president, disclosed that "it was our sincere and considered opinion that the cause could better be served without Negro representation."

The PDL sent a letter to the board over the signature of Richard L. Perry and Ernest J. Wright, president and director, in which they described the failure of the board to invite a single Negro to serve on the committee as a "shock."

Dr. Rivers Frederick, Haidel Christophe, Atty. Louis Berry, Dr. P. P. Creuzot, L. D. Crocker, Miss Fannie C. Williams, J. Westbrook McPherson and A. P. Tureaud were suggested as qualified persons to serve on the committee.

Dr. Scheps replied:

"As you know, the school board has maintained a consistent policy of asking Negroes to serve on all committees dealing with the internal problems of the schools. In this case, however, after discussing the matter with a number of community leaders, it was our sincere and considered opinion that the cause for which we are all fighting would best be served by not inviting Negroes to this particular meeting.

"The record will show that wherever possible we have eliminated discrimination and it will also show in the commitments of the school board that, as quickly as feasible, unequal facilities will be eliminated. Members of the board have sacrificed themselves beyond the call of duty in an effort to obtain urgently needed funds. Negro children were to be the chief benefactors.

In Louisiana Schools

Equalization Is Impossible; Integration Is the Answer!

By JOHN E. ROUSSEAU
(Courier Staff Correspondent)

NEW ORLEANS—Separate education can never be equal in Louisiana! Full integration is the only hope of educational equality for the 908,259 Negroes in the "Creole State's" total population of 2,752,300, whose motto is: "Union, Justice, Confidence."

Now in the seventy-fifth consecutive year of its so-called "separate but equal" educational system for whites and Negroes, Louisiana has so allowed the cancer of race prejudice to grow and the resultant practice of giving the lion's share of school funds, facilities and opportunities to white citizens that equalization is impossible financially, and the only cure is a United States Supreme Court decision ordering full integration.

But full intergration would not be new in Louisiana, where the public school system began in the slavery days of 1845. Racially integrated public schools were used with success in Louisiana from 1868 to 1878, and under a Negro superintendent of state public education from 1872 to 1876.

The Courier, having made a comprehensive survey which brings to light the glaring inequalities in the state's present dual system, therefore, challenges Louisiana to prove that its "separate but equal" philosophy in the field of education can work—after failing for seventy-five years!

A few of the startling disclosures of the Courier's survey are:

1. The present segregated school system "gypped" Louisiana Negro children of $5,775,401 in instructional funds alone during the 1951-52 term; each Negro child receiving $47.43 LESS than his proper share of this fund.

2. Louisiana's Negro pupils were deprived by the present system last term of $22,268,226.24 of their share in the total value of school buildings and sites, with each Negro child receiving $112.32 LESS than his rightful share of the state's total.

3. "Equal" salaries for all teachers (legalized in 1948) are a joke; Negro teachers work much harder than whites for the same pay!

4. Louisiana provides 193,578 seats for the 198,257 registered Negro pupils — 4,779 LESS than needed!

5. Louisiana provides 394,638 seats for the 316,112 registered white pupils — 75,516 MORE than needed.

6. The 1951-52 annual report of the Louisiana State Department of Education further reveals the following incredible conditions existing:

WHITES
1-teacher school	24
2-teacher school	40
3-teacher school	36
4-teacher school	36
5-teacher school	18
6-teacher school	23

3-teacher school	132
4-teacher school	69
5-teacher school	32
6-teacher school	32
7-teacher school	12
More than 8	76

This report reveals that there are 445,434 white educables in the state as compared to 281,338 Negro educables. Pupils registered in public schools include 316,122 whites and 198,257 Negroes, with whites receiving 180 days of instruction and Negroes 174.

School plants in Louisiana include one or more buildings and sites. However, those used by Negroes are vastly inferior to those used by whites. The current report shows the total cost of buildings and sites for white pupils as $159,671,762.74, as compared to $31,644,419 for Negroes.

School buildings provided for whites and Negroes are of the following types:

WHITES
Class A	766
Class B	324
Class C	618
Class D	461

NEGROES
Class A	102
Class B	71
Class C	638
Class D	556

AT THIS point, it is only timely to remember Louisiana Governor Robert F. Kennon's statement to the press in May:

"Any decision by the United States Supreme Court on racial segregation in the public schools will not pose a critical problem for the State of Louisiana."

While the 1951-52 report does not give a racial breakdown on the capital outlay, it does show that the state spent $58,823,162.35 for the instruction of 514,379 pupils registered in schools. Of this amount, therefore, $114.35 should have been spent on the instruction of each pupil. On this basis, $22,670,687.95 should have been spent for instructing the 198,257 Negro pupils.

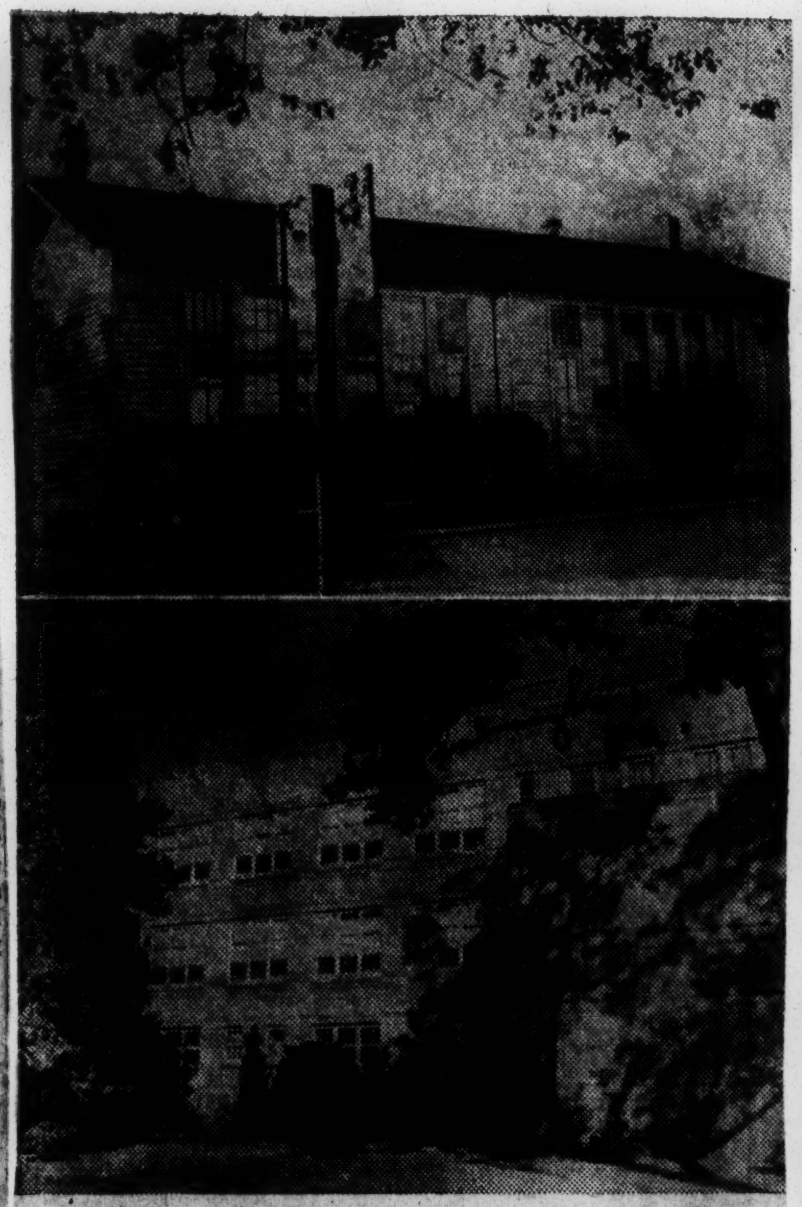
But the report shows that $16,895,286.95 was spent for instructing Negroes — $5,775,401 less than the proper amount — while $41,927,875.40 was spent to instruct 316,122 white pupils. Thus, the individual breakdown shows that $132.63 was used to instruct each white pupil and $85.21 for each Negro.

Injustices of the present system are even more pronounced when it is revealed that there are twenty Louisiana parishes in which the number of Negro educables exceed the number of whites. Yet, even in these parishes more seats, books and other facilities are provided for whites than are allotted Negroes. These parishes and facilities follow:

BIENVILLE: Educables, 2,501 white, 3,611 Negro; seats, white, 3,420, Negro, 3,205; volumes in library, white, 21,030, Negro, 8,730.

CLAIBORNE: Educables, white, 2,864, Negro, 5,025; seats, white, 4,430, Negro, 4,700; volumes in library, white, 25,988, Negro, 9,894.

CONCORDIA: Educables, white, 2,135, Negro 2,829; seats, white, 3,400, Negro, 2,687; volumes in library, white, 7,069, Negro, 3,261.



Separate, Yes! Equal?—The James Weldon Johnson School (top), in uptown New Orleans, last school term had a registration of 678 Negro pupils. Note its construction and dilapidated appearance. At the bottom, the Walter C. Flower School, located only a few blocks away, had a registration of 331 white pupils who used only part of this elaborately modern building. The Orleans Parish School Board, however, has decided to transfer the latter school to Negroes beginning with the 1953 fall term.

DE SOTO: Educables, white, 2,771; Negro, 6,294; seats, white, 3,400, Negro, 1,114; volumes in library, white, 22,319, Negro, 9,428.

*The St. Helena Parish School Board is presently the defendant in a Federal suit filed by Negro parents seeking full integration because of the unequal and inferior educational facilities and opportunities.

Needless to say, Negro schools in these parishes are among the worst in the entire state.

CIVIL ACTION 1068, filed in 1952 by Attys. A. P. Tureaud of New Orleans and Robert L. Carter and Thurgood Marshall of New York, in the Eastern Division of the United States District Court, Baton Rouge Division, against the St. Helena Parish School Board and J. L. Meadows, superintendent, with John H. Meadows, superintendent, with John H. Hall and twenty-five other Negro parents of school children in that parish as plaintiffs, does not ask for equalization, but for intergation. This suit is on the docket pending the outcome of the case now before the U. S. Supreme Court.

The most recent report of the Louisiana State Department of Education discloses that conditions are growing progressively worse insofar as Negro children of St. Helena Parish are concerned.

It is interesting to note that although there are more Negro educables and pupils than white in this parish, there are two high schools for whites and one for Negroes; also, annual transportation costs for white pupils exceed the total value of all buildings and sites provided for Negroes.

Ironically, should this case come to trial, legal representation for the St. Helena Parish School Board will be headed by District Atty. Joe Arthur Sims, who was awarded a plaque recently by the Louisiana State Conference of NAACP Branches, Dr. E. A. Johnson, president, "for outstanding efforts in the field of human relations!"

IN ORLEANS PARISH, where there are 72,532 white educables and 46,401 Negro educables, a similar suit has been filed in Federal Court based on the fact that some 17,000 Negro children are forced to attend "platoon" classes, while many of the buildings provided for whites are only partly filled.

Half of these children attending platoon classes must leave their homes earlier than 7 A. M. to begin their four hours of schooling. The other half is found on the streets returning home after 5 P. M.

While this suit is pending, the Orleans Parish School Board, in a desperate effort to eliminate the jim-crow "platoon" system has planned several schools for Negroes in the city and proposed a "Negro school village" deep in Gentilly section on Highway 90 which would include elementary and high schools. Under the plan Negro pupils would be transferred six miles across town instead of being allowed to attend schools in their neighborhoods. Recently, a national educational journal branded the plan as "a fantasy bordering on a nightmare."

IN MANY upstate parishes, Negro school children are exploited by planters and farmers. Particularly is this true in Natchitoches and Tangipahoa parishes where schools for Negro children now open in July, close during the harvest season so the Negro children can work in the fields, then reopen for the winter term after crops have been gathered.

The current report of the State Department of Education reveals further that $2,628,156.94 is spent for general control. Negroes do not share in this fund which includes salaries for superintendents, assistants, etc.

In this matter of supervision the state spends $568,975.93 for whites and $171,231 for Negroes. Even more startling inequalities are found in the expenditures for visiting teachers. Some sixty-three parishes, with the exception of Plaquemines, spend $345,311.26 for salaries of visiting teachers. Only four parishes, Caddo, Morehouse, Orleans and St. James, hire Negro visiting teachers at an aggregate cost of $28,212.81.

Table XXII of the current report gives detailed coverage of the white public school libraries in the state, showing 1,865,521 volumes valued at $2,919,963.04; books, magazines and equipment valued at $233,947.06, and 441 full or part-time librarians receiving salaries totaling $714,256.05.

There is no mention whatsoever of Negro public school libraries.

The same applies to business education. In the sixty-four parishes a total of $1,276,483.25 is expended for business education in white schools, but this item fails to show in the Negro column.

THESE ARE but a few of the gross inequalities of the segregated school system.

The practice of giving Negro pupils less than their share of the educational fund is not new, it is a deep-rooted part of the system.

Records show that in 1911 the state spent $12.77 to instruct each white child; $2.51 for teaching each Negro child registered. The pupil load per white teacher at that time was 25.3, and for Negro teachers, 48.7!

Twenty years later the state was spending $37 to educate each white child registered, $9.55 for each Negro; with 23.4 pupils per white teacher, and 34.5 per Negro teacher.

Present-day figures show: instruction cost per child, white, $132.63; Negro, $85.21; pupil load per teacher, white, 22.6, Negro, 29.3.

The latter figure proves the "joke" of equal pay for teachers. Note that Negro teachers today have a heavier pupil load than white teachers had in 1911!

State Superintendent of Education Shelby M. Jackson, at this writing, had not replied to a letter from the Louisiana edition of the Courier asking his opinion as to how long it would take to equalize all phases of education.

According to the trend noted in the various reports, it should take another twenty or thirty years—if funds are available.

Only recently, on July 27, to be exact, Gov. Robert F. Kennon called attention to the fact that although the state government contributed just short of $88 million to the support of public education in Louisiana during the last fiscal year, that sum wouldn't be enough for the next fiscal year.

It is pointed out that the fast birth rate since the early World War II period is now creating an ever-increasing school problem which will not abate for at least another decade.

LAST SCHOOL year, said the Governor, the state's contribution to public education was $44.40 per pupil. The increase in just one year aggregated more than $13,000,000. If next year calls for a like increase for the support of the present segregated public education, then the state most likely won't be able to adequately meet the demand —much less spend any amount at all to bring full equalization.

Yes, equalization is impossible. The only answer is integration.

Should the U. S. Supreme Court outlaw segregation in public schools, all well and good. If it does not, then Louisiana Negroes are prepared to go back into the courts, since there is no lack of evidence that they are "gypped" of millions of dollars each year simply because of their race and color.

Didn't Answer— Shelby M. Jackson, state superintendent of education of Louisiana, did not reply to the Courier's letter asking his opinion on how many years would be required to equalize all educational facilities and opportunities for Negroes.

Negro School Children Forced To Stay Home To Pick Strawberries

Citizens Launch Fight Against "Parish Law"

TALLULAH, La., Jan. 26.—Twenty thousand or more parents of Negro children living in the Fifth District of Louisiana will organize a fight against the "split sessions" conducted by school boards in this district, according to information obtained from the members of the Ninth District Missionary Baptist Association, Rev. W. L. Harris, president. To this end they have sceured the services of A. P. Tureaud, attorney of New Orleans, to make the legal fight for them.

According to information obtained, children of the parishes of East Carroll, Madison, Morehouse, Tensas and Concordia are required to break into their regular terms during the harvesting seasons. Only Negro schools are closed during the season. The children are then used to pick cotton or other farm work, and after the harvesting season is over, the schools are reopened. In the Florida parishes, it was pointed out, it will be strawberry time and Negro children will have to stop school to pick strawberries.

Through Attorney Tureau an inquiry has been made to all of the school boards in the Fifth District where the split sessions are in practice. The school boards have invited Negro parents to come to the school board meetings soon to be held to make known their objections to the split sessions. The first such meeting scheduled to be held is on February 4th, 1953, at Lake Providence.

Five New Schools Planned for 6000 Negro Children

Tentative Budget Places Cost at $5,260,000

Plans for the construction of five new schools for Negroes were announced Monday by Dr. James F. Redmond, superintendent of Orleans parish public schools.

Tentative budget for the buildings, which will accommodate nearly 6000 children, is $5,260,000. Dr. Redmond said the new schools will relieve overcrowded conditions in the downtown area, where nearly 3500 children have been attending classes in platoon shifts.

The five schools are:

A downtown Negro high school, to be built on the 20-acre Gaudet tract, situated south of Gentilly rd. between Peoples ave. and the Industrial canal.

A downtown Negro junior high school, also to be built on the Gaudet tract.

The Desire st. elementary school, to be built in the vicinity of the Desire st. housing project.

The Nelson area elementary school, to be situated adjacent to the St. Bernard housing project.

The Lafitte project elementary school, to be built in the neighborhood of that housing development.

Dr. Redmond said the five schools are among the last that will be built in the school board's $25 million building and renovation program.

The board will open bids on the sale of the last $10 million in the $25 million issue at 10 a. m. Tuesday in its offices at 703 Carondelet.

Most of the $15 million in bonds sold last year has been spent or committed for 13 other new schools and the renovation of 39 school buildings.

Already built are three white elementary schools — McDonogh 39, Edward Hynes and Bradley. Under construction are Hoffman, McDonogh 36, and Lafon, Negro elementary schools, Oak Park, a white elementary school, and the uptown Negro junior high school.

Construction is expected to start this fall on Gentilly Woods and Aurora Gardens, white elementary schools, and the Industrial Canal, Dunbar and McDonogh 32 Negro elementary schools.

Renovation of 29 schools has been completed and is underway on 10 more at a total cost of approximately $5,500,000.

The board's office of planning and construction opened bids Monday on 48 temporary classrooms to be put into service at the start of the fall school term.

Pittman Construction Company of New Orleans submitted the apparent low base bid of $294,464 for 48 structures with foundation dimensions of 24 by 32 feet, or $6135 a classroom.

Offers by six other bidders ranged up to $338,000.

The temporary classroom structures will be distributed among six schools on the following basis:

Edward Hynes white elementary, six classrooms; Johnson Lockett, Negro elementary, six; McDonogh 39, white elementary, six; McDonogh 48, Negro elementary, six; Medard H. Nelson, Negro elementary 16, and the H. B. Landry Negro senior-junior high school, Algiers, eight.

Dr. Redmond said architects have been secured for the five new Negro schools planned, and negotiation for sites is under way.

The downtown Negro high school will accommodate 2000 students and has been budgeted at $2 million. The firm of Curtis & Davis has been selected as architects.

Dr. Redmond said the school will offer a comprehensive program of academic and vocational courses and will be fully equipped.

The downtown Negro junior high school will accommodate 1500 students. It has been budgeted at $1,400,000. Freret & Wolf have been named as architects.

The Desire st. elementary school will accommodate 770 students and has been budgeted at $620,000. Claude Hooton has been named architect.

Negotiations are now under way for a five-acre site in the area bounded by the Industrial canal, Florida ave. and Piety. The proposed site is situated next to a two-acre park which will be used for recreation during school hours.

The Nelson area school has been budgeted at $620,000, and Jules de la Vergne has been named architect. Negotiations for a site for the 770-pupil school are under way.

The Lafitte project elementary school, to accommodate 770 children, has been budgeted at $620,000. Charles R. Colbert has been named architect. Negotiations for a site are in progress.

Dr. Redmond said an effort will be made to reduce the cost of school construction. He said he will meet with representatives of the American Institute of Architects and the Associated General Contractors to study how schools can be built more cheaply.

Decision on Segregation Discussed by Gov. Kennon

Says Postponement Makes 'No Difference' to State

BATON ROUGE, La., June 8 (AP)—Gov. Robert Kennon said Monday the postponement by the US supreme court of a decision on segregation in public schools "makes absolutely no difference to Louisiana."

"We have already met the situation as far as I am concerned," the governor told his press conference. "Louisiana schools and colleges have come a long way toward providing adequate facilities for Negro citizens.

"The state has anticipated the problem by giving equal salaries to Negro teachers and making vast improvements in recent years in our Negro schools."

The US supreme court Monday called for reargument of five test cases, putting off a decision on the legality of racial segregation in schools until fall at the earliest.

Turning to state matters, Kennon said he was looking forward "With optimism" to renewed management-labor talks on the Elizabeth strike situation which gets underway Monday.

Incidents of violence have almost died down in the little South Central Louisiana town since Kennon called a meeting of top level negotiators to discuss the nine-month-old strike at two paper mills.

Officials of the two striking AFL unions, the International Brotherhood of Pulp, Sulphite and Paper Mill Workers and the International Brotherhood of Paper Makers, met with owners of the Calcasieu Paper Co. and Southern Industries Inc. here last month.

Talks were recessed for three weeks after negotiators failed to reach a solution to the violence ridden strike in more than 15 hours of discussion.

Both sides reported progress, however, and commended each other on "bargaining in sincerity."

Kennon announced he would attend the national goverors's conference at Seattle, Wash., Aug. 14.

Kennon told reporters he was pleased with state Sen. M. Elo Girard's legislative study groups and regarded them as "another example of an independent legislature in action."

The Lafayette senator has organized 14 informal committees of lawmakers who study various phases of government on a volunteer basis with a view to recommending reform legislation.

White Teacher Is Freed Of Bias Charges

NEW ORLEANS—(ANP)— Peter C. Cabral, white, social studies teacher at Alcee Fortier High school has been absolved of charges alleging that he was injecting personal opinion into racial questions in such a way as to arouse resentment.

The decision was rendered by the newly appointed school superintendent, James F. Redmond, Chicago, who ruled that there were no grounds for formal charges.

Redmond said, "There does seem to be sufficient evidence to indicate that Cabral has expressed his personal opinion with regards to racial matters in such a way as to arouse resentment of some students and parents."

Cabral was warned "that in the future he should guard against discussions or statements on his part which might be termed discriminatory or sectarian."

On the racial question, the report said, while some of Cabral's views may have caused students to feel resentment, "it appears that he has not tried to prejudice the opinions of students and, in many instances, has expressed his opinion only at the request of students."

The allegation that unwholesome subjects were discussed in class referred to racial questions and religious differences, which, the report said, was ascertained in an interview with the person making the allegation.

Petition Sc For Full I

Lafayette, La. — Enumerating the vast injustices in the educational system and especially the state's inferior Jim Crow set-up affecting Negro youth, parents in five Louisiana parishes went to bat last week filing petitions against school board officials in behalf of their children.

The first petitioned, filed by A. P. Tureaud, New Orleans NAACP attorney, challenged the segregated school system in Lafayette ... asked for an integration in ... schools.

Meanwhile there were suits filed in Webster, East Carroll, Madison and Lincoln parishes.

Last Thursday the school board ... announced that it would confer with the district attorney before answering the allegations in the petition.

Sixteen points on which Negro pupils were denied equal opportunities and facilities were filed in Lafayette parish. These points included poor bus transportation, library facilities and classroom instruction.

The suits follow the same pattern as that filed in New Orleans four years ago asking integration of city schools, citing deplorable facilities and school buildings housing Negro pupils.

St. Tammany to Dedicate New Negro Schoolhouse

Building at Lacombe Will Fill Great Need

By WALTER GOODSTEIN

The St. Tammany parish school board on Sunday will dedicate a new schoolhouse for Negro students at Lacombe.

The school will adequately fill a need for some 250 boys and girls in that community. But the dedicatory ceremonies at 4 p. m. will climax an enterprising venture.

As August Perez Jr., New Orleans architect for the St. Tammany board, put it: "It's a tribute to what can be done through understanding and co-operation."

Built for the amazingly low cost of $62,000, the two-wing L-shaped school building houses 10 classrooms, a large dining hall, kitchen and a gymnasium.

Perez said, "A gymnasium alone, on the regular market, would cost more than those folks spent on the entire project."

How did the school board do it?

T. E. Brunning Sr., president of the St. Tammany school board, came up with some answers.

"We had three old school buildings which were about to fall down," he said. "They were three- and four-classroom shacks which weren't fit for teaching or for learning.

"With public school Supt. Bill (William) Pitcher as the moving spirit of the idea, we decided to consolidate those schools for Negroes into a new, modern building for grades right through junior high."

He went on to say that the three rundown schools were dismantled and salvageable materials saved. The school board then invested about $5000 to buy surplus government structures, at Camp Villere, at the naval hospital on the lakefront and at the Our Town project in Gentilly.

These structures also were dismantled and moved to Lacombe. The builders now had plenty of lumber, wiring, plumbing supplies, window frames, etc.

"Pitcher himself went out and bought the surplus stuff, then went to Perez for plans and specifications," Brunning said.

Perez said Friday that, in effect, Pitcher told him, "Here's what we have; let's not have any waste and let's not have to buy more than we have to. We want you to draw up plans around the materials we have."

Perez then sent two men from his New Orleans office to take measurements of materials and equipment on hand, and plans and specifications were forthcoming.

The actual construction was performed by school board maintenance crews, and frequently Pitcher himself rolled up his sleeves and pitched in. Although about 50 now, Pitcher still has plenty of the brawn he used as an LSU football hero a generation ago.

And the boys and girls who are to attend the school showed so much enthusiasm over the project that they, too, came in for a share of the work—entirely on a voluntary basis.

The students raked leaves, worked with mud barrels, did the landscaping and then approached Pitcher with an "important request."

"We'd like to have a flagpole," they said.

This wasn't in the original plans, but it posed no big problem. Pitcher rounded up some old pipe, welded the pieces together to make the flagpole and it was "stuck in the ground."

The entire community, Perez said, is so proud of this accomplishment that the white residents say, in jest, "It's discrimination; that's what it is."

State superintendent of public education Shelby M. Jackson is expected to participate in the dedicatory ceremony, Brunning said.

Citizens Resent 'Brushoff' Given On Vital Issue

Negro citizens who campaigned untiringly and voted for the passage of the five millage tax which was defeated last Tuesday were in an uproar Thursday when race leaders were ignored at a meeting at the school board office to set up a committee to devise ways and means to secure additional funds.

In a published report, Dr. Clarence Scheps, president of the Orleans parish school board, stated "We have done all we can do. Now we're going to ask the community to take over. This is an emergency. The school board (may) be faced with an operating deficit of $1,200,000 in July, according to an independent survey by the Bureau of Governmental Research."

When contacted by telephone, Dr. Scheps gave no reason as to why Negro members who proved that they were part of the community through their concerted campaigning, were excluded from the Thursday meeting. However, he pointed out that Darwin S. Fenner has been authorized to make appointments by members of a citizens' group which was called in by the Orleans parish school board following the defeat of the tax.

Mr. Fenner asserted that he had nothing to do with the selection of those who attended the meeting Thursday.

He said that no steps can be made until he receives suggestions and recommendations from the Chamber of Commerce, Board of Liquidation and Bureau of Governmental Research.

Meanwhile Negro leaders and organizations indicated their resentment of being excluded from the meeting by flooding the school board office with telegrams.

One leader expressed that it was very undemocratic and it did not represent the entire community of this fair city.

A telegram from the women's auxiliary of the NAACP stated, "Orleans parish school board erred in not calling in community leadership before proposing 5 mill tax increase. Board made second error by ignoring Negroes who constitute one-third of population and majority of public school enrollment. Resent board ignoring us in their planning. Urge the immediate appointment of Messrs. Haidel Christophe, Arthur J. Chapital, Sr., Drs. Rivers Frederick, C. C. Haydel, A. W. Dent, and Rev. A. L. Davis. The telegram was signed by Mrs. Erma Landix, chairman of the education committee.

An investigation revealed that some of the persons who showed concern over the matter and sent telegrams were Rev. A. L. ... OPPVL; Rev. Robert D. Hi... Zion; Rev. William D. King, Morris AME; Rev. R. H. Tucker, chairman of citizens' grade "A" schools; Carol Bolden, president of teamsters and warehousemen Union, and Mrs. Alma Valley, member of the women's auxiliary of the local branch NAACP.

"It is gratifying to note that so many persons still exercise that nature-endowed facility, mother wit," Octave J. Rainey said. "They saw through the haze and voted down the tax."

"I want those who sincerely thought 'the tax is the only way' to know that they have not lost. It's a losing battle for poor methods preliminary to winning a campaign for better schools, if you regroup and carry on.

"Unite and forge a concentrated, positive effort while the coals are hot. Cease the sitting in a wait and hope. Hurtle forward to 'Better Schools for Better Education.'"

School Board Sticks To JC Hiring Policy

14 d (1) Md

ENGLEWOOD — The Board of Education does not intend to integrate its teacher personnel in the seven public schools unless ordered to do so by an order from the courts.

This was made plain by Dr. Harry L. Stearns, superintendent of schools, in a statement of policy sent to the Bergen County NAACP Branch with a letter dated May 13.

Representatives of the Bergen NAACP and the State Conference of Branches and three other local interracial agencies met with the Board last April 14 and requested a review of its discriminatory hiring policy for teachers.

Questions Asked Board

At the April conference, the Rev. Isaiah Gordon, pastor of the First Baptist Church, and president of the Bergen NAACP; and J. Mercer Sorrell, Newark attorney representing the State Conference of Branches, posed three pertinent questions to the Board:

1. Why is it that the Board has refused in the last three years to employ 12 colored men and women with master's and doctorate's degrees who applied for appointments as teachers?

2. Why is it that white applicants of lesser academic qualifications than the colored applicants have been given preference in appointments in so many instances?

3. Why is it that all colored teachers have been assigned to the same school (Lincoln) that has only colored pupils?

Character References Alibi

In the statement of policy sent the Bergen NAACP which, incidentally, was unsigned, Dr. Stearns and members of the Board of Education insinuate that the "character references" of the 12 colored applicants with M.A.'s and Ph.D.'s degrees were so "inferior" that the refusal to appoint them was justifiable.

The statement of policy states:

"It is the opinion of the Board of Education and the Superintendent of Schools that the employment practices of the Board have not been at variance with the state laws against discrimination. . .

"This is especially true after a revision of the teacher's application blank following suggestions made by the Division Against Discrimination of the State Department of Education."

Can't Violate Confidences

The Board's statement added that:

"To analyze, at this time, the case of each of the 12 applicants submitted by the NAACP on April 13, or to review publicly the detailed steps which were followed in the employment of those teachers elected to positions over the past few years,

"Would not only violate confidences concerning personal qualifications and character references, but such public review would also tend to pre-judge publicly facts of a legal nature which might better be reserved for the judgment of constituted authorities."

Answering the Board's insinuations, Mrs. Doris Savage, secretary of the Bergen NAACP, and chairman of its education committee said:

"It becomes quite difficult to justify or even understand the Board's position on the basis of the glaring fact that appointments of colored teaching personnel have always been made, and are continuously being made to Lincoln School only. . .

Negro Groups Plan Study Of Proposed Three Million Dollar School Bond Issue To Advise Negro Voters

The Jackson Negro Chamber of Commerce and the Jackson Negro Ctiizens Committee was reported this week as planning to make an extensive study of the proposed $3 Million Dollar school bond issue in order to intelligently advise Negro voters when the Bond issue comes up for vote early in August.

The group is reported as planning to call in the two practicing Negro lawyers, Sidney R. Tharp and Jack H. Young in order to get the legal opinion on just what and how much the Negro Community is to receive out of the proposed $3 Million Bond issue if passed.

One influential Negro leader said in discussing the preparation for making a full study of the proposal that the Negro property owners faced with a recent heavily increased tax assessment are going to make sure of the benefits to be obtained before voting on any more bond issues.

In the past, it was pointed out that the Negro comomunity has received little more than token benefits from money spent from such bond issues.

The $3 Million Dollar school bond issue to be voted on early in August was approved in a meeting of members of the school Board and prominent white citizens Monday.

The new bonds will provide for new elementary schools in the Lester, Boyd-Watkins, and Brinkley areas, and for the building of a new junior high school in the Lester-Sykes district. Plans include additions to the present Boyd, Galloway, Lester and Sykes schools.

The cost of the proposed program, $3,125,000, will include the site, site development, construction, furniture and equipment. The board has at present $125,000 from the 1950 school bond, which is applicable to the purposed building program. Plans call for the selling of $1,250,000 bonds by the end of 1953 at an interest of 3½ per cent.

Miss. Sets Session On School Issue

JACKSON, Miss. — (INS) — The special session of the Mississippi legislature to put into effect equalization of Negro and white schools had been set for November 3.

Gov. Hugh White said he thought the new date, replacing a tentative date of September 15, would answer objections of 22 senators — more than the majority needed to block his program — who were against the September session.

Mississippi Paper Wants Schools To Be "Equalized"

JACKSON, Miss. — (ANP) — At least one Mississippi paper, the Scott County Times, expressed the idea in a front page editorial that before Negro schools are equalized with white schools here, white schools themselves should first be equalized.

In a front page editorial, the paper asks, How can an effective yardstick for equalization be determined if white schools themselves exhibit such wide degrees of inequality and variance in expenditures per pupil?

Pointing out that much of the present difficulty can be traced to the system of allocating education funds on a per capita basis rather than on average daily attendance, the Times goes on to say, "We don't believe the colored student should be discriminated in the opportunities for education.

Neither should there be discrimination against a white student simply because of his place of residence."

Only, then, when white facilities and teachers' salaries are equalized, concludes the paper, can we begin to think of equalizing Negro schools.

"We would heartily favor a special session of the legislature to tackle the problem of revising the education program in Mississippi for white children. But we are opposed to a session called for the purpose of 'equalizing white and colored education facilities.'"

Because of such opposition on the part of the press, and the added reluctance of some 22 Mississippi state senators to consider an equalization program, Governor Hugh White's projected special session to consider the problem appears temporarily stymied.)

Mississippi's White Urges Equal Schools

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 3 (AP)— Gov. Hugh White today urged the Mississippi Legislature to fulfill what he termed state's moral obligation to raise and equalize the level of education for all children, regardless of race or color.

In his message to the joint houses of the Legislature at the opening of their special session, White asked the lawmakers to go farther than just equalizing Negro and white schools and bring up the entire educational standard.

"Regardless of the decision of the U.S. Supreme Court (on segregation), or any other court, our purpose should and must be the highest possible level of educational opportunity for all of the children of this state within our . . . ability to pay," he said.

The governor left no doubt that Mississippi wants to continue its segregated school system, bu struck a more moral chord tha just appeasing the Negro popula tion.

White said that to delay re vamping the state's horse-and buggy school system would just "add that much more fuel to the fire which is constantly lapping at the fundamentals we are determined to preserve."

White forcefully drew the picture of glaring inequalities between white rural schools and white city schools, which he called as great as those between some Negro and white institutions.

He said the Mississippi system ranks 48th in salaries and expenditure per student and was in grave need of rebuilding.

"It is not like Mississippi," he said, "to continue to be satisfied with eternally taking highest honors for last place."

MISSISSIPPI PLANS EQUALIZED SCHOOLS

Gov. White Asks Legislature to Provide Funds to Improve Facilities for Negroes

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 3—The Mississippi Legislature was convened in special session today to consider expenditure of an estimated $100,000,000 to equalize the state's white and Negro public schools.

The money would be spent at a rate of $49,000,000 a year and used for the general improvement of education for white and Negroes.

In a message to the joint session of House and Senate this afternoon Gov. Hugh L. White said that Mississippi could not afford to wait on a United States Supreme Court decision on segregation in schools before providing educational opportunities for both races in all public schools.

The Governor endorsed the $49,000,000-a-year program, which was drafted by a legislative committee for equal though separate facilities, as a "sound, feasible and workable solution to our educational problems."

But he said the program "is not presented to you as a 'package' to be taken or rejected in its entirety."

"It is for you," he continued, "to determine whether the recommended program should be revised and improved or whether an even better and more workable program can be devised."

The committee, composed of eighteen members, rewrote the state's school laws and prepared a series of thirty-two bills and three resolutions to provide tax increases, salary standards, buildings and transportation and a new administrative system putting more authority at the state level.

"My desire is for the enactment of a program which will provide the children of our state with the highest possible level of educational opportunity within the limit of our resources and ability to pay," Governor White said.

"Throughout the nation there are only seven states in which the tax burden is less than in Mississippi," Governor White said. "In these days of relatively high prosperity the economy of this state can well afford and withstand such moderate increases in taxation as you may find necessary.

"I recommend that you give careful consideration and study to the committee's revenue recommendations after having first determined as best you can the additional revenue which will be required as a result of any legislation which you may enact. You can then determine what taxes must or should be increased, and the extent to which such increase is necessary."

The committee proposed advancing the sales tax from 2 to 3 per cent, higher oil and gasoline levies and an increase in the cigarette tax from 4 to 5 cents a pack.

Mr. White said that he had been advised by many that it "would be the wiser course" to delay the school program until the United States Supreme Court ruled on segregation.

"I am convinced that there is no assurance that these cases will be decided in any absolute manner within the reasonably near future," he said.

"Our situation does not admit to further delay. We must also recognize that the earlier the task is undertaken the sooner it will be accomplished."

The Governor said "the most we can hope to salvage from a court decision would be a holding that we can separately educate the races provided we afford each equality of educational opportunity."

"All past decisions have required that," he added, "and it may well be that our acknowledged failure in the past in this regard is the cause of our present emergency."

Mr. White said that the state could no longer "escape the necessity" of an improved educational program.

Mississippi Roundup—

White Asks Even Break For Negroes In Equalizing State Public Schools

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 3 (U.P.)—Gov. Hugh White asked the Mississippi legislature today to give Negroes an even break in the public schools and said past failure to take the step may have brought the South to its segregation crisis with the U. S. Supreme Court.

White, addressing a special joint session, asked approval of a $49,000,000 a year program designed to equalize the state's Negro and white schools—a job that will require more new taxes.

White urged legislators not to wait for the Supreme Court which is considering a decision on five segregation cases before it but to act now "to give the children of our state the highest possible level of educational opportunity within the limit of our resources and ability to pay."

White said he is of the opinion that it will be some time before the high court rules on the segregation issue "in any absolute manner." Meanwhile, the Mississippi Legislature must act, he said, although the necessary school program likely will take new taxes.

"Our situation does not admit to further delay," he said, reminding solons that their state "by almost every important measure of statistical comparision, regrettably stands at the very bottom of the educational ladder."

"The most we can hope to salvage from a court decision would be a holding that we can separately educate the races, provided we afford each race equality of educational opportunity," he said.

The Legislature is to consider an education plan brought in by an 18-member Recess Committee. It would establish a minimum standard of salaries, buildings and transportation, a new administrative system and a tax increase to pay the bill.

Kyle Convinced Now Is Time For Equalization

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 3 (U.P.)—State Sen. Hulyan Kyle of Clarksdale said today he is convinced the special session of the Legislature is the place to reorganize the state's education system.

Kyle, who had expressed opposition earlier to a session in September, said he is now convinced that the time for action is at hand.

"I am convinced that equalization of salaries and school facilities is a must," Kyle said.

He added that he believed a vast majority of the white and Negro citizens believe and want, regardless of a Supreme Court ruling, attendance in our schools segregated if we have equalized opportunities."

Mississippi Roundup—

Legislators Go To Work On School Equalization

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 4 (U.P.)—Senate and House committee unhampered by controversial revenue bills that will pay for an ambitious school equalization plan, plunged into their study of most of the program today.

It took both Houses less than an hour to channel all but the finance bills into standing committees when the lawmakers pitched into their first serious day of work in a special session considering a $49,000 a year plan designed to lead Mississippi out of the school wilderness.

House members shelved quickly a resolution by Rep. Harry Applebaum of Yazoo County to adjourn sine die as a report from a conference of Negro leaders claiming to represent 600,000 members of their race was disclosed.

A meeting of 279 leaders here went on record opposing segregation in schools but endorsed the equalization program drafted by a recess education committee until the U. S. Supreme Court settles the segregation issue.

Education committees of both Houses went to work immediately. Their survey will cover almost all of the 30 bills in the program. Tomorrow the Finance Committee of the Senate meets along with the Ways and eMans Committee of the House.

Speaker of the House Walter Sillers adjourned the body until 2 p.m. tomorrow after a motion to quit until next Monday while the committees work was voted down, 73 to 42. The Senate reconvenes at 9 a.m. tomorrow.

Percy Greene, editor of The Jackson Advocate, an anti-segregation Negro weekly, said today the group of Negro leaders expressed opposition to segregation but favored equalization program "insofar as the bills do not violate the 14th amendment of the U. S. constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court."

An expected resolution in the Senate to adjourn sine die was not introduced in the upper house as 25 bills and three resolutions to amend the state constitution were assigned to committees.

Rep. Ney Gore Jr. of Quitman County, one of the authors of the program, said it was likely the revenue bills will be withheld until the other bills are thrashed out.

Proposed revenue increases include raising the sales tax from two to three cents, increasing oil severance taxes from six to eight cents per barrel and upping cigaret taxes one cent per pack. All have drawn fire from opposition groups and various legislators.

Bills that went into committee today included ones to create elective county boards of education and a state education finance commission to administer the construction program.

Reorganization of more than 2000 school districts into a more compact arrangement and a minimum salary scale for teachers based on training and experience ($2600 for masters degrees) was studied by the committees.

Equality, But Dual Systems

JACKSON, Miss. (ANP)—Admitting that there are inequalties between school facilities for Negro and white pupils, Gov. Hugh White last week formally called for measures to equalize the dual school systems as a means of preserving segregation in the state.

The Mississippi chief executive asked legislators at a special session of the body to prepare an enlightened school program that would erase inequalities.

The legislature and Governor White are motivated by a desire to maintain segregation in state schools.

RECOGNIZING THAT any success along that line depends on how well the schools are equalized, Governor White told the solons that now is the time to do something about it. Among other things, he said:

"Every day, every week, every month that we delay . . . we fall that much further behind our sister states. We add just that much more fuel to the fire which is constantly lapping at the fundamentals we are determined to preserve."

In commenting on pending school cases now before the U. S. Supreme Court, he said:

"Regardless of the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court, or any other court, our purpose should and must be the highest possible level of educational opportunity for all children . . . within the limit of our resources."

A special eighteen-man legislative committee has submitted a program for equalizing the schools. Governor White has indicated his agreement of the program in principle. However, he told legislators he is interested in hearing any suggestions which they might have to offer on the subject.

THE GOVERNOR reminded the legislators it was they who called for the study and created the committee to arrive at a program for improvements in the school system. He told them it would be their program, not his.

Prior to calling the special session, some legislators said they felt no action should be taken until the high tribunal renders a decision on jim crow in schools.

Governor White answered these critics by saying the court may not render an absolute decision in the near future.

IN ORDER to finance a huge school equalization program, the eighteen-man committee called for a one-cent state sales tax increase to a total three; an increase in oil and gas severance taxes; a cent-a-pack hike in cigarette taxes, and increase use taxes.

In commenting on the need for a program, the Jackson Daily News, in an editorial said in part:

"As to the main necessity for providing the Negro race with better schools there can be no dissent in the minds of intelligent men.

"The cost will be heavy but it is a price we must pay for continuance of the segregation system. "Fanciful theories must vanish in the face of plain facts."

LEGISLATORS MODIFY EQUALIZATION PLANS

White Turns Down Boost In Tax On Big Incomes

OKS HIGHER SALES LEVY

By KENNETH TOLER

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 15.—Bowing to the wishes of Gov. Hugh White, a legislative recess study committee Thursday withdrew its recommendation for an increase in the state income tax to finance equalization of the racially segregated public school system.

When the committee presented its financing plan to the Governor Wednesday, he said he would not go along with a proposal to boost the top bracket rate from 6 to 7 per cent. That rate applies to incomes in excess of $25,000. The Governor contended such an increase would seriously endanger his program for industrial development of the state.

Would Yield $2,500,000

The income tax increase had been planned to provide $2,500,000 of the funds necessary to equalize the dual school system as a safeguard to segregation.

The committee stood pat on its other three recommended tax increases—sales tax from 2 to 3 percent, oil-gas severance from 6 to 8 cents a barrel, and boosting the cigaret levy from 4 to 5 cents a package. As now recommended, the tax increases amount to $12,343,624.

The added cost of the equalization program to the state is eight million dollars for teachers' salaries, plus an additional 140 million dollars for facilities. The state now provides 25 million dollars annually for salaries and transportation, with no special allocation for a long-range building program.

In another action Thursday, the committee, headed by Representative Tyler Holmes of Montgomery County, recommended a procedure under which local districts would levy taxes for their part of the school cost.

Voters Could Petition

It provides that in districts refusing to levy the required amount to meet its part of the program, they will share only in the per capita allocation. However, on request of the school trustees, the county supervisors would be required to levy at least five mills and whatever other amount is necessary if petitioned by the voters in the district.

next regular session is not led until J[illegible]ry 1954.

Miss. Builds $300,000 Plant To Offset School Suit

JACKSON, Miss. (ANP) — Ground has been broken on the site of a school which Mississippi hopes will fulfill demands for equal facilities for Negro and white pupils and thus relieve the threat of integration in public schools here.

The embryonic school is the Hinds County Agricultural high school at the Utica Institute which is being constructed from a $390,000 appropriation by the county permitted by the state legislature. Mississippi bosts that the two-building unit will equalize educational facilities for Negroes.

According to Robert M. Mayo, Hinds county superintendent of education, the trustees decided to pattern the new high school after the Mississippi State Vocational School at Itta Bena after architects employed by them had traveled over the state inspecting the most modern school plants.

The new school will not replace any of the existing buildings at Utica Institute, but will provide additional facilities.

The institute itself was founded about 50 years ago by William H. Holtzclaw, a colored Mississippian.

Vocational education was stressed in Holtzclaw's school, and the buildings were constructed largely by the students. Although their lack of professional planning becomes more apparent, they still are being used.

The institute was governed by a board of trustees appointed by Holtzclaw himself. When he died, the management of the school was taken over by his son. Through the years, the younger Holtzclaw found it increasingly hard to meet the financial obligations of the institution and finally the trustees deeded the land and buildings situated there to Hinds county. The school was then placed under the supervision of the board of trustees of Hinds Junior college and Agriculture high school.

In commenting on the new school, Mayo said:

"The school is superior in accommodation and design to most of the white schools in the county because it is more modern. We are sure it will meet the equal facilities test, both now and in the future."

Miss Bernadine Holtzclaw, a senior at the institute and granddaughter of its founder, turned the first spade of earth in the groundbreaking ceremony.

MISSISSIPPI GOVERNOR HALTS ACTION TO EQUALIZE SCHOOLS

Fear of What Supreme Court Will Hold On Segregation Causes Puzzling Reactions

SPECIAL SESSION OF LEGISLATURE POSTPONED

JACKSON, Miss. — (ANP) — Gov. Hugh White of Mississippi is still fretful concerning the coming U. S. Supreme court's decision on segregation and has decided not to call the state legislature into special session as planned until September when an attempt will be made to enact an equalization program.

The governor is of the opinion that a special session just now would interfere with farmers who are lawmakers, now busy gathering their crops.

He was likewise certain that the highest tribunal would not hand down a decision until the late summer, just before the justices forsake Washington for a short recess.

Postponement of the special session of the legislature has caused no friction because the government has agreed to request that the program to equalize teacher's salaries and school facilities would be retroactive to July 1, this year.

However, it is left with the legislature to make the program retroactive. No denial of this request is expected since the federal courts have held that there must be no discrimination regarding salaries between white and Negro teachers. The same applies to equal school facilities. To defeat this measure would be but an invitation to file countless suits in the federal courts.

Far Less Used For Education Of Negroes Than For Whites In Mississippi, Survey Shows

'Shocking' And 'Disturbing' Variations Found By Legislative Recess Committee—Tunica County Spends $270 On White Pupil, $21 On Negro

By KENNETH TOLER

JACKSON, Miss., March 14. — An admitted "shocking" and "disturbing" disclosure of the "great difference in the per pupil cost for the two races" in Mississippi's segregated public schools has been officially recorded, probably for the first time.

It is unquestionably the cause of the inequalities a Legislative Recess School Study Committee is trying to eliminate.

The startling revelation is officially documented in the report of the recess committee now being mailed to the lawmakers and already filed with Gov. Hugh White. It is the basis for recommending an extraordinary session to wipe out the inequalities as a safeguard to the dual system.

Mr. Toler

Explaining that it "generally" is known that the amount of money spent per child for education in Mississippi is more for white children than for Negro children, the committee states that the great difference "usually" is not known or is ignored.

The committee admits that a table showing the disparities by counties "is disturbing and will shock some people" and reveals that "much must be done if equalization is to be accomplished."

The report "puts the cards on the table." It is definitely the most potent challenge, in official black and white recording, to the lawmakers when called on to solve the so-called "problem." It leaves no loop-holes for continued "delaying tactics" if segregation is to be continued.

As to the disparity in facilities, the committee boldly asserts that "the condition of Mississippi's schools for Negroes in rural areas is pathetic and in some cases it is inexcusable."

"Hundreds of children of the Negro race are compelled to attend school—if they attend at all—in unpainted, unheated and unlighted buildings that are not fit for human habitation and should have been condemned years ago," the legislative recess group charges. "There are very few rural schools for Negroes in Mississippi that have sanitary drinking water facilities or sanitary toilet facilities."

Maintenance Ignored

The comimttee goes on to officially record that "because of the rarity of a tax levy for support or maintenance of Negro schools, many Negro school buildings which once were creditable structures have deteriorated beyond repair for lack of maintenance."

"According to the report of the state auditor, in many counties money specifically appropriated for equalizing the pay of Negro teachers which was sent to the counties for that purpose never got to the Negro teachers," the report discloses.

"It has never been returned to the State Treasury, either. The committee does not know for what purpose the money was spent."

A survey by the legislative committee revealed that a total of 4,301 school buildings are being operated in 2,079 school districts. Of that number, 1,585 buildings were reported to be unsatisfactory and in need of immediate replacement —most of them now house Negro students.

The committee said the large number of school districts "is another of the serious faults" it found in the state school system. The 2,079 in Mississippi compares with Georgia's 215; Alabama, 107; Florida, 67; North Carolina, 172; South Carolina, 100, and Tennessee, 151.

Eight hundred forty of the districts were for white public schools, and 1,239 for Negroes.

Few Negroes Graduate

"In actual practice, the number of Negro districts is much higher because many of the counties have set up countywide Negro school districts which never have functioned as such," the report states.

Operation of the small schools districts was attributed by the committee to the "relatively poor instruction for the children of elementary age and undoubtedly contributes to the the high percentage of failures and drop-outs in grades one through eight."

"Approximately one white child in four and one Negro child in 40 who enrolls in Mississippi schools actually graduates," the committee said.

To its previously reported "padding" in the census of educable children, those between 5 and 21, the committee now lists a glaring difference in enrolment figures.

The committee said 535,473 children were reported in State Department of Education enrolment tabulations for the 1951-52 session, while an actual check of the rolls revealed 509,112, or a difference of 26,361. On that showing, the legislators said there are 878 more teachers currently employed than "are justified by the total number of pupils now attending school."

Previously, it said the United States census listed 651,600 children of educable age, while the house-to-house count by school authorities and turned in for disbursement of per capita funds was 895,779, up 244,179 children.

Tunica's Negroes Slighted

The committee says in its report that "such statistics would not be so disturbing if it were not that the distribution of millions of dollars of public monies is made in reliance on these attendance reports and the school census."

As to the "shocking" difference in per pupil expenditures in the 82 counties, the report shows the population ratio to be 55 per cent white and 45 per cent Negro, or 1,188,429 white; 986,707 Negro, and 3,778 other, including Indians. Total population is 2,178,914.

Standing out in the table which is a part of the official report of the committee is the differentials in Tunica county where 81 per cent of the population is Negro. It lists $270 spent per white pupil, and only $21 per Negro pupil. Other Delta counties are as glaring, although it is statewide and not confined to any particular sector.

Three counties with 74 per cent of their population Negro, showed: Claiborne spent $387 per white child, and $40 for each Negro; Jefferson, $183 against $57, and Noxubee $240 against $29.

Hinds county, the seat of state government with 44 per cent Negro population, spent $146 per white pupil and $43 for each Negro student.

In the two counties with the smallest Negro population—each with five per cent—the disparity was: Itawamba, $90 against $56, and Tishomingo, $104 against $40.

Mississippi NAACP Demands Full School Integration

FULL INTERGATION SAYS MISS BRANCH

BY JAMES B. LAFORUCHE

INDIANOLA, Miss.—(ANP)— A three-day conference of the Mississippi branch of the National Association for Advancement of Colored People left nothing in doubt as to where the state branches stand on integration in the state's educational public school system.

Yielding no quarter under the fiery leadership of Amos O. Holmes, president of the persistent group, the latter said that, "We will work toward the goal of full freedom and democracy for every Mississippi Negro and white, and see to it that the vicious system of segregation is challenged until it is removed and justice is done.

Holmes, pondering over the possible decision of the United States Supreme court on the segregation of the races in public schools, feels that the segregated system is ruled out we will attempt to condition both our public relations program.

Holmes attacked J. D. Boyd, president of the Mississippi Negro Teachers Association, and H. H. Himes, editor of the Delta Leader and president of the Mississippi Baptist Convention. The NAACP leader charged that both have shown by their backstage double-talk in letters to Gov. Hugh White, that they have neither the best interest of their people at heart nor can they be trusted to represent even the people who are members of their respective organizations.

Boyd has been quoted as saying that most of the Negro teachers in Mississippi are wholeheartedly behind him in the program of equalization.

Segregated Education In Mississippi Can Never Be Equal!

Full Integration Is the Only Answer

By JOHN E. ROUSSEAU
(Courier Staff Correspondent)

(This is the fourth in a series of articles pointing up the unfairness of the unequal educational system as practiced in the South.)

JACKSON, Miss.—Segregated education which uses 75 per cent of available funds for whites can never be equal in Mississippi. This, in short, is the full meaning of a statement made by Gov. Hugh White in May, 1953, when he admitted being convinced that a U. S. Supreme Court ruling against segregated schools would create a serious problem for which he has no remedy. Thus, he inadvertently admits, full integration is the only answer!

Said Governor White: ". . . if the decision is against segregation, I don't believe persuasion would have any effect. I've said before that an adverse decision would create a serious problem in Mississippi for which I have no remedy. It will take a smarter man than I to find the solution."

EVEN THIS FRANK opinion is found to be the understatement of the century when one looks into the records of the dual education system in this state.

In Mississippi, like all other Southern states, education of white children at public expense began just before the Civil War. Reconstruction legislatures, over the strenuous objections of Southern whites, extended to Negroes the benefits of public education and provided that there should be equality in expenditures.

Records show that over the years this legally sanctioned equality disappeared. After the ousting of the Reconstruction regime, Southern white regained political control and almost immediately began diverting school funds from Negro to white children. Thus, has it been with Mississippi for the past sixty-three years.

MISSISSIPPI, "The Bayou State," is so-called because of the numerous bayous or channels which enter it from the Gulf of Mexico. Its motto is "Virtute et Armis" (By Valor and Arms).

Mississippi is in its sixty-third year of segregated public education and records of this dual system bring forth the inevitable conclusion that full integration is the only hope for the 990,485 Negroes in the "Bayou State's" total population of 2,178,914.

The public school system in this state began during slavery days of 1846. Racially integrated public schools were used from 1869 until the present State Constitution was adopted Nov. 1, 1890, and under a Negro superintendent of education, Thomas W. Cardoza, from 1873 to 1876.

DURING THOSE DAYS, Mississippi had a Negro lieutenant governer, A. K. Davis, and a Negro secretary of state, James Hill. When most of the state's top officials, including Cardoza, were impeached in 1876 for "corruption," Hill, alone, survived the "purge" because of his competent and honest administration.

First state laws providing for segregated public education were enacted in 1890. Since that time, Negroes, although comprising about half of the population and always the larger number of educables, have received an unbelievably small portion of public education funds and benefits.

Mississippi now has 37,905 Negroes and 9,395 whites twenty-five years of age who have had no schooling whatsoever, ranks forty-seventh in the nation's list of states in the percentage of persons completing less than five grades in school, with 25.7 per cent, and is next to Louisiana which ranks forty-eighth in this department with 29.5 per cent.

CURRENTLY, THE STATE has 895,779 educables (between 6-21 years of age) with 550,782 enrolled in 1951-52, or 61 per cent. Of these totals, 398,866 are white educables, with an 88 per cent enrollment of 278,654, and 496,913 Negroes with a 55 per cent enrollment of 272,128.

Public education in Mississippi is divided into eighty-one county and ninety-eight separate school districts, with Negro educables outnumbering whites in forty counties and in thirty separate districts.

Yet, despite this overwhelming majority of Negro educables, the lion's share of the education fund is spent on whites. This practice has persisted for sixty-three years to the extent that during the 1951-52 term, $21,764,530.26 of the $29,178,809.04 total instruction costs were used for whites, with only $7,414,278.78 going for Negro instruction.

Therefore, talk about equalizing separate education in Mississippi means an expenditure of staggering sums of money which can be obtained only by further taxing the already complaining citizenry.

ONLY A FEW weeks ago, Gov. Hugh White set the date for a special session of the Mississippi Legislature on Nov. 3 to equalize the segregated school system. There are thirty-two new bills to be introduced, and it is estimated that a $46 million-a-year education equalization program must be adopted.

The Courier's comprehensive survey of the Mississippi education system brings to light many glaring inequalities based on race:

1. The present segregated school system "gypped" Mississippi Negro children out of $6,624,428.80 in educational funds alone during the 1951-52 session;
2. Each Negro child attending school received $29.20 LESS than his proper share of the instruction fund;
3. Negro teachers are obliged to work harder than white teachers, but receive approximately $1,000 a year LESS than whites at all levels;
4. The state spends $4,407,774.32 for transportation of white pupils and $882,234.07 for Negroes;
5. Mississippi has more public schools for Negroes than whites, but nearly half of the Negro schools are housed in churches, tenant houses or such types of buildings as are available.

Funds for the operation of the public elementary and high schools are derived mainly from three sources: state appropriation, county taxes and local school district taxes. However, quite a number of counties have put on a special tax levy for the purpose of improving the physical facilities of Negro schools.

CONCERNING THIS, State Superintendent of Public Instruction J. M. Tubb said in his 1947-48-49 report: "..There is a vital need for the passage of new legislation in Mississippi that will provide a way whereby Negro schools can be conducted and maintained through more public support than is now possible under existing laws. It is imperative that the Legislature enact necessary laws that will insure a greater degree of comparable educational opportunities for all the children of all the people."

Despite this admission of racial discrimination, the Federal Government gave Mississippi $1,825,188.57 during that session to assist its school lunch program, and surplus commodities valued at $1,281,477.

Most recent reports show six high schools, 265 combined elementary and high schools, and 2,337 elementary schools for Negroes in the state; and for white sixty-five high schools, 416 combined high and elementary schools and 554 elementary schools.

White	Types of Schools	Negro
49	One-teacher schols	1,377
87	Two-teacher schools	668
105	Three-teacher schools	171

While no complete breakdown was immediately available on the comparative amounts spent as compared to race for various services, current reports revealed the following:

White		Negro
244,685	Average Daily Attendance	226,884
9,896	Teachers	6,753
22.69	Pupils per teacher (ADA)	33.4
	Average teacher salary
$2,091.91		$1,039.98
	Instruction costs
$21,784,530.26		$7,414,778.78
	Transportation costs
$4,407,774.32		$883,234.07

These figures reveal that Negro pupils comprise 49.4 per cent of the total enrollment over the state, but receive only 25 per cent of the instruction funds.

BASED ON ADA (average daily attendance) $32.68 was spent for each Negro pupil's instruction as compared to $88.97 spent for each white pupil. The over-all instruction costs for the ADA total of 471,469 averaged $61.88 per pupil. This means each Negro pupil received $29.20 less than his proper share, and that each white pupil received $27.09 more than his proper share. Multiplied by the Negro ADA, the $29.20 grows to the staggering total "gyp" of $6,624,428.80 for the 1951-52 term!

This "gyp" has remained fairly constant since 1945, so it is a simple procedure to determine just how many millions of dollars have been diverted from the Negro funds. Records prior to 1945 were not immediately available, however, there is no reason to suppose they are more liberal.

Ironically, an investigation last July into expenditures of 1950 funds allocated for Negro education in twenty-nine counties revealed that the entire allocations were not used and that large portions had been placed in the county treasuries.

ASST. ATTY. GENERAL James T. Kendall who headed the investigation disclosed that twenty-three of the counties in question paid $82,017 of the Negro education fund back into the state treasury. Of this amount, he said, $62018 was unexpended amounts in the Negro teachers fund, while $19,999 was the unexpended balance in the Negro transportation funds.

The Legislature had earmarked $3 million in 1950 to supplement Negro teacher pay and improve transportation for Negro children. Evidence which was submitted to him, Kendall declared, "indicated only that there was a non-use of a portion of the funds received and the amounts which were not expended remained in the county treasury and were available to be returned to the state treasury.

Counties shown by investigation to have unexpended funds not accounted for last July are Claiborne, Kemper, Jackson, Leflore and Stone. Out of the thirty-nine counties which the legislative committee had listed originally as under investigation for the use of funds, fourteen were declared by Kendall to have proven full compliance with the law on use of the funds.

THE GREATEST RACIAL discrimination of the state's dual system of education is found in the paying of teachers' salaries. While a slow, gradual improvement has been noted since 1945, white teachers still earn approximately $1,000 a year more than Negro teachers at all levels. The average pay scale dating back to 1945 is shown herewith:

AVERAGE TEACHERS SALARY
White		Negro
$1,211.36	1945-46	$426.13
1,356.54	1946-47	495.71
1,752.41	1947-48	641.91
1,861.75	1948-49	711.01
1,946.27	1949-50	763.73
2,007.35	1950-51	979.00
2,091.91	1951-52	1,039.98

These figures are all the more revealing when it is considered that only thirty Negro teachers, principals or supervisors in the entire state earn $2,500 or more per year. There are 2,370 Negro teachers earning from $300 to $800 a year.

To Equalize Schools

NEGRO leaders, meeting in Jackson, Miss., claiming to represent more than 600,000 Mississippi Negroes, have indicated they favored a proposed legislative program to equalize Negro and White schools, unless the U.S. Supreme Court rules against school segregation.

The program has been indorsed by White leaders as a means of equalizing Negro and White schools of the state, but would continue the present segregation system.

Go to Court—Don't Show Your Teeth

THE Mississippi State conference of the NAACP deserves a solid round of applause and commendation on its recent stand for integration in the schools of the Magnolia State.

Despite the fact that two Negro leaders, J. O. Boyd, educator, and H. N. Humes, State Baptist Convention President, favor the maintaining of segregation, A. O. Holmes, President of the Mississippi NAACP, like a man, militantly came out against segregation.

Said President Holmes: "We will work toward the goal of full freedom and full democracy for every Mississippi Negro and white, and see to it that the vicious system of segregation is challenged until it is removed and justice is done."

Mr. Holmes let the nation and the world know that there are some Negroes in Mississippi who are not afraid to stand on their own feet and say they want the same thing for their children as any other American citizen wants for his children. They, too, are tired of being short changed by the dual system of education that prevails in the Southland. No sane person who believes in democracy is going to willingly accept the stigma and humiliation of second class citizenship. Democracy says what it means and means what it says. There is no doubt about that except in the warped minds of the vocal bigots in the South. The only way to fight to be treated as any other American citizen is in the courts and at the ballot box. It can't be done "showing your teeth" and agreeing with the "time's not ripe" boys.

equalizing our public school system.

"It is also quite in order to raise this question: Where would a Negro school teacher in Mississippi get a job in event segregation should be abolished?"

Miss. Editor Advises Negroes To Ignore NAACP

Jackson, Miss.—(ANP)—While the Mississippi Legislature is busy trying to work out a method of providing its version of equal schools, a local editor offered some typical southern advice for Negroes on the school issue.

The editor, Frederick Sullens of the Jackson Daily News, appealed to what he termed "intelligent Negroes" and said:

"Pay no attention to radical agitators and agents of the NAACP. They can't help and they may handicap the task of

Mississippi Legislators Get Alternate Plan on Schools

Equalization Proposal Follows Lines Of Georgia, South Carolina Actions

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau Chief, Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 5—At long last, the Mississippi Legislature in special session to equalize the racially segregated public schools has received an alternate plan in event the United States Supreme Court bans the dual system.

The proposal, offered in the fifth week of the session called by Gov. Hugh White to work out a minimum equalization plan, is in the form of a proposed constitutional amendment to abolish the public school system. It is patterned after the Georgia and South Carolina actions.

It was introduced by a group of House members headed by Speaker Walter Sillers, who voted the Eisenhower ticket last year and who said it is "Mississippi's answer to Attorney General Herbert Brownell."

Presentation of the proposed constitutional amendment followed the attorney general's brief in anti-segregation cases before the United States Supreme Court in which he said the court has the authority and should use it in banning segregation.

Gov. White, who does not believe Mississippi will abandon its free public school system, said the proposal "may be a step in getting our house in order" in event of an adverse court decision, although he does not believe "it is the answer." The governor said he will not oppose the resolution.

Readied for Governor

Introduction of the proposed amendment, which would be submitted to the voters on March 23, 1954, may serve to speed action on the 33-bill equalization program drafted by a recess study committee which has encountered stiffer opposition than anticipated. Thus far, only one of the measures—and it is unimportant insofar as the problem faced is concerned—has passed both branches and readied for the governor's approval.

Four major bills have passed both branches, but in different forms and therefore face conference committee action in an ironing out process and a return to the House and Senate floors for concurrence or rejection. Another of the 33 measures, calling for issuance of $30,000,000 bonds to inaugurate a facility-equalization construction program, has passed the Senate, but is still in a House committee. It has been estimated to cost $80,000,000 to bring Negro facilities on a par with those for the whites.

The equalization program submitted to the current session is designed to equalize teachers' salaries, transportation and administration at an over-all cost of $47,000,000, in addition to the facility outlay. The $47,000,000 is about $7,000,000 more than now provided.

However, additional funds from counties will be required as the program before the lawmakers provides merely for an across-the-board minimum equalization, and does not take into account the "enriched" program now maintained for the whites. Actually, a disparity will remain through "enrichments" on the local level for whites.

Financing Key to Plan

Officials admit the disparities will continue when the present "super" white program is considered, but say that any legal action will have to be taken in the 2,000 local school districts and not against the state. They base that on the assertion that the state will have provided a minimum of equalization and it's "skirts are clear—legally."

The slowness of action, coupled with the nearness of the 1954 regular biennial session of the legislature, indicates strongly the key to the plan—its financing—may not get through before sine die adjournment and therefore will be carried over to the January session.

Proponents of the equalization program had not figured on the opposition that has developed on the "enabling" measures. They had prepared themselves for a fight on the revenue-raising scheme, which calls for increases in the sales, oil and gas severance and cigarette taxes of $17,775,000 annually.

Apparently, the opponents to the increased taxes have teamed up with others against consideration of the issue until the Supreme Court acts. As a result the program has almost bogged down.

Big guns in the tax-increase opposition include labor and the oil and gas industry, along with the tobacco companies. Their margin for success is smaller than for enactment of enabling bills which require only a majority vote of the 140 house members and 49 senators.

Three-Fifths Vote

The tax-increase proposals must receive a three-fifths vote of those "present and voting." That means 20 of the 49 senators can block the tax boosts, and 57 of the 140 House members.

With that stalemate, Speaker Sillers and all members of the important Rules Committee offered the proposed constitutional amendment.

It would authorize the legislature, subject to ratification at the polls, to "abolish the public school system and enact suitable legislation to effect the same; dispose of school buildings, land and other property by sale or otherwise; appropriate state funds and authorize counties, school districts and municipalities to appropriate funds to aid educable children to secure an education, and to do any and all acts and things necessary for the purposes thereof."

The amendment would also provide that "legislation enacted under authority hereof shall prevail whether in conflict with other provisions of the constitution or not."

At the moment, proponents of equalization are inclined to oppose the proposal on grounds it may endanger their program. They feel that all phases of the equalization plan, except facilities, will be needed regardless of anti-segregation.

Through the entire legislature there is one accord: "White and Negro children will not attend the same schools." They go no farther to explain how that would result in event of an adverse Supreme Court ruling.

Sentiment is also strong that "some way, other than private schools," will be found to prevent integration.

Measure To Preserve School Segregation Squeaks Past Mississippi House Fight

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 10 (AP)—The Mississippi House passed by a two vote margin today the constitutional amendment resolution that would give the legislature standby power to abolish the state school system to preserve segregation.

The vote was 92 to 43, just two votes more than the required two-thirds majority.

Opponents of the proposal, fighting it as a "dangerous instrument," delayed final passage once more by moving it off a motion to reconsider the final vote.

That device requires still another balloting before final passage.

The Mississippi House of Representatives, using the argument on segregation before the Suprme Court, halted its deliberation on a program to equalize Negro and white schools to punch through the resolution.

Its aim is to spell out its displeasure with any court decision striking down segregation and to afford the State a "last ditch measure" against Negro and white children going to school together.

Speaker of the House Walter Sillers stepped down from the rostrum to argue for its adoption.

"We want to bring all the influence we can bear on the court to sustain segregation," he said. "If we backtract today it will be an admission that we are ready to accept non-segregation," he said.

The supporters of the proposed amendment were prodded into action and irked by the argument before the high court that the South would do nothing about integrated schools if the segregation laws were declared unconstitutional.

Sillers said the plan he envisioned would be to turn over the public school system to private operation and have the State support the children with tuition money.

He said it was for the poor people, since "a rich man can send his children to private segregated schools without the help of the State."

Georgia has passed a law giving standby authority for the same action. South Carolina's Gov. James Byrnes originated the plan although his state has not taken any official action on it.

There Is No Need To Abolish Mississippi's Public School System

Up in the extra-ordinary session of the Mississippi State Legislature this week, under the impact of the brief filed by the Attorney General of the United States with the United States Supreme Court in support of the five cases scheduled for argument this week calling for the abolition of segregation in the public school systems of the nation the first steps were taken in a move to abolish the public school system of the state.

The obvious purpose of the abolition of the public school system of the state to defeat the mandate of the nation's highest court will result only in endless litigation, disturb relations between the Negro and White citizens of the state to a greater extent than what would be the necessary results of a decision of the U. S. Supreme Court ending segregation in the schools.

It seems to us totally unnecessary to attempt such a revolutionary move in the state in order to meet any condition that might arise as a result of the action of the Supreme Court in the abolition of segregation in the public schools.

It is well before going further that we point out here that we recognize the existence of two forms of segregation. First segregation by law. Which means segregation by force and compellment, with all of its attendant evils. Secondly, segregation by choice, a right that seems to us inherent in the rights of all individuals and groups in the homogenous hodge-podge of races, colors, and creeds, that make up the American nation.

One fact about American government which seems to be given little consideration in the discussion of our problems is the fact that government starts at the local level.

In their realization of the fact that government starts at the local level no friction can arise, nor can ill-will be engendered when the citizens at the local level are satisfied with the arrangements and conditions created at the local level.

For a longtime now, the more able and intelligent observers of Southern race relations, who have recognized the need for their improvement have been pointing out the need for Negro-White cooperation at the local level and Negro membership in the authoritative policy making organizations at the state and local level.

It is our opinion and we take the responsibility of saying that it is the opinion of most Negroes of the state, that a satisfactory arrangement in regard to the schools can be made between Negro and White citizens at the local level even after the United States Supreme Court has outlawed segregation in the public school system.

In conclusion it is our opinion that the Brownell brief should be taken as the signal for the White leaders of the state at the local levels to invite the Negro leaders into greater cooperation in the planning of the educational program of the community, the results of which would be far more lasting, more Christian, more democratic, and more American than to abolish the public system of the state in an effort to defeat the mandate of the nations highest court.

Governor White Tells Educational Conference State Has No Plan To Enter Private School Business

Say Legislature Study Committee Bills For Educational Equality

Further Action Must Await Decision Of U. S. Supreme Court

JACKSON, Miss., May 4 — (DSN)—Governor Hugh L. White told the Educational Committee composed of Negro and white representatives of Teachers and other educational organizations of the state, called by him to meet in the executive office in the new Capitol building last Thursday morning to study the proposed bills offered by the state legislative Educational Study Committee that unlike the states of South Carolina and Georgia as indicated in statements from the Governor's of those two states, Mississippi has no plans to enter the Private school business as a result of any decision of the United States Supreme Court in the cases on segregation in public schools.

The Governor made the statement after Prof. J. D. Boyd, Principal of Utica Institute and Hinds Agricultural high school, the President of the Negro Teachers organization of the state, and spokesman for the group at the conference had pointed out that some of the bills submitted by the Legislative Educational study committee would make possible the continuation of the discrimination and evil already existing in regard to Negro education in the state.

The Governor made his statement after calling for a full and complete statement of the objections raised by the Negro teachers and said that he would insist that the committee eliminate such objections before the bills are submitted to the legislature for final approval.

Speaking in regards to the proposals made by the study committee the Governor said that the proposed bills were designed for the purpose of bringing about equalization of education in the state and pointed to the fact that in spite of the charges made against the state it was easily evident that Mississippi has done more than any other state in the South in moving towards equalization.

In replying to a member of the conference who expressed the opinion that neither the Negroes nor the white people of the state wanted to 'abolish' segregated schools while arguing that the state go ahead with the proposed program without waiting for the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court, the governor warned that the issue was one on which he thought the state should not bind its future generations.

Governor White plans to call a special session of the state legislature to enact into law the bills proposed by the legislative Educational study Committee.

Pointing out that there was no man in the country who could say that he knew what would be the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court, after he had heard the praise and criticism of the proposals the Governor said that further consideration would have to ..wait the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court, because, as he pointed out, although the bills were designed to bring about educational equality in the state, they might not satisfy a decision of the court ending segregation.

At the conclusion of the conference the Governer read a letter from the Citizens Committee, a Negro group of Jackson, with Dr. Lula Belle Stewart of Jackson which raised objection to the fact that only Negro educators had been invited to attend the meeting; pointing out that Negro educators might be limited in expressing their opinions because of their employment relations.

The Negro representatives attend the meeting were: Prof. J. D. Bog, Prof. A. A. Alexander, Brookhaven, Miss.; Prof. E. S. Bishop, Corinth; Mrs. Jennie Ruth Crump, Meridian; and Rev. C. Herron of the Jackson Parent Teachers Association.

Hinds County Spent Nearly $30,000 Over State's Share For Negro Teachers Salaries

By PHIL STROUPE

Hinds county spent more than $100,000 during the two-year period, 1950-52, to equalize Negro teacher salaries, figures from the office of State Auditor William D. Neal showed.

Out of the $71,475.07 appropriated by the 1950 legislature in a special fund earmarked for Negro teacher salries, Hinds county received $71,475.07. "Hinds county used all of its share of state funds on Negro teacher salries, plus $29,988.90 from its own sources, making a total effort of $101,463.97 for the two year period," Auditor Neal said.

Thirty-eight counties were mentioned in a report from the Legislative Investigation Committee recently for not having used the money on Negro teachers. An investigation was ordered and is now being conducted by the attorney general's office to determine if any money was imporperly spent.

County superintendents of education replied to the charge with vigorous denials, saying that the funds were not "misused but simply unused" and can be returned to the state treasury if necessary. Hinds was not one of the 38 counties named.

Asst. Atty. Gen. James T. Kendall is making the investigation and will announce later his findings on the counties.

Meanwhile, Robert Mayo, Hinds county superintendent said his expenditures for equalization of Negro teacher salaries are in accord with the figures released by State Auditor Neal.

Mayo said that 187 Negro teachers of Hinds county received salary adjustments out of the $101,463 spent during the two year period.

"Hinds may not be out front in on Negro teachers," Mayo said, "but we have increased their salaries so that their salaries now average about $1,000 for an eight months school term."

Hinds county has only one Negro high school (outside of Jackson) which simplifies the problem here compared with other sections where the Negro population is much heavier.

The Hinds county Agricultural High School for Negroes at Utica has an enrollment of 600 students in the ninth through twelfth grades.

Eleven school buses transport Negroes from the fringe of Jackson and other parts of Hinds county to the Utica school every day. Mayo pointed out that the Utica school, which five years ago graduated only four seniors, this week sent out a senior class of 81, reflecting the growth of the school.

Hinds county has 63,000 Negro students, and the assessed valuation of taxable property — outside the Jackson Separate School district — is $18 million. Total assessed valuation of Hinds county property — urban and rural — is $127 millions.

Forty-four per cent of the 63,000 Negro children live outside the Jackson Separate School district.

Mayo said that only $750 a year is paid by Hinds county to the Flora separate school district for education of a "handful" of Negro students in northern Hinds county, and $2100 is received by Hinds for uition students attending Utica from Copiah county.

Many county superintendents have much larger line school and tuition payments than Hinds county and are authorized to use part of the "earmarked" teacher salary funds to pay teachers who actually instruct the students, regardless of the county in which they live.

PLANS APPROVED FOR NEGRO SCHOOL

NATCHEZ, Miss. (Secial) — Preliminary plans for a Negro consolidated school building near Washington, Adams county, have been approved by the state building commission and the state board of education.

William A. Sojourner, county superintendent of education, said work has started on final plans and advertisments for bids will be published soon. The new school will eliminate about [illegible] Negro schools.

The [illegible]ere site of the school is located on the former poor farm of the county.

THAT SPECIAL SESSION

Gov. Hugh White's decision to call the legislature in special session in September to consider the subject of segregation with relation to our public schools is doubtless good judgment although some feel the subject could be carried over until the regular January session.

On last Monday the United States Supreme Court asked for a re-argument of the five cases involving segregation, indicating that the tribunal is much muddled on the subject.

Hope still prevails that even if the court does strengthen its position against segregation at the college level, it will leave to the states direction of the grade schools for at least a period of years and that, in this manner, any sudden and complete reversal of a custom operating under a Supreme Court decision will be avoided.

But this hope may be in vain. States and communities which may be affected are urged to study the problem and consider what may be done by local agreements, co-operation and administrative decisions if next fall, or by 1954, the court should reverse the former decision establishing the policy of "separate but equal" facilities as constitutional.

No matter what the United States Supreme Court may eventually decide, there are some outstanding facts that we must face in Mississippi. They are:

1. The Negro schools in our state are not getting their rightful share of the common school fund. Rank favoritism is being shown in many counties.

2. Some of our educational leaders are vastly more concerned with larger pay for white school teachers than they are in the welfare of Negro schools or the general subject of segregation.

3. In a goodly number of counties the $3,000,000 appropriation made at the last regular session especially for the benefit of Negro schools was misused, improperly used or not used at all.

4. A special legislative study committee has made a report on the general subject of education that ought to be carefully studied by our lawmakers and immediate remedies found for some of the evils set forth.

All in all, it is a subject that is going to take quite a while to thresh out and an early start will not be amiss.

EDITORIAL WARNS OF BLOODSHED:

Miss. Paper Says State Won't Accept Integration

JACKSON, Miss. (ANP)—Mississippi will never accept integration in its public schools, according to an editorial in a leading daily newspaper in Jackson.

Maintaining that neither colored nor whites want to end segregation, the editorial said in part:

"The white schools of Mississippi will never be infiltrated with colored pupils. Enforcement of any segregation law in this state will be impossible.

"All sensible colored people are opposed to it, and will join with whites in seeing that it doesn't happen. They will know such a law will cause bloodshed and friction that would completely ruin our public school system . ."

However, the same newspaper, in another editorial, admitted that under segregation colored citizens have been given the short end of educational facilities of the state. Among other things, this editorial said:

"The colored schools in our state are not getting their rightful share of the common school fund. Rank favoritism is being shown in many counties.

"Some of our educational leaders are vastly more concerned with larger pay for white school teachers than they are in the welfare of colored schools or the general subject of segregation.

"In a goodly number of counties the $3,000,000 appropriation made at the last regular session especially for the benefit of colored teachers was misused, improperly used or not used at all. . ."

The newspaper then suggested that the special session of the legislature, called by Gov. Hugh White for September, remember this when it considers plans to equalize schools.

Miss. Legislature Called In 'Save Segregation' Bid

JACKSON, Miss., July 3—(AP)—This Deep South commonwealth moved today to save segregation in schools by equalizing facilities for both races, while in adjacent Alabama Negroes opened a legal attack to gain entrance to the state university.

Gov. Hugh White summoned the Mississippi Legislature into special session Sept. 15 for the express purpose of enacting a program to lift Negro schools to white levels and to provide for financing it at an added cost of 13 million dollars annually. Mississippi now is spending about 50 million a year on its common schools.

SUIT IN ALABAMA

The challenge to segregation at the University of Alabama came in a federal suit filed by two Negro women. Polly Anne Myers and Autherine J. Lucy sued in U. S. District Court in Birmingham, alleging they were granted permission to enter the university but when they went to the school were told "a mistake had been made and the laws of the state would not permit the university to accept them."

College and state authorities had no comment.

Gov. White said he would restrict the Mississippi legislators to consideration of the educational program and its financing and made it clear the session is the state's bid to save segregation which now is under consideration in the U. S. Supreme Court.

INCREASED TAXES

Equalization would be financed by increased sales, cigarette and oil severance taxes.

White said he believes Mississippi is not yet ready for unsegregated schools and if they are made compulsory it "would take a smarter man than I" to figure out the next move.

The program, already shaped into nearly 30 bills, provides not only for improved physical facilities for Negro schools but also for equalizing of white and Negro teachers' pay and for improved transportation of Negro students.

Many state Negro leaders have endorsed the program and expressed willingness to see the dual system maintained if the schools are equalized but others condemn segregation on principle and want it abolished.

Miss. Ponders 'Equal' Schools

Legislature Called To Meet Sept. 15

JACKSON, Miss. — (ANP) — Gov. Hugh White last week set Sept. 15 as the date when a special session of the state legislature will attempt to work out its version of a "separate but equal" school system.

Mississippians have known for some time that a special session on the school issue was to be held this fall, but no exact date had been set. Gov. White had promised to call the legislature as soon as the U. S. Supreme Court rendered a decision on Jim Crow schools.

The high tribunal on June 8 postponed until Oct. 12 at the earliest, a decision on segregated schools.

In announcing the date for the special session, Gov. White said:

Other Matters Must Wait

"Any other legislative matters will wait until it is seen how the legislators progress with the school program."

Some legislators already have expressed disapproval of the appeal ofthe special session.

Pupose of the session is to attempt to formulate some program which will allow Missisippi to continue segregation of colored and white pupils.

Specifically the state will attempt to work out a program to give colored teachers equal salaries facilities and curriculum as well as transportation to and from classrooms.

To Up Sales Taxes

In order to carry out an equalization program of this sort, White has agreed to increased cigarette, oil severacnce and sale taxes.

Most colored in Mississippians are opposed to any attempts at equalization. They say that there can be no real equalization under the separate but equal system. They now want integration.

However, Mississippi whites have said they will never accept integration in the state's public schools.

Paper's Editorial Says:

Mississippi Won't Accept Mixed Schools

JACKSON, Miss.—(ANP)—Mississippi will never accept integration in its public schools, according to an editorial in a leading daily newspaper in Jackson.

Mississippi Readies Ambitious School Program Hoping For 'Favorable' Action On Segregation

JACKSON, Miss., May 2 (UP) — Mississippi governmental machinery was primed and oiled today in anticipation of a "favorable" U. S. Supreme Court decision on school segregation which, if handed down Monday, would start wheels turning toward one of the most ambitious proposals ever handed any state Legislature.

Equalization of white and Negro schools and a revamping of an antiquated administrative system has been waiting months now for the court to decide whether it will uphold dual but equal systems or abolish segregation.

The state's major education groups lined up behind Gov. Hugh White, other state officials and the legislative Recess Education Study Committee in approving the main features of the committee's plan.

Decision Awaited

If the long-awaited decision comes Monday, or before June 1, and maintains the present policy of two equal systems White is ready to call the Legislature into special session within a few days to consider the program.

But Thursday White told education leaders if the decision is delayed until June 1 he may wait until September and ask that the program be made retroactive to July 1, the beginning of the next school term. Legislators are reluctant to leave their crops.

A decision against segregation most likely would upset the entire program which has been geared to two equal systems. White frankly says he doesn't know what he would do in that event.

Some Are Opposed

The program already has run into opposition, but surprisingly little of it has been on the higher level. Leaders at Thursday's meeting — which included representatives of the Mississippi Education Association and the State Department of Education — agreed that the $49,000,000-a-year program would be thebiggest step taken by any Southern State to equalize its schools.

Rep. Ney Gore, committee secretary, pointed out that its success is based on treating all children, white or Negro, on the same basis, consolidation of some 3,000 school districts and keeping the proposed State Finance Commission which would administer building and consolidation "as free of politics as possible."

Although it calls for about $13,000,000 a year more in state money and as a result more taxes, an official told the meeting that much opposition is coming from the school teachers themselves.

Would Lose School

The high state official who asked not to be quoted said he had heard of one teacher telling her pupils that, if enacted, the program would cause them to lose their school through consolidation. Many schools and districts don't want to merge with old rivals.

But a representative of those most affected, the Negroes, put it like this:

"Our schools are so far behind," said J. D. Boyd, president of the Negro Teachers Association and superintendent of Utica Institute, "that any slowing up of the program is working an undue hardship on the Negroes."

One, Boyd said, is the transportation bill in which separate formulas are proposed for figuring white and Negro transportation costs.

Reprecentative Ney Gore of Quitman County, secretary of the Legislative Recess Education Study Committee, said the program "treats all school children, Negro and white, on the same basis" insofar as legal requirements permit. He said the transportation formulas were separated "to the advantage of Negroes." Represenative Gore explained that the white formula was based on past provisions but that Negroes have had "parctically no transportation in the past.

Boyd also asked that the laws be written to provide that Negro members be placed on the proposed state Education Finance Commission and other supervisory boards. He got no response to that.

Favorable on Whole

However, the Negro group, as well as the MEA, the Mississippi Congress of Parents and Teachers and state supt. of Education Jack Tubb spoke favorably of the program as a whole. The county superintendents of education endorsed it in full.

The assurance that teached pay would be retroactive came after Jimmy Ewing, legislative chairman for the Mississippi Education Association, and Mrs. Maud Hunter, past MEA president, said teachers are quitting all over the state because they do not know what is in store for them in the next term.

EQUALIZATION PLANS ATTACKED BY NEGROES

Claim New Mississippi Setup Is Discriminatory

CHARGES ARE REFUTED

By The United Press

JACKSON, Miss., May 1. — The president of the Mississippi Negro Teachers Association told Gov. Hugh White Thursday that parts of the state's school equalization program are "clearly discriminatory" but the charge was refuted by a member of the committee which drafted the $49 million-a-year plan.

The point was raised in a meeting in which both Governor White and Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin told white and Negro education leaders that they will recommend making the program retroactive to the beginning of the next school term if the Governor waits until September to call a special session.

Transportation Hit

J. D. Boyd of Utica said the Negro group found that certain bills did not "spell out" that both races be treated with equality.

Education Groups In Accord After White Supports Salary Raise For Teachers July 1

By PHIL STROUPE

Harmony prevailed among six state organizations studying equalization of public education today when Gov. Hugh White and Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin assured them that they will recommend to the special session of the Legislature that the teacher salary adjustments be made retroactive to July 1 of this year, regardless of when the program is enacted into law.

White reiterated his position that the program should not be presented to a special session of the legislature until the U. S. Supreme Court decides the segregation cases now before it.

"I will recommend to the legislaute—and I feel sure of their support—that the school program be made retroactive to July 1, no matter when the program is made law," White said.

This assurance was welcomed by representatives of the Mississippi Education Association, the Mississippi Association County School Superintendent, the State Association of Negro Teachers, the Congress of Parent-Teachers Associations, and the State Department of Education.

Mrs. Maude Hunter of Newton, president of the MEA, told Gov. White:

"Teachers are resigning from their positions because they are confused about the position as to their jobs and salaries under the proposed program for the next term."

White assured Mrs. Hunter and her group that his support will be given for the July 1 date to begin the salary scale increases.

G. J. Cain of the State Department of Education explained that consolidations among school districts would likely not occur within the first year of the program and therefore would not affect teachers jobs.

James Kendall, assistant attorney general who wrote the bills for the committee, said this arrangement could be legally arranged to added the salary increases that may come after July 1 to offset any time taught while waiting for the bills to become law.

J. D. Boyd, superintendent of Utica Institute for Negroes, and president of the Negro Teachers association of the state, asked that the committee "spell out" certain phases of the bills to "assure that discrimination among races" will not be left to the discretion of boards and departments.

White told the Negro leaders that their request was well taken and he asked that Rep. Tyler Holmes, chairman of the Recess committee, and Sen. Ney Gore, secretary, work with the Negro leaders on these adjustments.

The program was indorsed by Mrs. A. L. Hendrick, president of the State PTA representing 63,000 members; by James Ewing, chairman of the Legislative committee of the MEA representing 9,000 members; the 82 county superintendents represented by President J. F. Russom of Hernando; and J. D. Boyd who spoke for 7,000 Negro teachers.

Negro leaders submitted a list of what Boyd called "Safeguards" against discrimination for his people.

Rep. Gove told Boyd and the other Negro leaders that "the bills are written for children—not white or black children—but all children.

Governor Sees Problem With No Remedy If Court Rules Non-Segregation

By JIM SHARP

Gov. Hugh White said Monday "I have no remedy" for Mississippi's school problems if the United States Supreme Court declares segregation unconstitutional.

He said he was convinced that "persuasion" of opposing elements to continue segregation, would not work in the face of such a decision and these elements in the state would demand that the law as interpreted by the high court, be enforced.

"I don't believe for one minute that if the supreme court declares segregation unconstitutional you'd get by with it," the governor asserted.

He said that several Negro groups and their sympathizers, who are presently supporting state plans for equalization would "see to it that you couldn't" fail to comply with such a supreme court ruling.

The governor said that he plans to ask several representative interested groups to confer with him on proposed legislation which would provide a revision of the state's school system and equal facilities for the races at the estimated cost of $60 million.

These groups would include, Gov. White stated, the Mississippi Education Assn., and the Mississippi Teachers' Assn. (Negro).

"I want to get their slant," he said.

Gov. White asserted that "I am at a loss to understand the object of the supreme court's delaying its decisions in the (segregation) matter as long as they have."

And he again indicated that there would be no call for a special session until after such a ruling. Next rule day of the U. S. Supreme Court is scheduled next Monday, April 29.

The legislative Recess Education Study Committee has amended its proposal for an immediate $60,000,000 bond issue for building equalized schools to read that no bond would be issued so long as money remains in the State Public School Building Fund. This was revealed today in a supplemental report to the legislature.

The compromise was one of several made after a recent meeting with Gov. White and other high officials but it was not announced at the time.

White and some committee members opposed the bond issue which was proposed to assure rapid construction of schools in its plan for equalizing white and Negro facilities.

The governor has said he thinks the $5,000,000 annual appropriation proposed for a building program will be sufficient without the state borrowing money through a bond issue. The bill calling for the bonds was revised to read that the issue would not be made so long as local districts do not call for more money than is available through building appropriations in the state treasury.

Negroes Charge Discrimination In Education Bills

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

A Negro citizens' committe, claiming to represent "hundreds of the race in Jackson went on record today as opposing the state's equalization programs as an "invitation for continued discrimination."

Dr. I. E. Stewart, chairman of the committee, said the organization is composed of about all Negro groups, fraternal and professional, in the city.

Dr. Stewart released a resolution passed by the committee which read:

"Whereas, the Legislative Recess Committee on Education has submitted certain bills persumably intended to equalize educational facilities for whites and Negroes in Mississippi, but which because of their construction would permit and invite continued discrimination and segregation in education,

"Be it resolved, the Negro citizens will not be bound by these proposals or any proposals made by this or any other committee which are in violation of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution . . ."

In a prepared statement, Dr. Stewart, a physician, said, "We regret that the governor did not see fit to call in a more representative group of Negroes" at a meeting in progress today.

Gov. Hugh White met today with members of the Mississippi Education Association, School Administrators Association, parent-teachers groups and Negro teachers to go over the proposed equalization program with them.

"In as much as the said Negroes, invited by the governor, are predominantly employes of the state, it is likely they would be reluctant to give the true interpretation of their thinking as well as the thinking of the Negro citizens of the state," the resolution said.

Except for the local branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the citizens' committee is the first Negro organization to oppose the equalization program.

Education Study Committee Revises Three-Point Plan Of Equalization Program

The Legislative Recess Education Study Committee today recorded an unanimous vote on compromises made in its $49,000,000-a-year school equalization program with Gov. Hugh White and other officials yesterday, and adjourned sine die.

Other controversial features, including a $60,000,000 bond issue for school construction, were left to be worked out in a special session of the legislature. The compromises worked out yesterday were:

After meeting with White and other high officials the committee voted to:

1. Cut the membership of the proposed state finance commission from nine to six and leave supervision of transportation with the State Department of Education rather than with the commission which still would have the final say in consolidation and building.

2. Leave to local option by election whether county superintendents of education will be appointive or elective.

3. Leave until a regular session a proposal to make the state superintendent of education appointive rather than elective.

The compromices were reached in the meeting which also was attended by Lt. Gov. Caroll Gartin, House Speaker Walter Sillers, Atty. Gen J. P. Coleman and other legislators.

"I am perfectly satisfied with the amended program," White said. "And I am ready to call a special session of the legislature when the time is ripe."

However, there was no agreement reached on the proposed $60,000,000 bond issue to assure rapid construction of new schools. The committee still has under study a new proposal to appropriate $270 per teacher unit for school maintenance to offer relief in local taxation.

The committee's revenue plan was left as it is, but White predicted that the committee's proposal to increase cigaret taxes one cent a pack will be "ignored." He has approved bills to increase the sales tax from two to three per cent and the oil and gas severance taxes from six to eight per cent.

White has said he will call a special session to consider the program when the U. S. Supreme Court rules on segregation, providing separate facilities for whites and Negroes is declared constitutional.

More Pupils, More Teachers, Expanding Facilities Seen As Reason For Budget Hike

A probable increase of 3.8 mills in property taxes for residents of the Jackson Municipal Separate School District is contained in the 1953-54 school budget made public today.

The anticipated increase—which could be reduced by large state contributions or larger totals of assessed property in the district—would boost the school tax rate from 15.00 mills in 1952 to 18.8 for 1953. This would provide for an increase in the budget of from $2,912,834 in the current year to $3,319,964 for 1953-54, or $407,130.

Major factors in causing the increase are:

1. An expected increase of 1500 in the number of pupils for the 1953-54 school year, necessitating employment of 56 more teachers, plus increases in teachers' salaries to meet minimum standards, calling for a total increase in pay to teachers of $192,000.

2. The expanding building program, with resultant increase of $82,835 in debt service and other costs incident to the operation of new or enlarged schools, including an increase of $30,900 in custodial workers.

3. An increase of $49,500 in fixed charges, including $31,800 in increased social security and state retirement system payments and $12,000 in insurance rate increases.

The budget was drafted under the supervision of the board of trustees of the separate school district, headed by John Batte, and approved unanimously Wednesday by the city council.

Voting to approve the budget were Mayor Allen C. Thompson, Commissioner R. S. (Sunnie) Withers and Commissioner Chalmers W. Alexander.

The total budget for the 1953-54 school year, beginning July 1, 1953, is $3,319,964, compared with a budget for the current year of $2,912,834, an increase of $407,130.

Exclusive of the $696,025 budgeted for debt service, compared with $612,190 for this purpose in 1952-53, the budget for maintenance of the district schools is $2,624,939, compared with $2,300,644 for the current year. This is an increase of $324,295, exclusive of debt service.

Kirby F. Walker, district school superintendent, pointed out that there are three possible sources of revenue which could [illegible] anticipated 3.8 increase in millage is met next fall when the tax rolls for 1953 are made up.

These are: increased contributions to the system by the state; an increase in the total of assessed property which is presently estimated at $160,000,000, or diversion of surplus funds.

However, he explained, no surplus is in sight although $120,000 was diverted from surplus during the current year which offset what would otherwise have been an increase of three-fourths of one mill.

The most likely source of revenue would be from increased state contributions coming from a special session of the Legislature. This would be especially true if reports are correct that a special session next fall would make increases in state payments retroactive to July 1, 1953.

The budget message of the board, headed by John Batte, said that "We have estimated that new pupils (numbering an estimated 1500 next year to be added to the present 18,000), plus improvements in the holding power of our schools and more regular attendance of other pupils, will increase instructional expenditure $150,000 next session."

Adjustments have been made, in the new budget, in teachers' salaries in high schools to increase the minimum from $1900 to $2000 annually, with the $3625 maximum remaining unchanged.

Charts accompanying the budget report show the substantial gains made by schools of the separate school district, compared with average school districts of similar size elsewhere in the United States, in per pupil expenditures.

The chart shows that while Jackson spent $118 per pupil, compared with the national average of $216 in 1948-49, the figures are now: Jackson, $164 and national, $227, based on the new budget.

Mississippi Negro Leaders Want Equalized Segregation

Editor Suggests Greater Cooperation in School Planning

Journal and Constitution

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau Chief, Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 12—Negro leaders in Mississippi contend that public school segregation will continue regardless of a United States Supreme Court decision if a current special legislative session takes definite steps to guarantee an equalization of the dual system. Their price, however, is that the program commence immediately with no further "delaying promises" of its inauguration.

The position of the Negro leaders was given while the lawmakers wrestled with a proposition of abolishing the public school system in event the United States Supreme Court should ban segregation. It is in line with arguments in the legislature against a proposed amendment to the state constitution authorizing the legislature to abolish the system and pave the way for private schools.

Opponents of a proposed amendment offered by House Speaker Walter Sillers and other members of his rules committee take the position that segregation will continue because it will be handled on the "local level."

People Would Vote

Agitation for immediate steps to permit quick abolition in event of an adverse ruling in Washington stemmed from the brief of Attorney General Herbert Brownell in which he said the court has the authority and should use it in abolishing segregation in the public schools. Under the proposal before the legislature, the voters would be asked to approve an amendment to the constitution of 1890 authorizing the legislature, if necessary, to abolish public schools. It still must be adopted on three separate days in each branch of the legislature.

Latest advocate of continued segregation, provided the two systems are equalized, is Percy Greene, editor of the Jackson Advocate, weekly Negro newspaper published in Jackson. Earlier, he had been allout for elimination of segregation.

Editor Greene said this week "it is the opinion of most Negroes of the state that a satisfactory arrangement in regard to the schools can be made between Negro and white citizens at the local level even after the United States Supreme Court has outlawed segregation in the public school system."

Greater Cooperation

"It is our opinion that the Brownell brief should be taken as the signal for white leaders of the state at the local levels to invite the Negro leaders into greater cooperation in the planning of the educational program of the community," Editor Greene said. "The results would be far more lasting, more Christian, more democratic and more American than to abolish the public system of the state in an effort to defeat the mandate of the nation's highest court."

Editor Greene said adoption of the amendment to abolish the public school system, in order to defeat the mandate of the court, "will result only in endless litigation, disturb relations between the Negro and white citizens of the state to a greater extent than what would be the necessary results of a decision of the court ending segregation in the schools."

The Negro editor and leader in that race's Democratic party faction, recognizes the existence of two forms of segregation. He listed them as:

1. Segregation by law, which means segregation by force and compellment with all of its attendant evils.

2. Segregation by choice, a right that is inherent in the rights of all individuals and groups in the homogenous hodge-podge of races, colors and creeds that make up the American nation.

Starts at Local Level

Editor Greene then stated:

"One fact about American government which seems to be given little consideration in the discussion of our problems is the fact that government starts at the local level.

"In their realization of the fact that government starts at the local level no friction can arise, nor can ill-will be engendered when the citizens at the local level are satisfied with the arrangements and conditions created at the local level.

"For a long time now, the more able and intelligent observers of Southern race relations, who have recognized the need for their improvement, have been pointing out the need for Negro-white cooperation at the local level and Negro membership in the authoritative policy-making organizations at the state and local level."

Meanwhile, proponents of the proposed abolition amendment argue likewise that the situation can be handled "locally," but they express the fear that "outside agitators" will not permit that friendly relationship to continue. It is on that basis they want to have the "necessary weapon in hand" in event it is necessary to use it to safeguard segregation.

MISSISSIPPI PUSHING SCHOOL EQUALIZATION

Special to The New York Times.

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 19—The Mississippi Legislature will have to work three days next week to put finishing touches on its program of public school equalization.

The principal measure approved in the House this week is a provision for a $10,000,000 bond issue to be used in starting the equalization plan. Another provides for state aid where needed for the construction of new school buildings.

The Senate has rejected the constitutional amendment, framed by Speaker Walter Sillers and adopted in the House, that seeks to give the Legislature authority to abolish the publish school system and give state aid through donations to private schools should the Federal Government move to abolish segregation in this state.

The $10,000,000 bond issue proposed in a House bill carries a clause making it effective only in the event the United States Supreme Court refuses to recognize the plan of equal but separate schools for whites and Negroes. If the court orders segregation abolished the bond issue will be null and void.

Some of the thirty-odd bills dealing with various phases of the school equalization plan will be carried over until the January session. These include measures increasing the retail sales tax, the oil severance tax and the cigarette tax to bring in additional revenue to finance the program.

Allen asks special session if segregation is ruled out

News

Abolition of racial segregation in schools "cannot be allowed to take place in Alabama," Lt. Gov. James B. Allen declared today.

Commending Gov. Gordon Persons for "taking the initiative" in seeking a solution to the problem, the lieutenant governor urged him to call a special session of the Legislature, in case the U. S. Supreme Court rules out segregation.

Allen, an avowed candidate for governor, said abolition of segregation "is against the public interest and is against the interest of both races."

"Public opinion in Alabama will not support any edict from Washington which seeks to abolish our time honored customs and traditions," he emphasized.

ALLEN SAID that if the high court does hand down an adverse ruling, the Persons administration is duty-bound to take steps to preserve Alabama's tradition of classroom segregation.

"The problem should not be passed on to the next administration, but should be faced squarely and positively by the present administration," he added.

Allen expressed the belief that the decision probably would come "in the next few weeks," leaving "some 10 or 11 months" remaining in the present administration for action.

The lieutenant governor's opinions were contained in a letter to Gov. Persons in response to the governor's recent request that members of the Legislature, newspaper editors, school leaders and others submit "views and suggestions" on what should be done.

Allen offered no specific program, but wrote Gov. Persons that "I have an open mind in the matter and want to hear, consider and study the various suggestions that have been made before deciding upon a definite course that I would be willing to advocate."

He added that "cries for federal aid offer no panacea for our problems. We must face our problems and work out our own solutions."

The lieutenant governor, who is ex-officio member of the State Legislative Council, said he was "very much interested" in the report the governor will make to the council on replies coming in from various state and community leaders.

The council, headed by Tuscaloosa Sen. E. W. Skidmore, as chairman, will meet at Montgomery Jan. 8 to take up the matter. This group of senators and representatives also will hear a "progress report" from Charles M. Cooper, director of the State Legislative Reference Service.

MEMBERS of a legislative interim committee appointed by Lt. Gov. Allen and Speaker Roberts Brown, under authority of a Senate joint resolution, also will meet with Gov. Persons and Dr. W. J. Terry, state education superintendent. This committee was established to study problems expected to arise from the Supreme Court decision.

Committee members are Jefferson Sen. Albert Boutwell, Senate president pro-tem; Wilcox Sen. J. Miller Bonner, author of the resolution; Hale Sen. Herbert Byars, and Reps. Jack. Gallalee, Mobile; Ira Pruitt, Sumter, and Bob Langdon, Conecuh.

Mississippi Rewrites Laws On Equal School Facilities

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 24 (AP). The Mississippi Legislature handed the State today a 50-million-dollar-a-year blueprint for fulfilling a 63-year-old mandate to provide equal school facilities for white and Negro children.

The Legislature Wednesday night finished the sweeping job of an eight-week special session by completely rewriting Mississippi education laws to provide separate, but equal scholastic opportunities for both races.

There remained to be enacted only the three proposed tax increases totaling 17 million dollars a year to finance a part of the cost of raising Negro schools. This work was white schools. This work was delayed until the regular session begins next January 5.

The lawmakers adjourned the special session after passing 31 local and state bills providing for building new schools, consolidating others, paying higher salaries to teachers and improving transportation systems.

With these steps Mississippi officials hope to carry out the provisions of an 1890 constitutional amendment calling for equal, although separate, school facilities for whites and Negroes.

The special session was called by Gov. Hugh White as Federal suits challenging the school segregation laws of southern states and even the separate-but-equal doctrine itself neared a decision.

As result of new action, the minimum teacher salary scale begins at $2200 annually for persons holding master's degrees and slides to $700 a year for high school graduates.

The base pay for county superintendents of education was set at $4200.

Miss. Negro Leader Changes Views on School Segregation

Abandons Demand for Elimination Of Segregation at All Levels

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau Chief, Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Feb. 28—Mississippi's strongest Negro foe of racial segregation—Editor Percy Greene of the Jackson Advocate—has yielded to the "Southern pattern."

His surprise, and voluntary, change in position followed closely Gov. Hugh White's recent history-making address in the all-Negro delta town of Mound Bayou with a Harvard-graduate mayor. It was the first time a chief executive of the state had ever delivered an address in the town in its 65 years' existence.

In the governor's new high in racial harmony appearance on Abe Lincoln's birthday he assured the state's Negroes of early emancipation from educational inequalities.

Editor Greene's admission that Governor White's statement drew "deep and genuine widespread favorable comment from Negro citizens who heard it" may have influenced his about-face.

The editor's new views, vastly in contrast to his long and bitter fight for elimination of segregation at all levels, were revealed in an editorial in the latest edition of his weekly newspaper and in a speech before a state-wide association of Negro Democrats.

Editor Greene said even though the United States Supreme Court should outlaw segregation in the public schools, it will have no effect in Mississippi or other Southern states because "there is nothing which will change the pattern of Mississippi and other Southern communities."

"One of the basic facts of the American public school system is that school facilities are generally located for the convenience of children in specific communities," he said.

New Approach

Here is the new approach of the once staunch anti-segregationist:

"It is our opinion that with an equally good school in the Negro community, comparing in every way with that of the white schools, no Negro family in Mississippi would then want to send its children away from the Negro community across town to the school in the white community just to be able to say the children were going to school with white children.

"We think also that this is a position on which the intelligent Negroes of the state are generally agreed, despite the fact that they also are of the opinion that segregation by law should be abolished in Mississippi and throughout the nation for the good of democracy, peace and world brotherhood."

Editor Greene said he is only interested in that portion of the Civil Rights program which guarantees members of his race suffrage at the polls as the basis of achieving citizenship. On that score, he will continue his fight and efforts to gain registration of his race as qualified electors.

White's Statement

The statement of Governor White to the Negro leaders at Mound Bayou which probably was responsible for Editor Greene's change of heart was:

"I want you to know that your leaders are perfectly welcome to come sit with the governor and ask his help when they come as citizens of Mississippi, interested in the welfare of both the white and black races, and who hope and pray that nothing will ever come between them in the state of Mississippi."

Non-Segregation In Schools Rejection Seen By Coleman

WINONA, Miss. (Special) — Attorney Gen. J. P. Coleman said Thursday night "It is beyond argument that the people of Mississippi —both Negro and white—will not send their children to the same schools at this time."

Coleman, reviewing the segregation situation to date before a Lions Club audience of more than 100 persons here, said:

"I am unable to predict what the opinion of the court may be. However it would appear that if the court outlaws segregation it will have to overrule its previous decisions in the main.

"If the court sustains the constitutionality of separate schools for the races, Mississippi already has its program ready to submit to the legislature to bring equal facilities about. If the court strikes down all segregation in all schools and says that children must be educated together, then some other plan must be worked out for Mississippi."

Actually the Supreme Court has under consideration five separate cases involving segregation, including suits against South Carolina, Virginia, Kansas, Delaware and the District of Columbia.

Coleman said "since there are five different cases involved it is reasonable to expect that it will be next May or June before the court is able to hand down any decisions.

"Each case will call for a separate opinion and possibly there may be several dissenting opinions in each case.

"In South Carolina, the facilities are already admittedly equal but those assailing segregation say that on the face of its segregation is a violation of equal protection because it is a brand of inferiority.

"In the Virginia case, it is admitted that facilities are not equal but the state is attempting to bring them to equality.

"In the Delaware case the question is that facilities are admittedly unequal but a lower court judge upheld segregation but said since facilities were unequal negro children must be admitted to white schools."

He said the Kansas and District of Columbia suits are a direct test of the constitutionality of segregation since there is no question of facilities: It involves only the right of the state to maintain separate school systems.

The cases, Coleman said, are among the most important to be decided in a generation because of the deep-rooted sociological problems involved.

Says Difference Is Shocking And Disturbing

JACKSON, Miss. — (ANP) — Everybody in Mississippi now knows what Negroes have long known — that the state spends far more money for the education for white pupils than it does for Negroes.

That fact was confirmed recently when the Mississippi Legislative Recess School Study Committee reported on the "great difference in the per pupil cost for the two races" in the state's segregated public schools. This difference was termed "shocking and disturbing."

The startling revelation is officially documented in the report of the recess committee now being mailed to the lawmakers and already filed with Gov. Hugh White.

Pointing out that it "generally" is known that the amount of money spent for each child for education in Mississippi is more for white children than for Negro children, the committee states that the great difference "usually" is not known or is ignored.

Citing the inequalities of facilities, the report said:

"Hundreds of children of the Negro race are compelled to attend school if they attend at all — in unpainted, unheated and unlighted buildings that are not fit for human habitation and should have been condemned years ago."

The committee goes on to officially record that "because of the rarity of a tax levy for support or maintenance of Negro schools, many Negro school buildings which once were creditable structures have deteriorated beyond repair for lack of maintenance.

"According to the report of the state auditor, in many countries money specifically appropriated for equalizing the pay of Negro teachers which was sent to the counties for that purpose never got to the Negro teachers.

"It has never been returned to the state treasury, either. The committee does not know for what purpose the money was spent."

In discussing school enrollment, the report said:

"Approximately one white child in four and one Negro child in 40 who enroll in Mississippi schools actually graduates.

The committee also lists a glaring difference in enrollment figure. It said 535,473 children were reported in state department of education tabulations for the 1951-52 session, while on actual check of the rolls revealed only 509,112, or a difference of 26,361.

An outstanding example of the differences spent for the education of a Negro child as compared to a white was shown in Tunica county where 81 per cent of the population is Negro. However, the report lists $250 spent for each white pupil, and only $21 for a colored pupil. Other counties are as bad.

Mississippi School Money

(From The Commercial Appeal)

A startling account of Negro education in Mississippi is published on Page 4, Section V, of THE COMMERCIAL APPEAL.

The Legislative School Study Committee found Negro children in "unpainted, unheated and unlighted buildings not fit for human habitation." It found few taxes levied for support of Negro education. It found state tax money provided to bring Negro teacher pay up to white teacher pay but neither reaching Negro teachers nor returned to the state. It found padding of school attendance figures.

Most unusual and most fundamental in the report is publication of a table of annual county expenses per pupil. There are such figures as $182 for white children of De Soto County contrasted with $17 for Negro children, $152 against $26 in Marshall County, and $199 against $34 in Benton County. Some other counties have less glaring differences and some even greater disparities.

Mississippians probably have never before had an opportunity to know how very great the differences are between money provided for white and Negro children. This committee report shows for the first time how much needs to be done.

The Mississippi problem is unusually big but still a part of a national situation in which the United States Office of Education found at the end of last year an immediate need for 325,000 new school buildings, with the funds available, nearly five billion dollars too small.

Memphis has been building equal school buildings for some time but only last year announced that white and Negro teachers pay had been equalized, while Shelby County is still using the little schoolhouse system for Negroes, long after shifting to consolidated schools for white children.

Higher pay for teachers and more buildings are adding to the taxes all across the country and it is obvious that Mississippi taxes for schools are likely to move up faster than elsewhere.

We assume that Mississippians agree that uneducated Negroes are a handicap to the state. We assume they join with the committee of their legislature in hoping to preserve the double school system against the advocates of non-segregated schools.

The committee says the Mississippi Legislature should be called into special session to meet this situation.

This is the most encouraging factor in the whole bleak picture. Mississippi, and other Southern states have had an abundance of volunteer advice givers from a distance. This is different.

These are Mississippians — elected members of the Legislature—putting down the facts in bald words and stinging figures as a foundation for action by Mississippi.

Stennis Confidently Expects Supreme Court To Uphold Segregation In Our Schools

Sen. John C. Stennis said today he "confidently expects" the U. S. Supreme Court to uphold the constitutionality of segreation in public schools.

In a speech prepared for delivery before the Mississippi Vocational Association, Stennis said regardless of the high Court's forthcoming decision Mississippi needs an entire new school program.

"In December I heard the argument in the U. S. Supreme Court in the school segregation cases," Stennis said, "and I confidently expect a decision upholding segregation as lawful, but imposing strict standards of equality as to physical facilities, curriculum and the qualification of teachers.

"But regardless of the particular turn the court decision may take, we need and must have, and the people want and can afford, an extended school program that includes betterment of the basic pay standards."

Gov. Hugh White is waiting for the high court's decision before calling a special session of the legislature to equalize Negro and white schools.

Stennis told the vocational teachers, here for the Mississippi Education Association convention that he will "strongly endorse and support any reasonable program that is designed to substantially benefit our children and insure the members of our teaching profession the support and compensation they deserve."

The DeKalb lawmaker said he believes the people are willing to "support the necessary and reasonable tax bill for an augmented program of public education, not as a temporary expedient but as a permanent policy of state."

He also recommended a study of limiting land ownership in Mississippi.

"I think that our state should make a serious study of the question of imposing a definite limitation on the number of acres that a corporation or an individual, or the state or national government can own in the state of Mississippi," Stennis said. He added the limitation would apply only to "future acquisitions."

Stennis said lands are now being bought up in large tracts and if permitted to continue "the great middle class of our people will be driven from the land and there will be none left to be shared by our increasing population."

Governor To Call Special Session If Supreme Court Rules Out Segregation

By PHIL STROUPE

Gov. Hugh White told newsmen today at his press conference that he expects the U. S. Supreme Court decision on the constitutionality of segregation "sometime between May 1 and May 15."

If the high court rules out segregation, White said he would then make issue an immediate call for a special session of the State Legislature to consider legislation for equalization of Negro and white schools.

"I would be ready to call the session within a day or two after receiving the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court," White said.

The call would not include anything but the school program, White said, but he explained that he could later ask that other matters be considered after the legislators are assembled.

When asked how long the special session might last, Gov. White said, "I have no way of answering that, but the legislators know now whether they are for or against the school program. They have been kept informed by members of the legislative study committee on what the program includes, and it shouldn't take too long to act on the bills."

Meantime, Gov. White said he has called a meeting for Monday at his office with committee leaders and other interested officials to "go into every bill, piece by piece."

He said his conference will include Speaker of the House Walter Siller, Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin, Chairman of the Study Committee Tyler Holmes, Hilton Waites, who headed the minority report of the education report, Atty. Gen. J. P. Coleman and Assistant Atty. Gen. Jimmy Kendall, who worked with the committee on the preparation of the bills.

"We're going into every bill, and every bill will be approved or disapproved, or corrections will be suggested where deemed necessary, White said. "Then I'll be in a position to call the special session when the court acts."

The governor said he expects to leave Jackson late in July to attend the National Conference of Governors scheduled to open in Seattle, Aug. 2. He would not call the special session in July, but if the decision from the U. S. Supreme Court comes as he expects in late May, then he could call the session shortly thereafter. The U. S. Supreme Court adjourns June 1 for the Summer.

Speaking of the program to be considered on equalization of schools, Gov. White said, "I think the bills with regard to teachers salaries and equalization of facilities will pass, but I may not go along with the entire program."

He said that a general expression of feeling among legislators on the program was one of approval, except for means of financing the undertaking. White said today in reference to his announcement Tuesday of a suggested revamping of the state tax structure, "If we pass the school equalization program and then don't revamp the finances of Mississippi, then you can look for tremendous tax increases in Mississippi."

"That's what we want to avoid," White added. He reiterated his belief that a one-cent increase in sales tax will "finance the school program with money left over." White's plan for revamping the tax distribution included:

1) Issuance of $30 million in gasoline revenue bonds for secondary road construction by the State Highway Department.

2) Earmarking one cent of the seven-cents-a-gallon gasoline excise tax for municipalities, leaving the other six cents forstate and county programs.

3) Reducing the county share of the gasoline tax from 2½ cents to 1½ cents a gallon and using the one cent for the presently state financed rural road program.

PRESIDENT OF GENERAL BAPTIST STATE CONVENTION HEADS GROUP CALLING UPON GOVERNOR WHITE TO SPEED-UP SCHOOL EQUALIZATION PROGRAM

Say No Suits Filed In State Because Conservative Negro Leaders Have Supported Segregation

Preparation For Suit To Enter University Of Mississippi Said Well Underway

Jackson, Miss., Oct. 12.—(DSN)—Statewide comment was provoked by the statements made here last Thursday by Rev. H. H. Hume, President of the General Baptist State Convention of Mississippi, and editor of the Delta Leader, the spokesman for a delegation of Negroes calling upon Governor White to urge the speeding-up of the proposed plan for equalization of the white and Negro schools of the state and to ask the Governor's help in the selection of a speaker for the Annual Hospital Day Program at Mound Bayou, Miss., sponsored by the Knights and Daughters of Tabor as a means of raising additional funds for the support of the Taborian Hospital located at Mound Bayou. Rev. Hume was accompanied on his visit to the Governor by J. W. Chambers, principal of the Arcola High School and director of public relations for the Knights and Daughters of Tabor, and S. S. Jackson, principal of the Tule Lake School.

According to reports Hume told Governor White that every day that equalization of facilities in public schools is delayed weakens the state's case for continued segregation. "Delay," he said, "is weakening our system and the fibre of our traditions of separate schools in Mississippi."

In furthering his statement Hume explained that the Mississippi Negro has not favored methods used in border states to defeat segregation, notably by action to force higher institutions to accept Negro students. This is not, he added, "because we lack the means to do so, or the knowledge of how to do it but because the conservative Negro leaders have supported segregation."

But he warned, "failure of the equalization plan might have a bearing on the impending segregation decisions of the U. S. Supreme Court and also might lead to the replacing of the present conservative Negro leaders by more radical elements."

Following immediately behind the visit of the Hume delegation and the report of his statement in regard to the matter of suits by Negro students for entry into the state's institutions of higher learning, a responsible source revealed here that at least two suits were well underway for entry into the University of Mississippi, one of which could be expected to be on file in a matter of a few days.

Most of the comment in regard to the Hume statement centered around his conclusion that the conservative Negro leaders of the state have supported segregation, his statement indicating that the conservative Negro leaders of the state might now be ready to desert segregation.

On the other hand there were those who took the view that Hume's stand for equalization indicated that equalization to him meant continued segregation, and a view not generally held by the more intelligent Negroes of the state who take the position that equalization will be more urgent if the U. S. Supreme Court should abolish segregation than it is under the pattern of segregation in education now existing in the state.

MISSISSIPPI PLANS EQUALIZED SCHOOLS

Gov. White Asks Legislature to Provide Funds to Improve Facilities for Negroes

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 3—The Mississippi Legislature was convened in special session today to consider expenditure of an estimated $100,000,000 to equalize the state's white and Negro public schools. The money would be spent at a rate of $49,000,000 a year.

In a message to the joint session of House and Senate this afternoon Gov. Hugh L. White said that Mississippi could not afford to wait on a United States Supreme Court decision on segregation in schools before providing educational opportunities for both races in all public schools.

The Governor endorsed the $49,000,000-a-year program which was drafted by a legislative committee for equal though separate facilities, as a sound, feasible and workable solution to our educational problems.

But he said the program "is not presented to you as a 'package' to be taken or rejected in its entirety."

"It is for you," he continued, "to determine whether the recommended program should be revised and improved or whether an even better and more workable program can be devised."

The committee, composed of eighteen members, rewrote the state's school laws and prepared a series of thirty-two bills and three resolutions to provide tax increases, salary standards, buildings and transportation and a new administrative system putting more authority at the state level.

"My desire is for the enactment of a program which will provide the children of our state with the highest possible level of educational opportunity within the limit of our resources and ability to pay," Governor White said.

"Throughout the nation there are only seven states in which the tax burden is less than in Mississippi," Governor White said. "In these days of relatively high prosperity the economy of this state can well afford and withstand such moderate increases in taxation as you may find necessary.

"I recommend that you give careful consideration and study to the committee's revenue recommendations after having first determined as best you can the additional revenue which will be required as a result of any legislation which you may enact. You can then determine what taxes must or should be increased, and the extent to which such increase is necessary."

The committee proposed advancing the sales tax from 2 to 3 per cent, higher oil and gas taxes and an increase in the cigarette tax from 4 to 5 cents a pack.

Mr. White said that he had been advised by many that it "would be the wiser course" to delay the school program until the United States Supreme Court ruled on segregation.

"I am convinced that there is no assurance that these cases will be decided in any absolute manner within the reasonably near future," he said.

"Our situation does not admit to further delay. We must also recognize that the earlier the task is undertaken the sooner it will be accomplished."

The Governor said "the most we can hope to salvage from a court decision would be a holding that we can separately educate the races provided we afford each equality of educational opportunity."

"All past decisions have required that," he added, "and it may well be that our acknowledged failure in the past in this regard is the cause of our present emergency."

Mr. White said that the state could no longer "escape the necessity" of an improved educational program.

or any other court, our purpose should be, and must be, the highest possible level of educational opportunity for all the children of this state within our ability to pay," the Governor said.

The State of Mississippi, the Governor said has the moral obligation to raise and equalize the level of education for all children in Mississippi regardless of race or color.

When the Joint Session of the Extra-Ordinary Session of the State Legislature was assembled for its opening session in order to hear the message from Governor White at the Lynch Street Colored Methodist Church, a conference of Negro Leaders was being held to crystallize opinion concerning the educational outlook in the state. According to reports some 279 men and women widely know throughout the state in various fields of endeavor, who represented organizations with a combined total of 600,000 members attended the conference.

There was one point on which it became immediately evident that the conferenee was in unanimous agreement, and that was the need for the total and immediate abolition of segregation by law in the state. A sharp difference of opinion arose among the conferees however over the question of whether or not to endorse the proposals made by the Legislative Educational Study Committee and call for their enactment into law by the Extra-Ordinary Session of the state Legislature. Following several hours of debate on both sides of the issue the conference closed with the adoption of the following resolution, and its immediate publication.

Whereas, the Mississippi State Legislature is in Extra-Ordinary Session for the purpose of enacting into law the proposals of the Recess Legislative Education Study Committee, and

Whereas, five cases are now pending before the United States Supreme Court which will decide the issue of segregation in the public school system of the nation;

BE IT RESOLVED, That the Negro Citizens of Mississippi, as represented by the conference of Negro leaders, will endorse the passage of the proposed legislative bills submitted by the Recess Education Study Committee insofar as these bill do not violate the 14th amendment to the Constitution of the United States as interpreted by the U. S. Supreme Court.

JOINT ASSEMBLY OF EXTRA-ORDINARY SESSION OF STATE LEGISLATURE HEAR GOV. WHITE CALL FOR IMMEDIATE ACTION TO EQUALIZE AND RAISE LEVEL OF EDUCATION IN THIS STATE

Solons Urged To Act Without Regard To Decision Of U. S. Supreme Court

Negro Leaders Conference Back Efforts To Raise And Equalize Education While Keeping Eye On Outcome Of Segregation Cases

JACKSON, Miss. Nov. 4 (DSN) — Negro citizens generally throughout the state had the highest praise for the stand taken and the tone and quality of the address of Governor Hugh White delivered Tuesday afternoon to a joint assembly of an Extra-Ordinary Session of the State Legislature called to enact into law a set of proposals made by a Legislative Educational Study Committee to raise the level of and equalize educational opportunities for both the White and Negro children of the state.

The Governor in his message to the joint session of both the House and Senate asked the lawmakers to go farther than just equalizing the Negro and White schools and pull up the entire standard.

Rep. Hilton Waits of Washington County said his ways and means committee was cool towards the suggestion of raising taxes without first slashing general state expenditures.

WAITS' COMMENT came after introduction of bills in the House calling for increases in the state sales taxes from 2 to 3 cents, 1 cent a pack on cigarets and in boosts in oil and gas severance taxes.

Waits said some committee members favored creation of an "economy committee" to study budget recommendations and see if they cannot get some cut down before the budget is presented to the regular session which opens in January, 1954.

Baptist leader says Negroes favor plan

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 6—(AP)—The Rev. H. H. Humes, president of the 378,000-member Negro Baptist Convention, said the majority of the Negro race in the state is backing the proposed school equalization program.

Humes assured Gov. Hugh White yesterday of the support given the bill by the state's Negro population and repudiated a resolution by a group of Negroes who claimed to represent about 75 per cent of Mississippi's Negro population.

THE RESOLUTION adopted Tuesday suggested that while the group favored adoption of the program, it would not be sufficient if the U. S. Supreme Court rules against school separation.

Humes, a Greenville Negro newspaper editor, told the governor the resolution came as no surprise to his people.

"The majority of the Negroes of Mississippi are perfectly in accord with equalization of Negro and white schools in Mississippi and nothing shorter," Humes said.

First School Equalization Bill Passed In Mississippi

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 12 — The House of Representatives fought a see-saw battle today over its first bill to equalize Negro and white schools, then passed the measure 119-0 almost as it was written.

The final passage was a victory for those authors of the program who are tenaciously supporting their bills.

The Senate passed a similar bill yesterday, 42-3, but not before one big change was made by a compromise amendment.

The bill creates a 5-man board of education in each county that will have jurisdiction over all schools except municipal separate school districts.

The Senate yesterday amended the authors' version to provide that each supervisor district will elect its own member within the district.

As the two measures now stand, a joint House-Senate conference will be held to work out this variance.

While the House was catching up by passing the first bill, the Senate opened debate on the No. 2 measure which provides for an education finance commission.

The number two bill is one of the key measures in the program. This commission, if established, would be composed of six members, one from each congressional district and appointed by the governor. A later measure provides that it will have the power to force consolidation of schools indirectly.

The power proposed for the commission will permit it to withhold school building funds from a county that does not clear its consolidation program with the commission.

The bill, House Bill 6, providing for transportation of school children at public expense, was held on a motion to reconsider.

The House, apparently determined to clear the way for other bills, killed a motion to adjourn until action on House Bill 6 had been completed. Then it adjourned until 2 p.m. tomorrow. The bill, hardest to pass so far in the 33-bill school equalization program, was called up by Rep. Sam Johnson, of Tippah County, on a previous motion to reconsider. Johnson successfully amended the bill by removing a section which would have put transportation under the newly created State Educational Finance Commission instead of under the Department of Education, which now governs that phase of education.

Once the bill was on the floor again, the lawmakers lost no time seking furthr amndmnts.

Three passed. Rep. Applebaum inserted a phrase requiring school buses to carry heaters and fire extinguishers.

Mississippi legislators go easy on equalization plans

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 6—(AP)—The Legislature showed signs today of moving cautiously as it ended the first half week of consideration of the state's controversial school equalization program.

Both Houses adjourned yesterday until Tuesday when the finance bills for the multi-million-dollar program will be discussed.

The future of the program, designed to equalize facilities at white and Negro schools, could be welded Wednesday in the meeting of three powerful groups—the House appropriations and the ways and means committees and the Senate finance committee.

A financial policy with regard to the $46-million program will be adopted Wednesday.

THERE WERE rumblings of opposition to the flat tax raises as proposed in the program by its 18-member legislative committee author. But Gov. Hugh White and the drafting committee were still optimistic the program would be adopted in some form.

The governor said in his special session opening address it would be folly to pass the program's equalization features without approving proper financing methods.

Equalization Troubles Flare In Mississippi

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 1 (AP)—Arguments over the school equalization program flared anew today as the House amended an already heavily amended, controversial transportation bill and then passed it, 98-32.

'Private' Schools Move Killed By Senators in Mississippi

Belief Held That Segregation Can Be Handled Despite Ruling

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau Chief, Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 19—This States Rights Democratic stronghold, where tradition prevailed over national party loyalty when race was involved, has refused to set up machinery for abolition of its public schools even in the face of anticipated U.S. Supreme Court banishment of their segregated operation.

The general belief remains that segregation "can be handled" despite a court ruling.

Senate refusal to accept a House-approved resolution for amendement of the constitution of 1890 to authorize the legislature to abolish public schools was not an indication that Mississippi will acquiesce in non-segregation. It merely meant that the lawmakers want to wait and see what the court does on pending cases challenging public school segregation as unconstitutional.

The amendment adopted by the House on three separate days by the required two-thirds vote was offered by House Speaker Walter Sillers as an "answer" to those who he said contend the South will accept non-segregation. Speaker Sillers said adoption of that definite position by the legislature would also "likely influence" the decision of the United States court.

If Ruling Adverse

Although the plan was (in event the amendment had been approved by both branches of the legislature now in special session and ratified by the voters next March) that it would not be used except in event of an adverse court ruling; the resolution contained no such "contingency." It was an outright authorization for the legislature to abolish public schools and vote funds directly to children for attendance in private schools.

Lawmakers who opposed the proposal said it was a "dangerous" authority to vest in them. Some believed that in the heat of a racial controversy, the legislature would be pressured into abolishing public schools and that children of the less fortunate would be unable to gain an education.

Main Senate opposition was led by Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin who said the proposal was "premature." Like other opponents, he said the action would be tantamount to "waving a red flag" in the faces of the Supreme Court justices.

However, Gov. Hugh White, who is against abolition of the public school system, favored the proposal but did not pressure for its adoption. He took the position "it won't hurt to have our house in order" in event of an adverse Supreme court ruling.

Declares Position

A more or less "watered down" version of the Sillers resolution, although not as an amendment to the Constitution, has been offered in the Senate and will likely be called up before anticipated final adjournment of the current session next week. It is merely a declaration of Mississippi's position on segregated public schools.

The compromise points out that the current session was called specifically to consider an over-all equalization program for the dual system, and on that score it will be accomplished, and eliminate grounds for court litigation on the presently admitted disparities. Incidentally, equalization of the dual system as to teacher salaries, transportation, administration and facilities is expected to be assured before adjournment.

However, the important matter of financing that program will be carried over to the 1954 regular biennial assembly which meets Jan. 5. Tax increase bills calling for $17,775,000 more from the sales, oil-gas severance and cigarette levies were offered, but due to shortness of the remaining period before the regular session, will be delayed until then. There is strong opposition to the tax increases, and in order to lessen the impact, the current session created a "budget-revenue" study committee to recommend retrenchments in current expenditures.

In the segregation compromise resolution expected to receive action before final adjournment, two northeast Mississippi senators propose a legislative expression that "separate, but equal, public schools for the races should be forever maintained in this state." They opposed the House amendment.

In Case of Jeopardy

As an offset to the immediate action called for in the House resolution, the compromise states that "immediately upon this system of separate education for the races being placed in actual jeopardy "then" all available means, including the abolition of the public school system if necessary, should be used to preserve the aforesaid system of public education."

Although the overall equalization program before the legislature will assure that on a state-level minimum basis, it still leaves "loop-holes" on the local level for discrimination. Proponents of the plan said the state will have met its equal, but separate, responsibilities in the minimum program and will be safe from court attacks.

Proponents said if the local districts continue inequities through "enrichment" of the white schools above the state-level minimum, that is where legal action will rest. And to comfort themselves that such action would take years before finally adjudicated, they point out that Mississippi has over 2,000 local school districts which would have to be sued separately.

In enriching local schools above the state minimum level, the counties and municipalities would be required to use their own funds raised in addition to those assessed for their part of the Minimum Foundation Plan.

Mississippi Kills Move On School Death Knell

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 15 (AP)—The Mississippi Senate tonight killed by a tie vote the controversial constitutional amendment resolution that would give the legislature power to abolish the state school system if segragation is outlawed.

The 24-24 vote on the resolution meant its death as it lacked a single vote of passing.

Actually, the test was on the vote of the members acting as a committee of the whole but the result was the death of the resolution.

The Mississippi Legislature Gets A "Plan"

It has been estimated to cost eighty million dollars to bring Negro facilities at par with those for the whites.

Thus it will be seen that an outlay of eighty million dollars in the proposed constitutional amendment to abolish the public school system, it is patterned after the Georgia and South Carolina actions. It was introduced by a group of House members, headed by Speaker Walter Sillers, who voted the Eisenhower ticket last year and who said in his "Mississippi's answer to Attorney General Herbert Brownell."

Presentation of the proposed constitutional amendment followed the Attorney General's brief in anti-segregation cases before the United States Supreme Court in which he said the court has the authority and should use it in banning segregation.

Gov. White who does not believe Mississippi will abandon its free public school system, said the proposal "may be a step in getting our house in order" in the event of a decision by the court outlawing segregation, although he does not "believe it is the answer." The governor said he would not oppose the resolution.

In frustration ground the possible action of the courts, Mississippi says her piece to the assembled legislators in special session to "equalize" the racially segregated schools. It has received an alternate plan in event the United States Supreme Court to bring up to the equal rate but eschews the dual system.

The proposal, offered in the form of a minimum equalization plan, is by Governor White and would bring out a constitutional amendment to abolish

Governor Asks Plan to Keep Segregation

JACKSON, Miss. —(ANP) — Admitting that there are inequalities between school facilities for Negro and white pupils, Gov. Hugh White last week formally called for measures to equalize the dual school systems as a means of preserving segregation in the state.

The Mississippi chief executive asked legislators at a special session of the body to prepare an enlightened school program that would erase inequalities.

The legislature and Gov. White are motivated by a desire to maintain segregation in state schools.

Recognizing that any success along that line depends on how well the schools are equalized, Gov. White told the solons that now is the time to do something about it. Among other things, he said:

"Every day, every week, every month that we delay . . . we fall that much further behind our sister states. We add just that much more fuel to the fire which is constantly lapping at the fundamentals we are determined to preserve."

In commenting on pending school cases now before the U. S. Supreme court, he said:

"Regardless of the decision of the U. S. Supreme court, or any other court, our purpose should and must be the highest possible level of educational opportunity for all children . . . within the limit of our resources."

A special 18-man legislative committee has submitted a program for equalizing the schools. Gov. White has indicated his agreement of the program in principle. However, he told legislators he is interested in hearing any suggestions which they might have to offer on the subject.

The governor reminded the legislators it was they who called for the study and created the committee to arrive at a program for improvements in the school system. He told them it would be their program, not his.

Prior to calling the special session, some legislators said they felt no action should be taken until the high tribunal renders a decision on jim-crow in schools.

Gov. White answered these critics by saying the court may not render an absolute decision in the near future.

In order to finance a huge school equalization program, the 18-man committee called for a one cent state sales tax increase to a total three; an increase in oil, and gas severance taxes; a cent-a-pack hike in cigarette taxes, and increase use taxes.

In commenting on the need for a program, the Jackson Daily News, in an editorial said in part:

"As to the main necessity for providing the Negro race with better schools there can be no dissent in the minds of intelligent men.

"The cost will be heavy but it is a price we must pay for continuance of the segregation system.

"Fanciful theories must vanish in the face of plain facts."

Asks Special Session to Pass Appropriations Equalizing Separate Schools With Whites

WOULD PRESERVE SEGREGATION AT ALL COSTS

Gov. White Expects Legislative Action 'Before Christmas'

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 5 (AP)—Mississippi's special legislative session is expected to pass most of the state's extensive program to equalize Negro and white schools.

Lawmakers are attempting to devise a working solution to the segregation problem facing this deep-South state where whites barely outnumber Negroes.

No lawmaker has expressed opposition to the idea behind the program but some argue they ought to wait until the U. S. Supreme Court hands down a decision on the constitutionality of segregation in public schools.

Only a small portion of the 33-bill, multi-million dollar project is aimed specifically at equalizing separate grammar and high school facilities.

Seek to Correct Ills

The majority of the bills seek to correct ills in the school system or to modernize existing laws.

Most of the bills passed in six weeks of floor debates are described by Gov. Hugh White as necessary even if the equalization bills fail to pass.

One exception, however, is Senate Bill 1004 which sets up a program of state aid for the construction of school buildings and authorizes 30 million dollars in state bonds from which the counties could borrow. A smillar House bill still is in the Ways and Means committee.

A move by Rep. Ney Gore Jr., of Quitman County to suspend the rules and remove the bill so that House could consider it, failed by a wide margin.

The only bill passed by both Houses and signed by the governor is House Bill 12 which provides for a uniform system of accounts for the school districts.

Padding Was Target

It was designed to help prevent padding of the rolls, a system whereby some school officials list more children than actually attend to increase their share of state funds which are allocated according to the number of pupils in classes.

Speaker of the House Walter Sillers, who has argued the state should wait for a Supreme Court decision, has helped author a bill to amend the constitution to authorize the legislature to abolish the present school system.

Despite the apparent slowness of the legislature to complete the program, the governor still is optimistic and predicted the lawmakers could pass most of the program and place the bills on his deck before Christmas.

However, he indicated the bills to finance the undertaking probably would be deferred until the regular session which meets in January.

State Will Enact Equalization Plan, Gov. White Says

JACKSON, Miss., Nov. 25 (U.P.) —Gov. Hugh White said today he believes the Mississippi Legislature will enact the entire program to equalize and re-organize the state's white and Negro school systems by the end of next week or, at the latest, by the end of the following week.

"I think the Legislature is moving along fairly well and I believe they will complete the program next week, or at least week after next," White told a press conference.

Both Houses have passed only five of the 33 bills in the program submitted by a recess education committee.

White predicted that the Senate will put transportation back under authority of the State Department of Education. Yesterday, the House passed a bill which would authorize the proposed education finance commission to administer equalization of transportation throughout the state.

The governor also said he believes the Legislature will require local districts to put up a total of only $10,000,000 a year as the local share of the school program. The recess committee proposed that local effort be pegged at $13,000,000 a year to be distributed under an economic index based on ability to pay.

Legislature Speeds WorkOfEqualizing Mississippi Schools

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 3 (AP)— The House Rules Committee late today approved a concurrent resolution setting Dec. 23 at 6 p.m. as the date for final adjournment of the special legislative session.

Neither house voted on the resolution.

The Senate passed five bills in an effort to complete the program to equalize Negro and white education.

The Senate changed one bill to admit children to school in the fall if they will be six years old by the following Jan. 1. Presently, a child must be six by Dec. 1 to be admitted to the fall term.

The House passed bill 14, setting out the method of creating school districts in the proposed realignment of districts, and then adjourned until 2 p.m. Monday. The Senate adjourned after a one-hour session.

Sen. Stennis (D-Miss) told a morning joint session of the legislature that Mississippi's program to equalize education "would be an effective answer to the paper recently filed by Atty. Gen. Brownell."

The senator blasted Brownell's anti-segregation brief to the U.S. Supreme Court as a "political paper of the rankest type and totally unworthy of an administration which campaigned, especially in the South, with a strong appeal to the principles of states rights."

The U.S. Supreme Court will pay more attention, he said, to what states like Mississippi do in an affirmative way to answer the problem of segregation "than by what a political brief merely says."

Mississippi Roundup—

Senator Warns Of Seareqation Outlaw

McCOMB, Miss., Dec. 2 (U.P.) — Sen. James O. Eastland warned today there is a "grave danger" of the U. S. Supreme Court abolishing segregation and predicted if the court does so all Southern states will abolish public school systems.

Eastland's statement came as the Mississippi Legislature considered a proposed constitutional amendment to permit the state to support a system of private education in place of the present public system.

"If the Supreme Court should declare that segregated schools violate the 14th Amendment to the Constitution, then to abolish our government school system is all the law can do," Eastland told the McComb Rotary Club. "This would be the wise step and of course all Southern states will take it."

Eastland asserted that no one "can force inter-racial schools on Southern people."

Eastland charged that Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell Jr., was "insincere" in filing a brief to the court that it has the authority to abolish segregation.

He said Brownell lives in a non-segregated school area and sends his children to a private segregated school.

Then Eastland turned on the Supreme Court itself.

"It appears that we are in danger of another political decision by our Supreme Court, which after all in my judgment, is the weakest court in the land and the lowest in public confidence and esteem," Eastland said.

Non-Controversial Bills Pass Senate In Stalling Effort

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 2 (U.P.)— Four non - controversial bills gained approval in the Senate today as the special session moved slowly forward with Mississippi plan to keep its public school segregated.

Minor opposition was swept aside by the Upper House as it tackle dnine bills on today's calendar and almost bogged down on one.

Considered most significent of a long morning session was a favorable report of the Education Committee on the local cost bill that will break down the price of maintaining racial segregation on a city and county basis.

But the Education Committee's endorsement did not put the measure on the calendar for possible debate tomorrow. Instead the committee handed the bill to the Finance Committee for its recommendations.

Brief objections were made to the first measure that hit the floor this morning. It was a bill that will regulate the meetings of the county boards of education that will administer the program.

A vote of 41 to 5 endorsed a measure that will regulate the purchase of school transportation equipment. A bill that prescribes the duties of the county superintendent of education passed 41-2.

A detailed six-page bill prescribing methods of selecting teachers and paying the salaries of superintendents, teachers and

Private school system bill passed by Mississippi House

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 3—(AP)— A Mississippi lawmaker says he will "gladly give up my property and my life if necessary to preserve the integrity of segregation. But it isn't necessary; we can do it by law."

The statement was made yesterday by Speaker of the House Walter Sillers as the House approved by a 92-35 vote a resolution to abolish public schools and set up a private school system if the U. S. Supreme Court outlaws racial segregation.

"We have the principle before us," he said, "to see to it the white race shall not be mongrelized."

The public school system could be eliminated and a private school plan substituted if it is not under a state law, Sillers declared, adding the 14th Amendment would be violated only if "it is under a state law."

The House is expected to pass the resolution, a constitutional amendment, today for the second time. It must be read and passed three times on different days. The Senate will follow the same procedure.

THE MEASURE authorizes the Legislature, now in special session to consider a $45 million program to equalize facilities in white and Negro schools, to abolish the public school system, sell the school properties and appropriate public funds to "assist children of educable age to secure an education."

By amendment the date of the proposed amendment would be submitted for a vote was set as March 30, 1954, at which time the Legislature will be in regular session.

Sillers said the situation facing Mississippi was as serious as any since reconstruction days shortly after the Civil War.

Sillers said if a non-segregated system of schools were established the white race would be mongrelized.

The 14th Amendment provides that no citizen shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law.

SILLERS EXPLAINED that according to his plan the Legislature could make appropriations to aid the children by allocating money equally to every child.

He emphasized that the resolution, if enacted into the constitution, would be used only as a last resort and only if necessary.

Rep. E. K. Windham of Prentiss County led the opposition to the proposed measure. He said the Negro doesn't want integrated schools, added that the Negro wants racial barriers as much as the whites.

He added that it was his opinion that the Supreme Court would rule against segregation on the basis of the U. S. Constitution.

Rep. Joel Blass of Stone County argued that the resolution does not guarantee the state's children an education.

State of Missouri Could Save $6,000,000 A Year If It Integrated Its Public Schools

The state of Missouri could save $6,000,000 a year if it integrated its public elementary and high schools. Over a five-year period, this would amount to 30 million dollars.

This was the finding of a study recently completed by the Missouri Association for Social Welfare.

Dr. Stuart A. Queen, president of the association and chairman of the department of sociology and anthropology at Washington university in St. Louis, told of the study at the annual meeting of the Urban League on March 5 at Bernheimer Hall, 3201 Flora Ave.

Dr. Queen said that the study to determine the costs of segregation was organized around three questions:

(1) Are educational facilities in Missouri equal for Negroes and for whites?

(2) If not equal, what are the probable costs of making them approximately equal under segregation.?

(3) What are the possibilities and probable costs of an integrated school system, segregation being abolished?

The actual work of the study was done by Mary Faith Pellett and Vernon Pohlmann, graduate students in sociology and anthropology at Washington U.

"Since time and funds, "he said, "did not permit an examination of schools throughout the state, four areas were selected for careful study: St. Louis cit., Hannibal and the surrounding area, Columbia and Boone county, Popular Bluff and its environs.

Mr. Pohlmann visited schools and consulted with school authorities in the Hannibal, Columbia and Popular Bluff areas. Miss Pellett reviewed and analyzed data made available by the St. Louis board of education, studying in detail 13 public elementary schools, 7 Negro and 6 white. The study required five months and much burning of "midnight oil," Dr. Queen said.

In St. Louis, it was found that 88 per cent of the rooms in Negro schools were crowded as compared with 28 per cent of rooms for white children.

At the Washington Technical high school for Negroes, there is an average of 36 pupils per room while at the Hadley Tech for whites, the per-room average is 16.

The relative cost, he said, of bringing Washington Tech up to the standard of Hadley would be approximately six million dollars because a new technical high school would have to be built. He said that conditions at Washington "are scandalous" and that it was never built for a technical high school in the first place.

To bring the Negro schools up to the standard of the white schools, if "separate but equal" theory were to be followed, Dr. Queen said that in St. Louis it would cost $650,000 a year and in the outstate district $100,000. "For the state as a whole, it would probably cost $750,000 per year (not including Kansas City) to bring about approximate equality in the public and elementary and high schools. In addition, there would be capital outlays which would require the expenditure of $10,750,000 in St. Louis, $7,000,000 outstate and an unestimated amount for Kansas City.

Dr. Queen said that a study of Kansas City and St. Joseph is comtemplated for next summer.

He said that very likely "the total capital outlay needed to make Negro elementary, high and technical high schools "equal but separate" would run over $20,000,000 for the state as a whole."

Speaking on the third point—that of the cost of an integrated school system—Dr. Queen said that "From very careful study of the existing school facilities, location of pupils' homes and costs of operation, it is believed that the data included in the main body and the appendices of the report demonstrate that in the school year 1951-52, it would have been possible to provide for all children then enrolled in public elementary schools in an intregated system using the existing facilities.

"The data further demonstrates that integration could have been carried out without additional cost in St. Louis and with a probable saving of $1,150,000 a year outstate. There would be no immediate savings in capital expenditures in St. Louis but over a period of years there might be considerable economy. Outstate, the saving in capital outlays is estimated at $675,000."

"Most important of all," Dr. Queen added, "an integrated school system would bring improvement in educational opportunities and facilities to Negroes at no additional cost and with probable saving to the taxpayer."

Dr. Queen said that "if Missouri is to meet its legal obligation to provide equal educational opportunities for all its children, it could do this less expensively through integration than through further efforts toward "equal but separate" schools. In fact the difference in cost might run to $2,000,000 a year and involve capital outlays of $20,000,000 within a short time."

Miss. Solons Eye School Equalization

JACKSON, Miss., June 9—(AP)—The Mississippi legislature will be called into extraordinary session Sept. 15 or shortly thereafter to take up the proposed equalization program for Negro and white schools, Gov. Hugh White announced tonight.

The governor said, "I have promised the teachers that I will act, and I am going to recommend that the legislative education study committee plan be enacted into law."

White said if Mississippi goes ahead with the equalization program, "possibly by the time it is done we will have a U. S. Supreme Court decision on segregation."

Yesterday the court announced it was unable to decide the five school segregation cases before it and called for more argument next October.

The governor had held off calling a special session hoping the high court would act on the question of segregation in common schools to assure the state that its equalization program would not be a waste of time.

Lincoln U. Prof. Discusses Integration And Probable Effect on Negro Teachers

THE CALL received the following letter this week from Oliver C. Cox, professor in the department of sociology at Lincoln university.

Editor, The Call:

The problem of the abolition of segregation in the public schools and colleges of Missouri is now being debated in the legislature of the state; and, naturally, all the people of this commonwealth are concerned about the outcome. Although there are many white individuals and organizations supporting integration, Negroes must necessarily be at the forefront of the movement.

Of major importance, then, is the kind of attitude and approach which we take in confronting the racially discriminating opposition. The white advocates of integration have relied upon two principal arguments: (a) that its economy and waste are incurred in the bi-racial system hence monetary savings may be derived from integration; and (b) that there is no moral justification for racial segregation in the schools.

On the other hand, Negroes have argued correctly not only that their self-respect as American citizens has been seriously injured but also that their right to participate freely in the acquisition of the culture has been illegally abridged. Thus far, we may assume, Negroes are agreed.

There is, however, an associated question of the consequences of integration. Recently, at the hearings in the legislature, two of these were predicted. "If segregation were abolished," some legislators are reported to have said in effect, "all the colored teachers now employed in the Missouri public school system will have to be discharged from their positions, and Lincoln university may be closed as an economy measure."

To some Negro spokesmen present at the hearings this eventuality seemed relatively so trivial that it was almost welcomed. We do not think that either of these results will follow thus simply, nevertheless we should like to examine the soundness of this attitude of Negro leadership.

At first glance, it may appear that here are some selfless champions of "democracy," whose own employment and that of others are as nothing compared to the chances of achieving integration. And yet, this is perhaps a very simplistic interpretation of democracy. Freedom to work is at least as sacred a right as the opportunity to integrate.

Indeed, education itself will have a decreasing significance and value if the occasion to employ it is increasingly truncated. As a thoughtless reaction one might say that Negro teachers should prefer to "dig ditches" rather than endure the disadvantages of segregated schools. However, this writer has seen, in Chicago in the early thirties, Negro men fighting to the death for an opportunity to work as laborers on pavement jobs. We need not multiply examples here of the daily struggle of Negroes to secure their right to work. Moreover, the confidence which some individuals have triumphantly expressed that they, personally, can always find another job is irrelevant, for the problem is not personal but social.

The answer to persons who offer Negroes the evil of unemployment as the price of abolishing discrimination in education seems clear: the bargain is unacceptable. If, on integrating the elementary schools, plant and teaching staff become plethoric, both Negro and white teachers should be released on some non-discriminatory basis such as length of service or academic qualifications.

To discharge only Negro teachers is to resort to a most unconscionable act of racial discrimination. Such a course will not only shatter the life organization of many families but also further darken the prospects of every Negro youth now planning a career of teaching in the public schools. When the educational system is integrated, Negroes should, in ordinary fairness, expect the concomitant adoption of a non-discriminatory policy of employment.

The time for abolishing segregation in the educational system of Missouri is already overdue; it should not now be carried out so recklessly as to result in unnecessary economic and educational hardships. Far from being a barrier to integration, an insistence that provisions be made for the employment of Negro teachers is in fact an indispensable test of the sincerity of the integration procedure.

Attitudes toward Lincoln university are more complex. Theoretically, even the University of Missouri may be closed as an economy measure, because there are great universities only a few hours away in Illinois. The University of Missouri will not be closed, however, because there are factors other than economic to be taken into consideration.

And so, too, there are significant factors other than economic to be considered when the question of closing Lincoln is broached. In a non-segregated school system it can be shown that many expansive forces may come into play may find themselves taking one step forward and two backward all in the declared interest of "democracy."

Education Fight Has Just Begun

By HOWARD B. WOODS
(Argus City Editor)

NEW ORLEANS, La.—A new frontal assault on segregation involving transportation on all U. S. Railroads will be launched shortly, it was declared here last Saturday by Thurgood Marshall, NAACP special counsel, in an address before the National Newspaper Publishers Association.

Marshall said also that law suits would be filed attacking segregation in southern railway and airline waiting rooms.

The celebrated lawyer, onetime winner of the coveted Spingarn Medal, also warned that additional funds more funds are to further the fight against unequal education facilities in the country.

MARSHALL

Regardless of the outcome of the U. S. Supreme Court decision in the education suits now under study by that body, Marshall said funds will be needed.

He pointed out that even if the court ruled against the traditional laws of the south, "the fight will only begin."

"We must be prepared to go into each county and each district, if necessary to smash segregation at its roots."

Commenting on the whole question of racial discrimination and segregation, Marshall said that there are "too many leaders who rationalize segregation," adding that the man in the street knows the situation. He said only in Oklahoma were Negroes taking advantage of the gains made through Court decisions.

As Marshall spoke here, Congressman Adam Clayton Powell (N. Y. Dem.) and Congressman William L. Dawson (Ill., Dem.) introduced bills in the House which would abolish segregation in interstate travel.

The bill has been given support by the Washington bureau of the NAACP.

Rep. Powell appeared before the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee last week and declared that despite numerous Supreme Court decisions, travel for Negroes on bus, railway, boat and airplane, "continues to be a physical and mental hazard for colored people in certain states."

He warned that Negroes who refused to be jimcrowed in public transportation will continue to meet physical violence or arrest in certain sections of this country until Congress exercises its right to require fair treatment for all persons in interstate travel.

Powell pointed out that not only does it happen to colored people of this country, but to visiting dignitaries as well.

NAACP

'Immediate' Suit Urged On Schools

A motion to "immediately" file suit against the St. Louis Board of Education on the question of segregated schools was unanimously passed by the St. Louis NAACP branch at its regular meeting Monday night.

The action was taken upon the recommendation of the report of the branch's executive committee.

A discussion centered around the motion with members declaring an impatience in the action of the planned legal proceedings on the school issue.

There was also prolonged discussion on a proposal to have a sum of money transferred from is held as a separate fund for the maintenance and operation of the branch office and the establishing of the 1953 membership campaign.

Following discussion, the branch voted, also on the executive committee's recommendation, to loan the association $500 for that purpose to be repaid by March 15.

The Educational Defense Fund is held as a separate fund for the purpose of carrying on the NAACP's work against segregated schools.

Several organizations have contributed monies for the fund's maintenance, including the Citizen's Protest Committee, which sponsored the Josephine Baker benefit last February. Miss Baker donated her services as a result of a specific invitation to help the school problem here. The profits of the Baker affair were turned over to the NAACP's Education Fund for that specific use. When presented, Harvey Parham, then president, promised the money would be used "for the purpose for which it was raised; fighting segregation in the St. Louis Public School System."

Mrs. Olivia Calloway was named chairman of this year's membership drive.

Integration Is Working In New Jersey Schools

By MARION THOMPSON WRIGHT

TRENTON, N. J.—Integrative practices had a slow beginning in Atlantic City until Dr. John Milligan assumed the superintendency.

In the three all-colored schools, the pupils remained through the eighth grade whereas all other children were transferred to the Central Junior High School at the end of the sixth grade.

Atlantic City, contrary to most larger cities, has an interesting policy. Parents are permitted to send their children to any school which pleases them. The NAACP conducted a campaign to encourage Negro parents to send their children to the schools in the districts in which they lived and to the junior high school.

Dr. Milligan took several steps toward greater unification. In the first place, he transferred all seventh and eighth-grade pupils in the colored schools to the junior high school.

Consequently, colored pupils are approximately one-third of the total enrollment, while colored teachers constitute about one-fourth of the teaching staff. There are five Negroes teaching in the senior high school.

DR. MILLIGAN also placed colored teachers in the predominantly white schools, including one in the "silk stocking" district and sent white teachers to the colored schools. The latter buildings will undoubtedly remain unmixed as to pupils as long as Atlantic City continues its policy of no fixed boundaries for its schools.

In considering new appointees, Dr. Milligan questions the applicants concerning their attitudes on race. In this way he hopes to secure persons who will promote appreciation for all persons without regard to color.

This superintendent has recently be selected to succeed the late Joseph Bustard as director of the DAD. He will be able to carry out his philosophy on race relations in the schools over a larger field.

ONE OF the least desirable educational situations for Negroes is about to be improved. Out in the woods in East Berlin, in Camden County, was a two-room school for colored children. Two pot-bellied stoves furnished heat.

No audio-visual aids were available to the two teachers attempting to instruct fifty-four pupils distributed from the pre-primary through the sixth grades.

In the room used by the upper grades were fixed chairs. Water had to be pumped in from outside. The outside lavatories were without doors and had no protection from rain. Soap and towels were provided for the first time during the past year.

The persistent prodding of the DAD has resulted in plans to abandon this most undesirable structure and provide for the accommodations of the pupils in the regular buildings after some much-needed construction and repair work have been completed.

IMPROVED CURRICULA are also available where prior de-segregation Negro pupils were deprived of educational offerings which were part of the regular program of study of the other schools.

For example, colored children in Princeton were not permitted to attend the high school until after they had completed the ninth grade. Parents objected to this because Latin was not taught in the eighth grade of the colored school as it was in the junior high school.

This arrangement also deprived the boys of instruction in shop work. Children attending the New Lincoln Junior High School in Trenton were unable to pursue a commercial course of study.

OF PRIME importance is the increase in Negro personnel which has accompanied the transition in New Jersey.

Negro teachers are being appointed in greater numbers to the secondary schools. For the first time qualified teachers are on the secondarly level as regular staff members in Newark, Princeton, Camden, Salem, Woodstown and Atlantic City.

Of course, in Trenton they taught in the segregated junior high school. The Division Review of the DAD for September, 1952, revealed that in 1945-46, in nine counties that maintained segregated schools, 395 Negro teachers were employed in the elementary and twenty in the secondary schools, making a total of 415.

By June, 1952, there were 391 elementary and thirty-four secondary Negro teachers, or a total of 425 in these same counties. In several instances, teachers who had been instructing on the elementary were elevated to the secondary level.

Provocative is the fact that the placement of Negro teachers in the elementary schools of New Jersey as a whole increased 27.9 per cent in six years. In 1945-46 there were 455 elementary teachers, whereas in June, 1952, there were 582.

A TOTAL of twenty-four secondary teachers in 1945-46 increased to sixty-three for the year, 1951-52. For both levels there was an increase of 34.8 per cent.

Whereas in 1945-46 there were 479 Negro teachers in the public schools, in June, 1952, there were 645 teachers. Additional colored staff members were appointed at the beginning of the school year, 1952-53, and others are being placed for the current year.

Negro principals are serving with mixed staffs in several districts including Trenton, Ewing Township, Princeton, Asbury Park, Long Branch, Burlington, Salem, Atlantic City and Camden. In some communities such as Princeton and Long Branch their staffs are predominantly white.

Several municipalities have for the first time appointed or elected colored citizens to their educational policy-making bodies. In Atlantic City, Dr. Stanley Lucas, a member of several years standing, was elected to the presidency of the Board of Education in that city. Mention has already been made of the appointment of Dr. Parker to the State Board of Education.

A VITAL area in which integration is progressing nicely is that of the Parent-Teacher Associations. Prior to 1948, segregated units accompanied separate schools. After unification began, consolidated groups took the place of the former distinct associations based on race.

Negroes not only have participated in but have served on the executive and other committees in communities such as Moorestown, Woodstown, Freehold, Beverly and Princeton. Colored parents have been elevated to the presidency of their associations in Burlington and Camden. In the borough of West Cape May, the P-TA there endorsed integration of pupils by a resolution.

School officials used various methods for mixing their pupils. A number used no particular scheme. Some placed all colored teachers in a certain grade.

Others put the names of all pupils in a hat and assigned them by chance. Moorestown asked for a year to educate its citizens for the change. The systems which used special procedures abandoned them after a year or so.

VERY IMPORTANT is the fact that regardless of how the transition was made, riots or other forms of violence did not occur. Today, integration is progressing smoothly. Credit for the success of this progress toward the democratizing of the state's school systems goes primarily to those teachers whose dedication to the ideals of the profession enabled them to develop classroom atmospheres which promoted harmonious inter-group relations. Also included are those parents and other citizens who assisted rather than hindered their children in making adjustments to new designs in human relations.

In several communities greater equalization of opportunities in education were accompanied by improvements in other areas. For example, in Salem the YMCA and all the teams representing that body are integrated. Until school segregation was abolished, Penns Grove had a separate YMCA.

When school teams used the YMCA baseball field, they were not allowed to use the locker rooms if there were colored players on the team. Not only has this rule been reversed, but the YMCA now accepts colored memberships.

In addition, Penns Grove appointed a Negro policeman who has the same status as the other officers. Colored ministers were invited for the first time to participate in the high-school exercises.

THE DATA presented in this story offers convincing evidence that integration can work.

The facts have demonstrated this to be true even in those municipalities that raised some opposition to the change. The data gives little support to the gradualists who argue for a transition spread over several years.

In addressing the Conference on the Courts and Racial Integration in Education at Howard University in April, 1952, Commissioner Bustard said, "While New Jersey cannot furnish any one formula, it can testify that complete integration in the public schools can and will work.

"It may even be safe to say once more, that the way to learn to do a thing is to do it, and in this respect, New Jersey has proven again that the best way to integrate is to do it."

Integration Is Working In New Jersey Schools!

By MARION T. WRIGHT

TRENTON, N. J.—In 1945, the Trenton Committee for Unity successfully led a campaign to de-segregate the New Lincoln Junior High School.

IN 1945, the Trenton Committee for Unity successfully led a campaign to de-segregate the New Lincoln Junior High School.

This modern, well-equipped edifice was used to house an elementary school and practically every Negro pupil attending the junior high grades. The success in Trenton led to similar action in Asbury Park. Here followed the abandonment of a practice that placed colored and white pupils in separate wings of a building joined by a common auditorium. A wire fence had separated the children while at play.

In line with an increasingly intensive campaign against segregation in education, the NAACP met with increased success in its efforts. In cities such as Atlantic City and Camden, the organization encouraged parents to send their children to the schools in the districts in which they lived.

Several law suits had upheld the rights of parents to be protected against having their children excluded from a public school because of color. In September, 1947, following the lead of the NAACP, the parents left the Liberty Street School in Long Branch with just about half its regular enrollment and the school at Fair Haven with three pupils.

The school officials of Fair Haven in anticipation of such a move had decided to accept the former pupils and teachers of the Fisk Street School into the regular schools. However, they made no public notice of this decision.

ON THE other hand, a heated conflict ensued in Long Branch. The angry determination of the white and colored parents led to a capitulation of the Board of Education and the abandonment of segregation in that municipality.

It was in November, 1947, that the most decisive blow was struck against discrimination in the schools of this commonwealth.

The new constitution declared there should be no segregation in the schools and the national guard. Gov. Alfred Driscoll and State Commissioner John Bosshart requested the Division Against Discrimination to desegregate the schools in accordance with this constitutional mandate.

Under the determined, but tactful leadership of the late Commissioner Joseph L. Bustard and Assistant Director Harold A. Lett, the process of abolishing separate schools was begun.

THROUGH A questionnaire sent to county Board of Education in February, 1948, to determine the status of segregation in the schools, it was revealed that separate schools existed in fifty-two school districts.

In nine of these districts, this condition was due to residential restriction, leaving forty-three areas where discrimination existed through official edict.

In calling attention to the requirement of the new constitution, Commissioner Bustard suggested that many school systems could undoubtedly move toward integration by the beginning of the school year, 1948-'49.

In September, 1948, it was revealed that thirty of the forty-three districts had taken steps to unify their schools. Through patient consultations all except four of the remaining districts made plans to comply with the law.

MOUNT HOLLY challenged the Division Against Discrimination to enforce compliance.

The colored parents of Mount Holly defied the school board by refusing to send their children to the colored school. In the face of this show of determination, the board yielded, and in doing so ended segregation in this community.

As a consequence of this development the other three recalcitrants began to submit plans for transforming the patterns of their schools.

In 1952, the Division Against Discrimination and the writer made visits to schools in the ten counties most affected by the changes. These visits demonstrated that integregation is working in New Jersey. By October, 1952, four years had passed since the majority of the school districts had begun the process of integrating their schools.

THERE WAS a keen desire to see these systems in operation within the newer frame of reference. The DAD conducted revisitations in the spring while in Ocober the writer went on a tour in the ten counties where segregated schools had previously existed. What was seen on those trips was most encouraging.

MOST SIGNIFICANT of all were the repeated statements by school officials that the expected had not happened.

In some communities there had been dire predictions of riots or other forms of violence if the races were mixed in the schools. Various municipalities used different procedures in the unification of their districts, but in all of them the overall results were the same.

The general ease with which the transitions were made did not mean, of course, there were no occasions of unpleasantness. Teachers and pupils were transferred to strange buildings with new principals.

The natural tendency to wish to remain in the schools to which were attached strong sentimental feelings served to inhibit many of these teachers and pupils from welcoming the changes brought about in several communities. Some white children or their parents objected to attending the formerly all colored school.

Others experienced misgivings regarding the Negro principal or Negro teachers. Colored parents and children looked askance at white school personnel. But once the changes were made and the initial misgivings were resolved through associations that dissipated feelings of fear or softened emotions of hostility, teachers and pupils settled down to the real business of education.

SOME WHITE parents, though, withdrew their children and sent them to private schools.

However, only nine children were withdrawn from the schools in Princeton, where many excellent private schools are available. By the end of the year five of these pupils had returned to the public schools.

In Burlington, the president of a P-TA withdrew her two children when a colored teacher was sent to her "silk stocking" building.

Interestingly enough her husband did not share her feelings in this matter. At the beginning of the next year, the mother asked what steps could be taken to return her children to the school.

THE PRINCIPAL assured her the school was there to serve her children and they were free to avail themselves of that service whenever they wished.

The colored teacher made such a good impression that she paved the way for a second such appointment.

This story was repeated in other school districts throughout the southern portion of the state. In Atlantic City one father did not know his son had a colored teacher until he was so informed by the principal.

In Princeton, one parents who objected to his daughter being taught by a colored teacher returned the following June to ask that his son be assigned to the same teacher for the following year.

When a parent in another community strenuously objected to his child being taught by a Negro teacher, the school official suggested that the parent allow the child to remain in the teacher's room for a trial period. Nothing more was heard from that parent.

Dr. Howe of Burlington said that his own children spoke highly of the colored teacher and that many children had come to love their colored instructors. In Egg Harbor whereas one parent objected to a Negro teacher, several others asked that their cehildren be taught by Mrs. Green.

DAY, WITH a faculty pupil enrollment in which ratio of the white group n a sixty to forty basis, e is a smoothly running ganization under the ad- ministration of the Negro principal and the white vice principal.

Liberty Street School in Long Branch was depopulated by approximately 50 per cent when a large number of the pupils enrolled in schools in the districts in which they lived.

A few days later the board of education changed the boundary lines in such a way as to return 90 per cent of the colored children and to transfer thirty-five white children to the original all-colored school.

THE WHITE parents joined the Negroes in an angry demonstration before the board against this move.

The officials reversing themselves informed the parents that they were free to send their children to the buildings to which they had taken them on the opening day of the term.

Now, with 225 pupils, one third of whom are colored, Mr. Waxwood, the Negro principal, carries on learning activities in a much improved physical plant with modern furnishings.

Five white and two colored teachers constituted the remaining staff. It was reported that the superintendent, who is interested in carrying out the spirit of the law, plans a redistricting which will bring even more white children into the building.

UP TO OCTOBER, 1952, no person had been appointed to the secondary level. A very personable young man who had brought much prestige to Long Branch as an athlete was considered but an offer of a position from Pepsi-Cola paying $5,000 removed him from the picture.

The citizens of Cinnaminson protested strongly against ending segregation. After June, 1948, when the board decided to close the separate school, pressure was put upon Negro citizens to resist the change.

They were asked, among other questions, what would become of the several hundred dollars in the P-TA treasury.

DURING THE summer of 1948, a delegation of Negro parents including some of the officers of the P-TA appeared before the board and succeeded in having that body to rescind its previous action. The DAD remonstrated with the school officers. Consequently in the spring of 1949, the board voted definitely to end segregation.

The former all-colored building is now used to house the kindergarten-primary grades while the former white school accommodates grades three through eight. Of the six colored teachers, three are in each building. One who left the system was replaced by another Negro.

Before integration there were two P-TA's. Since 1949 Negro parents have served on the executive committee of the consolidated group. Negroes serve as room mothers and attend all the social functions given by that organization.

Mount Holly School officials openly defied the desegregation orders and challenged the DAD to withhold state aid. In 1950 when the boycott of the colored school compelled the board to change its position, the superintendent "was amazed" at the general acceptance manifested by the white citizens. Only about two white persons objected "openly and strenuously."

SINCE THE white buildings were already staffed, the two Negro teachers were given roving assignments. In the following year, when vacancies occurred, both teachers were placed in regular classes.

When Superintendent Howe of the city of Burlington acted to carry out the constitutional mandate, there were members of the board of education who wondered why he was in such haste in view of the resistance which had appeared in Cinnaminson and Mount Holly in the same county.

Nevertheless, Dr. Howe succeeded in obtaining the permission of the body to proceed in accordance with the law. He had placed several alternatives before it but had recommended that since eventually integration had to take place, that they go ahead and do it at once. The members agreed as a board but objected individually in some instances.

TODAY, FIVE elementary schools are completely integrated with respect to teachers and pupils. The first new teacher appointed after the change was a Negro.

Last year, another such teacher was selected. Dr. Howe says others will be brought into the secondary schools as qualified persons are located.

Gloucester County was the only one of the twenty-one counties which voted against the adoption of the new constitution. Progress toward more democratic practices has been slower here than elsewhere in the state.

The DAD is continuing to work with the school districts in efforts to bring them more closely in line with the new policy. Colored children are in attendance at formerly all white schools. In 1948 the commission on the urban colored population succeeded in securing permission for Negro students to live in the dormitories at the State Teachers College at Glassboro from which they had been previously barred.

Sitting in on the commencement exercises for 1953 was Dr. James Parker, the Negro physician of Red Bank and Howard University trustee, whom Governor Alfred Driscoll had appointed to the state board of education the previous summer.

THE MOST complete integration jobs took place in those districts where children were assigned to schools according to grade level.

Included among such systems are Princeton Borough, Cinnaminson, Burlington, Salem, Swedesboro, Ewing Township, Mount Laurel and Bordentown. This practice provided for a thorough mixing of pupils since the schools they were to attend depended upon grade assignments rather than residential location.

The desegregation processes operating in New Jersey has certainly resulted in improved educational opportunities for both white and colored children. The regular schools in most instances were more or less modern structures with graded instruction and including acceptable or superior teaching equipment.

ON THE OTHER hand, the colored children were housed in one, two, three or four room buildings, often with little in the way of audio-visual aids and with outside lavatories.

Especially were these conditions found in the more rural areas of the state. Integrative activities brought most of these children into the more modern schools. Since it has long been an accepted principle in education that graded instruction is superior to ungraded teaching, this is in itself a gain of real importance.

One or two teachers responsible for six or eight grades cannot be expected to do the the educational job possible in teaching learning situations with one or more teachers for each grade.

In Mannington Township in Salem County, both white and colored pupils benefited from the change. Substituted for two-room and seven one-room houses is a beautiful one story consolidated school on twelve acres of ground. The equipment is most modern and very colorful.

UNDER THE leadership of Thomas Childrey, a young, sincere and alert principal, eleven instructors, five of whom are colored, engaged in a real job of education.

The first move toward unification was to bring Miss Anderson from one of the original schools to the eighth grade. She feared that the pupils would refuse to accept her but in three days she had established complete rapport with them and the other teachers. Many of her former pupils now return to visit her.

A member lost his place on the board because of his opposition to integration. He did not see how it would work. He is now back on that body. Serving also on this board is a Negro.

IN THE city of Salem, Negroes constitute approximately one-third of the population. Prior to 1948 during auditorium periods, colored children sat in the rear of the room.

For commencement services they were placed at the end of the line of march. Neither of these practices holds today. This is also one of the cities where a Negro is teaching in the high school.

This is also the community where in 1946 a representative of the DAD was told by a person friendly to integration that it could not possibly happen in a town like Salem for at least twenty or thirty years. Commissioner Bustard reported that the school authorities in Salem felt that the job was done smoothly and are now willing to hire teachers on the basis of merit regardless of race.

N.J. schools held model

Integrated system lauded by Milligan

ATLANTIC CITY—This city's integrated school system was recommended as a model for other cities by Dr. John P. Milligan, local superintendent, in a speech in St. Louis recently.

Dr. Milligan was invited to address a human relations workshop at Washington University in St. Louis.

He was asked by one of the participants how he would plan to train teachers for an integrated school system.

Attendance Here Urged

Mr. Milligan, in reply, recommended that normal school students attend the schools here "where all races and creeds learn together."

He told the Missourians that the local school system has derived many benefits from integration of students of all races.

Answering another question, Dr. Milligan told the human relations study group that no problem has arisen in the local school system as a result of a colored teachers authority over white children.

Benefits Taxpayers

Emphasizing how school integration saves the taxpayers money, the local superintendent pointed out to the Missourians that only one instead of two high schools, two junior high schools and two vocational schools are now needed here.

Speaking on local redistricting for junior high schools, Mr. Milligan told his St. Louis audience that plans were made on the basis of the capacity of the buildings.

Church Women Hit Bias In Public Schools

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J. (NNPA) — The sixth national Assembly of United Church Women of the National Council of Churches, representing an estimated ten million Protestant churchgoers in this country, last Thursday called for the end of racial segregation in the public schools.

PENDING SCHOOL CASES

The resolution was presented in an amended form by Mrs. W. Elmo Walker, of Sandston, Virginia, at the closing session of the group's four-day assembly at Convention Hall.

The original resolution merely urged the delegates to acquaint their constituents with the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the five pending school segregation cases, whatever it may be. But Mrs. Walker offered her amendment calling for an end to segregated schools.

The amended resolution was finally passed over the opposition of several women who cautioned against "confusing" the issue before the Supreme Court rendered its decision.

EXECUTIVE SECRETARY

"I'm sure there isn't a woman in this room who does not long for the end of segregation" declared Mrs. Norman Vincent Peale, wife of the minister of Marble Collegiate Church Reformed, during the debate on the resolution.

Miss Thelma Stevens of New York, executive secretary of the Christian Social Relations Department of the Women's Division of Christian Service of the Methodist Church, described consideration of the coming court decision as a "clarion call to Christian women to do our job."

"If we go on record against segregation in the schools," said Mrs Harper Sibley, of Rochester, New United Church Women, "we should also go on record against segregation in the churches."

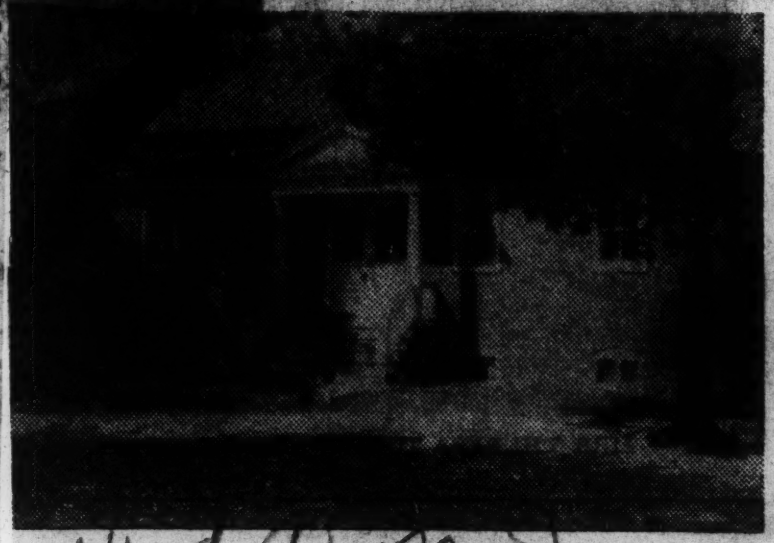
Integration Is Working in New Jersey Schools!



These all-Negro schools in New Jersey were closed by state.

By MARION T. WRIGHT

(First in a Series of Two Articles)

TRENTON, N. J.—New Jersey has long been a pivotal state socially as well as politically. With the northern tip adjacent to New York while the souhern sections, are continguous to Pennsylvania and Delaware and on a line with Maryland and Virginia, this commonwealth has been the backdrop for varied patterns of social living.

In the northern portion, there has been a tendency to follow the social practices dominant in New York, while in the southern areas, the customs were more nearly like those of the continguous areas.

This general pattern exemplified itself equally as strong in the educational field. New Jersey has always had mixed and separate schools.

IN THE eighteenth century, some Negroes were attending schools with white children. This was also true in the two subsequent centuries. In the beginning the Society of Friends provided most of the opportunities for securing the rudiments of learning.

In 1788, this religious body succeeded in getting through the legislature an act requiring masters to provide instruction in reading to their slaves and servants under 21 years of age.

Through the efforts of other religious and civic groups, additional colored children and adults were instructed in the common branches.

Around the middle of the eighteenth century, a permissive law and an official interpretation established legal precedents for the setting up of separate facilities for the education of colored children in public schools.

IN 1828, the legislature granted authority to Morris County to provide special ...

... for Negro pupils.

In 1883, the state superintendent of public instruction strengthened this precedent through his interpretation of the school laws to the effect that schools may be established for the special benefit of colored children.

He declared that "trustees have full authority to establish schools and employ teachers for their respective districts, and if in their judgment the interests of a district require the establishment of a school for colored children, or the establishment of two or more schools differing as to grade, or character, they may act accordingly, provided always that every child enjoys the advantages to which he is entitled."

Sixty years later another commissioner of education made another similar ruling which was affirmed by a succeeding commissioner in 1930:

"The board of education has furnished these colored children proper facilities. It has designated the school at which they shall attend and has furnished them with a regularly licensed teacher. It, therefore, has acted entirely within its lawful duties and has exercised only its just powers. It does not matter that the board has designated the Fairview School as a colored school and has given it such a name . . . It is no discrimination under the school laws for a Board of Education to make such a distribution of the children in the different schools as in its judgment shall seem best to meet all the requirements of the school laws."

IN 1881, a situation in Fair Haven resulted in an important legislative enactment. There, a controversy arose following the resignation of the teacher of the colored school and the attempts of colored children to attend the white school.

This situation prompted Senator Youngblood of Morris Coun tl to sponsor successfully a law forbidding the exclusion of any child from a public school because of nationality, religion or color. Unfortunately, the effectiveness of this law was materially weakened through the acceptance by Negroes of separate schools in Fair Haven and nearby Long Branch within a year of the passage of this law.

On the other hand, following its enactment, separate schools for colored pupils disappeared in the northern section of the state.

IN 1900, when the industrial school for colored youth at Bordentown was taken over by the state, the pattern which dominated the education of the children of New Jersey was set for the next half century.

Within the framework thus set, practices varied from the complete segregtaion of colored children in the elementary schools in some of the southern counties to situations in certain of the northern counties where there was a complete integration of the Negro children into regular schools staffed with teachers appointed according to merit and without regard to racial identity. Between these two extremes there existed varying combinations of segregation and integration such as: separate elementary schools and mixed junior and senior high schools; separate elementary and junior high school and mixed senior high school; divided building, one-half for whites and one-half for Negroes; separate classes and teachers for each race within the same building; separate elementary schools for each race on the same school site; separate elementary schools joined by a common auditorium.

In some instances the Negro children were taught by Negro teachers in the regular subjects and by white teachers in the special subjects. In one school system, with an otherwise segregated setup in the elementary schools, a colored teacher taught white and colored classes in a special subject.

TRENTON, THE capital of the state, was one of the very few places where segregation was carried up through the secondary level. There separate housing was provided through the ninth grade.

Around 1914 the organization of teachers of colored children stimulated serious consideration of the conditions under which Negro children were being trained. Problems of colored children were discussed at its annual meetings and at times recommendations were forwarded to the state superintendent of schools.

In 1925, this group initiated a study that sparked other investigations into Negro life in New Jersey. Lester Granger, an outstanding leader of this body, was selected to study race relations and the school system. He not only found plans for the erection of new separate schools, but in some communities found facilities for the education of Negro children that were either inferior or decidedly undesirable.

IN SUBSEQUENT investigations Ira Reid, Eleanor Hill Oak, Lester Granger, the temporary and permanent commissions for the study of the urban colored population, and Norman Jensen, under the auspices of the NAACP, not only substantiated, in the main, the earlier findings of Granger, but gave an even more detailed picture of the status and trends of policies and practices affecting Negro education in the state.

Reid found that from 1919-1930 the number of separate schools had increased from fifty-two to sixty-six, or 26 per cent. Oak revealed that by 1935 this number had increased to seventy.

These figures showed that the tendency toward an increase in such schools evident at the end of the nineteenth century had continued.

The dual system of education which resulted in inferior building arrangements and unequal school opportunities were pointed up by Granger, Reid, Oak, the urban commissions and Jensen.

THE SCHOOL in Pleasantville outside of Atlantic City, housed four grades of its colored children in the rear of a building which had been condemned by both the state and county boards of education. School officials of Salem placed the "overflow" pupils of the Grant Street School in an abandoned club building.

When the matter of poor lighting facilities was broached, the Board of Education expressed its resistance against spending additional money for Negro children on the ground that the Negro tax payments constituted a very small part of the whole.

In 1939, while speaking of the striking exhibitions of discrimination against Negro pupils in these same counties, Granger reported that in some of the communities where white pupils were housed in large buildings equipped with modern conveniences, the Negro pupils were segregated in small structurs lacking conveniences, and in some cases, minimum essentials for adequate instruction, such as gymnasium facilities, shop equipment, charts, maps, and in some instances, even books.

In 1947, Jensen found several reasons for complaint with regard to provisions made for colored pupils.

THE SCHOOL in Port Norris in Cumberland County was in very bad condition with a leaking roof that made the school room a pool of water when it rained or snowed.

The school officials of Leonardo, in Monmouth County, lined the pupils up for folk dancing according to height, except the Negroes who were all placed at the end of the line. Jensen described the neighborhood school in Tom's River as very crude and is situated in the woods. The kindergarten of the colored school in Penn's Grove was housed in the basement of the white school.

Negro children had to walk about a mile and a half in order to get to the bus while the white children rode all the way. In Mount Holly, the officials provided a lunch room and facilities for caring for its white pupils who were physically handicapped or mentally retarded.

It made none of these provisions for its colored children. The school at Whitesboro in Cape May County was found to be overcrowded and very dilapidated.

THROUGHOUT THE 1940's several events contributed to a trend which resulted in revolutionary changes in race relations in the school systems of New Jersey. During this period the school survey made by the commission on the urban colored population disclosed that according to the latest complete tabulation of the 1943-'44 school year, 43,163 Negro pupils were enrolled in the public schools of the state.

Of this total, 10,477 were in the elementary grades and 518 in the junior high school in seventy segregated schools under 454 Negro teachers.

The total Negro pupil population in all the schools of New Jersey for this year was distributed in such a way as to locate 25.4 per cent in segregated schools and 74.6 in mixed schools.

The total number of colored teachers employed in all schools was 463. Of these, sixty-four were men and 399 were women.

In 1941, the NAACP touched off a chain of events when it challenged the adequacy of the curriculum of the manual training and industrial school for colored youth at Bordentown.

'Pure Bloods' Nix Mixed Schools Bill

SANTA FE, N. Mex. — The State Senate killed a move last week to ban racial segregation in New Mexico public schools by a 16-14 vote.

The 16 Senators opposing the measure were all "Anglos" while every Senator of Spanish-American ancestry favored the move.

N.Y. schools to bear names of 2 leaders

NEW YORK — The board of education here announced last week that two new schools now being constructed will be named for prominent Colored leaders.

One school, to be located at Eighth ave. and 155th st., will be named for Dr. Eugene P. Roberts, first colored member of the board of education.

The second will bear the name of Paul Laurence Dunbar, author and poet. Both schools will be opened next September, according to the announcement.

Mr. Dunbar, who lived from 1872 to 1906, was noted for his short stories, novels and mainly his poetry.

Dr. Roberts, one advisor to Booker T. Washington when he was president of Tuskegee Institute, was a member of the board of education from 1917 to 1921.

Integration Principle And Practice

We as Negroes in America have the difficult role of fighting for full integration into the main stream of American life, while at the same time having to live in a day-to-day world which alway falls far short of the goal. Even where legal integration has been obtained, the facts of life still require us to spend a lot of our s living together in a world where we see and have contact mainly with Negroes. The October 19th issue of Time magazine features the New York City school system. One of the schools mentioned is P. S. 133 in Harlem. It says: "Seventy-five percent of P. S. 133's Negro pupils (95% of its enrollment) come from the two big" housing projects. The school has a Negro principal.

Now here we have a situation in which these Negro children live in housing projects which are occupied almost exclusively by Negroes; they go to school mainly with Negroes; doubtless they go to churches where Negroes are almost exclusively the communicants; and doubtless also most of their social contacts are with those whom they associate with in these other areas of life. If in New York City the principle of integration produces a practice of this kind, it does not take much imagination to picture what the situation will be, say in Clarenden County, South Carolina, after legal segregation has been ruled unconstitutional in the segregation cases now pending or in some future cases.

Children are not adequately equipped who are taught and prepared only for a life of full integration, when in practice they actually have to live in a society with only a small fraction of integration. Children do not have an adequate philosophy for such a contrast between principle and practice when they are taught, as Thurgood Marshall preaches, that anything run by Negroes is inferior which is an "exact duplicate" of something run by whites. Only a philosophy which includes a good deal of pride of race and a good deal of confidence in and respect for Negro life and Negro institutions and organizations can cope with the kind of practical situation which faces Negro children in both New York City and the South.

We could with profit study the approach which Jews have toward their minority position, although they are a thousand times more integrated into the main stream of American life than we are as the Negro minority. Jews fight for the fullest participation, but they hold on to and strengthen and develop great pride in all things Jewish, including all types of Jewish institutions and organizations. Do we not also need an approach which will be adequate both for our constant fight and struggle for full integration and the little bit of integration which the practical situation presents to us?

WIDER USE IS URGED FOR NEGRO TEACHERS

Negro teachers should be distributed more evenly through the city's schools, rather than concentrated in predominantly Negro areas, it was agreed yesterday by members of a forum on racial discrimination in the schools arranged by the Flushing branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Children of even pre-school age already have formed racial prejudices as a result of family influences, it was contended, and it was part of the function of the public schools to help break down these prejudices. One way this could be done, it was suggested, was by bringing more Negro teachers into schools where most of the pupils are white.

The forum was held in the First Congregational Church, Bowne Street and Thirty-eighth Avenue, Flushing, Queens, as part of a nation-wide drive by the N.A.A.C.P. to raise money to finance the legal expenses of court actions against racial discrimination in the schools and colleges of some states.

The moderator of the forum was Dr. John J. Theobald, president of Queens College. Members of the discussion panel were Dr. Buell G. Gallagher, president of City College; James E. Allen, district school-community coordinator of the New York City Board of Education and past president of the New York State N.A.A.C.P.; Louis W. Phillips, principal of the John Bowne elementary school in Flushing; Emil Levin, an attorney and president of the Flushing Interfaith Society; Alphonzo Hennenberg, associate professor at Adelphi College, Hempstead, L. I., and Eugene P. Kelly of the Social Science Department at the Flushing High School.

N. C. May Be Hit Harder, Faster If Court Outlaws Segregation

State's Setup Could Prevent Test Suits by Local Districts

By C. A. McKNIGHT

Editor, The Charlotte News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

CHARLOTTE, N. C., Dec. 12—Though not so directly involved as South Carolina and Virginia, North Carolina kept close watch on this week's segregation arguments before the Supreme Court in Washington. For there is a strong possibility that this state, because of the extensive role played by the state government in public education, may be hit harder and earlier than other states if the Supreme Court outlaws segregation.

Elsewhere in the South, the local school district is the unit mainly responsible for administering public education. Even if the Supreme Court should give a ruling that, from the Southern viewpoint, would be "unfavorable," it would apply immediately only to those local districts where the test cases originated. If the South chose to wait it out, in theory, at least, it would be necessary for test suits to be brought in every local school district.

Single Case Possible

That may not be the case in North Carolina. Some legal experts believe this state has opened the door to a single test case, brought at the state level, which would automatically govern all local districts.

For one thing, North Carolina, since 1933, has had a state-supported school system. The state government has guaranteed and paid the operating expenses, including teachers' salaries, for all public schools, white and Negro. Currently the state provides a nine-month, twelve-year school system.

Until 1949, local school districts furnished the money for school buildings. In that year, a new precedent was established when 50 million dollars in state funds—half from surplus and half from a bond issue approved by the people—were made available to the 100 counties for school buildings. That money has all been spent.

This year, the people approved a new bond issue of 50 million dollars, advocated by Gov. William Umstead.

Furthermore, the State Board of Education sets all policies on teacher training, accreditation, and instructional standards. It provides free textbooks. And state approval of all plans for school buildings, either new buildings or renovation, must be obtained before construction is started.

In view of the important role of the state government, it may be possible for plaintiffs to aim a test at the State Board of Education without having to bring proceedings in each county and city school district.

Be that as it may, North Carolina has kept calm during the various legal maneuvers leading up to this week's arguments before the Supreme Court. No responsible official of the State Board of Education or the state government has advocated the adoption of any legal device like those proposed in South Carolina and Georgia to circumvent an unfavorable court ruling. A step like that may be taken at a later date, but it has not even been discussed seriously in the state press.

Editorial Comment

On the contrary, the tone of editorial comment throughout the state has been conciliatory. Most of the papers have warned against hasty and impetuous action and have urged that nothing be done that would jeopardize the public education system until the court ruling has been handed down and its full implication determined.

When this year's bond issue was before the General Assembly, a handful of opponents warned that it would be unwise to spend any more public money on school buildings until the court had ruled. But they were heavily outvoted by the Umstead forces who argued that the buildings would be needed regardless of the Supreme Court's action.

If the court upholds the "separate but equal" doctrine first laid down in 1896, but required states with segregation to speed up the equalization process, the economic impact will not hit North Carolina so hard as some other Southern states. For a good many years now, the State Board of Education has exerted pressure to equalize facilities for Negro children. And though there are still many inequalities (for example, a Gaston County grand jury last week sharply criticized the Negro schools in that county), the gap has been substantially narrowed since World War II.

In many counties, postwar Negro schools are actually better than those for the whites.

At this stage, it seems likely that North Carolina will do nothing about its school system, in the event of an adverse court ruling, until the 1955 General Assembly convenes. If earlier action becomes imperative, Governor Umstead has the authority to call the legislature into special session at any time.

N. C. Governor Uncertain On School Issue

RALEIGH, N. C.— (INS) Gov. Umstead said Thursday the question of schools in North Carolina is complicated by a changing situation.

He told his News Conference in Raleigh that some counties are closer than others in providing adequate facilities, commenting that shifts of population cause an overabundance of facilities in some spots while other places are lacking in them.

Umstead reiterated his oft-stated position on segregated scools—that he will not encourage the Supreme Court by assuming anything beforehand, but that the State will "cross all bridges when it comes to them."

Asked if there were any specific plans in the event of abolition of segregated schools, the Governor answered it was impossible to tell exactly at this time. He said the high court should not delay too long before reaching its decision.

Very careful study must be made by the special committee of the Board of Education, he said, on a formula for allocating $25-million of the recent school bond issue on the basis of need.

The Governor also commented that by-passes around large cities have come to be "critical necessities" because of traffic congestion.

He announced appointment of J. Speight Wrenn as Judge of the New Municipal Recorders Court of Siler City and T. R. Baldwin as Colicitor of the court.

North Carolina's Governor

A Bridge We'll Have To Cross—Umstead

RALEIGH, N. C.—Gov. William B. Umstead told the Courier (April 18, 1953), "North Carolina is a law-abiding state and if the U. S. Supreme Court rules out segregation in the public schools this state will make an effort to comply with the letter of the law.

Gov. Umstead

"I hope very much that we will be allowed to retain segregation in our schools," he said, "but I have not undertaken to anticipate what the decision of the Supreme Court will be.

The Governor, who was a counsel for the state in the 1950 Durham equalization suit, said "If the decision [illegible] the state's present separate, but equal facilities for Negro and white children, it will require a very careful consideration of its impact upon our school system. That's a bridge we'll have to cross when we get to it."

Supreme Court Complicates N. C. School Bond Issue Vote

Backers Not Sure of Victory With Segregation in Ruling

By C. A. McKNIGHT

Editor, The Charlotte News
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

CHARLOTTE, N. C., June 20—The action of the U. S. Supreme Court in holding up its ruling on the constitutionality of segregated public schools has temporarily applied the brakes on a $50 million school bond issue in North Carolina.

Whether the election will be held in this calendar year is up to Gov. William B. Umstead who up to now has given no hint of his opinion.

The thorny problem reverted to the governor because of the terms of the legislation adopted by the 1953 General Assembly. That instructed the governor to call the election before Dec. 31, 1953. The only way he can legally refuse to set the election date is to call the legislature back into special session and ask for a postponement.

Another Election

Further complicating the picture is another bond election on the question of borrowing $22,000,000 to modernize the state's mental institutions. The two elections were authorized in separate bills, but it has been assumed that they would be held simultaneously. Governor Umstead said last week he had given no thought to the possibility of holding them on separate dates.

The Supreme Court decision has noticeably changed the climate in North Carolina. Prior to its announcement, it was generally believed that the school bond issue would be approved by the voters. Now its supporters are not so sure.

And the backers of the mental institution bond issue are not particularly happy about the prospect of tieing their project to the school bond issue. They feel that reluctance to vote additional school money during this period of uncertainty would have an adverse effect on the mental institution bonds.

Key members of the General Assembly are divided on the question of calling the school bond election.

Rep. Larry I. Moore of Wilson County, an influential House member, says that Governor Umstead "should know better than anyone in the state" whether a special session of the Legislature is needed.

Sen. Edwin Pate of Scotland, a leader in the Senate economy bloc, said: "My inclination would be to go ahead with the bond election." Sen. Fred Royster of Vance and Reps. Clifton Blue of Moore and Thomas Turner of Guilford agreed with him.

Yet Sen. J. W. [illegible] of Hertford, co-chairman of the key appropriations sunbcommittee, voiced the opinion that there should be a special session to postpone the school bond election if state officials reach the conclusion the Supreme Court will ban segregation.

If the school election is held this year, a great deal of work will be needed to put it across. There is considerable dissatisfaction in the larger counties with the formula worked out by the legislature for dividing the $50,000,000.

The legislature specified that $10,000,000 should be divided equally among the 100 counties—$100,000 each.

It said that an additional $15,000,000 should be divided on the basis of average daily membership in each county.

Basis of Need

The remaining $25,000,000 would be allocated to the 100 counties on a basis of need, with the State Board of Education authorized to work out the precise formula.

The big counties, which pay most of the taxes, have borrowed heavily against their property tax resources to build their own schools in the postwar era. Mecklenburg, for example, wealthiest county in the state, has almost reached its legal borrowing limit. And its need for additional classrooms is still great.

If the bond issue carries, it will have to pile up heavy majorities in the small rural counties where property assessments are kept low in order to give substance to the plaints of poverty that are heard in each session of the General Assembly.

NORTH CAROLINA

ASK COURT ACTION:

N.C. parents file new school segregation suit

STANLEY, N.C. — Colored citizens here through their attorneys, Charles V. Bell and Peter H. Bell of Charlotte, filed suit in the United States Court for the Western District of North Carolina, Nov. 18, asking the Court to end segregation in the public schools of Gaston county.

The plaintiffs, Lance Froneberger, Jake Froneberger, John Wilson, J. T. Brown, Robert Benton, Mrs. W. A. Friday, Odena Brown, Lewis Byers and Bruce Lynch alleged in their complaint that inequalities exist in the public schools of Gaston county.

They claimed, further that several complaints had been made to Hunter Huss, superintendent of public schools, and the board of education of Gaston county, and that nothing had been done, through the years, to provide colored children of Gaston county with facilities comparable to those enjoyed by the white children.

Three-judge Court

The plaintiffs, also, requested that a three-judge court be convened to pass on the constitutionality of the segregation laws of North Carolina, as they apply to the public schools, alleging these laws to be unconstitutional and in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment and of the Constitution of the United States.

Children of the plaintiffs are now attending a three - room frame building, with two teachers as instructors, while the white children, who live in the same district, attend a modern consolidated super high school, with thirty - eight teachers.

The plaintiffs have named as defendants in this action, Hunter Huss, Gaston county school superintendent; board of Education of Gaston county, Charles F. Carroll, state supervisor of public instruction; the North Carolina State Board of Education, Luther Hodges, Lt. Gov. of North Carolina, chairman of the State Board of Education; and and Edwin M. Gill, treasurer of North Carolina.

Harry McMullan, attorney general for the State of North Carolina, said that he saw "no need for the suits since four suits now before the U.S. Supreme Court will decide the identical question."

McMullan said further that the Gaston suit is the first such action brought in North Carolina, which asks directly that the federal courts outlaw separate schools as such.

In North Carolina!

$200 Million Needed To Equalize Schools

By A. M. RIVERA JR.
(Fifth in a Series)

RALEIGH, N. C.—Tarheel solons and school heads were left bewitched, bothered and bewildered by the U. S. Supreme Court's postponement of the school segregation cases.

Gripped with the fear that the high court will order Southern states to integrate publicly supported Negro and white schools, North Carolina has adopted a "wait and see" attitude.

On Oct. 3, the people approved the issuance of $50,00,000 in bonds for school buildings and $22 million in mental hospital in accordance with an act of the 1953 General Assembly.

During the campaign for the passage of the bond election, state leaders were careful not to mention the integration fight. Dr. Charles F. Carroll, superintendent of public instruction, told the Courier that the $50 million fund was an "improvement" rather than an "equalization" fund. Dr. Carroll said it will continue the building program, which began with a $50 million grant made by the 1949 General Assembly.

Mr. Rivera

Alert Negro leaders were quick to point out that the last accounting of this money showed that the whites had received $27,195,615.92 to increase the glaring inequalities in the white and Negro schools.

Immediately after the passage of the $50,000,000 bond election earlier this month, it was leaked by highly placed state officials to reporters who cover the Capital that in all probability the school bonds will not be sold until after the Supreme Court decision on segregation schools.

What the Supreme Court has to say in the matter of segregation will have a lot to do with the spending of the fund. If segregation is upheld, the state wants cash on hand to start upgrading Negro schools.

The Courier learned that unless the state subscribes to a formula of spending the money from the bond election specifically to "equalize" white and Negro schools now, the money will only perpetuate the annual $5 million gyp against Negroes.

Gov. William B. Umstead, a lawyer, who knows what kind of a legal battle to expect over the segregation issue, proposed the bond issue to (1) meet an urgent need for new classrooms and other facilities, and (2) to provide "more nearly equal facilities" for white and Negro children. There is nothing in the law that prohibits the perpetuation or the extension of now existing differentials in the dual system . . . a system that has systematically robbed Negro children as much as seven million dollars a year.

In 1945 the per pupil differential in current expenses was only $15.65, but in 1950 the difference was $29.62—almost double. The aggregate steal from Negro students, based on the per pupil expenditure for white children in 1945 at $15.65 for 210,596 students in average daily attendance amounted to $3,296,000, and in 1950, 233,116 Negro students in average daily attendance, who suffered a per pupil differential of $29.62, were gyped of $6,905,000.

UNTIL 1949 North Carolina authorities disavowed the legal responsibility for seeing that the state's separate schools for Negroes were equal of those for whites. The state contended then, as it does now, that building schools is a county responsibility.

Governor Umstead, an attorney who was thoroughly beaten in the Durham equalization suit of 1950, has intimated that North Carolina will abide by the Court's decision, but there is little in his past to suggest that he will work for integration.

As pointed out in the Courier for Dec. 20, 1952, in a fifty-year review of education in North Carolina, the differential between Negro and white schools is greater today than it was fifty years ago. Continuation of the 1949 practice would increase the differential of "inequality."

G. H. FERGUSON, director of the division of Negro education, estimated that approximately $200 million will be needed to equalize white and Negro schools and facilities in this state. In 1950-51, the value of school property per pupil enrolled in North Carolina schools was $370.54 for whites and $170.91 for Negroes. In short, the Negro pupil would be better off with the differential which is $199.63.

The dilemma facing Tarheel solons now is, "Who foots the bills if segregation is ended?" and "Where will the money come from if the Supreme Court gives the states a chance to equalize?"

W. Frank Taylor, the Governor's liaison with the lawmakers, said, "We might as well be frank about it. If the Court allows segregation, it must be done without discrimination." State Senator James H. Pou Bailey said, "In view of the financial strain imposed by school segregation, I wonder how long can it (segregation) be maintained." Bailey pointed out that 74 per cent of the budg

NORTH CAROLINA claims to have equalized educational operations at the state level and to the extent of equalizing teachers' salaries based upon training and experience, this is true, but this is far from the total picture.

Reactionary elements within the State Department of Public Instruction have effectively hamstrung many progressive measures at the state level. In several so-called back-

THE STATE'S FIGHT to keep Negroes out of the graduate and professional divisions of the Greater University of North Carolina is additional indication of the views of some of the key-planners in education, business and politics. Only token enrollments of Negroes in the above-mentioned areas have been permitted to date.

The state's iniquitous formula for maintaining white supremacy is apparently to provide inferior schools for Negroes from which handicapped students become poorly prepared teachers who, in turn, return to these inferior schools to produce a never-ending cycle of handicapped students.

According to the state's standard for accreditation, which it is admitted was based upon "a fairly satisfactory learning situation," 60.7 per cent of the Negro schools in the state cannot qualify for consideration of accreditation.

THERE ARE 283 Negro one-teacher schools in the state (where one teacher instructs students from the first through the seventh grade in the same room), and the minimum requirement is six whole-time teachers for six grades. Through a program of consolidation, these schools are slowly being eliminated, but at the graduate and professional level the state is rapidly establishing one and two-teacher schools, departments and divisions designed to meet the pressure of court action and to keep Negroes out of the State University.

A consideration of the curricula provides dramatic proof of the injustices fastened on the Negro students through the machinations of separate-but-equal die-hards. According to the annual report of the North Carolina Department of Public Instruction for 1949-50, fifty-seven subjects were offered in 312 cases in white high schools to 30,371 white students that were not offered and were not available to any Negro high school student in the state.

For an example, there were seven courses above the basic math requirement taught in 119 classes in the white high schools in this state, but not available to Negro students. Another instance was seen in vocational and pre-vocational offerings; thirty-one courses were taught in 3,046 classes in the white schools and only 847 in Negro school.

FOR THE PAST fifty years Southern white speakers, aided by a hard corps of Negro collaborators, have cleverly lectured to Negro audiences about the "progress" made in Negro education, always careful to evade any comparison of comparable figures on expenditures for whites.

Six months ago the Courier revealed, in a definite study of North Carolina's dual educational system, that contrary to published claims of officials of the State Department of Public Instruction and state governmental officials that educational facilities for white and Negro students are nearing equality, figures taken directly from the files of the Department of Public Instruction show that the differential between the races is wider now than it was in 1900.

In 1900, school construction was not so expensive, the average school for whites in North Carolina was worth $270, and the average Negro school had a value of $162, a difference of only $108. It is a pattern found throughout the South that as school building costs increase, equalization becomes more and more impossible. In 1951 the average white school in North Carolina cost $121,761, and the average Negro school cost only $30,747, or $91,014 less than the average white school.

Unlike South Carolina, North Carolina has never proposed to equalize educational opportunities for Negroes and whites, and if in the future the state and local school authorities follow the same trend in building and equipping public schools for white and Negro children as they followed during the first fifty years of this century, the injustices of the separate-but-equal farce will be compounded and the school investment per capita for Negroes will never equal the whites.

Negro professional personnel were left in several scattered areas of the city while more spacious accommodations were made for white employes in the new wing, who do work of considerably lower professional calibre.

ward counties, for example, Negro and white professional employes are integrated, at least in the same building.

The attitude at the state level, on the other hand, can be seen in recent action following the construction of a new wing to state education headquarters.

BIGOTED STATE officials, it was reported to this writer, resent Negro personnel and the Negro public using toilet facilities, and occupying offices which they feel threaten the pseudo-superior position enjoyed in a lily-white building. Another indication of the state's biased racial attitude is seen in the fact that Negroes are left out of all special services that go along with education except teaching and janitorial work.

The director of the Division of Negro education is white and though there are some Negro supervisors under him, they do not approach the ratio of white supervisors to the white school population.

Where the text books are sold and where they are distributed Negroes are denied employment opportunities, and throughout the transportation system there are no Negro mechanics—

Turn Pupils Away From Ohio School

CINCINNATI — Children attending out-moded Eckstein elementary school in suburban Glendale were denied admission to more modern and up-to-date Congress public school last week when the children accompanied by their parents appeared at Congress school to register.

The principal Howard R. Cromwell flatly refused to register any of the Negro children despite insistent pleas of their parents.

Principal Cromwell told the parents that if he accepted their children he was afraid that more would want to come to Congress school which combines both elementary and high school.

Parents of the children seeking to enter the Congress school claim that the second floor at Eckstein school is unsafe and that the school has no fire escape.

Prior to the march on Congress school the parents of children living in that district held a meeting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Johnson, 332 East Willow st., to map out strategy to be used in fighting the school discrimination.

Among those present to aid in the fight were Donald Jones, Regional Director, NAACP, and Atty. Michael Turpeau, legal counsel to the Cincinnati branch.

It has since been learned that the local board of education has decided to take the demand that the Negro children be admitted to Congress school under advisement and to await the decision of the County Prosecutor, C. Watson Hover.

Glendale, one of Cincinnati's most distant and exclusive suburbs is set to be one of the richest villages in the country having as residents 25 millionaires.

Hamilton Girl To Teach In Lincoln Heights School

Miss Nettie Carter

Miss Nettie Carter has accepted a teaching position in the elementary school at Lincoln Heights, Ohio, an all-Negro governed City located south of Hamilton.

Miss Carter, since graduating from Miami Univ. with her B. S. in education, Feb. 1, 1953, has been assistant librarian at the Booker T. Washington library in the Second Ward Center where she made a fine record.

Miss Carter's friends will be happy because they know of her life's ambition to teach and how anxious she was to begin since she had worked long and hard to educate herself.

She is the daughter of Mrs. Ada Carter, 721 South Monument ave. and one of Hamilton's leading young women.

1452 Pupils In School

Miss Carter, is one of four First grade tachers among the total number who teach 1452 children.

Just this week, the Office of Education in Washington, D. C. announced the allocation of $7794.15 to the Lincoln Heights City Board of Education as part of the cost imposed upon it in the last school year by Federal activities in the area.

A Federal law makes this possible where government activities bring additional children into a school, and then removing homes and places of employment from the tax duplicate.

The money was for 325 children whose parents work at GE in Evendale.

New Buildings Slated For Bunche School

The Tulsa Board of Education announced Tuesday a new elementary school will replace the pre-fabricated units at the Ralph Bunche School on East Apache. After plans and specifications are completed the board will name an architect and advertise for bids. Funds for the building will come out of the 1953-54 separate building fund.

Dr. Charles C. Mason, superintendent of schools, said the building will "most likely" provide space for 18-22 classrooms. He added that the specifications would not include an auditorium-cafeteria combination.

The present school accomodates 750 children with a pupil-teacher ratio of 45 to 1 in seven pre-fabricated buildings. Three of the buildings are four-classroom structures and the remaining four are two-classroom structures. Prof. J. M Rouce is the principal.

Pennsylvania

Another Anachronism Ended

ANOTHER anachronism was ended at the beginning of the school year when colored and white children were fully integrated in the school system of Harrisburg, capital of Pennsylvania.

Harrisburg was the lone remaining large city of the Keystone State in which the school system was segregated, and for more years than most people can remember, this city's general racial pattern had followed that of the schools.

There had always been opposition to this educational segregation which, as elsewhere, had always been discriminatory, with Negro children having the poorest school plants and other forms of discrimination which inevitably follow such separatism in a supposedly democratic society.

While other large Pennsylvania cities like Philadelphia abolished educational segregation, Harrisburg clung to it, and for many years the city was, interracially, scarcely distinguishable from some of the more "liberal" Southern communities.

In 1946 colored citizens launched their campaign against this anachronism when the Rev. Luther E. Cunningham of Philadelphia blasted the system in a Harrisburg church, and this was followed by an organized drive of the Non-Partisan Civic League, headed by Harrisburg's militant Dr. Joseph A. Randall, and backed by the Elks' Civil Liberties League 74.

Last April the Harrisburg School Board threw in the sponge and this month, for the first time in history, the entire school system was redistricted, colored children sent to school in their own neighborhoods and colored teachers assigned to instruct mixed classes.

Moreover, as in so many other places where such a drastic change has been made, it was accompanied by no tenseness or conflict; which indicates that the people, colored and white, are a long way ahead of their leaders who, too often, are more timid than circumstances warrant.

We should like to suggest that if Harrisburg, Pa., and Cairo, Ill. (to name just a few cities that have changed over peacefully in the past decade) have been able to bring about this revolution without strife, what reason is there for supposing that the same could not be done in Baltimore, Wilmington, Washington, D. C.; Richmond, Va.; Atlanta, Savannah, Miami and Dallas just as amicably?

Every evidence points to the fact that the violent opponents of racial integration in the public schools everywhere are a small but noisy minority, often influential, who are out of step with mass thinking; and it is extremely doubtful whether the masses would prefer to continue to drain local treasuries to support segregated schools when such money can be saved by integrating them.

This school jimcrowism has come down to a matter of dollars and cents, quite aside from its injustice.

With the American tax burden on every level growing heavier every day, this question of educational segregation must be faced realistically.

The only alternative to heavier taxes is racial integration of public education in all parts of the country.

Harrisburg is a shining example of what can be accomplished in the direction of economy when thoughtful and influential civic leaders set their minds to it.

Jim Crow Schools Called Slow Death For Children

Tamiment, Pa.—Segregated public schools were branded as "slow death" for Negro children in a speech here on July 21 by Roy Wilkins, administrator of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Speaking in the summer lecture series of Camp Tamiment, Mr. Wilkins said:

"The five cases scheduled to be re-argued October 12 before the United States Supreme Court are the result of the determination of Negro parents to wipe out this 'slow death' that has been crippling their children's chances in life under the Jim Crow school system. Every statistic on the operation of separate schools for the races reveals glaring inequalities which prove beyond doubt that there never has been, is not now, and never will be such a thing as 'separate but equal.' Equality of opportunity in education will never be secured by Negro children until Jim Crow schools are abolished."

$5,000 raised by S.C. Afro-American to reargue school cases

COLUMBIA, S.C.—The South Carolina Conference of NAACP Branches, the group which initiated the litigation to break down segregation in elementary schools, last week gave the NAACP special legal fund a contribution of $5,000 to assist it in rearguing five such cases before the U.S. Supreme Court.

The $5,000 check was presented to Thurgood Marshall, NAACP chief counsel, by the Rev. James M. Hinton, president of the conference, at a rally held here on Sept. 20.

Mr. Marshall, in accepting the check, told the cheering South Carolinians gathered at the meeting that the NAACP's legal department was concentrating all of its efforts on preparing for the cases which will be argued by the highest court in the land during the week of Dec. 7.

In addition to the Rev. Mr. Hinton, Bishop Frank M. Reid of the AME church and W. E. Soloman spoke.

This list of contributors shows that in addition to newspapers and NAACP groups, themselves, other civic groups of various kinds are interesting themselves in the drive to raise the $38,700 which is the minimum amount needed to prepare and file the legal papers to clinch the difficult cases before the court.

Among those groups are the Hotel and Restaurant Employees Union, AFL, as well as the CIO, which recently donated $2,500 to the NAACP special legal fund.

Hugo Ernst, general president of the HREU, last week made a plea to all of the various locals in the international to make a "special effort to help raise the 'Fighting Fund for Freedom'."

TURKS IN SOUTH CAROLINA ASK TO BE LEGALLY LABELED AS WHITE WHEN BRANDED AS BLACK

Descendants of Revolutionary Heroes Desire To Attend State's Elementary Schools

OBJECT TO HYPHENATED STATUS IN DIXIE

SUMTER, S. C. — (ANP) — The "Turks," a dark-skinned people living near here, last week asked to be recognized as members of the white race.

The group asked a United States district court here to grant them that recognition in order that their children may attend white elementary schools.

South Carolina law officially recognizes only two races—the Negro and the white. The "Turks" constitute another race and have placed school officials in a dither over what to do about them.

The group, believed to be descendants of two Turkish men who fought in the American Revolutionary War, does not want to associate with Negroes. It refuses to send its children to colored schools.

Since they are not white, a special school, with white teachers, was established for them. But the Turks no longer want this "hyphenated" status. They insist upon being considered as white.

Two years ago a United States court compelled the white high school here to accept a handful of "Turk" children. The court however, did not instruct the white elementary schools to accept them.

Court action taken last week is designed to eliminate this latter barrier.

The Sumter school district No. 2, defendant in the case does not want the children in its schools. The defendants have invoked a provision of the South Carolina state constitution which forbids members of different races attending the same schools.

South Carolina Official

Sees Integration Failing to Work

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 11-13-54 p. 2

By ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE and A. M. RIVERA Jr.

COLUMBIA, S. C.—P. H. Bomar, finance officer for the State Board of Education, meets the Negro press willingly enough but he has a definite opinion of what will happen in South Carolina when integration is ordered in the state's schools.

He lets you know at the outset of the interview that, "I just don't think we're quite ready for integration."

BUT, IF it does come, as he puts it, Bomar believes the State of South Carolina will continue to operate Negro and white schools and he believes that there will be 90 per cent voluntary segregation. Which means that he thinks integration would only swallow up about 10 per cent of the total Negro and white student enrollment.

Bomar, who thinks out a question before giving an answer, says he doesn't anticipate trouble in South Carolina over the matter of school desegregation but "it will take years and years to work it out."

He threw out a mild threat when he said: "If integration comes, a lot of good Negro teachers will lose their jobs." He based this on the fact that some teachers failed to make high ratings on teacher tests.

Bomar could stand some more schooling himself. He still doesn't know how to pronounce the word "Negro." Or, maybe he just doesn't care. He says "Niggra."

S. C. Group to Advise Course If Court Hits School Race Bar

'Wait and See' Is Attitude Of Legislature Pending Ruling

By S. L. LATIMER JR.
Editor, The Columbia State
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

COLUMBIA, S. C., Dec. 5—South Carolina has outlined no procedure to follow should the United States Supreme Court declare segregation unconstitutional per se in public schools, but a study group, authorized by the General Assembly, will, in that event, recommend an "advisable course."

This committee, composed of ten legislators and five persons appointed by the governor, will not report unless "the federal courts nullify the provisions of the state constitution requiring the establishment of separate schools for the children of white and colored races."

The 1952 assembly submitted to the people a state constitutional amendment to eliminate a provision that the state must maintain a public school system. The people voted favorably on the proposal, but the amendment has not gone into effect, because the 1953 legislature did not ratify it. It was understood that ratification didn't come up because the Supreme Court had not ruled on the segregation issue.

In other words the attitude of the legislature so far has been "let's wait and see what happens."

It will be recalled that Governor Byrnes in an address in 1951 stated his attitude. What he said has been quoted often, though not always accurately. His text shows that he said:

"Should the Supreme Court decide this case against our position we will face a serious problem. Of only one thing can we be certain: South Carolina will not now, nor for some years to come, mix white and colored children in our schools. . . . If the court changes what is now the law of the land, we will, if it is possible, live within the law, preserve the public school system and at the same time maintain segregation. If that is not possible, reluctantly we will abandon the public school system."

Byrnes' Position

Commenting in a prepared statement, Alex McCullough, his research secretary, has said: "Governor Byrnes seemed to insons under the direction of Thurgood Marshall.

"The financing of the NAACP cases," the Lighthouse and Informer said, "was actually done by the American public, with individual donations starting from pennies contributed by orphans and school children, to thousand of dollars from groups and organizations. The contributions ranged from $5 to $7,500.

"Marshall's original estimate was that the minimum cost of the cases would be $32,000. It was later raised to $39,200."

The South Carolina case which seems to be the essence of the issue, arose in Clarendon County when Negro parents brought action to require the district trustees to allow their children to attend the same schools as white pupils.

The state of South Carolina joined the district in the defense. A three-judge federal court, composed of Judge John J. Parker of the circuit court of appeals, and Judge George Bell Timmerman and Judge J. Waites Waring of the federal district courts of South Carolina, by a two to one decision (Judge Waring dissenting), abided by the Supreme Court's separate but equal facilities rule.

Facilities Not Equal

Attorneys for the defense admitted that facilities were not equal at the time but cited South Carolina's efforts toward equalization.

The plaintiffs appealed to the Supreme Court which remanded the case to the three-judge court to report on progress being made toward equalization. In the meantime, Judge Waring had retired and Judge Doby of the circuit court of appeals was named in his stead. The three-judge court reported to the Supreme Court that South Carolina was making a satisfactory effort to equalize. The plantiffs urged the Supreme Court to review its long established separate, but equal, facilities rule, and to pass anew on segregation, per se. The court agreed to do this, and at the same time in December 1952 heard four other school segregation cases. Before adjourning for the summer, the court asked for additional arguments and information to be presented December 7.

dicate by this statement that he does not expect segregation in the schools to continue forever, but at the same time he left no doubt as to his position at the present."

McCullough charged that the governor's statement had been used out of context to show Mr. Byrnes as a "relentless persecutor of Negroes." He said "it is never presented along with his declaration in the same speech to the teachers, that it must be the duty of humane white people of the state as individuals to see that innocent Negro children are not deprived of an education because of false leaders."

The South Carolina brief for the hearing was filed this week. It is contended that the 14th amendment was not intended to end segregation of Negro and white people in public schools, and that the highest tribunal does not have the power "to construe the amendment adversely to the understanding of its framers as abolishing segregation."

John W. Davis, Democratic nominee for president in 1924, will argue the South Carolina case. He may be the first attorney heard.

NAACP Brief

The brief on behalf of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the instigator of the South Carolina suit, was filed a few days earlier. The Justice department has also filed a 188-page brief, arguing that the court has full power to act.

Filing of the NAACP brief, according to the Lighthouse and Informer, Negro newspaper published in Columbia, represented the combined effort of 130 per-

Negroes Petition To Enter Schools In Beaufort, S. C.

BEAUFORT, S. C.—In a move aimed at wiping out segregation in the public schools here, copies of a petition asking that Negro students be admitted to Beaufort county white school have been received by seven Beaufort school trustees.

The petition, with forty-one signatures affixed, charges that Negro schools in Beaufort county are "Unequal and inferior in plant, equipment, curricula and other opportunities and advantages.

The eight-page petition also charges that it is "impossible for a Negro child" to obtain equal educational opportunities in segregated schools.

PRELIMINARY MOVE

The petition is viewed as a preliminary move in action leading to a federal court case similar to the Clarendon County, S. C., case before the United States Supreme Court. The Clarendon County suit also attempts to stop racial segregation at the public school level.

James H. Hinton, state president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, stated that segregation in the Beaufort public school would be challenged earlier this month when he stated that a group of patrons of Robert Smalls High in Beaufort would be plaintiffs in such a petition.

SIGNIFICANCE EXPLAINED

The significance of the petition was explained by Rev. A. C. Redd of Columbia, executive director of the South Carolina Conference of the NAACP, Thursday in speeches at Grace Chapel in Beaufort and at Port Royal.

The petition was drawn up by NAACP attorneys in Columbia and was mailed Friday to seven directors of Beaufort school district one, including the district superintendent and county superintendent of schools.

The next move would seem to be up to the school trustees, who had no comment Friday night.

To Correct Educational Inadequacies

Beaufort Parents Petition To Open Town's White Schools

By A. M. RIVERA JR.

BEAUFORT, S. C. — A petition to open the white schools of this sea coast town was filed last week in Federal Court by NAACP lawyers representing fifty or sixty parents and patrons of the Robert Smalls School.

It was the South Carolina branch of the NAACP which backed the now famous Clarendon County school suit of 1950, the first in modern times to sue for integration in public schools. This is one of five school cases now before the U. S. Supreme Court.

The action was agreed upon at a meeting of the NAACP at the Washington Library, July 14, at which time agreements signed by the Negro parents were collected and carried back to Columbia for study preparatory to writing the petition.

A. C. Redd, executive secretary of the South Carolina Conference of the NAACP, told the writer that the petition would be presented to the county superintendent of education and the members of the board of trustees of the local school district.

M. L. Bostic, chairman of the school district, said that being handed papers would be a new experience for him and that if it happened, he'd have to have legal advice.

Mrs. Mae Dixon said the petition is the result of unsatisfactory relations with the county school board. They said equal facilities promised for the Robert Smalls School had not been provided and that the present enlargement is inadequate.

James M. Hinton, president of the South Carolina NAACP Conference, told this paper that the Federal Government will be brought into this case because of the large amount of money being allocated here to enlarge and extend segregated facilities. Hinton said that the United States had spent over $900,000 in education in Beaufort County under the law created to relieve Federally impacted areas. The United States Government allocated $206,000 for improvements of the Robert Smalls School, which the petitioners claim to be unsatisfactory now and claim will be inadequate when the construction is completed.

Hinton was quick to question President Eisenhower's April statement, "Whenever Federal funds are expended for anything, no American can justify discrimination, legally, logically or morally in spending those funds."

The normal school population here is being increased constantly by the expanding personnel at the Naval Hospital and at the Parris Island Marine Base.

The Beaufort Negro Citizens Committee, working on the school situation, was advised in April by the NAACP to bring court action. Hinton said at that time that the NAACP, to which the local group had turned for advice, was "committed to the complete elimination of segregation" and could not take any steps for equal facilities. The April release pointed out that the local Negroes had presented a written statement to the Board of Trustees of School District 1, expressing "dissatisfaction over the location of the new (Robert Smalls) high school and the broader problem of equalizing facilities, and charged the board with negligence in failing to provide adequate cafeteria, gymnasium and auditorium space and service in the new school situations."

Allan Paul, county superintendent of education; O. K. McDaniel, then superintendent of District One and now supervisor on the county school building program; Bostick, chairman of District One trustees, replied in detail, pointing out that the Robert Smalls construction was being done with Federal aid funds allotted on the basis of Federally connected children. The same statement pointed out that at that time none of the "sales tax" money had been allocated for white schools, while $966,000 had been allocated for Negro schools. It was also asserted that the Negroes were obtaining more than their proportionate share of the Federal aid allocations.

Segregation Suit Filed in S. C.

COLUMBIA, S. C. — (ANP) — State Negro leaders have taken preliminary steps to initiate a suit, identical to one now before the U. S. Supreme Court, asking that Beaufort county white schools be opened to Negroes.

No reason for the move was given by James M. Hinton, state president of the NAACP. Presumably a decision in the Clarendon county, S. C., school case, now pending before the Supreme Court, and which seeks an end to racial segregation at the public school level, would also determine the proposed Beaufort suit.

A petition placed before the Beaufort district school board, charges that Negro schools in the county are unequal and inferior in plant, equipment, curricula and other opportunities and advantages."

Answered E. R. Crow, director of the state educational finance commission, all funds allocated to date under South Carolina's multi-million dollar school improvement program have gone to Negro schools.

The petition further charged, however, as was argued before the Supreme court, that the fiction of "separate but equal" schools will never spell true equality. Said the signers of the petition, it would be "impossible for Negro children to obtain an equal education in any segregated school.

Turks To Negro School In S. C.

SUMTER, S. C. — (INS) — A colony of people claiming to be descendants of Turks presented a strange racial segregation issue yesterday at Sumter.

They are seeking admission of their children to a Sumter School that bars colored people in line with South Carolina law.

White parents have protested a recent order by Federal district Judge Ashton H. Williams paving the way for the children to attend classes at Hillcrest School.

WHITES STRIKE

Judge Williams yesterday re-considered his earlier ruling when 100 of the white children staged a stay-at-home strike.

The judge advised the descendants of the early Turkish settlers to return to the school for colored people which they previously attended pending further hearing of the case on September 9 at Charleston.

The Turks claim they are descendants of a family who lived on the plantation of Gen. William Sumter, a revolutionary war hero.

Decision Delayed In 'Third Race' School Segregation

CHARLESTON, S. C., Sept. 9 (U.P.)—A federal judge delayed a decision today on the issue of education for children of a "third race" in South Carolina where whites and Negroes already are in conflict over segregated schools.

Judge Ashton H. Williams heard a petition by a dark-complexioned colony of Sumter County citizens known as "Turks" seeking admission of their children to the Hillcrest School for whites.

The Turks, who are believed to be descendants of an Arabic strain which settled in South Carolina shortly after the Revolutionary War, formerly sent their children to a school of their own. But no provision was made for them in the new state consolidated educational program.

The Turks refused to let their children go to a Negro school and after Judge Williams gave them temporary permission to attend Hillcrest, some 150 white families boycotted the school.

"Turks Not Negroes" Says Lawyer In SC School Case

CHARLESTON, S. C.—(INS)—Attorneys for a colony of "Turks" Wednesday told a Federal Court Judge in Charleston why their children should be permitted to attend white schools in Sumter County.

The attorneys contend that the "Turk" children are not Negroes, and therefore do not fall under the state law prohibiting Negroes from attending white schools.

Judge Ashton H. Williams gave no opinion in the case and conferred with attorneys after the hearing to determine whether the problem should go to a special referee.

Judge Williams previously had ruled that the "Turks" could go to school with white children. As a result of the temporary order, white parents withdrew their children from the school, and the judge reversed his decision, pending yesterday's hearing.

Children of the Turk colony have been going to a school of their own.

The colony, which has kept to itself for more than a century, is said to be composed of descendants of Turks who settled in South Carolina before the Revolutionary War.

$5,000 raised by S.C. to reargue school cases

COLUMBIA, S.C.—The South Carolina Conference of NAACP Branches, the group which initiated the litigation to break down segregation in elementary schools, last week gave the NAACP special legal fund a contribution of $5,000 to assist it in rearguing five such cases before the U.S. Supreme Court.

The $5,000 check was presented to Thurgood Marshall, NAACP chief counsel, by the Rev. James M. Hinton, president of the conference, at a rally held here on Sept. 20.

Mr. Marshall, in accepting the check, told the cheering South Carolinians gathered at the meeting that the NAACP's legal department was concentrating all of its efforts on preparing for the cases, which will be argued again by the highest court in the land during the week of Dec. 7.

In addition to the Rev. Mr. Hinton, Bishop Frank M. Reid of the AME church and W. E. Soloman spoke.

Labor Groups Helping

This list of contributors shows that in addition to newspapers and NAACP groups, themselves, other civic groups of various kinds are interesting themselves in the drive to raise the $38,700 which is the minimum amount needed to prepare and file the legal papers to clinch the difficult cases before the court.

Among those groups are the Hotel and Restaurant Employees Union, AFL, as well as the CIO, which recently donated $2,500 to the NAACP special legal fund.

Hugo Ernst, general president of the HREU, last week made a plea to all of the various locals in the international to make a "special effort to help raise the 'Fighting Fund for Freedom'."

White Families Demand Equal Carolina Schools

COLUMBIA, S.C., Dec. 29 (INS)—A group of white parents today filed suit in federal court in Columbia, demanding that their rural school facilities be "equalized" with those of white and Negro schools in a neighboring community.

Parents of children in the farming community of Gaston, in Lexington County, asked that their rural elementary school be improved in proportion to the improvements made on white and Negro schools at nearby Swansea.

The parents based their case on the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution which, they contend, guarantees their children equal school facilities.

The group said that as a result of improvements made during the last two years at Swansea, the enrollment at Gaston is decreasing, and parents are transferring their children to other institutions.

Byrnes Asks Segregation Action Delay

COLUMBIA, S. C., Jan. 14—(INS)—Governor Byrnes advised the South Carolina Legislature today to adopt a wait-and-see attitude on school segregation and urged enactment of expanded programs in education and hospitalization.

Gov. Byrnes

His recommendation included a pay raise for schoolteachers and state employees and a program of permanent improvements at colleges and mental institutions totaling close to $12,000,000.

He told a joint session of the assembly to withhold ratification of an amendment eliminating from the state Constitution a requirement that the state provide a public school system. The amendment would clear the way for turning public schools over to private operators.

A U. S. Supreme Court decision is expected early this year on the Clarendon County, S. C., school segregation case. Byrnes said:

"Should the decision be favorable, you might consider ratification unnecessary. Should the decision be adverse, then the General Assembly can decide whether the amendment should be ratified."

The following Legislature recommendations were made by the South Carolina chief executive:

1. An average pay hike of 10 per cent for schoolteachers.

2. A salary increase for most, but not all, state employees.

3. A raise to $35 a month in pay for school bus drivers.

4. An increase in school building funds by raising the allotment from $15 a student to $20 a student.

5. An appropriation for purchase of new school busses.

6. The spending of $5,000,000 from surplus funds for permanent improvements at the white and Negro mental hospitals and for a training school for mentally defective Negro children.

7. The spending of $5,500,000 for permanent improvements at institutions of higher learning.

8. A new system of bond issues, backed by tiution fees, by which colleges can finance permanent improvements in the future.

Gov. Byrnes in Plea For 'Equal' Schools

By CARTER JEWELL

COLUMBIA, S. C. (ANP) — Gov. James F. Byrnes, national voice of the Dixiecrats, made a strong plea last week for "equal school" facilities as opposed to mixed schools in his address to the General Assembly of South Carolina.

Gov. Byrnes said an objective of the current school program is "to equalize facilities for the races." He said is this being achieved. He remarked:

"The courts that have thus far passed upon the litigation seeking to abolish segregation have favorably commented upon our sincere efforts to comply with the law which requires equal facilities.

"We have done it because it was right. It was wise because it has helped us in our efforts to uphold the provision of our state constitution that the races shall be kept separate in our public school system."

Byrnes said the "program (of prevailing equal facilities for the two races) has been a serious financial burden because we have been called upon to do in a few years what should have been done through the last 50 years." He added:

"As we have more accredited high schools for Negro students, we will have greater demands on the State college at Orangeburg. Last September this college could not accept the students who sought to enter. Its facilities must be greatly increased."

In the fight in the South to prevent the mixing of the races in state institutions of higher learning, several state officials have sought to set-up schools for courses in law and other fields in state supported colleges for Negroes so that Negroes desiring such courses will not need to seek them in white colleges and universities.

Such courses hurriedly set-up at South Carolina State college at Orangeburg have been described as woefully inadequate and unsatisfactory by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and competent educators. Byrnes is trying desperately to find a way to circumvent any federal court decision which might declare that separate public schools for the races are unconstitutional.

The South Carolina governor has already served notice that if the United States Supreme court outlaws segregated schools he will ask the state legislature to change the state constitution so that the schools will not operate under the state but will be private institutions.

Under private operation, Byrnes hopes that any decision of the federal courts will not apply and that separation of the races can be continued. Georgia, Virginia and Mississippi and possibly other southern states hope to find similar means of evading a possible federal court ruling against segregated schools.

Mixed Schools Scored By S. C. Official

COLUMBIA, S. C. — "A great majority of both races in South Carolina will be perfectly satisfied" to attend segregated schools regardless of the Supreme Court decision, a state official said here Saturday.

This was the opinion expressed by State Attorney General T. C. Callison, in reply to a letter from the Pittsburgh Courier, a national weekly.

Callison said "If an adverse opinion is rendered in the segregation cases, some adjustments will have to be made in our public school systems," but "I am not in a position to make any declaration as to a program which this state may follow in the event of an adverse opinion."

The State Attorney General said he feared there had been much misunderstanding on the part of people of other sections of the nation as to the real picture of the South on the race question.

"The State of South Carolina recognizes the political, economic, civil and religious rights of the Negro," Callison said, "but it also recognizes the absolute right of each race to control its own social affairs, without any governmental regulation of any kind or character."

He also pointed to the rapid progress being made in the state in developing the state's public school system in order to banish anything like discrimination against either race.

Clarendon Says Race Schools Are Now Equal

SUMMERTON, S. C.—(ANP)—The school district of Clarendon county where one of the school suits scheduled for further arguments before the U. S. Supreme court had its origin, now boasts of having equal facilities for Negro and white pupils.

Some $700,000 has been spent to complete the Scott's Branch and South Bend grammar schools and the Spring high school for Negroes H. B. Betchman, district superintendent, said.

Parents of Negro pupils in the Summerton school district filed suit more than two years ago, declaring that facilities for their children were unequal to those provided for white pupils in the district. The parents, in their suit, asked that segregation be declared unconstitutional.

Teachers Get Jobs Pending Supreme Court Decision

CHARLESTON, S. C.—(ANP)—Public school teachers in St. Paul school district are assured of a job until the U. S. Supreme court renders a decision on the constitutionality of segregation in the nation's public schools.

That is what R. D. Schreder, superintendent of St. Paul district, told newly appointed teachers last week.

He pointed out that a decision by the high tribunal outlawing segregation would necessitate a re-organization of the school set-up, and, consequently, no job could be guaranteed after such a decision.

"This represents my personal opinion as superintendent," he said. "I feel it is only fair to the teachers to notify them that there necessarily would be a general re-organization of the state school system should the court rule against segregation. Whoever does the reorganizing, of course, would have a free hand in naming the teachers."

Clarendon County Says Schools Equal

SUMMERTON, S. C., July 13.—The school district of Clarendon county where one of the school suits scheduled for further arguments before the U. S. Supreme Court had its origin, now boasts of having equal facilities for Negro and white pupils.

Some $700,000 has been spent to complete the Scott's Branch and South Bend grammar schools and the Spring high school for Negroes, H. B. Betchman, district superintendent, said.

Parents of Negro pupils in the Summerton school district filed suit more than two years ago, declaring that facilities for their children were unequal to those provided for white pupils in the district. The parents, in their suit, asked that segregation be declared unconstitutional.

In a decision rendered by a special three-judge court, the separate but equal theory was upheld by two of the judges, with one judge dissenting. The judge, J. Waites Waring, held that segregation per se (in itself) was inequality.

The court ordered the school district to equalize school facilities for Negroes with those for whites, and to report back to it within six months on progress being made on equalization. The statment issued last week by Betchman was in line with this agreement.

Negroes appealed the decision of the three-judge special court to the Supreme court. It is one of the five postponed until October 12 for a final decision.

New School Suit In So. Carolina

BENNETTSVILLE, S. C. — (ANP)—Another suit challenging segregation in public schools has been filed in South Carolina. The latest one, filed with the County Board of Education here, includes the signatures of some fifteen parents of Negro children.

J. Waties Waring Lone Dissenter Among 3 Jurists

CHARLESTON, S. C.—Declaring segregation in the public schools a "matter of legislative policy for the several states, with which the federal courts are powerless to interfere" the special three-judge federal court which heard testimony in the Clarendon County school case begun by the NAACP, ruled segregation in the public schools as constitutional.

Only one of the Judges, J. Waties Waring, differed with the majority opinion and voiced strong opposition to the maintenance of segregation in the public schools.

It was Waring's opinion that "We should be unwilling to straddle or avoid this issue and if the suggestion made by these Defendants (to maintain the separate but equal theory) is to be adopted as the type of justice to be meted out by this Court, then I want no part of it."

From the national headquarters of the NAACP it was announced by Thurgood Marshall, special counsel, that they had not seen the court's opinion, but they would give it careful study with the view toward an appeal to the United States Supreme Court.

Thus the 2-1 opinion hastened a ruling by the United States Supreme Court which to date has avoided issuing a direct opinion on whether segregation is in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution.

Waring further contended: "The law of South Carolina considers a person of one-eighth African ancestry to be colored. Why this proportion? How are the trustees to know who are whites and who are colored?

"If it is dangerous and evil for a white child to be associated with another child, one of whose grandparents was of African descent, is it not equally dangerous for one with a one-sixteenth percentage?"

Circuit Judge John J. Parker and District Judge George Bell Timmerman concurred with the long standing practice of "separate but equal" asserting that "there can be no question but where separate schools are maintained for Negroes and whites, the educational facilities and opportunities afforded by them must be equal."

"We think, however, that segregation of the races in the public schools, so long as equality of rights is preserved, is a matter of legislative policy for several states, with which the federal courts are powerless to interfere."

Holding that state Constitutions providing for segregation are not in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment the court pointed out that educational facilities for Negroes in Clarendon County are not equal and said "This inequality is violative of the equal protection clause."

Waring, however, called the practice of segregation "unreasonable, unscientific, and based on unadulterated prejudice."

He held: "If is all caused by unreasoning emotional reactions and these are gained in early childhood. Let the child's mind be poisoned by prejudice of this kind and it is practically impossible ever to remove these impressions however many years he may have of teaching by philosophers, religious leaders or patriotic citizens."

Congratulating the people of Clarendon County for their courage in bringing the suit, Waring said, "There is no longer any basis for a state to claim the power to separate according to race in graduate schools, universities and colleges. I am of the opinion that all of the legal guide posts, expert testimony, common sense and reason point unerringly to the conclusion that the system of segregation in education adopted and practiced in the state of South Carolina must go and must go now."

Waring is the Judge who opened the South Carolina Democratic primaries to Negroes.

Walter White, executive secretary of the NAACP reported that the case would be immediately appealed to the United States Supreme Court which is customary with cases involving state constitutions that are heard by special three judge courts.

Segregation Upheld By Federal Tribunal

By the United Press.

CHARLESTON, S. C., June 23.—Aacial segregation was upheld 2 to 1 today by a three-judge federal Court that had been asked to rule on the first suit to attack the issue directly as a social principle. Judge J. Waties Waring, who outlawed South Carolina's white primary in 1947, dissented.

The majority decision said state laws regarding segregation were "not of themselves violative" of the 14th—equal rights—Amendmen to the U.S. Constitution and that plaintiffs were not entitled to an injunction forbidding segregation in the public schools.

The court, found, however, that school facilities for Negro children were not "substantially equal" to those afforded white children. That inequality, the court said, is violative of the equal protective clause of the 14th Amendment and must be corrected.

Follow Decision Of U. S. Supreme Court In S. C. School Segregation Case

Doctrine Of Separate But Equal Again Upheld By U. S. Court

NAACP Prepares For Early Appeal Of Case

Charleston, S. C., June 27 — (DSN) — The NAACP lost the first round in its all-out attack on segregation in the public schools of the South when a special three-judge court following the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court in a number of cases, held that the state must provide equal educational facilities and opportunities for Negroes, but at the same time upheld the state laws providing for segregation of Negroes in the Public Schools.

The special three-judge court which heard the case, in which a two-to-one decision was made in favor of continuing segregation in the public schools of the state, was composed of Circuit Judge John J. Parker, District Judge, George Bell Timmerman, and District Judge J. Waties Waring, who has been under fire in South Carolina since his decision permitting Negroes to vote in the South Carolina Democratic Primary.

Judge Waring entered a vigirous dissenting opinion in the case in which he said "there is no longer any basis for a state to claim the power to separate according to race in graduate school, universities and colleges. I am of the opinion that all of the legal guide posts, expert testimony, common sense and reason point unerringly to the conclusion that the system of segregation in education adopted and practiced in the state of South Carolina must go and must go now.

The case which was brought by Negro citizens of rural Clarendon County with the support of the NAACP, where there is presented some of the most glaring defects in the separate but equal doctrine has attracted nation-wide attention as the first case directly attacking the segregation laws of the southern states, which has not yet come directly before the U. S. Supreme Court.

Gov. James F. Byrnes of South Carolina who had said that the state would reluctantly close its public schools if segregation was outlawed by the courts declined comment following the decision.

other" to the end that "unity es sential to combat communism i impossible."

Capt. Malan, who is a former "Battle of Britain" Air Force, said that South Africa veterans "will not rest in their fight against the government's separate representation of voters bill, which puts colored voters (those of mixed or Afro-European descent) on a separate role.

"Surely we have the right to demand that we have a government which will assure the unity of all South Africans, irrespective of color, against so dangerous an enemy."

School Bias Decision Is Not the End

By A. M. RIVERA Jr.

CHARLESTON, S. C. — A three-judge Federal court — made up of Carolina judges— last week held that South Carolina's segregated schools are legal, but directed Clarendon County—where the case originated—to equalize its public schools with a sixty-day time limit being given the state in which it must show progress towards equalization.

It was not, however, a unanimous decision. Judge J. Waties Waring dissented from the opinions of his two fellow-judges.

Waring Hits OK Of Segregation

CHARLESTON, S. C. — (INS) — Racial segregation in South Carolina schools — under attack in a widely-heralded test case — was upheld Saturday in a split decision by a three-judge Federal court in Charleston. The NAACP announced it will appeal to the U. S. Supreme court.

The majority, Judges John J. Parker and George Bell Timmerman, simultaneously ordered Clarendon county, S. C., officials to equalize school facilities for Negro and white pupils.

Judge J. Waties Waring, who has consistently ruled against segregation in recent federal cases, wrote a dissenting opinion arguing that South Carolina "should follow the intendment and meaning of the Constitution of the United States."

Waring said, "If segregation is wrong, then the place to stop it is in the first grade and not in graduate colleges I am of the opinion that all of the legal guideposts, expert testimony, common sense and reason point unerringly to the conclusion that the system of segregation in education adopted and practiced in the State of South Carolina must go and must go now. Segregation is per se inequality."

"I had hoped that this court would take this view of the situation and a make a clear-cut declaration that the State of South Carolina should follow the intendment and meaning of the constitution of the United States and that it shall not abridge the privileges accorded to, or deny equal protection of its laws to any of its citizens."

Agree on Inequality

Judges Parker, of Charlotte, N. C. and Timmerman, of Columbia, S. C., agreed that Negro pupils in the county do not have facilities on a par with those provided for whites but argued:

". . . The inequality suffered by the plaintiffs results not from the law but from the way it has been administered . . . We think our injunction should be directed to removing the inequalities resulting from administration within the framework of the law rather than nullifying the law itself."

Judges Parker and Timmerman

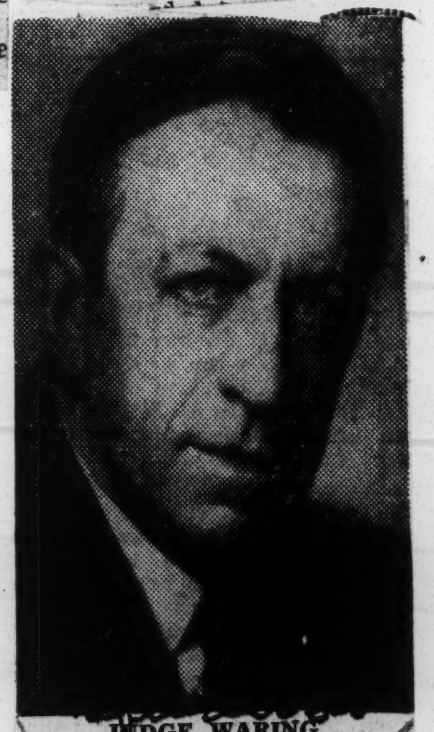
The injunction ordered immediate establishment of equal "educational facilities, equipment, curricula and opportunities" for Negroes.

The majority decree also ordered Clarendon county school authorities to report to the court within six months on the progress of the equalization program.

16,000-Word Opinion

The 16,000-word, 49-foot long opinion brought temporary victory to supporters of the South's racial barriers. The Clarendon county case was the latest in a long series filed by the NAACP—often successfully—in border and southern states.

South Carolina's legislature has established a new sales tax levy to provide funds which Gov. Byrnes promised will be used to improve Negro educational facilities. Byrnes declined comment on the verdict.



JUDGE WARING

In his dissenting opinion, Judge Waring said:

"There is no longer any basis for a state to claim the power to separate according to race in graduate schools, universities and colleges. In the instant case, the plaintaiff produced a large number of witnesses It is significant that the defendants brought but two.

These two were not trained educators. One was an official of the Clarendon schools who said that the school system needed improvement and that the school officials were hopeful and expectant of obtaining money from state funds to improve all facilities.

"It is openly and frankly admitted by all parties that the present facilities are hopelessly disproportional and no one knows how much money would be required to bring the colored school system up to a parity with the white school system.

"On the other hand, the plaintiffs brought many witnesses, some of them of national reputation in various educational fields. They showed beyond a doubt that the evils of segregation and color prejudice come from early training."

Sees Ultimate Victory

Walter White, executive secretary of the NAACP, said emphatically the association is not abandoning its fight against jim crow schools. He said the NAACP would "appeal immediately to the U. S. Supreme court."

James M. Hinton, president of the South Carolina conference of the NAACP, said he believed the nation's highest tribunal will reverse the lower court's ruling.

"We feel as strongly now that segregation is morally wrong and must be eliminated if America is to focus her impact on the world of darker skinned peoples."

FIRST DIRECT ATTACK

The case was that of the NAACP representing parents of Clarendon County Negro school pupils, in which for the first time the direct attack was made upon segregation per se. Heretofore, attacks have been made on the "separate but equal" phase, but this was a momentous case of the greatest implications and was aimed directly at segregation itself, as such.

ATLANTA—The Atlanta school jim-crow suit will not be affected by the South Carolina ruling. Attorney A. P. Walden said, "The suit will not have any effect on the prosecution of our case." Governor Talmadge was delighted to hear of South Carolina's decision and predicted the Supreme Court would follow the 100-year precedent.

In Atlanta, Ga., Saturday, Thurgood Marshall, chief NAACP legal counsel, said when told of the decision: "We have not yet seen the opinion handed down by the court, however, we will give it careful study with a view to probable appeal to the United State Supreme Court."

Senior Circuit Judge John J. Parker of Charlotte, N. C., and District Judge George Bell Timmerman of South Carolina, writing the majority opinion declared segregation a matter of local legislation and not in violation "per se" to the Fourteenth Amendment.

SAYS LEVELS DIFFER

The joint opinion of Judges Parker and Timmerman stated that "the problems of segregation as applied to graduate and professional education is essentially different from that involved in segregation in education at the lower levels . . . it is difficult for the state to maintain segregated schools for Negroes in this field which will afford them opportunities for education and professional advancement equal to those afforded by the graduate and professional schools maintained for white people."

Perhaps the most significant statement in the majority opinion held "the Federal Courts would be going far outside their constitutional function where they attempt to prescribe educational policies for the state in such matters." The opinion further held that "there is nothing in the Constitution that requires that the state grant to all members of the public a common right to use every facility that it affords."

JUDGE WARING DISSENTS

Judge J. Waties Waring of Charleston, S. C., in his dissenting opinion took judicial notice of the evils of segregation and color prejudice and declared, "If segregation is wrong, then the place to stop it is in the first grade and not in the graduate colleges. I am of the opinion that all of the legal guideposts, expert testimony, common sense and reason point unerringly to the conclusion that the system of segregation in education adopted in the State of South Carolina must go and must go now. Segregation is per se inequality."

The decision was no surprise to whites or Negroes. Negroes did not feel that they would get a 1-2 decision in the lower court.

TO FIGHT ON

Walter White, executive secretary of the NAACP, announced that "the organization is not abandoning its fight on the South's segregated schools. He said that the association would appeal immediately to the United States Supreme Court."

The decision of the three judge court may go directly to the Supreme Court on appeal or certorari. The Court held that the segregation did violate the equal practice clause of the Fourteenth Amendment but denied that the State Constitution violated the Fourteenth Amendment.

The opinion of the Court was about forty pages long.

There are similar cases on file in North Carolina and Virginia.

'Have No Fear' Of Segregation Ban, Gov. Byrnes Declares

COLUMBIA, S. C., Jan. 24—(AP) "We need have no fear" that segregation in the state's public schools will be abolished, Gov. James F. Byrnes declared Wednesday.

His statement came in an address to the general assembly. He asked for a $75,000,000 school construction bond issue.

"We will find a lawful way of educating all of South Carolina's children," he assured the lawmakers, "and at the same time providing separate schools for the races.

"The politicians in Washington and the Negro agitators in South Carolina who today seek to abolish segregation in all schools will learn," he predicted, "that what a carpet-bag government could not do in the (Civil War) reconstruction period, cannot be done in this period.

"And the white people of South Carolina will see to it that innocent colored children will not be denied an education because of selfish politicians and misguided agitators."

Governor Byrnes Orders Defense Of Segregation

COLUMBIA, S. C.—(INS)— Gov. James F. Byrnes Friday asked South Carolina's attorney general to defend the state in a suit seeking an end to segregation in the schools of Clarendon County.

Byrnes said that "determination of this issue affects every school and therefore it is proper for the state to defend the case."

The suit was brought by Negro parents against Clarendon County school officials. It attacks, as a violation of the 14th Amendment, portions of the State Constitution which provide that schools shall be equal but separate.

A three-judge federal court will meet May 28 in Charleston to hear the case.

Dixie States Mix Views Of Suit On Segregation

Byrnes Asks United Southern Front

COLUMBIA, S. C., March 27 (U.P.) Dixie leaders showed mixed reaction today to Gov. James F. Byrnes' plans for a united Southern front to fight a forthcoming suit in South Carolina which seeks to overthrow public school segregation. Some states indicated a hands-off policy.

A United Press poll of governors and attorneys general in 16 states outside of South Carolina which maintain racial segregation in public schools showed:

1. Some border states probably will not join the suit.

2. Some, principally in the Deep South definitely will join

3. Most others refused to commit themselves before studying the case and receiving a formal request from Byrnes to enter the suit.

16 States Asked

Byrnes plans to ask the 16 states to file briefs supporting South Carolina and the principle of public school segregation when the case reaches the U. S. Supreme Court probably this fall.

The suit, backed by the National Association for Advancement of Colored People will be heard before a three-judge federal court in May and will be appealed directly to the high court. Negroes are attacking the principles of segregation itself, and the outcome probably will affect public school segregation all over the South.

The United Press, in advance of Byrnes' formal request, asked the governors and attorneys general if they anticipated joining the suit. None gave definite commitment. But several indicated what course their states probably will take.

Talmadge Promises

Gov. Herman Talmadge, an outspoken segregation champion, said Georgia certainly would intervene and help "fight the case to the limit" if his attorney general thought it legally advisable.

"I have directed the attorney general of Georgia to proceed in any and all cases to maintain segregation in Georgia," Talmadge said.

But Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin, Republican governor of Maryland, indicated strongly his state would not participate. While refusing direct comment until hearing from Byrnes, he said:

"I am looking forward to the day when segregation will be eliminated from Southern and border states. I hope eventually all people can live together in peace and harmony."

Persons Non-Committal

Alabama's Gov. Gordon Persons, while not committing himself, pointed out that he was elected on a platform that included support of segregation. The state's attorney general, Si Garrett, said he has told South Carolina Atty. Gen. T. C. Callison:

"I will assist the State of South Carolina in any proper way I can in its effort to uphold constitutionality of . . . segregation . . . I feel that any adverse decision on that question in South Carolina will have an important and direct bearing on . . . Alabama."

Attys. Gen. A. E. Funk, of Kentucky, and Richard W. Ervin, of Florida said their states probably will come to the support of South Carolina.

Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., of Virginia said the question would have to be "considered very carefully." But he said the state constitution requires public school segregation.

States whose governors or attorneys general refused any comment whatever before receiving Byrnes' request are North Carolina, Delaware, Mississippi, Louisiana, Missouri and Tennessee.

No Discrimination — No Public Schools

Former Secretary of State James Byrnes, now Governor of South Carolina, has issued a statement regarding the public school system of South Carolina which is quite in line with the thinking of Georgia's Governor Talmadge.

Gov. Byrnes declared recently that any attempt to mix colored and white students in the public schools of that state would lead to the turning over of the schools to the church and the dissolution of the public school system as such. He made it very plain that the intentions of a group of colored citizens who have filed suit against the present set-up were not in accord with his beliefs and that he will do everything possible to oppose.

It's exasperating to think that a man who has attained the positions which Mr. Byrnes has held in his life-time could be so narrow-minded. To think that the former Secretary of State of the United States would be so brazen with acts of race hate as to interrupt the public school system of a state is the epitome of Godless tyranny.

Governor Byrnes probably dosen't care what opportunities his statement may afford the Communist propaganda machine. Even if he did and tried to explain it off or justify it he would fail because essentially Mr. Byrnes is saying the same thing which Hitler said of the Jews and other minorities. In fact, Communist mouthings stemming from the acts of Byrnes and Talmadge are basically true regardless of what the purpose behind them may be.

The Governor of South Carolina has placed a star in his cap of racial segregation which will continue to cast its weird and ugly light across the land warning all citizens who believe in American precepts to beware. This comes as a sort of inglorious crowning of his discriminatory achievements.

Public Education Began Here In 1868

By Staff Writer

CHARLESTON — Students of historical events here — and there are a great many proud ones among them—occasionally point to the plant of the Charleston News and Courier, and The Evening Post—at 134 Meeting street, and say to the visitor: "It was right here that the Ordinance of Secession was signed."

That was December 20, 1860.

Or, down on Charleston famous Battery, pinched at one end by the merger of the Cooper and Ashley rivers, they'll point to one of the decorative cannons, besides which are stacked neatly the old balls in use then, and say "This one fired the first shot from Fort Sumter."

Peering out on the body of water formed by the Cooper and Ashley union as it flows out to the Atlantic Ocean one sees Fort Sumter in the distance. It was there that the first shot in the Civil War was fired, these students and historians agree.

The old slave market, the "George Washington slept here house" and the numerous other historic places and buildings have created for Charleston an unique place in history and American life. And this place is a pride and joy to Charlestonians.

But just as Charleston has been the beginning place for much of literary and cultural value, it is also the beginning site of much of the sstate's and south's social practice, particularly practices governing the handling of the race problem, and the status of Negroes following the lifting of the bonds of slavery following the Civil War.

For example, the constitution of the first government the state had following the Civil War was drafted right here. (They say in Hibernian Hall). That was in 1868, in a convention dominated by Negroes. Portions of that convention are still a part of South Carolina. Many portions were altered or dropped by the Tillman convention on the constitution in 1895. And one of the works of the 1868 covention—a public school system—after a bit of tampering with in 1895, returns here for adjustment, but this time in a federal court.

On Monday, May 28, beginning at 10 A. M., in the rather tiny federal court room of U. S. District Court Judge Waties Waring, three federal judges will hear pleadings, retire and later decide on what should be the operation of the state's public schools: Whether the non-segregrated policy of the Negro-dominated convention here of 1868 was a better one, or the Tillman convention of 1865, which provided for racial segregation.

The scene is on the opposite side of Meeting street from Charleston's famed St. Michael's church, about three blocks away from the site of the signing of the Ordinance of Secession and about the same distance from the meeting place of the 1868 constitutional convention.

Constitutional Issue

The issue is one involving provisions of the South Carolina constitution, which plaintiffs' attorneys argue are in violation of the U. S. Constitution, particularly, the Fourteenth Amendment to that constitution. For that reason, it will be heard by three judges, in lieu of one.

Sitting with Mr. Waring will be Circuit Court of Appeals Judge John H. Parker of Charlotte, and U. S. District Court Judge George Bell Timmerman of Columbia, who several months ago had to [illegible] similar issue in a case [illegible] by parents of Turkish [illegible]ren in Sumter.

Lawyers for the plaintiffs, all residents of School District 22 in Clarendon county, are Thurgood Marshall, Robert L. Carter, special, and assistant special counsel for the NAACP's national legal staff, and Harold R. Boulware of Columbia, chief counsel for the South Carolina NAACP.

Representing the defendants are Robert McC. Figg, Jr. of Charleston and S. E. Rogers of Summerton. With these will be part of the staff of state Attorney General T. C. Callison and possibly members of the state legal staffs of three other southern states.

Plaintiffs Named

Plaintiffs are: Harry Briggs, Anne Gibson, Mose Oliver, Bennie Parson, Edmund Ragin, Luchrisher Richardson, Lee Richardson, James H. Bennett, Mary Oliver, Willie M. Stukes, G. H. Henry, Robert Georgia, Rebecca Richburg, Gabriel Tyndal, Susan Lawson, Frederick Oliver, Onetha Bennett, Hazel Ragin and Henry Scott.

Named as benefactors in the action are 46 children of these plaintiffs, who are asking that segregation be eliminated in that district, the county, and over the state.

The particular state statute under attack is section 7 of Article II of the 1895 constitution, to wit:

"Separate schools shall be provided for children of the white and colored races, and no child of either race shall ever be permitted to attend a school provided for children of the other race."

(Despite popular declarations, it is noticeable that this section does not promise the "equal" facilities state leaders say it guaranteed to colored children.

May Be Lengthy Case

Indications here on the week-end were that the case is certain to require several days to get in a bulk of testimony from both sides. The NAACP lawyers said they were bringing in about a dozen witnesses, mostly in the field of education, psychology ect. There will also be a minute description of conditions in the colored and white schools and a minute presentation by the defense, whose biggest argument in its answer appears to be the state's right to police its own affairs.

A check indicated also that Charleston boarding places are set to do a record business, beginning on the week-end. Hundreds from other sections of the state have indicated intentions of being here for the trial, which is considered one of the most important ones since the Civil War days.

On this case hangs the fate of "Jim Crow" in the south, and nation and whatever side wins, Charleston is again in the center of things, although it may not be approving.

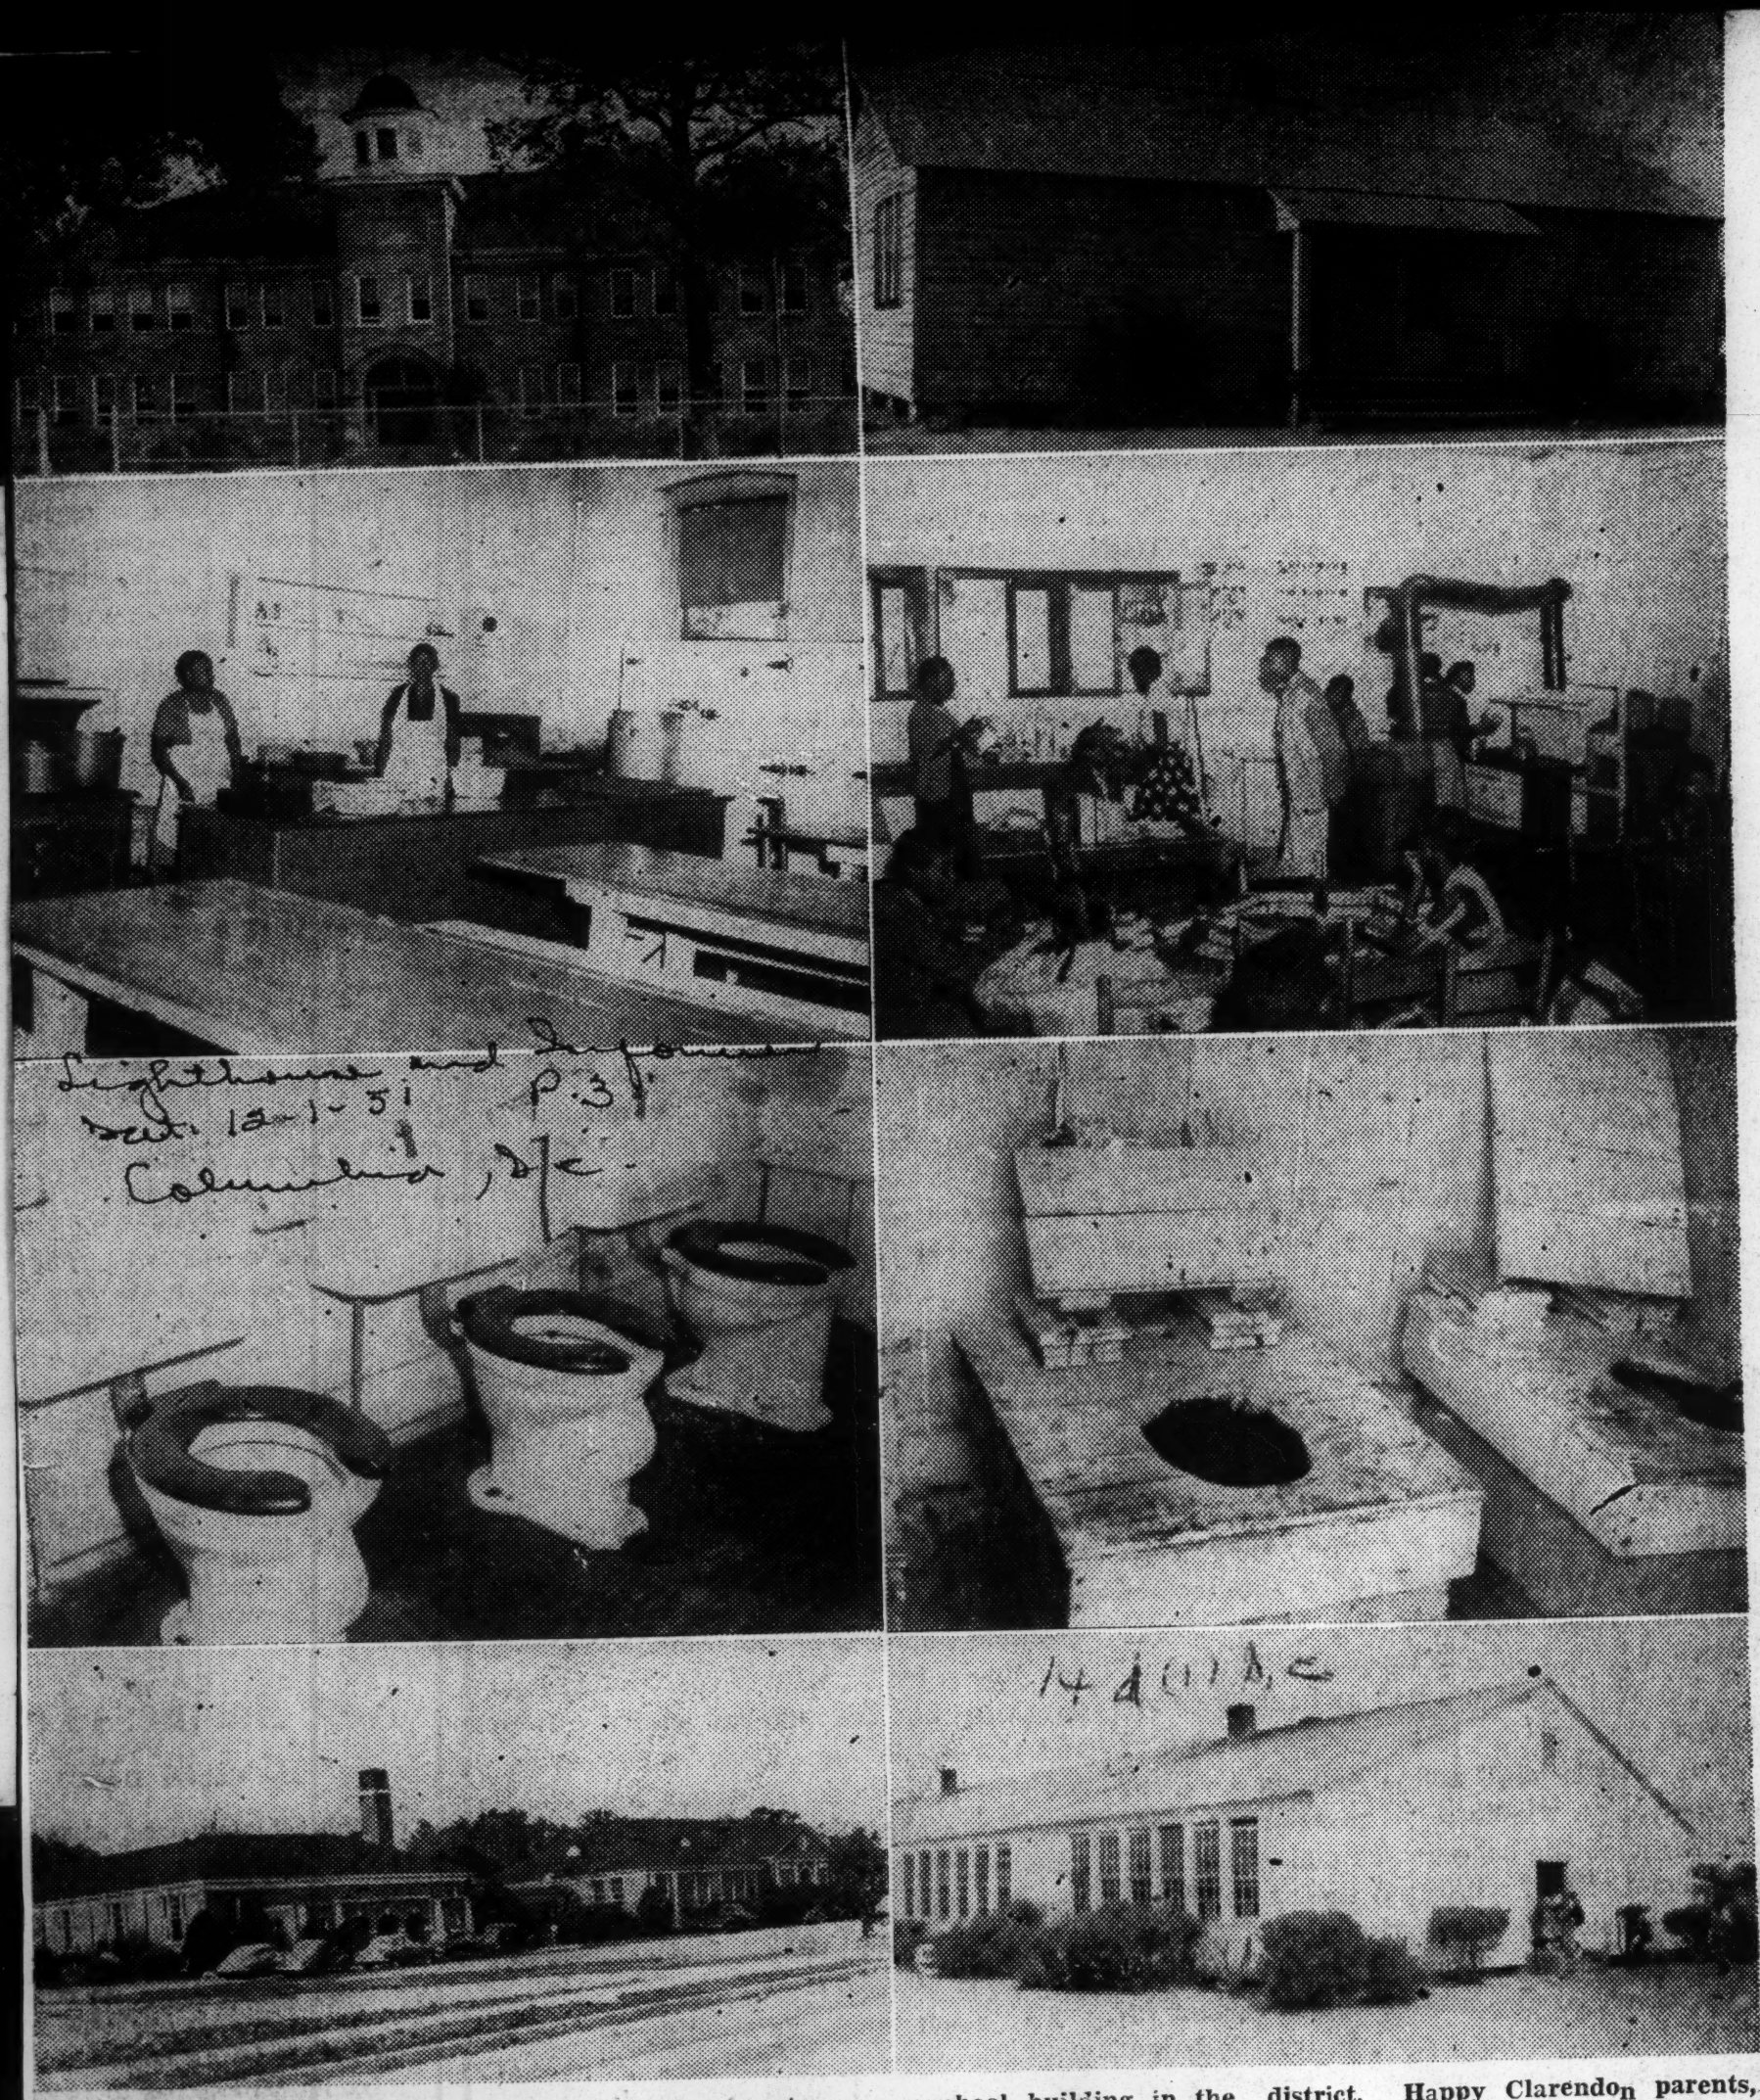
MARSHALL, STAFF ARRIVE

CHARLESTON — (ANS) — Thurgood Marshall, Robert L. Carter and several expert witnesses to appear in the Clarendon county anti-segregation suit here beginning Monday, arrived here by train early Thursday morning.

The party was met by Eugene A. Montgomery, state NAACP secretary, who said that he and some of the experts were leaving immediately for Clarendon county for a last minute check on details.

Attorney Harold R. Boulware of Columbia was scheduled to arrive here later in the day. All are to go over final strategy and materials on the week-end.

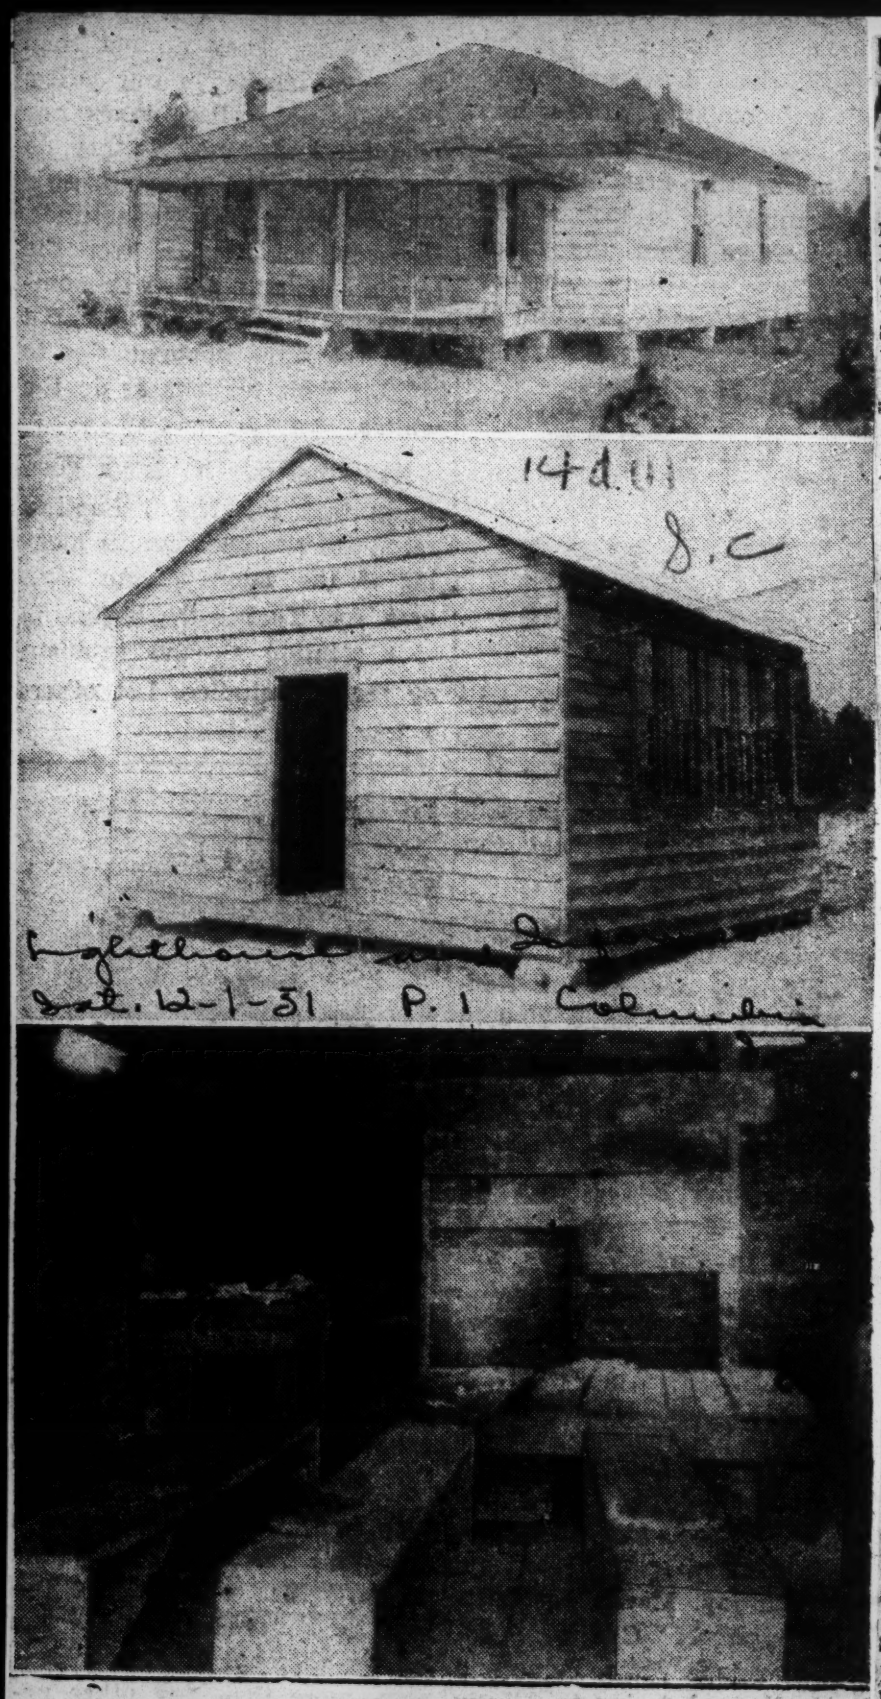
14d(1) 1951 South Carolina



WITHIN A YEAR you won't be able to see the pictures on the right above, which are of the elementary and high schools in District 1 of Clarendon county, defendant in the integration issue before the top court.

During the week school officials for the district said that a contract totaling $261,000 had been let to a Sumter construction firm, which is to erect a new school building in the district, which is to be ready for the 1952-53 school year. Scenes at the left are corresponding facilities for white children when these pictures were made las spring.

Happy Clarendon parents, although set on breaking up segregation, say the gains already prove that it pays to fight for your rights.



BELIEVE IT OR NOT, the above photographs are of actual "Negro" school houses operated in lower South Carolina. Many of these will be closed under the state's hastily adopted consolidation school program. They face attack in a new court action demanding integration of school children, the test of which is in Clarendon county's anti-segregation law suit, pending before the U.S. Supreme Court.

Byrnes Vows To End Schools If Segregation Ends

COLUMBUS, S. C.—The governor of South Carolina, in a speech Friday night before the state education association, said South Carolina will continue to segregate Negro and white pupils or "abandon the public school system.

Gov. James F. Byrnes further stated that his government would, should the federal courts outlaw segregation, "If it is possible live within the law, preserve the public school system, and at the same time maintain segregation."

The governor declared, however, that if this was not possible, they would "reluctantly" abandon the the public school system.

On May 28 a three judge federal court will hear a suit in which Negroes ask the end of segregation. The state governor, also suggested that churches take over schools if the state choses not to.

S. C. White Schools 4 Times Value Of Negro

BIRMINGHAM (—ANP)—White school property in South Carolina is valued at more than four times as much as Negro school property, and the only way to remedy this unequal situation is to end segregation, James M. Hinton, South Carolina NAACP leader, said here last week.

Hinton made this point in describing the Negro court fight against segregation in the public schools of Clarendon county, S. C., to Alabama NAACP members attending the state convention.

"The Clarendon county school case to breakdown segregation is a head-on attack on the most vicious system in our American democracy," Hinton said. "This vicious system has denied equal education to Negroes in South Carolina and other Southern states.

"The inequalities are seen in South Carolina where school property for whites is valued at slightly more than $75,000,000 while property for Negroes is valued at slightly more than $16,000,000.

"The great difference is due entirely to segregation, and it cannot be overcome at this late date. The only solution is the elimination of all segregation in public schools, and full and complete integration of Negroes in existing schools."

Report School Building Program Already Underway

COLUMBIA, S. C. — In a report released here by the office of Governor James F. Byrnes, the Summerton school district of Clarendon County informed a three-judge federal court at Charleston that an all-out effort is being made to equalize Negro and white educational facilities, including building, curricula and teaching staffs.

This six-months "progress report" was filed by the district in compliance with an order by the special three-judge tribunal on June 21, at which time the district was told it must equalize educational facilities in order to maintain separate schools for the two races.

BUILDING PROGRAM ALREADY UNDERWAY

In this report the district told the court that it has received funds totaling $278,550 and nine school buses toward equalization of Negro schools in the county. It indicated that the district planned to spend $552,682.95 on new school plants, and that one such plant was under construction, and that by the start of the 1952-53 school year it hoped to have all its 2,566 Negro students in modern school buildings which will "certainly be the equal" of any in the county.

According to the report, the school district told the court construction of a new Negro school at Scott's Branch is underway and the building should be ready for use by the fall of 1952. The building is being built at a cost of $261,000.

The remainder of the $278,550 which the county got from the State Educational Finance Commission under the new school improvement program, has been spent on sites for two new Negro elementary school,s $4,500 and $13,500 in architects' fees.

SUIT BROUGHT BY NAACP LAST WINTER

Attorney Robert McC. Figg, Jr., and Attorney S. E. Rogers of Summerton, representing the defendant trustees in the suit brought last winter by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, filed the "progress report" at Charleston.

Four copies were filed: one for the trial record at Charleston; one each for Judge John J. Parker of Richmond and Charlotte, chief judge of the United States Court of Appeals, Fouth Judicial Circuit, and for District Judges George Bell Timmerman of Batesburg and J. Waties Waring of Charleston.

While Judges Parker and Timmerman concurred in the June 21 decree, Judge Waring filed a separate opinion in which he held that segregation was "per se inequality."

The NAACP has appealed the decree, which held that segregation of the races in grade schools was permissable under the 14th amendment to the United States Constitution, but that where the races are schooled separately facilities must be equal in all respects, to the Supreme Court.

A Sound Segregation Decision

The decision of a three-judge federal court in South Carolina upholding the right of states to maintain systems of segregation in the public schools serves well the cause of racial relations, particularly in the South. It is, we believe, in the interest of both the white and colored peoples.

Abolition by law of the present system of segregation in the South's schools would, we believe, produce a perilous chaos in our system of public instruction; it would deepen and intensify dangerous prejudice; it would reactivate intolerant, extremist elements, disposed to take law into their own hands; it would increase racial tensions generally; it would make for more bitterness and animosity; it would definitely impede and make incalculably more difficult the profoundly complex business of achieving greater racial justice and cooperation.

The majority decision in this case—one of the judges dissented—is fundamentally based, we take it, on the broad right of states to order their own peculiar affairs and to deal with their own special problems, particularly in preserving order through the exercise of police power.

Public order is essential to the functioning of the state and to the public welfare. It is the foundation of a peaceful society. Compulsory ending of the segregation in the schools would, we believe, threaten such public order. Consequently, from a lay viewpoint, it appears plain to us that the state has the right to exercise its police power in this way.

Further, the decision maintains that as there are opposing views on the effect of segregation on the processes of education itself, the underlying question is one of legislative policy rather than constitutional rights.

Another point of great force in the ruling holds that "there is nothing in the constitution that requires that the state grant to all members of the public a common right to use every facility that it affords." There is no question that it is the obligation of the state to afford equal educational opportunities. Negro citizens are, of course, right in pressing that demand. We hope they continue to do so and that progress in this respect is accelerated. But is there constitutional basis for a demand that such opportunities be furnished so that white and colored children will be taught together?

Government at its various levels cannot guarantee absolutely the same treatment and facilities for all citizens. As a matter of fact, all white schools are not equal. All roads are not the same. The courthouse is not equally convenient to us all.

These are considerations having to do with the legal ground for public school segregation, which, under present conditions, seems to us to be based on reality, understanding and experience. From the practical standpoint, the case for such segregation seems overwhelming. It hardly needs outlining in any detail.

Segregation has certain unfortunate and ill effects and is in a sense discriminatory. Still, these adverse effects are not nearly so great as would be those resulting from the legal abolition of this phase of segregation now.

As the court stressed, really equal facilities for both races must be urgently sought. That is the sound goal now.

What Other Papers Say

Dixie Paper Cheers S. C. School Ruling

(From Richmond Times-Dispatch)

THE enlightened South — not the hidebound, reactionary South—and all friends of both white and Negro races, should give thanks for Circuit Judge John J. Parker, whose opinion that segregation in the public schools does not violate the Constitution, may well prove historic.

Judge Parker and District Judge Timmerman constituted the majority of the three-judge Federal court which handed down the decision over the week end that separate public schools for the white and colored races are legal. The fact that Judge Parker, who stands as high, perhaps, as any Federal circuit judge in the nation, and who was nominated by President Hoover to the United States Supreme Court as long ago as 1930, took this view, can hardly fail to influence that court. Judge Parker failed of confirmation by a single vote 21 years ago, because of unwarranted hostility from the labor and Negro blocs in the Senate, but his prestige is undimmed. Furthermore, he has been notably "liberal" in his decisions, specifically on the race question.

Had Judge Parker sided with Judge Waties Waring, the super-liberal Charlestonian, in the segregation case just decided in South Carolina, the United States Supreme Court probably would have been influenced by that fact, and the chance that the highest tribunal would uphold segregation in the public schools would have been lessened. As matters stand the outlook seems good that the Parker opinion will help in bringing the court to hand down an opinion giving the States a chance to equalize facilities.

Judges Parker and Timmerman rightly declare in their opinion that "when 17 States and the Congress of the United States have for more than three-quarters of a century required segregation of the races in the public schools, and when this has received the approval of the leading appellate courts of the country, including the unanimous approval of the Supreme Court of the United States, at a time when that court included Chief Justice Taft and Justices Stone, Holmes, and Brandeis, it is a late day that such segregation is violative of fundamental constitutional rights."

How can such strong and convincing words be refuted? It has been argued that the famous and oft-cited case of Plessy vs. Ferguson, upholding the constitutionality of segregation, was decided in 1896, and that things have changed so drastically in the intervening years as to make that finding no longer valid. But now attention is called to a unanimous decision of the court, in the late 1920's, which stated a similar conclusion. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People may have some difficulty making out a convincing case in refutation, when it appeals from the Parker-Timmerman decision.

That decision directs the authorities of District 22 in Clarendon County, S. C., which is the only district involved in the case, to provide equal facilities for colored school children, and to report back in six months on the progress they have made.

This is fair enough. The court doesn't order the local authorities to perform the impossible, but it does show that it intends to have substantial equality of instruction and facilities within a reasonable time.

The Supreme Court is expected to hand down its opinion in the South Carolina case by December. The Virginia General Assembly can take any necessary steps, persuant to that decision, the following month.

Judge Parker's great prestige, and his position on the issue leads one to hope that his views will prevail with our highest court, and that the South will be spared the terrific social and cultural shock of overnight abolition of segregation in the public schools. Neither race is ready for so drastc a step.

Bunche Says Byrnes Harms U.S. Abroad by Stand on Segregation

Dr. Ralph J. Bunche, director of the Trusteeship Division of the United Nations, said yesterday that it is "shocking" to find James F. Byrnes, governor of South Carolina, "in the forefront" of "Southern anti-Negro bitter-enders" along "with Herman Talmadge."

Dr. Bunche, who received an award from the League for Industrial Democracy at a luncheon in the Hotel Commodore, referred to the recent statement attributed to Gov. Byrnes that his state would abandon the public school system rather than end segregation in it.

Dr. Bunche said: "I say shocking not because it is Byrnes, Governor South Carolina, but Byrnes, former Supreme Court Justice and Secretary of State, who recently declared, if the press quoted him accurately, that he would have his state go as far as to abandon the public school system rather than bow to any decision of the Federal courts which would call for an end to segregation.

"Who indeed could be in better position than Byrnes to know how costly are such undemocratic declarations, to our internat R fi ET larations and practices to our foreign relation,s to our international reputation for democracy, our prestige and our leadership.

"Such actions and policies are taken by many throughout the world, and not by any means exclusively by those who are unfriendly to us, as typical of the American way of life.

"In a very real sense, therefore, Byrnes and South Carolina, whether we like it or not, speak to the world for you and me. Such episodes place obstacles in the path of democratic progress, but the record of the society is one of steady advance. . . .

"Louder voices and bigger men than Byrnes and Talmadge have seen their bigotries prove futile against the inexorable onward march of American democracy."

Dr. Bunche, who won the Nobel Prize for 1950 for his mediation of the Palestine dispute as a U. N. representative, compared current Asian revolutions to the American Revolution. "Vast populations which in the long last have known only poverty, suffering, underprivilege, depression and exploitation; are now clamoring insistently for higher living standards, for greater security and broader freedom," he said. The revolts have "nothing to do with any particular ideology," he said.

Pleads for Civil Rights

He also criticized "those who would wish to take advantage of the public anxiety caused by the East-West conflict and the world-wide ideological struggle between democracy and Communism, in order to circumscribe our traditional freedom and to restrict the enjoyment of our civil rights."

"We must be ever vigilant," he said, "to internal and external threats to our civil liberties."

The occasion of the award was the forty-fifth annual luncheon of the League for Industrial Democracy. The league cited Dr. Bunche's "outstanding achievement in the promotion of international understanding."

The league also awarded a scroll to William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, for "a half century of constructive leadership in the cause of labor." John Dewey awards, for distinguished alumni of college chapters of the league, were given to Dr. Selman A. Waksman, professor of microbiology at Rutgers University, who discovered streptomycin, and to Sen. Paul H. Douglas, D., Ill., who was not present.

Around-table discussion of "Next Steps in Labor-Political Action" was held by the League yesterday afternoon. Among the speakers were Tilford E. Dudley, assistant director of the C. I. O. Political Action Committee; Gabriel Kersch, editor of the League's publication, "Outlook;" John Herling, editor of a labor newsletter; Dr. John L. Childs, professor of philosophy of education at Teachers College of Columbia University; M. J. Coldwell, a member of the Canadian Parliament, and Mrs. Rebecca Simonson, president of the New York Teachers' Guild.

S. Carolina Daily Predicts North To Export Teachers

Charleston, S. C.—(ATLAS)—The conservative News and Courier, the voice of South Carolina, brooding over the recent clash on Jim Crow in Clarendon County, finally admits openly, that the standard of education for Negroes in the State of South Carolina is inferior to that of the Whites, to say nothing of the North.

Comenting sarcastically in an editorial this weeek, the News and Courier said: "Not in many a year will there be found among the native Negroes of the South a body of teachers as well educated and trained as are the white teachers. And if "school facilities" of Negroes in South Carolina shall be made equal to those of the white people, it will be necessary to import Negro teachers . . . Northern Negroes of education will perceive the opportunity offered by the South Carolinans, and will troop to the South. 'These immigrants" said the Courier caustically, "will be Liberals." They will recruit the Southern branches of the N. A. A. C. P. They will preach social equality, as did Negro carpetbaggers of the 1870s."

The staid old Charleston Daily thinks primary elections should be abolished since these Negro educators would be useful lieutenants in primary elections.

Preservation Of Racial Segregation Estimated To Cost $4 Million In South

By WILLIAM M. BATES
United Press Staff Correspondent

COLUMBIA, S. C. — (UP) — Southern school officials estimated today that it would cost a staggering $400,000,000 at the minimum to preserve racial segregation in their classrooms by providing Negroes equal facilities.

Separate but equal facilities would be the price for keeping up the racial barriers if the supreme court should uphold a recent federal ruling.

A United Press survey in 11 southern states where Negroes and whites go to separate schools showed that the value of Negro school properties alone—building, grounds and plant facilities—trails some $400,000,000 behind white facilities in proportion to the enrollment of both races.

The south, spurred by the language of a three-judge panel that ruled in favor of separate but equal facilities in South Carolina, is engaged in an unprecedented school construction program. But there's a long way to go.

Officials did not break down the amount being spent for Negro school plants but overall construction in progress, planned or proposed in seven of the 11 states would run to approximately $525,000,000. Much of this money will be spent for bettering Negro schools.

The United Press was furnishkd detailed statistics by public school departments in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Texas, Tennessee and Virginia.

The most critical discrepancy in the Negro and white systems appeared to be in the value of school plant facilities.

About 30 per cent of the 7,500,000 public school students enrolled in the 11 states are Negroes. But the value of Negro school property is only about 15 per cent of the total for both races. Mississippi, with about the same number of white and Negro students, valued its white schol property at four times that provided for Negroes. Georgia, with Negroes making up one-third of the enrollment, has five times better vacilities for white pupils.

On the other hand, Texas, with about six times as many whites as Negroes in public schools, valued white school property at $525,000,000 and Negro property at $78,000,00.

North Carolina, often termed the most progressive southern state, values its white school property at about five times that for Negroes, although Negroes make up about one-third the enrollment. Arkansas has eight times better facilities for white pupils but they make up only three-fourths of the enrollment.

Some of the Southern states are taking bold action to bring school facilities for Negroes more in line.

South Carolina and Georgia plan to spend a total of $175,000,000 on building programs. Florida will vote on a constitutional amendment that would authorize a $150,000,000 school construction project. Alabama has approved a $5,000,00 program for 1951-52.

The best guess among officials contracted was that it would take ten years, even if white schools remained at today's level, to bring the Negro facilities up to the equal level.

Three R's To Yield To A Big C Friday For Negro Pupils

The three R's will bow out Friday afternoon to the big C, that time of year having arrived when the hands are more important than the head to Negro students in Shelby County schools. So readin' 'ritin' and 'rithmetic must give way to cotton.

George Barnes, superintendent, announced yesterday the closing of all bu three Negro schools tomorrow afternoon for the six-week cotton picking vacation. The date originally set for Oct. 10, was advanced because of the early cotton crop, Mr. Barnes said. Schools remaining open will be Weaver, Brooks Avenue and Newman. The parents of students in these three schools are for the most part employed in business, industrial and domestic jobs, with few parents doing farm work.

The Negro schools will reopen Oct. 27, Mr. Barnes said. The shut-down will affect about 7,500 of the more than 8,000 Negro students in the county system.

Texas CIO Seeks Ban On Public School Jim Crow

Union Supports Move To End Segregation

Houston, Texas

GALVESTON, Texas — The fight of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to abolish Jim Crow education has gained the support of the Texas CIO Industrial Union Council which, at its sixteenth annual convention here, voted unanimously to go "on record as supporting the immediate elimination of all forms of segregation in the public schools of Texas."

Adoption of the resolution by 600 delegates, on December 13, shortly after NAACP attorneys had argued before the United States Supreme Court against segregated education, followed an address to the convention by Herbert Hill, NAACP labor relations assistant. Mr. Hill told the convention that "the continued existence of racial segregation and discrimination has become the major political and social question in our national life."

Citing the southward expansion of industry and its failure to absorb Negro workers, the NAACP official also told the delegates that "the deliberate and systematic denial of equal job opportunities for Negro workers remains the most important civil rights problem."

In addition to going on record against public school segregation, the Texas labor group voted to "continue to work with an extend its assistance and cooperation to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in the State of Texas until all citizens are assured equal justice under law."

SCHOOLS

Below Standard Conditions In 8 Schools Listed

Houston Press 2-28-53

HOUSTON — "See for yourself" was the challenge given to school board members by the Harris County Council of Organization, Monday night. A special committee, backed up with concrete recommendations, pointed out below standard conditions existing in eight Negro schools.

Saying that our schools are horrible and presenting facts to show the same, the committee continued an all out fight for better schools

The schools included in the survey are: Dunbar, 908 Clark, Bruce, 815 Cage Street; Crawford 1519 Jensen Drive; Atherton, 2400 Schweikart; Gregory, Wilson Street in Fouth Ward; 23rd Avenue, Independence Heights; Douglas, 300 Truley. Sunnyside, Blackshear and 8th Avenue were pointed out as having similar problems.

Temporary shacks, antiquated buildings and worn out second hand desks were pointed out as concrete evidence of existing inadequacies.

Houston Post 2-28-53

"We have never had an ROTC in our schools in spite of the fact that there are seven in the white schools," a portion of the statement read.

The recommendations were topped by a request for relocation of Dunbar Elementary school. The recommendation pointed out that this school is located in the path of Highway 59. It asked that a new site be found immediately and a permanent modern building be erected, as soon as possible. The other recommendations are printed below:

2. Specific attention of the Board should be given to the following
a. Side walks and proper drainage around the schools.
b. Halls wide enough to prevent injuries to children.
c. Sufficient toilet stools to adequately accommodate boys and girls
d. Separation of cafeteria from gymnasium.
e. Separate rest room and lounge for teachers
f. A need of acquiring adequate playground space for all schools.
g. Modern and new desks should be acquired to comfortably seat students, also better desks for teachers.
h. Provision should be made for library facilities.
i. Proper and adequate heating facilities should be installed.
j. Better school buses and better bus accommodation where it is necessary to use them.
k. That a Director of Physical Education for boys be added.
l. A complete athletic program in Junior and Senior High schools
m. Health service viz professional doctor and dental service and reserved officers training corps in high schools.
n. Stop the practice of sending old worn desks and furniture from other schools and putting in schools for Negro children.
o. More permanent school building and teachers to relieve the crowded conditions in the schools
p. Since we have no Negro representative on the school board to bring the needs of the Negro schools before this Honorably Body we think this Board should make an occasional visit to our schools to observe the conditions first hand.
q. Allocations for our schools and not just proposals.

14d(1)

Below is the report on the schools as found by the committee:

AT DUNBAR ELEMENTARY SCHOOL, which is an old three story frame building erected in 1909. It is surrounded with temporary shacks and practically no play ground space for the children. It has an enrollment above 400 children with practically all rooms carrying an over load.

One room we checked had 37 students, another small room in the basement has been partitioned into three classrooms which is practically impossible to get proper heat and ventilation. There is an old wash basin installed in the toilet out in the yard and there is no hot water there.

The drainage is very bad in and around the school. Practically all of the desks the students use are old, dilapidated and badly worn. There is one small cafeteria which has to be used for eating, gymnasium, and other such activities. The teachers and students must use the same rest rooms. There is no teachers' lounge in the school. The school halls are very narrow in the old three story building and in our opinion is a fire tran.

AT BRUCE SCHOOL, located at 815 Cage, with an enrollment of more than 1500 students, we found practically the same conditions as the above school. Restrooms having to be used by both teachers and students. There is no lounge for the teachers. The children's desks are very old and worn; the cafeteria is used for gymnasium, auditorium and other activities. There is no play poor drainage around this school. The school is so crowded until the children often have collisions turning the corners of the 21 temporary classrooms erected on the site. In spite of the drinking fountains being old and worn, there is not enough to properly accommodate the children. There is also poor dranage around this school.

At CRAWFORD ELEMENTARY SCHOOL, with an enrollment of over 1100 students. It is just across the street from one of the largest junk yards in Houston. There are old worn desks for the children, poor heating system that has to be regulated from the boiler room. The rest rooms are in a building out in the yard and some of the small children have to walk four hundred feet through the yard in order to reach a rest room which has absolutely no heat. Two hundred and five feet of this distance is completely without any type of shelter for the children.

The school is in need of blinds at the windows. The cafeteria is used for gymnasium, visual education music room and general meeting place. The teachers are over loaded. There are also 16 temporary classrooms in connection with the old three story frame school building. Teachers and students must use the same restrooms. It is necessary to have five setting in the cafeteria to feed all of the children.

AT ATHERTON SCHOOL, with an enrollment of more than 1200 students. There are 34 teachers with 31 classrooms, they are holding one class in the clinic, one in the cafeteria and there are two kindergarten teachers in the same room.

The cafeteria is also used for gymnasium assembly and other activities. There is no teachers lounge. There are only six stools in the rest room to serve more than 500 boys, and the day the committee was there, they saw the children standing in line for a chance to use the rest room.

As in the other schools, there one old fahioned worn, dirty desks for the children, to use. In practically every elementary school visited, the committee found a large number of old worn out desks too large for some of the small children who had to use them. In many instances their feet can not rest on the floor, only their toes and you can easily see how they are sitting in a strain. This school has only one janitor and two and one half maids, to clean up this entire school building, school rooms, hall ways, rooms and cafeteria which is too few to properly clean the buildings.

AT GREGORY SCHOOL has an enrollment of more than 900 students. It has the worst looking dirtiest desks and furniture than any schools visited. There is no auditorium, the cafeteria is in an old frame building that was formerly used for a school room with the exception of there was stagnant water under the building. In her room with several of the classrooms, also in a few replacements with other activities.

the streets around the school. We were told by neighbors that they have seen the teachers behind hard rains transport the children in cars into the school yards and and in front of the school doors because of the water standing so high in the small yard. This school had nothing except old worn desks.

AT DOUGLASS, there is no sidewalk around the school. The school is run down and some of the rooms, the heavy plaster is actually falling oout of the ceiling. It has poor heating and has approximately 37 average teacher load. This school has more unusuable bad black boards and desk with broken backs and broken legs than any of the schools we visited.

SUNNYSIDE, BLACKSHEAR, 8th AVENUE and other schools come in for about the same criticism as most of the above mentioned schools. We found Harper to be in better condition than any of the other schools visited. The committee visited the site that has been mentioned for a new high scool across from the High school stadium. We think it is an ideal site and will be pleased to have it. There are only 12 houses occupied by white people facing this site and the rest of it is completely surrounded by colored families and the high school stadium. We do not think there should be any hesitation of acquiring this land because of just 12 families. We have never had an ROTC in our schools in spite of the fact that there are seven in the white schools.

Fine, Jail Parents Protesting 20 Mile Ride To Jim-Crow School

RICHMOND — A 30-day jail sentence and a $50 fine was meted out last week by the Virginia Circuit Court of Appeals to the eight parents who refused to send their children 20 miles outside of the town of West Point to a jim-crow high school.

The cases came before the Circuit Court as a result of appeals filed by the NAACP lawyers in behalf of the parents after the Trial Justice Court of West Point found guilty and convicted the parents of violating the "compulsory attendance laws" of Virginia. They were then fined $200 each.

The briefs were filed with the Circuit Court of Appeals on January 9 by the NAACP attorneys on behalf of the eight parents after they had been arrested and convicted of keeping their children, all under 16, out of school.

The action on the part of the parents, which was called "the West Point strike," came about when the school board closed the Negro high school and ordered the parents to send the students to the Hamilton-Holmes High School, located some 26 miles away from the town of West Point and completely out of the school board's jurisdiction.

GO TO WHITE SCHOOL

Instead, the parents sent their children to the all-white West Point High School for enrollment. They were bluntly refused on the ground that to accept them would be violating the segregation laws of the State of Virginia. Rather than send the students the distance to the Hamilton-Holmes High School, the parents kept them at home. Because of this action, the State claimed the parents violated the Virginia compulsory attendance laws.

In its briefs appealing the convictions, the NAACP stated that not only the attendance law was involved but also the state's segregation law, which was in violation of the 14th Amendment.

Under cross examination at the hearing of the appeal in the Circuit Court, the lone witness for the school board, W. E. Garber superintendent of schools, admitted that the West Point High School was superior to the Negro high school and had been for 26 years. The school superintendent also admitted that the school board was aware of the objection of the Negro parents to send their children 20 miles out of town to another segregated school. The Town of West Point made no effort to provide an "equal but separate" school for Negro children, the parents charged.

TWO SUSPENSIONS

NAACP lawyers, Spottswood W. Robinson, III, and Oliver W. Hill, stated in their argument that it was the state of Virginia which had violated the law, not the parents.

The court, in handing down its ruling, suspended the fines and sentence of two of the parents because they had enrolled their children into segregated schools outside of West Point and the King Williams County.

NAACP lawyers indicated that they will appeal the conviction to the Virginia Supreme Court.

End JC Schools, Hampton Warned

HAMPTON, Va.—A formal request that Hampton end its "undemocratic and expensive" segregated school system or face the consequences has been filed with the local school board by William D. Butts, Newport News attorney.

In a notice of suit filed with the board last week, Mr. Butts, representing some 125 school patrons and their children, calls upon the board to "eliminate the inequalities in Hampton's schools by ending the undemocratic and expensive segregated system."

City Attorney J. Wilton Hope Jr. was directed to study the demands following receipt of the notice warning the board to "cease and desist from maintaining the policy of denying to colored children the right and privilege of attending schools reserved exclusively for white children."

Hint Plots To Balk School Integration

FAIRFAX, Va. —(NNPA)—The Fairfax county school board would probably cancel its agreement with Fort Belvoir and withdraw its teachers from there if segregation in the local schools is ended in line with White House policy to end segregation in all schools operated on Army posts with federal funds.

Robert Walker, Fairfax school official, said last week the county school board would have no other choice if school segregation is abolished at Fort Belvoir.

"Under Virginia law we could not supply teachers for non-segregated schools," Walker said.

SEGREGATED SCHOOLS

The Fairfax county school board operates segregated schools for 700 white students and 52 colored students, all children who reside at Fort Belvoir.

The colored school is in a remodeled barracks. "It's a terrible school," said Mrs. Walker. Both buildings belong to the Army.

The 354 children who live at Fort Myer, Va., are transported by bus to District of Columbia public schools, which are segregated.

The District is reimbursed for the education of these students by Arlington county, which in turn is reimbursed by the Army. Arlington county does not have sufficient pupil stations in its schools to accommodate children who live at Fort Myer.

D. C. SCHOOLS

Pupils who live at Fort McNair attend the District of Columbia's segregated schools as non-tuition paying residents of Washington.

The Anne Arundel County, Md., school system built a school for white children from Fort Meade on land rented from the Army just off the reservation. It transports colored children who live at Fort Meade to regularly operated colored schools in the county.

An Anne Arundel school official sais the county "probably" would withdraw, like Fairfax county, if the order to end segregation by next September goes through.

Hampton Lawyer Asks End To Segregation In Schools

HAMPTON —William Davis Butts, prominent Peninsula attorney appearing before the Hampton School Board Tuesday night as representative for about 125 local school children, demanded that the board end segregation in the Hampton schools.

In his notice for suit, Butts said: "Formal, clear and unequivocal demand is made upon you to cease and desist from denying to Negro children the right and privilege of attending schools reserved exclusively for white children." He also asked for the elimination of inequality in the schools and the termination of the "undemocratic and expensive dual system."

ACCORDING to reports, Butts said that the bone of contention is the existing inequality between the white and colored high schools. The Hampton High School (white) is city owned, he pointed out, while Phenix High School is leased from Hampton Institute and has an inadequate library and gymnasium.

H. H. Holt Jr., who is an attorney and a member of the school board, pointed out that the board could take no action on the demand in view of the fact that the state law provides for segregated schools. He instructed C. Alton Lindsay, superintendent of schools, to refer the matter to J. Wilton Hope Jr., city attorney.

Anti-Segregation Suit Filed By Hampton Parents

HAMPTON, Va.— (ANP) — Parents of 125 Negro children last week filed suit demanding that the Hampton School Board end segregation in the public schools of Hampton.

Representing the parents, William David Butts, an attorney from Newport News, declared that a "formal, clear and unequivocal demand is made upon you (the school board) to cease and desist from maintaining the policy of denying Negro children the right and privilege of attending schools reserved exclusively for white children.

Butts called upon the board "to eliminate the inequality" in the schools. He also called for an end of the "undemocratic and expensive dual school system."

The school board delayed an answer to the petition. Meanwhile the issue was referred to City Attorney J. Alton Hope, Jr., for consideration.

Va. Supreme Court Gets School Cases

RICHMOND

The much - publicized West Point school case is now in the hands of the State Supreme Court of Appeals. It may end up in the highest court of the land — the United States Supreme Court.

In a petition filed with appellate court Friday, West Point parents asked the high court to reverse their convictions in King William County Circuit Court of violation of the State's compulsory school attendance law.

The parents contended that a high school in King William County to which school authorities sought to have them send their children, was "inferior and unequal" to one provided for white pupils in the town of West Point.

"Inequalities, Hardships"

They charged that the travel required of their children to reach the school in the county resulted in "inequalities, hardships and incoveniences to which the white parents and their children were not subjected."

White children at West Point attend a high school in town, while colored children there must travel some 18 miles to Hamilton Holmes High school in King William County. The town closed its colored secondary school at the end of the 1951-52 school year.

As a result of the closing 29 high school pupils refused to attend classes at the county school. The town authorities charged their parents with violation of the school attendance laws. The parents were convicted in the lower court, their appeal is from that conviction.

In eight identical briefs, filed by NAACP attorneys Spottswood Robinson III, Oliver W. Hill and Martin A. Martin, the parents asked the appellate court to reverse the lower court on the grounds that the Commonwealth had no evidence to sustain a conviction and the law on which the prosecution was based, if allowed to apply, would violate the "due process" and "equal protection of the laws" guarantees in the United States Constitution.

The briefs further contend:

"Segregation laws are the ordinary media of State enforced racial segregation and discrimination in public education. The real issue in this case is not whether the child may be required to attend school, but whether the child can be compelled to attend Hamilton Holmes.

May Avoid Jim Crow

"Ordinarily, the individual is segregated only when he voluntarily enters the segregated situation. Thus he may avoid segregation in theaters by simply declining to attend, or on public vehicles, by utilizing some other mode of transportation.

"In all such cases, the individual has the choice of the one or the other. But in this case there is no choice. Compulsory attendance laws enforced as they were here . . . .compel both parent and child to the State's scheme of segregated education."

The Commonwealth, in a brief prepared by King William County Commonwealth's Attorney John P. Casey, contended that the compulsory attendance law "is on its face a valid exercise of the police powers of the state."

The State further contended that segregation statutes are not "properly at issue" in this case.

Negroes Win School Fight In Nansemond

NORFOLK, Va., July 3 (AP).— "Complete victory" was claimed today by Nansemond County Negro leaders in their 18-month battle to secure public school facilities equal to those afforded whites.

Sweeping concessions made yesterday by the county School Board resulted in the indefinite postponement of a hearing scheduled for Monday in United States District Court on an equalization suit brought by Negro attorneys in January, 1952.

The suit contended that Negro school facilities in Nansemond are inferior to those provided for white children.

James A. Overton, an attorney for the plaintiffs, said the School Board agreed to meet five demands. Overton said he doubts the suit will be heard "until fall—if ever."

The demands met by the board included: Closing of all one and two-room Negro schools not later than September, 1956; building of necessary facilities to accommodate the students at Nansemond County Training School, construction to start by April of next year; reduction of the teacher load at East Suffolk High School by this September; provision for "adequate" bus transportation for Negro pupils by this September; equalization of all four-room schools with facilities afforded whites by September, 1956.

Negroes outnumber white residents 15,000 to 11,000 in Nansemond. During the 1950-51 school year, 3233 Negro students were enrolled in county schools as against 1499 white children.

EDUCATION

Teaching Cost For Races Equalized

The school year 1952-53 was the first year the cost of educating colored and white children in the public school system of Norfolk, Va. was equal. In 1952-53, the school board spent $217.55 on each Negro child, and $217.28 on each white child.

The school report showed a drop of 48 cents for each white child from the previous year, and an increase of $17.73 over the previous year for each colored child. The per capita cost of instruction is only one of the phases of the education of the races that colored organizations are trying to have equalized.

Racist Seeks School Board Ouster

ARLINGTON Va. — (ANPA) — John Locke Green, an attorney and a Republican whose colored voters helped to keep in office for years as treasurer of Arlington county is using the race issue in an effort to oust from office all five members of the county school board.

Green last Friday filed a complaint against the school board members asking the county circuit court to order them to show cause why they should not be removed from office for "malfeasance, misfeasance and incompetency."

He charges that the board members violated provisions of the Virginia constitution and statutes by permitting co-mingling of white and colored children.

Green called for the removal from office of the board chairman Dr. Curtis Tuthill, and the four members Dr. Edwin R. Draheim Dr. Barnard Joy, Mrs. Elizabeth Campbell and Warren Cox.

The complaint charges that board members permitted white and colored children to be taught together. Green also charged that the board "did knowingly and willfully co-mingle white and colored audiences in the Washington-Lee high auditorium" and compiled the co-mingling of white and colored teachers their wives and their husbands at teachers' meetings in the county schools.

He also charged that school board members had permitted white and colored persons to be served together in the same school cafeteria.

Suerpintendent of Schools T. Edward Rutter said white and colored teachers have met together, but no white and colored pupils attended music classes at Washington-Lee last May as Green charged.

2 Boards Cleared

Arlington Racial Suits Thrown Out

The Arlington County board and the Arlington school board were cleared yesterday of alleged segregation law violations which formed the basis for separate ouster complaints against the two bodies.

Circuit Judge Walter T. McCarthy dismissed the complaints after hearing on nine charges. The county board has been accused of five violations in a complaint filed by Lindell F. Shrum while the school board was defendant against four charges brought by a special grand jury after an investigation of a complaint originally filed by John Locke Green, attorney.

Judge McCarthy initially threw out eight of the charges—the five against the county board and three of the four against the school board — on motion of Commonwealth's Attorney William J. Hassan. The remaining charge against the school board was dismissed after the jurist heard arguments on a demurrer filed by school board attorneys.

The first eight counts were dismissed after Hassan told the court they were based on mixed attendance at "governmental functions" of the two boards, not subject to State segregation laws.

The "functions" included zoning and budget hearings of the county board; classes for police, public health nurses and food handlers; educational meetings at the county health department, "in-service" training classes and workshops for county school teachers and preschool examinations for county pupils.

The remaining charge, subject of an hour and a half hearing, was based on a music festival held last May at the Washington-Lee High School. According to the complaint, no provisions were made for segregation of the audience, although white and Negro music groups performed separately.

In dismissing the ouster petition against the school board, Judge McCarthy said there was "reasonable doubt" as to whether the music festival was a public entertainment or an official function of the school board. If it was an official board function, he said, the board was entitled to dismissal of the charge for the same reason the other eight charges were thrown out.

The jurist said he thought the festival could be construed as an event "for the benefit of the pupils, themselves," and said the fact that they were required to perform before an audience might be considered as "part of their training."

File Demand For Equal Facilities

City School System For Colored Said To Be Vastly Inferior

Special to Journal and Guide

LYNCHBURG—Lynchburg city school officials were confronted last week with a choice of taking steps to equalize white and Negro school facilities or facing court action to compel opening of white schools to Negro pupils.

The demands for better Negro school facilities were presented to the board Tuesday night by Herman L. Taylor, attorney of Raleigh, N. C., spokesman for a delegation of 45 members of the Lynchburg Civic Council and parents who attended the board's meeting at the Wyatt School.

EARLIER, Dr. R. Walter Johnson, president of the Lynchburg Civic Council, an organization of Negro professional, civic and fraternal groups, presented the City Council with a statement assailing its failure to correct slum conditions and to provide adequate school facilities for Negroes.

The threat of court action was made by Mr. Taylor who warned the Board that it must provide Negro children with schools similar to the new E. C. Glass high school and William Marvin Bass elementary school or face the alternative of permitting Negro pupils to attend those white schools.

MR. TAYLOR expressed the delegation's unwillingness to go along with any "ten-year-plan" for improvement and said that Negro residents of Lynchburg want "equal facilities this year."

"Equality delayed for one moment," he declared, "is equality denied."

In his statement Dr. Johnson, who is also chairman of the Citizenship Committee of the PTA Council, cited failure of the City Council to take action on conditions affecting Negroes and said:

"A remark was made labeling this council a 'do nothing council.' "

"SURELY NO ONE could truthfully label this council a 'do nothing council.' A council that is bulding the fourth best high school in the USA for Lynchburg and an elementary school, Marvin Bass, second to none, must go down in history for its foresight and constructive planning. We are proud of the new advanced steps in education made possible by this council.

"This council must be labeled a 'do nothing council for Negroes.' Although all Negro facilities were pooerer and more needed than for white children, council has done nothing to relieve them."

AMONG THE unequal conditions listed by Dr. Johnson were backless, splinter-filled seats and use of the only Negro school cafeteria in the city as an auditorium which was still unable to accomodate all of the pupils at one time.

Also: use of school corridors for band instruction; principals without offices, but with desks placed in halls; no science labratories or gymnasiums, and poor library facilities.

EARLIER the school board had considered turning the white Robert E. Lee junior high school over to Negro children after completion of the E. C. Glass high school.

At the last meeting of the board, however, a delegation of white property owners met with the board to protest the transfer on the grounds that it would cause depreciation of property values in the neighborhood.

WARNING THE school board of the steps planned for seeking equal facilities, Mr. Taylor presented an August 15 deadline for a reply from the board.

Mr. Taylor declared that the group he represented in making a demand and not "beseeching or making a tearful appeal" because the board is required by law to provide equal facilities for Negro children.

"THE NEGRO citizens are not asking any special favors. They are only asking to be treated as citizens. . .They have no objection to the fine edifice being built for white children, but believe that the board should provide the same type of structure for Negro children.

"However, if the board puts all of its money in white schools and has nothing left for Negro schools, the law is plain that there is no alternative except to let the Negro childreg go to the schools."

Schools On Segregation

HAMPTON, Va. — Parents of 125 school children this week filed suit against the Hampton school board to end segregation in the public schools here.

Atty. William D. Butts, Newport, News, filed the complaint for the parents for an order to "cease and desist" segregation policy.

The board has not filed an answer to date. The complaint is being considered by city Atty. J. Walton Hope, jr.

County School Named In Honor Of Mrs. Julia Page

FARNHAM, Va.

In appreciation of the work of Mrs. Julia G. Page, Jeanes supervisor of Richmond county, Va., the new school has been named the Julia G. Page Elementary School, located at Farnham in the lower section of the county.

The school can accommodate about 300 elementary school children, and is rated among the most modern consolidated schools in Virginia. Jesse L. Walker is principal.

MRS. PAGE began her supervisory work in 1917 in Richmond county. She worked through many hardships; walked through rain and snow, stayed over night with any parents who were interested in the educational work.

She has been influential in improving the building facilities and the health and civic conditions of the county.

IN 1936, A GREAT effort was made to secure high school facilities. The first county-wide organization was created with Mrs. Page as president. This organization bought the land for the present Richmond County High School. This school opened as an accredited high school in 1940.

Mrs. Page accredits her success or accomplishments to her progressive superintendent, Blake T. Newton; her deceased husband, R. D. Page, and the kind, sympathetic parents and patrons of both races in the county.

MRS. JULIA G. PAGE

NEW RICHMOND COUNTY SCHOOL—Shown above is the new Julia G. Page Elementary School at Farnham, Va., which was named in honor of Mrs. Julia G. Page, Jeanes supervisor in Richmond county. Mrs. Page, who has been supervisor since 1917, has made such an excellent record that the citizens of the county felt that it was appropriate to name the school in her honor.

THE INSIDE STORY:

Economic pressure feared by plaintiffs

Jobs, homes are at stake in in county school controversy

By RUFUS WELLS

FARMVILLE, Va. — Picture a county in which colored residents outnumber the whites and in which the minority maintains control by denying the majority elementary human rights, and you can understand the positions of certain Prince Edward school segregation plaintiffs who think integration would bring reprisals from their white fellow citizens.

To get the story behind the statements of plaintiffs, I drove and walked through miles of gooey red clay in the backwoods where some of them live.

Colored citizens represent 52 per cent of the 15,000 inhabitants of this county. They compose 59 percent of the school population. In most istances, their education stops before they complete high school. Many of the older ones are almost illiterate.

They work as laborers, or farmers, and their income averages $5 a day.

Davis Family Typical

Typical of the group is the family of Mr. and Mrs. John Davis who live at Meherrin, 14 miles south of Farmville. To get to their modest frame house you drive three - quarters of a mile — and the mud comes up to your hub caps — then walk the rest of the way when the road becomes impassable.

The Davis family has eight children, two of whom had to leave Prince Edward county to get employment commensurate with their technical training.

Mr. Davis, a farmer who owns 34½ acres of land, has spent 40 years in the county in an unceasing struggle for survival.

Could Starve Us

Mr. Davis declared:

"We raise tobacco, corn, wheat, hogs and chickens. Everything we raise, we have to sell to white people. They could starve us out."

After recounting the difficulty he had experienced in getting a fair price for his products, he said he feared that if the schools were integrated the white buyers would get angry and refuse to buy from small operators like himself.

Mr. Davis who sat near a wood heater in his mud-smeared overalls, interrupted:

"Why just the other day a fellow went downtown and had to go to the toilet. He went to a white toilet, was arrested and fined $5. He didn't have the money and is in jail today.

"You fellows are from Richmond and don't understand Prince Edward county. We don't even have a colored lawyer here and if we get into trouble we have to turn to the white people to speak for us.

Battle For Road

On the question of integrated schools, he said:

"I don't think it would work here, the white folks are too rebelish (prejudiced)." Look at that road, he pointed to the winding road turned by rain into a quagmire, "We've been trying for 40 years to get it paved, but they tell us to build our own road. If there were some white families living on the road they would pave it."

His wife, Mrs. Sallie Davis, pointed out that their daughters had to go to New York to get jobs as clerks. They couldn't get them here. We have no voice here, therefore it is better if we stay as far from them as possible.

Most Vicious Community

Early this month the Minneapolis Tribune sent Reporter Carl Rowan to Prince Edward county to get information behind the school case. Mr. Rowan quoted Dr. Vernon Johns, wealthy colored gentleman farmer, as saying:

"This is one of the most, vicious communities, racially speaking, in the world. It's concealed. But there are many places in the south where the colored farmer can put his products in competition with white products. Not here.

'Colored beans cannot compete with white beans. Negro potatoes cannot compete with white potatoes. In this county, which went Dixiecrat in the presidential election, the non-white is preserved only by abject cowardice.'

The Prince Edward county case began in May, 1951, with a petition for equal facilities and an end to segregation. The petition was signed by plaintiffs in the case currently before the Supreme Court. It was rejected by the school board, and pupils attending the school went on strike

Meanwhile the matter was taken to court. A Federal district court in March, 1952 ruled that facilities were not equal and ordered the board to make them so. The court did not rule that segregation is unconstitutional, per se. The NAACP appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court that on the grounds that segregation is unconstitutional.

Arguments were completed this month and the court is expected to make a ruling next spring.

Explain statements about Afro-American school segregation case

By RUFUS WELLS AND LEE BARROW

FARMVILLE, Va. — Fear of economic pressure that might be exerted by white residents has caused a few of the plaintiffs in the Prince Edward county school segregation case to be concerned for their welfare should the U.S. Supreme Court outlaw segregation in public schools.

The differences of opinion were revealed in a Richmond Times-Dispatch story published Sunday and widely circulated by the news wire service since then.

A haunting fear that they would be dismissed from their jobs and that other economic reprisals would be made against them by white residents of the community, caused the dissenting plaintiffs to fear for their own well being in Prince Edward county.

However, all of the plaintiffs said that they favored integration, but feared that it would bring a harmful reaction from certain white people of the community.

Friends Favor Integration

The plaintiffs who did not fear this reaction were just as vocal in standing by their guns.

Barbara Ann Trent, said she was "shocked" when she read of her co - plaintiffs reneging on their original stand.

She continued:

"All of my friends are in favor of it (integration) and I am sure that those who oppose integration are in the minority — an extremely small minority.

"We don't fuss and fight with them when we work together. I don't see why we should fuss and fight in school."

Says Father Misquoted

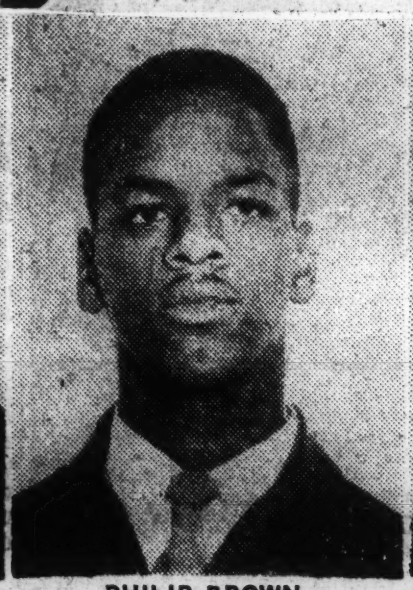
Miss Adeline Dennis, another plaintiff, said her father, Isaiah Dennis, a janitor at Longwood college, was "misquoted" by the daily reporters.

"He didn't mean that he opposed integrating schools but that he didn't think it would work out in Virinia—in New Jersey and New York perhaps, but not in Virigina.

Would Not Object

The 17-year-old high schooler said that if the Supreme Court outlawed segregated schools she would not object to attending an integrated school, and she felt that her father would not object to her attending one.

DOLLY GOODE
Wants schools integrated



PHILIP BROWN
"No comment"

DOROTHY E. DAVIS
"It won't work"

ADELINE DENNIS
"I'll attend integrated school"

BARBARA ANNE TRENT
"I'm for it!"

Another plaintiff, Phillip Brown, 20-year-old senior at Robert Moton High and president of the student council, said he had "no comment" he continued:

"I'd rather not make any statement until the decision is handed down by the Supreme Court. Public opinion is a powerful thing, you know, and it could influence a decision. It's in the hands of nine good old men."

The opinion of the dissenters was expressed graphically by Mrs. John Davis, mother of Dorothy E. Davis, whose name heads the list of 118 plaintiffs. Mrs. Davis, in answer to the question: "Do you favor the abolition of racial segregation in Prince Edward County schools?" replied:

"I do not think mixed schools would work here. We live with a nasty bunch of white people . . . we've got no voice here.

All of the colored people who work here, work for white people. Some work in the box factory, some in wire factory, they make about five dollars a day. They all are common laborers, and their foremen are all white men.

The white people here are just too nasty for mixed schools, they wouldn't know how to act, the colored people would know how to act, but the white wouldn't."

Slender, 16-year-old Dorothy Davis, sat silently by and assented to her parents statements with a nod of her head. Obviously nervous and up-set by being suddenly shoved into the national limelight, Dorothy admitted that she was in favor of integration but didn't think it would work in Prince Edward county.

As her father put it: "The white people here are just too rebelish" (prejudiced).

When word of the schism was published, Oliver W. Hill and Spottswood W. Robinson III, two Richmond lawyers representing the pupils and their parents in the NAACP - sponsored case, revealed that they would contact all of the plaintiffs to ascertain their present opinions.

On Wednesday a team of NAACP investigators including W. Lester Banks, Virginia State NAACP executive secretary, visited the Farmville area and talked with plaintiffs. Their findings will be made public at a later date.

Mr. Hill explained that he was "not worried" about the reported dissension. He continued:

"I am certain that a majority of the plaintiffs still are in favor of what has been done. Some people, both white and colored, have no concept of what constitutes equal educational opportunities. They think in terms of buildings and that's all," Mr. Hill concluded.

(Defender Washington Bureau)

Alexandria, Va. — An ironic contradiction to the passionate arguments of attorneys upholding segregation before the Supreme Court in the recent school hearings was revealed this week when a perfect experiment in intergrated schools was found in Jim Crow Virginia.

Sat. 12-26-53

Mrs. Camay Calloway Brooks, 26 year old pretty daughter of Cab Calloway, is one of the most popular teachers on the staff of the intergrated Burgundy country day school. Her class of 20 first graders includes only one Negro child.

The school is in its fifth year of integration and Negro and white children play and study together with no friction, other than normal childish squabbles.

In 1950, the school, a cooperative venture was voted to become open, to both races. Seventeen parents out of 200 voted against the plan and two families withdrew their children. The rest of the families are unanimous in agreement that the plan has been successful.

Defender

Ten of the present number of parents who own the school now are Negro. They include a grocery clerk who is a sculptor in his spare time; A Howard music professor; a teacher and government workers.

Mrs. Brooks, whose husband is a student at Miner Teachers' college in Washington, lives with him and his parents there. She said that she and her husband have tickets to see her father play in Porgy and Bess when it comes to the Capital for a run soon.

Sat. 12-26-53

Born in Baltimore where she attended segregated schools, Mrs. Brooks remembers that the Negro children were uneasy about white children. "We didn't know what to say or do when we met them on the streets. The lack of understanding was the reason for a number of unpleasant incidents between the races."

Meeanwhile, Alexandria School Supt. T. C. Williams told the school board that tests in achievement and mental maturity in the public schools had shown Negro pupils two years behind white children.

Alexandria has 1,500 Negro pupils in a total enrollment of 10,532. Williams said that the lag of the Negro pupils would pose a serious problem if the supreme court should rule in favor of integration.

West Point School Case Briefs Filed

Parents Refuse To Send Kids To Another County

RICHMOND

In the latest outgrowth of the stormy West Point School situation, NAACP attorneys last week filed a brief in the Circuit Court of King William County in defense of eight parents who refused a court order to send their children to a high school, 20 miles away from the town.

Oliver W. Hill, of the Hill, Martin, and Robinson law firm of Richmond which is handling the case, told the AFRO that the brief would be the basis for the fight against the educational set-up.

The defense contends that West Point school authorities have not provided equal educational facilities for colored children of the town. his inequality, they point out, increases to a greater degree when school authorities order the children to attend a school controlled by King William county school officials.

Started In September

The trouble started at the beginning of the 1952-53 school term when West Point children refused to attend the Hamilton-Holmes high school located in King William County.

The school which they previously attended in West Point was converted to an elementary school.

The parents who have been arrested are charged with disobeying the state's compulsory educa-education law which requires them to send their children, all under 16, to school. They, together with the NAACP, are preparing an all-out fight.

Conflict Of Laws

In this case, the attorneys have recognized the conflict between the Commonwealth's compulsory education laws and the segregation statutes.

They claim that there was no violation of the compulsory education law since the West Point school authorities have no jurisdiction over King William County school affairs where the Hamilton-Holmes school is located.

Enrollment Denied

The brief stated that "parents of strking West Point students sought to obtain admission into the only public secondary school (the West Point High School) controlled and operated by the town, but this enrollment was refused solely because their children are colored."

"But for the segregation requirements, the defendant's children would have been admitted to the West Point High School, and the proposal that they attend the Hamilton-Holmes High school and is concomitants would never have developed" it continued.

The brief re-emphasizes the fact that West Point school authorities have not afforded any other public secondary school to which attendance can be lawfully required.

In the opinion of the attorneys, the exclusion of the children from the West Point High School solely because of their race or color and the order requiring them to attend the Hamilton Holmes school denies rights guaranteed by the 14th admendment to the Constitution and is therefore unconsitutional and void.

"If the segregation laws could not validly operate to exclude the defendant's children from the West Point High School and compel them to be educated elsewhere, it follows that compulsory attendance laws cannot operate to render defendants criminally liable for a failure to follow an unlawful course dictated by the segregation laws."

The eight parents of striking West Point students who are facing the court are William Billups, Mrs. Julia Carter, James Dobbins, Mrs. Annie Fauntleroy, C. C. Leakes, Taft Manley, Mrs. Cecilia Reid, and Mrs. Hattie Thornton.

They, backed by most colored citizens of the town, and the NAACP, are determined to win the court battle.

In the meantime, the children who are out of school continue their studies at home so their educational progress will not be greatly affected by their absence from school.

Refused To Send Children 20 Miles To Segregated School

RICHMOND, Va.—A 30-day jail sentence and a $50 fine was meted out last week by the Virginia Circuit Court of Appeals to the eight parents who refused to send their children 20 miles outside of the town of West Point to a jim-crow high school.

The cases came before the Circuit Court as a result of appeals filed by the NAACP lawyers in behalf of the parents after the Trial Justice Court of West Point found guilty and convicted the parents of violating the "compulsory attendance laws" of Virginia. They were then fined $200 each.

The briefs were filed with the Circuit Court of Appeals on January 9 by the NAACP attorneys on behalf of the eight parents after they had been arrested and convicted of keeping their children, all under 16, out of school.

SCHOOL STRIKE

The action of the parents, which was called "the West Point strike", came about when the school board closed the Negro high school and ordered the parents to send the students to the Hamilton-Holmes High School, located some 20 miles away from the town of West Point and completely out of the School board's jurisdiction.

Instead, the parents sent their children to the all-white West Point High School for enrollment. They were bluntly refused on the grounds that to accept them would be violating the segregation laws of the State of Virginia. Rather than send the students the distance to the Hamilton-Holmes High School, the parents kept them at home. Because of this action, the State claimed the parents violated the Virginia compulsory attendance laws.

LAWS INVOLVED

In its briefs appealing the convictions, the NAACP stated that not only the attendance law was involved but also the state's segregation law, which was in violation of the 14th Amendment.

Under cross examination at the hearing of the appeal in the Circuit Court, the lone witness for the school board, W. E. Garber, superintendent of schools, admitted that the West Point High School was superior to the Negro high school and had been for 26 years. The school superintendent also admitted that the school board was aware of the objection of the Negro parents to send their children 20 miles out of town to another segregated school.

The Town of West Point made no effort to provide an "equal but separate" school for Negro children, the parents charged.

'STATE VIOLATED LAW'

NAACP lawyers, Spottswood W. Robinson, III, and Oliver W. Hill, stated in their argument that it was the state of Virginia which had violated the law, not the parents.

The court, in handing down its ruling, suspended the fines and sentence of two of the parents because they had enrolled their children into segregated school outside of West Point and the King Williams County.

NAACP lawyers indicated that they will appeal the conviction to the Virginia Supreme Court.

Violated State Law

Conviction of 8 Parents In Jim-Crow Fight Upheld

KING WILLIAM COURT HOUSE, Va.—(ANP) The conviction of eight Negro parents of acts violating Virginia's compulsory school attendance law was upheld here last week by King William County Court.

Council for the defendants insisted, however, that the real question at issue was the state's school segregation practice.

Defense counsel indicated immediately following Judge Lewis Jones' decision that an appeal will be made to the Virginia State Court of Appeals.

Legal action against the parentts was started last October after they refused to send their children to the Hamilton-Holmes School, in King William County about ninteen miles from West Point where all the defendants reside.

Until the beginning of the fall term the twenty-nine students affected had been attending the Beverly Allen High School, in the town of West Point. The West Point school board ordered the local high school suspended and its students to report to the county school for Negroes.

Eight of the students who refused to transfer to the county school were within the age limits set by the school compulsory attendance statute.

Commonwealth Atty. John Paul Causey argued that the sole question before the court was whether or not the parents had violated the state law in not sending their children to school. Judge Jones also ruled out any evidence bearing on segregation, inequality of school facilities or racial discrimination.

Oliver W. Hill and Spottwood W. Robinson III, of Richmond, counsel for the parents, contended that questions of segregation and inequality were the real issues. Judge Jones finally consented that evidence relative to segregation and discrimination might be entered in the record, but it would not be admitted as a basis for influencing a decision as to the guilt or the innicense of the defendants.

W. E. Garbar, school superintendent for West Point and King William County, was the only witness for the state. He had the warrants sworn out against the eight parents.

Segregation In Education Is Deplored

LAWRENCEVILLE, Va.—Inequalities and segregation in education were deplored as unChristian and indefensible here by President Earl H. McClenney of St. Paul's Polytechnic Institute during the convention last weekend of the Virginia Congress of Colored Parents and Teachers.

The featured speaker at the public meeting Thursday night at James Solomon Russell High School attended by a capacity audience, Mr. McClenney asserted that the "South finds itself trapped by its own laws which when drafted, were based on the faculty premise that Negroes were not equal citizens and therefore not covered by the statutes requirin gequalit yof education."

THEIR GOVERNMENTS

In a very real sense, the educator declared, the future of the schools are in the hands of PTAs throughout the country, for they represent the people and the people get as education exactly what they require of their governments.

He aluded the objectives of the parent-teacher association to bring about a closer relationship between the school and the home and remarked that a great deal more needs to be done by parents and teachers to bring about a better understanding of youth problems.

EVERY CHILD

He stressed that equality of opportunity was not the same as identity of opportunity, averring that "it is a crime to require every child to take Latin or shop, for instance."

Charges Board Violated State Segregation Law

ARLINGTON, Va.— (NNPA) — John Locke Green, an attorney and a Republican, whom colored voters helped to keep in office for years as treasurer of Arlington County is using the race issue in an effort to oust from office all five members of the county school board.

Mr. Green last Friday filed a complaint against the schoo' board members, asking the county circuit court to order them to show cause why they should not be removed from office for "malfeasance misfeasance and incompetency."

He charges that the board members violated provisions of the Virginia constitution and statutes by permitting co-mingling of white and colored children.

Mr. Green called for the removal from office of the board chairman, Dr. Curtis Tuthill, and the four members, Dr. Edwin B. Draheim, Dr. Barbara Joy, Mrs. Elizabeth Campbell and Warren Cox.

CO-MINGLE

The complaint charges that board members permitted white and colored children to be taught together. Green also charged that the board "did knowingly and wilfully co-mingle white and colored audiences in the Washington-Lee high school auditorium" and "compelled the co-mingling of white and colored teachers, their wives and their husbands at teachers' meetings in the county schools.

WHITE AND COLORED

He also charged that school board members had permitted white and colored persons to be served together in the same school cafeteria.

Mr. Green also said the school board members allowed motion pictures "of nude men and nude women (to be) shown to the public school children.

Superintendent of Schools T. Edward Rutter said white and colored teachers have met together, but no white and colored pupils attended music classes at Washington-Lee last May as Mr. Green charged. He denied that any pictures of nudes had ever been shown in any Arlington school "not even in hygiene or art classes.

Dr. Tuthill said he had no idea what the reference to the movies of nudes meant, but had no comment on the integration charges until he reads the complaint.

Mr. Cox said he personally knew nothing of either charge, but neither of these things had ever been authorized by the school board.

Mrs. Campbell said it was "absolutely untrue" that any movies of nudes were shown and denied that white and colored students were taught in the same classroom. She said Mr. Green apparently was referring to a music festival last May in the Washington-Lee gym.

Music students from all county junior and senior high schools, colored and white alike, attended this festival, she said, but they were seated separately and "they even sang separately except for a patriotic number at the end."

Mrs. Campbell said not only has the present school board strictly adhered to the segregated school system, required by Virginia law, but "we have tried to bend over backwards to eliminate the pressure for nonsegregation by spending thousands of dollars to give colored pupils facilities equal to those of the white.

The two other board members, Dr. Joy and Mr. Draheim, had no comment at this time.

COURT RULED

Mr. Green, a long-time foe of the school board, has pending an appeal of a circuit court decision upholding the right of Federal employees to serve on the board. This suit was filed by Mr. Green in behalf of Attorney Miles Spence Bray.

The race issue was raised in that suit, but the court ruled that it was irrevelant to the issue and that the question of the right of Federal employees to serve on the school board had been settled by the Virginia Court of Appeals in a previous suit brought by Green.

The school board has filed a $700,000 damage suit again Green and Bray, charging them with maliciously, wrongfully, wantonly and wilfully abusing legal process by keeping litigation pending, regardless of its merits.

NEED NOT 'SHOW CAUSE':

Clear school board in test of JC law

ARLINGTON, Va. (NNPA)—All charges against the Arlington county school board and the County Board of violating Virginia's Jim Crow laws were dismissed in Arlington County circuit court Wednesday by Judge Walter E. McCarthy.

Only one of the nine original charges was aired in court and Judge McCarthy dismissed this one after Commonwealth Attorney William J. Hassan conceded that it should be dropped if the court had reasonable doubt as to whether a music festival at Washington-Lee high school for white students was a governmental function or public entertainment.

In dismissing the charges, Judge McCarthy explained that Mr. Hassen agreed that the charges should be dropped if the music festival was a governmental function, but the judge added, if the festival was not a governmental function, then the board members were not acting in their governmental capacities.

Dismissed Charge

In view of these facts, Judge McCarthy dismissed the charge.

The school board members had been cited to show cause why they should not be ousted from office for violating Virginia segregation laws. The charges, designed to bring about the removal of school board members were made by John Locke Green, an attorney and former county treasurer, whom colored voters had helped to keep in office until two years ago. Green is a Republican.

Judge McCarthy dismissed four "charges against the school board. He also threw out five similar charges brought against the County Board by Lindell Shrum, a parent, who enlisted in the fight as a friend of the school board.

Surprised Spectator

Commonwealth Attorney Hassan, acting as prosecutor in the removal proceedings, surprised spectators packing the court room by moving to dismiss all the charges against the two boards except one charging the school board with allowing colored and white pupils to "comingle" at the music festival last May 28 at Washington-Lee high school.

In the case of the music festival, Judge McCarthy sustained a demurrer by James H. Simmons and Armistead L. Boothe, attorneys for the school board, who asked dismissal of the charge.

Virginia law requires that white and colored people be segregated at public entertainments and gatherings in theaters, opera houses and such.

Mr. Boothe argued that the music festival was not covered by the state Jim-Crow statute, but was an official function of the school system. He cited numerous examples of public meetings at which there was no segregation, including a speech by Gov. Adlai Stevenson to a mixed audience of 7,000 in Richmond last year.

Called Private Meetings

Mr. Hassan has asked dismissal of the first eight charges on grounds that the gatherings complained of were private meetings. Mr. Hassan also said that the County Board could not be held liable for enforcement of segregation laws by health or welfare officials because they are not subject to direct removal by the County Board.

Mr. Hassan also said that schools for public health nurses and food handlers, run by the healthy department, did not come under the law applying to public schools. Such schools he said have been "notoriously" exempt from the Jim Crow law in other instances in Virginia and that they are not public assemblies.

The charges against the County Board had been filed by Mr. Shrum after a grand jury asked the court to consider possible violations of segregation laws by the school board. Mr. Shrum said he did not believe the school board alone should have to face charges for what he contended was common practice in Virginia.

Only For Singing

School officials say white and colored pupils were brought together from all over the country for the music festival but were seated separately and rehearsed separately.

Their voices only "co-mingled" when they sang "The Star Spangled Banner" and "America, the Beautiful," the official said. The audience was not segregated at the festival.

Discussing charges that colored and white persons had "comingled" at public hearings before the County Board on the county budget and rezoning, Mr. Hassan said these sessions are not actually open public meetings, but are duly prescribed meetings of the county board. Spectators, he said, are there by right of law and there is no reference to racial segregation in the statutes concerning such meetings.

Judge McCarthy said that officials have interpreted the law as permitting such gatherings on a non-segregated basis.

Virginia Affairs

School Racial Suits Fought With Calm

By Benjamin Muse

WHEN PROBLEMS of great moment and delicate implications arise, we have peculiar reason to be thankful for the kind of leaders that come to the top in Virginia. Now, in the face of a possibly epochal crisis in relations between the white and Negro races, Virginia's leaders are moving with dignity, and with restraint and, in the opinion of this column, with sober wisdom.

MUSE

No hot-headed utterances have been heard in any responsible quarter—not in the whole long period since the litigation in the school racial segregation cases began. We have heard nothing here about "blood flowing" or about anybody attempting to "plunge a dagger in the back of the South." Nor has there been any suggestion of abolishing the public school system in this state.

Virginians, generally, are opposed to the abolition of segregation by Supreme Court decree. We believe in state rights and we are not ready, on our own initiative, for racial integration in our public schools.

But whatever the Supreme Court decision may be, Virginia is preparing grimly, but loyally, and without inflammatory rhetoric, to make the best of it. That is the position of most of Virginia's political leaders, and that is the gist of this Commonwealth's case before the Supreme Court of the United States.

THE ANCIENT PREJUDICE against the intermingling of the two races is still present among many thousands of Virginians. It is especially prevalent among the more ignorant element of white people and among those in areas with a heavy Negro population.

But few among Virginia's leaders defend racial segregation in principle. Most of them agree that segregation is wrong and should be brought to an end, eventually. They differ widely in their opinions as to how soon it should be ended.

The Virginia attorneys in their brief conceded: "As time passes, it may well be that segregation will end"—although they insisted that "the judges of the proper time to end it should be the legislators who are so much nearer the facts of the racial problems that caused segregation."

If segregation is to be ended, they urged the court to "permit gradual amalgamation."

SIGNIFICANTLY, the Virginia brief also said: "We venture to suggest that if immediate amalgamation were ordered in Virginia schools, they could not reopen for 12 months."

That statement reflects the study of the problem state officials have made. It is estimated that a year would be necessary for reorganization, indoctrination of teachers and administrative adjustment to an integrated school system.

Dowell J. Howard, state superintendent of public instruction, believes desegregation could be accomplished—without a public upheaval.

If the Supreme Court should decree desegregation, and if the decision should lead to violence in some other states, it will be in part because leaders in those states have predicted violence. Disorder in Virginia will be minimized by the sheer determination of Virginia leaders that there shall be no disorder here.

SINCE THE APPEALS from lower court decisions on the South Carolina and Virginia school segregation cases, there has been a growing feeling that it may be "later than we think." There has been considerable spiritual preparation for a possible critical step in interracial relations. More and more has been said from the pulpit about the sin of racial discrimination.

Last week, on the eve of the Supreme Court hearing on the school cases, the Richmond Ministers' Association adopted a resolution petitioning the General Assembly to repeal the laws requiring segregation on common carriers and in public assemblies. The Virginia Council of Churches had already taken a stand against segregation on common carriers.

I have never seen Virginia politicians so far removed from politics as when they discuss the possibility of a Supreme Court decision ending segregation in public schools.

"There can be no politics about this," they say. "If that happens, there will be no party, no faction. We'll all just have to get together and work it out."

The difficulties, even the dangers, are not to be underestimated, but in that spirit, whatever the Supreme Court may decide, Virginia can take it in stride.

Va. Negroes Found Split on Integration

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 12 (AP).—Not all of the 69 Negro families listed as plaintiffs in the Virginia antisegregation suit now before the Supreme Court actually want racial segregation ended, The Times-Dispatch said tonight.

Two newsmen who questioned 19 of the 69 families in Prince Edward County reported that only five of the Negro families declared themselves unequivocally for integrated white and Negro schools.

Six families said they definitely preferred a continuance of Virginia's school separation policy. The other eight families said Reporters Bill McIlwain and Alf Goodykoontz stands "in the middle."

The families "were scattered . . . and they differed considerably in occupation and economic status. They would seem, then, to represent a good cross-section of opinion."

The suit originated in 1951 when it was alleged that Negro schools in Prince Edward were unequal to schools provided white children. Since then, an $840,000 high school has been built for Negroes. It opened last September.

The Times-Dispatch indicated the survey, after a check, had shown the specific Negro student in whose behalf the antisegregation suit was filed—Dorothy E. Davis—now "does not want integrated (i. e., non-segregated) schools."

The Davis girl was a freshman at the old Robert R. Moton High School for Negroes when the suit was precipitated by a two-week-long "protest" strike against "poor conditions" by 450 Moton pupils in April, 1951.

The Times-Dispatch quoted the Davis girl, now 16 and an honor student, as saying, "I'd rather have it go the way it is."

When asked if she hoped the Supreme Court would strike down segregation, she was quoted as saying, "No."

"I don't think we'd be happy, and I don't think they (white students) would be happy," she said.

Her mother, Mrs. Sallie Pride Davis, said, "I'm proud we got the new school, but I would have felt better if it had been put up in peace."

The old school, she said, was "bad . . . when it rained, it leaked in on the children. The heating was bad. . . . It was overcrawded. . . . I don't want non-segregation. The new school is what we wanted."

An exactly opposite view was expressed by Mrs. Sallie Spencer, mother of eight. She said, "Certainly, white and colored children should go to school together. We're all human beings. The same God serves both races."

Mrs. Viola W. Neal agreed. She said, "They can equalize and they still won't get schools equal until they end segregation."

But Mrs. Kate Johnson said: "My race should stay to itself."

Dr. J. M. Tinsley of Richmond, president of the Virginia Conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored Peopde, which instituted the suit, said he was "quite surprised" at the survey results.

Said Dr. Tinsley, a dentist, "This is the first time I have heard anything like that. In the beginning, it was stated that 100 per cent of the Negro people in that section were for abolition of segregation. Our attorneys took the case because of this feeling."

3 U.S. Judges Uphold Segregated Schools

Admit Inequality; NAACP To Appeal

RICHMOND, Va. — Spottswood Robinson, III, an attorney for the NAACP, said last Saturday he will appeal the decision of a three-judge federal court which ruled segregation in Virginia high schools is constitutional.

The court ruled segregation is constitutional, although high school facilities for Negro pupils are "not substantially equal" to those of white.

The decision was handed down last Friday after a three-day hearing which ended two weeks ago.

In its decision the court ordered Prince Edward County school officials to "proceed with all reasonable diligence and dispatch" to equalize schools. However, no date was set for the equalization.

As a part of the equalization program, a school officials pointed out at the hearings that construction of an $800,000 Negro high school will begin in the Spring.

Attorney Gen. J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., declared "the decision of the court will bolster the course of public education in Virginia for both races."

The NAACP suit against Prince Edward County schools was the first direct attack on segregation at a high school level. The decision of the judges was patterned after the decision of a South Carolina court which upheld segregation in elementary schools.

The South Carolina decision was appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court but was sent back on a technicality.

A three-judge federal tribunal last week listened to evidence from both sides in new developments in the Clarendon county (S. C.) anti-segregation school suit.

Thurgood Marshall, chief NAACP counsel, pointed out that school trustees are trying to equalize facilities, but have not done so. And each day they remain unequal, Negro children are deprived of their Constitutional Rights for equal educational opportunities.

School trustees argued that Clarendon county is acting in good faith in providing equal facilities.

The case was appealed to the high court following an unfavorable decision a year ago.

Hearing the case were two judges who heard the original case last year — Judges John J. Parker and George Bell Timmerman. Absent is the third member of the original trio — Judge J. Waties Waring, now retired. In his place was Circuit Judge Armistead M. Dobie of Norfolk, Va.

Last year, Judge Waring declared that segregation per se (in itself) automatically discriminated against Negro children.

The majority opinion agreed that Negro schools in Clarendon county were inferior to those for whites, but did not act against Jim Crow. The court ordered the county to report within six months what it had done to equalize the schools.

Clarendon county is in what is called the "low country" of South Carolina and has an enrollment of 2,799 Negro children to only 295 whites.

The county declared it had spent $5,515,000 for Negro school improvement and $1,992,000 for white schools.

Dowell J. Howard, superintendent of public construction in Virginia, declared at the hearings that if the court ruled segregation is unconstitutional, public funds for unsegregated schools would be cut off.

Oliver W. Hill, also an attorney for the NAACP, declared:

"I am very disappointed. Not only do we want to win a decision against segregation, but we would also like to win it in a Virginia court. I think such a decision would be beneficial to the whole educational program."

The decision of the court pointed out that "Virginia alone employs as many Negro teachers in her public schools, according to testimony, as are employed in all the 31 non-segregated states.

"Likewise, it was shown that in 29 of the even 100 counties in Virginia the schools and facilities for the colored are equal to the white; in 17 more they are now superior, and, upon completion of work now authorized or in progress, another five will be superior.

Of the 27 cities, five have Negro schools and facilities equal to the white and eight more have better Negro schools than white."

Equalize Or Else School Board Told

LYNCHBURG, Va. — The Negro Civic Council here stated last week that no immediate legal action would be taken if the Lynchburg school board "promises" to take steps toward providing equal facilities for Negro and white students.

Several weeks ago the civil council issued an ultimatum to the school board threatening court action if their demands for immediate steps to equalize the schools were not heeded.

Dr. R. Walter Johnson, president of the Negro Civic Council stated that "We know it is impossible to equalize the schools by the Fall of 1952 or even by 1953." He said "we are only asking for some immediate action from the school board to show its good faith."

The deadline set by the civic council for a "satisfactory reply, with a lawsuit as the alternative, is August 15.

Virginia's Bias Education Laws Challenged By Parents

BY INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE

RICHMOND, Va. — Witnesses for Negro citizens challenging Virginia's segregation laws charged Tuesday separation of white and Negro students violates the "basic concepts of Democracy."

Dr. John J. Brooks, Director of an experimental, interracial new Lincoln School in New York, said segregation tends to have a "frustrating effect" upon Negroes. He said segregation is not compatible with the teachings of brotherly love, and the pledge of allegiance to the American flag, which proclaims "liberty and justice for all."

RETARDS REASONABILITY

M. Brewster Smith, Chairman, Psychology Department, Vassar College, said segregation retards personality development, and produces a feeling of inferiority. He said through segregation the Negro is made to feel "quarantined."

He proposed a sudden end to segregation, rather than what he described as a "gradual, pussyfooting approach."

Judge Armistead M. Dobile, one of three federal judges hearing the case, said Smith raised a question which was "better addressed to the legislature," than the court.

Effects of segregation were brought out after other witnesses attacked equipment used for Negro schools in Prince Edward County, Va., as inadequate.

Dr. Thomas M. Henderson, Dean of the Virginia Union University at Richmond, said there were 15 school buses serving the two white high schools and only nine transporting pupils to the one Negro high school.

He said the buses for Negroes are "handed down as their safety hazard increases."

BACKS UP CLAIMS

The Negro educator presented a series of 40 photographs to back up his claim of inadequacy of the bus transportation for Negro students of Prince Edward County. He said buses used for white pupils were valued at $44,000 while the ones used for Negro students were valued at $23,000.

Federal Judge Dobie remarked that the "issue is of national or even international importance."

The suit is directed against the Prince Edward County School Board, but the state of Virginia is playing the lead role in the defense.

Against contentions of the plaintiffs that more money is being spent in operation of the schools for white children, Thomas J. McIlwaine, Division Superintendent of Schools, countered that $800,000 has been earmarked for construction of a second Negro high school by the fall of 1953. He said it would be better than any school for white pupils in the county.

Spotswood Robinson, Attorney representing the Negro parents who filed the suit, said presentation of his evidence is almost complete. McIlwaine predicted the state would take about two days with its defense to the charges raised.

Striking Pupils Hold Makeshift Classes

West Point, Va. Teen-Agers Fight Hi School Transfer

WEST POINT, Va. (NNPA) — Twenty - four of the 29 colored high school pupils, who struck against being transferred to an out-of-county school, have set up a school in an abandoned town-owned building, it was learned last Friday.

The makeshift school has been holding classes since Sept. 8 in a frame building that was formerly a part of Beverly Allen School, the jim-crow school here. Virginius Thornton, a former teacher, is conducting the classes.

Town officials were surprised by the move. L. P. George, chairman of the local school board, learned of the makeshift school last Thursday and immediately began an investigation. He aid permission to use the building should have been obtained from the board.

5 On jobs

Mrs. Florence Edwards, president of the colored Parent-Teacher Association, said all but five of the toln's colored high school pupils are attending the classes. She said the five others had gone to work or were attending schools elsewhere.

The strike for equal school facilities in West Point began with the opening of the 1952-53 school term. The entire colored high school student body refused to board the bus for school Friday morning, Sept. 5, in protest against being transferre from the Beverly Allen School to the Hamilton-Holmes School in King William County.

An arrangement had been made between the King William County and the local school boards for the 29 colored high school students here to attend the King William County Hamilton - Holmes Consolidated High School. The local board has moved the colored pupils who attended Beverly Allen Elementary School into the brick structure occupied last year by the high school students.

The high school students refused to accept the transfer. A new bus, purchased by the town to carry them the eighteen miles to the King William County School, has yet to carry a passenger.

The student-strike followed an Allen School PTA meeting Thursday night, Sept. 4, at which the PTA indicated that it wanted West Point to continue to maintain a high school for colored students.

Dr. W. H. Hosfield, a member of the town's school board, said it was necessary to transfer the students to Hamilton - Holmes School to provide colored pupils with a broader curriculum and to make room for the greatly expanded white elementary enrollment at Beverly Allen School.

To Consult NAACP

Mrs. Edwards said "the parents and students are holding out against going to school because we are dissatisfied with the school board's plans." She also said the problem will be presented to the NAACP.

Besides Thornt,n, a second-year Virginia Union University student who is serving as as teacher without pay, the PTA has secured the services of John Lee, a Va. State College student.

Mrs. Edwards said a member of the Beverly Allen PTA has been at the makeshift school each day since classes began. She said other instructors are to be obtained when Thorton and Lee leave to begin their own classes this month.

Teacher Rehired By White Town

CASSVILLE, Wisc. — This community's lone Negro resident, Mrs. Rebecca Wyatt, who was greeted by a surprise board of education when she came here to teach last fall, was rehired Wednesday night for another term.

The arrival here of Mrs. Wyatt, a native of Paris, Tenn., created national interest last year. The board engaged her through a teachers' agency, assuming she was white.

Rehire First Race Teacher

CASSVILLE, Wis. — (ANP) — Mrs. John Wyatt, a graduate student in summer session at the University of Wisconsin; will return this fall to her teaching job here.

She was hired last fall as the first Negro teacher in the local school system. At the time she was hired, the school board was not aware of her racial identity.

This summer, she joined her husband at the University of Wisconsin. John Wyatt, recently discharged from the Army after 15 months in Korea, also is a teacher. He will teach in Potosi, Wis.

Churches, Negroes Improving Segregation Prolem, Blair Says

An awakening of a "powerful religious tone" among Southerners and demands from Negroes for better educational facilities are two reasons for the Southern Negroes' progress during the last 15 years.

That was what Dr. J. C. Blair, director of the Negro education division, State Department of Education, told members of the Montgomery Exchange Club here yesterday.

"Progress in Negro education in the South in the last 15 years has been outstanding," Dr. Blair said.

He said Southern white people have come to feel that better education for the Negro "is the right thing."

Bills before the U.S. Supreme Court concerning educational facilities have already been argued and decisions are expected this spring, Dr. Blair said. These educational facilities, he emphasized, "if separate must be equal."

Pride was expressed by the educator in the fact that there are now 98 buses transporting 3,662 Negro pupils to school.

Two Negro colleges are state-supported, he added. One of these, Alabama State College for Negroes, Montgomery, is the largest college for Negroes in the United States. The other is State A&M at Huntsville.

Enrollment at the two institutions for higher education for Negroes has increased in the last 15 years from 2,000 students to 9,000. Both colleges are accredited.

Dr. Blair was introduced by James Stovall, program chairman.

A plaque was presented the Exchange Club by M. H. Potter on behalf of the Salvation Army for the outstanding work done for the Christmas Cheer program.

Negro Colleges Submit Budgets

Fund Hikes Urged In Fiscal Allowances

The state's two major Negro colleges yesterday asked the state legislative budget committee for substantial increases in their fiscal allowances.

H. Councill Trenholm, president of Alabama State College for Negroes at Montgomery, requested $875,000 for each of the next two years.

That would be a 14 per cent increase in the present appropriation of $750,000, and is the same budget asked by Dr. Trenholm in 1951. Included in the request was a $15,000 item for adding additional classroom space to the two-year branch college in Mobile.

A $180,000 annual budget boost was sought by Dr. J. F. Drake, president of Alabama A & M College for Negroes near Huntsville. The school now has a $500,000 appropriation.

The Alabama School of Trades at Gadsden, now receiving $133,400, asked for $165,052 in 1953-54 and $202,415 the following fiscal period. The trade school at Dothan wanted $114,529 and $135,297 instead of the present $104,000.

The new trade school at Tuscaloosa, expected to open about July 1, asked $213,808 the first year and $141,527 the next. Superintendent H. I. James said the first year request included money for new equipment which has not been provided.

The new Negro trade school at Mobile, expected to open in January, asked $167,588 and $147,185.

A $140,196 budget next year and a $140,256 allowonce the following was presented for the Negro trade school at Wenonah in Jefferson County, which now operates on $85,000.

Earlier in the day the normally hard-to-impress committee members listened to an appeal for more money to help make Alabama's estimated 70,000 blnid persons more self-sustaining.

The grim picture was drawn by Dr. John E. Bryan in his budget request for the Alabama Institute for Deaf and Blind in Talladega. He asked $55,000 more next year in operating funds plus $460,000 for building needs.

Dr. Bryan, a former Jefferson County school superintendent, told the budget planners the cost of living has made it impossible to give the kind of training that students in the deaf and blind schools should have.

The teachers don't even get the same pay scale that others receive elsewhere in the state, he said. Part of the proposed budget increase for next year and a suggested $12,000 deficiency appropriation for the rest of the present fiscal year would go for salary raises.

Breaking the budget down, Dr. Bryan asked for an increase from $663,000 to $708,000 for each of the next two years for the deaf and blind institute, a gain of $45,000. For the adult blind appropriation, he requested a boost from $55,000 to $65,000.

The superintendent estimated there are 70,000 blind people in Alabama, virtually all of whom need some training. Only 250 are enrolled in his institution; the rest are outside and receive what help they can get from home teachers on the institute's staff.

Another school, Alabama College for Women at Montevallo, submitted its budget likewise during the day, asking for an increase from $515,000 to $525,000.

Expanding horizons—

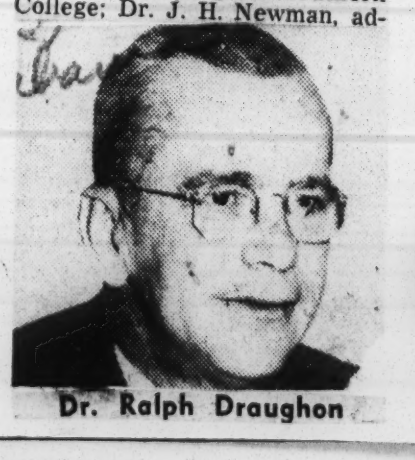
'Higher Education in Alabama' is theme for last of Channel 13 horizon programs

A discussion of "Higher Education in Alabama" on Channel 13 at 2:30 tomorrow afternoon will end the series of 12 programs in the "Expanding Horizons" series which have been scheduled for the past two weeks in connection with the expansion of power and coverage of Channel 13, WAFM and WAPI.

Channel 13 is now readying to go on 316,000 watts. WAFM early in August increased its power to 71,000 watts, and WAPI through its 24-hour schedule, has greatly increased its service to Alabama listeners.

Dr. P. P. Burns

Moderator of the Higher Education in Alabama program will be Dr. F. E. Lund, president of the Alabama State College for Women at Montevallo. On the panel will be Dr. Ralph Draughon, president of Alabama Polytechnic Institute at Auburn; President George R. Stuart of Birmingham-Southern College; Dr. J. H. Newman, administrative dean at the University of Alabama; and Dr. P. P. Burns, dean of the college at Howard College. Clarence B. Hanson Jr. will speak for The Birmingham News Co.



Dr. Ralph Draughon

A PICTURE OF "Negro progress in Alabama" was drawn this afternoon on Channel 13 in the series by five outstanding citizens of the Negro race. Dr. W. A. Bell, president of Miles College in Birmingham, was moderator, and panelists included Bishop I. H. Bonner of the African Methodist Church; President J. F. Drake of Alabama Agricultural and Mechanical College at Huntsville; Dr. I. A. Derbigny, vice president of Tuskegee Institute; President Arthur D. Gray of Talladega College, Lionel F. Baxter, manager of radio for the Television Corp., and vice president of The Television Corp., spoke for The Birmingham News Co.

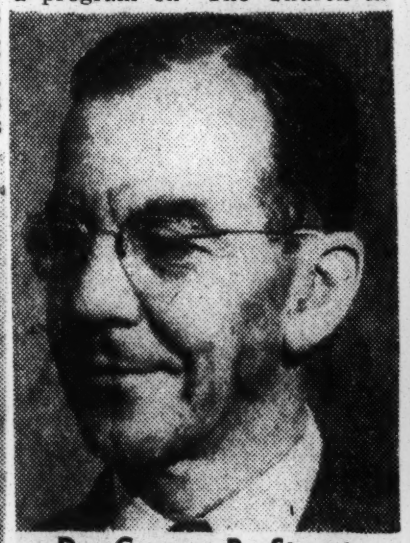
Dr. F. E. Lund

The series which concludes tomorrow afternoon opened with a program on "The Church in



Dr. George R. Stuart

Alabama" on Sept. 13. Other programs in the series included "Labor in Alabama;" "Agriculture in Alabama;" "Local Government in Alabama;" Public Schools in Alabama;" "Organized Sports in Alabama;" "Women's Interests in Alabama!" "Business and Industry in Alabama;" "Music and Art in Alabama;" and "Alabama in Washington."

General chairman of the series was Ray A. Furr, assistant to the president of The Television Corp. In charge of production for the series was Henry Norton and Johnny Johnson of Channel 13.

Henry P. Johnston, president of The Television Corp., and executive vice president of The Birmingham News Co., expressed gratification at the response the stations have received from the series.

If Supreme Court Bans Separate Schools

JUDGE PLOTS WAY TO KEEP JIM CROW

$250,000,000 to Equalize Public Schools in 'Bama

State Senator Says Death of Vinson Hurt Chances of White South

(Special to the Courier)

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.—A "White Supremacy" advocate used "National Citizenship Day," Sept. 17, to reveal his scheme for saving the jim-crow school system in the event the United States Supreme Court blots the latter out.

Judge Horace C. Wilkinson of Birmingham, who espoused the "League for White Supremacy" some years ago, spoke before the Mobile Real Estate Association at Admiral Semmes Hotel. He said that the "Compact clause" of the Federal constitution could be utilized to reconstruct legally the separate school system should the court hand down a decision against the latter. His speech was labeled a "Constitution Day" address.

IN MONTGOMERY the same day, State Senator Jimmy Faulkner of Bay Minette speaking at a Junior Chamber of Commerce meeting held in the Jefferson Davis Hotel said that the pending school segregation cases, from the Southern viewpoint, were hurt by the death of Chief Justice Fred Vinson.

"He (Vinson) was a friend of the South," Mr. Faulkner said. He warned against rash plans to circumvent an anti-jim-crow decision "since the high tribunal might make a ruling that would preclude the action we plan." He estimated that it would take upwards of $250,000,000 to bring the Negro public schools of Alabama up to the white ones.

Judge Wilkinson, who served as special counsel for the city of Birmingham in defending the racial zoning laws, which he lost all the way up and to the Supreme Court, in his speech ripped the U. S. Supreme Court justices and dubbed them "ministers of miscegenation." Under his "compact plan," Judge Wilkerson asserted that the jim-crow states could keep the dual schools by signing contracts with each other.

"IF THE provisions in our state constitution requiring separate schools for the races is stricken down, the mongelization of America may be deferred by Alabama entering into contract with a majority of the states, approved by Congress, to educate the races in separate schools," Judge Wilkinson asserted.

He added: "I say a majority of other states because, in my opinion, it will not be difficult to get the Western States and some of the Central States to make an agreement of this kind with us."

in the continuation of the school system beyond any present provision or capacity to meet and compel serious consideration of the abandonment of the function of public education.

". . . . Sterilize the police power of the state, reflected in many statutes, which has promoted and is essential to the preservation of domestic tranquility."

Solons Request Special Session If School Segregation Is Killed

The Alabama legislature formally asked Gov. Gordon Persons to call a special session if the U. S. Supreme Court should act to strike down school segregation laws.

A resolution by Sen. J. M. Bonner of Wilcox County, ardent champion of white supremacy, cleared the House on an apparent unanimous voice vote.

Under the Bonner resolution a six-man legislative committee, three from each house, would be appointed to determine what legislation would be needed to protect the state's interests in the face of such a Supreme Court decision.

It further directs the attorney general of Alabama to intervene in one or more of the school segregation cases now pending the nation's highest court.

Bonner's resolution predicted that abolition of segregation in the public schools would:

"Disorganize the operation of the public school system in Alabama, throw into confusion both the training and assignment of teachers and force the reallocation of all pupils.

"Impose expense upon the state

PRESIDENTS and other representatives of the 11 colleges and universities of Alabama will convene in quarterly session at 10 a.m. Monday, at Payne College. Dr. J. King Chandler, III, is host president.

Primarily a study group, the Association of College Presidents and Executives is designed to enrich the offerings of the colleges in Alabama.

Dr. J. M. Goddard, executive secretary, Southern Association of Colleges, commission on colleges and universities, will lead in a discussion on accreditation. Dr. Still, from the State Department of Education, will present a lecture on problems and trends in teacher-certification.

Colleges to be represented are: Alabama A. and M., President J. F. Drake, Dr. H. H. Lee, Dean J. H. Browder and Prof. C. W. Orr; Alabama State, Pres. H. Councill Trenholm, Dr. J. T. Brooks, Dean W. E. Anderson and John Duncan; Birmingham Baptist, Dr. T. D. Bussey and Mrs. Olivia Anderson; Lomax-Hannon, Dr. T. M. Patton and Dean N. W. Stevenson; Miles, Pres. W. A. Bell, Mrs. M. W. Blissett and Miss Marjorie Hopkins; Oakwood, Pres. F. L. Paterson and J. T. Stafford; Selma University, Pres. C. Popez McAllister and Dean Richard Ellis; Stillman, Pres. Samuel B. Hay and Dean B. B. Hardy; Talladega, Pres. Arthur D. Gray, and dean of the college; Tuskegee Institute, Pres. F. D. Patterson, Dean C. G. Gomillion and Dr. T. C. Burnette.

A. M. E. Bishop I. H. Bonner will greet the educators.

Negro Education Facilities Enlarged

Alabama now can boast of new and enlarged facilities for Negro higher education, and improved grammar and high school education for all children. Regarding the efforts that have been made to improve the facilities for higher education of negroes in the state, a recent issue of the Alabama State Teachers Assn. Yearbook reports that there has been accelerated effort to improve the facilities for the education of negroes and most significant strides have been made in increasing the appropriations for maintenance, in broadening and expanding "upward" the curriculum offerings, and in making appreciable additions to the plant facilities.

In Alabama, the appropriations for the higher education of Negroes have been greatly increased, the offerings have been broadened on the undergraduate level as well as extended upward into the gaduate area both at Alabama State College and Tuskegee. The state maintains the State College for Negroes at Montgomery and contributes to the support of Tuskegee. At Stillman College, in Tuscaloosa, Ala., Negroes are receiving a splendid college education under a consecrated Christian faculty and a progressive administration.

Enrollment At Alabama State College Here Makes It Largest Negro School In Nation

By DR. H. COUNCIL TRENHOLM
President Alabama State College

There are several unique distinctions associated with the state of Alabama in the historic war and reconstruction period of 1860-1875. The beginning of the new Alabama State College for Negroes is one of these significant events about which there may not be general acquaintance.

Faced with the necessity for rewriting its constitution which was approved in 1888, there was for the state of Alabama the circumstance of formulation and adoption of a state constitution which provided for a state board of education, and which also stipulated that there would be distribution and use of state school funds on a racial pro rata basis.

To operate schools, there must be teachers. It thus was a decision to provide appropriation for training of teachers before the colored school fund was apportioned to the local system.

The first approach in 1870 was through the conduct of teacher training classes in the then private and philanthropic academies located in Montgomery, Huntsville, Marion and Sparta. There was decision by the State Board of Education in 1872, with reaffirmation in 1874, to take over a school being operated at Marion by the American Missionary Association and to use it for an authorized "State Normal School and University." Thus it is that the present "Alabama State College for Negroes" can date its operation back 78 years to the school year of 1874-75.

An Historic Year

In the history of educational evolution in Alabama, the year of 1887 has memorable significance not only for the changes in the system of distribution of public school funds but also for the Alabama State College in the change of its site of operation. The legislature of 1887 discontinued the State Normal School and University at Marion and authorized a new institution at an acceptable location which would be known as "The Alabama Colored People's University."

It was in the summer of 1887 that the late William Burns Paterson, who had become president in 1878 of the school of Marion, made his appeals to the Negro citizens in Montgomery for their participation in the effort to have Montgomery accepted as the site for this state school. The record of those early efforts include some excerpts from The Montgomery Advertiser. The several Negro churches of Montgomery are prominent in the history of that year. The result was that the sum of $5,000 was raised to purchase the site on which the school was to be located and which is the present original campus located on the east side of South Jackson Street between Tuscaloosa Street and Thurman Street.

In Rental Houses

"The Alabama Colored People's University" began its operation in the fall of 1887 in some rented houses and the Beulah Baptist Church located on Norton Street, one block east of South Union Street. There was a Supreme Court decree in 1888 that the law creating this institution was unconstitutional. There was the legislative decision of 1889 to confirm the establishment of the school here in Montgomery with its new name being "The State Normal School for Colored Students."

Thus began a period of existence and operation in Montgomery which now extends over 65 years within which there has been the recurrent expression of interest for assistance on the part of the many officials and leaders and citizens of this great community which is Montgomery.

The three decades from 1889 through 1919 comprise the most significant period of foundation-building of the State Normal School at Montgomery. This was a period in which the school was to become firmly established and accepted as a great potential asset for the State of Alabama as well as a great advantage and convience to the city and citizens of Montgomery.

Paterson's Leadership

This was to be the period of wise leadership and inspiring perserverance of the late William Burns Paterson who was privileged to serve as president of the school for 38 crucial years. To him fell the obligation to develop interest in the school which led to its reaffirmed creation at Montgomery and to stimulate a continuing interest which has become the basis for the accelerated expansion of the present decades. To him must be given the credit for laying the foundation and setting the goals of character, morality and patriotism which is the record of Alabama State College.

It was within this 38-year period that the school occupied its original site north of Thurman Street, utilized a first frame building until it was unfortunately destroyed by fire in 1904 and encompassed the period of erection and service of the present Tullibody Hall and four surrounding structures which have been remodeled or replaced.

Upon the death of Mr. Paterson in 1915 there was a plant then valued in excess of $47,000 toward which the State of Alabama had contributed only $20,000. The record of response from alumni and citizens both white and Negro, extended through that entire 30 years from the period of purchase of the land on which the school was to be located.

Curriculum Evolution

The period was the occasion for the evolution of the curriculum and the associated instructional emphasis. In the first years there was a five-year normal school based upon the completion of the eighth grade. In the first two decades of the 20th century there was the evolving pattern of the provision for the training and certification of teachers.

A "reduction" of the curriculum in 1916 was somewhat in preparation for the epochal step taken by the Alabama legislature of 1919 in response to the suggestion from a state survey made by the Alabama State Office of Education in 1917-18.

These three decades had been also the occasion for the transfer of the instruction and administration of the school to Negro teachers. A graduate of the school, the late John William Beverly who was the first Negro teacher, became the first Negro president, serving for a five-year period 1915-1920.

A Momentous Period

The period of 1920-1940 was to be a momentous period in the development and expansion of the Alabama State College.

This development meant the addition of a college department with the first two years having begun in 1920 and the other two years initialed in 1929 to lead to the conferring of the first degrees in May, 1931. Branch summer schools at Birmingham and at Mobile were to be initiated in 1927 and have been operated each subsequent summer. A two-year branch all-year college at Mobile was begun in 1936 to offer opportunity for the first two years of college work to an approximate enrollment of 400 students annually.

There was to be expansion in facilities. A first decision of 1919 lead to the initiation of dormitory life through the appropriation of $20,000 from the State of Alabama as its matching of a $30,000 grant from the General Education Board. Thus, it was that the two buildings (now named Jackson Davis Dormitory and Kilby Dormitory) were erected for first occupancy in 1922 along with the president's home which has been subsequently remodelled. There were improvements and alterations in the existing structures on the old campus which included the enlargement and veneering of the buildings now known as Dillard Hall and as Stewart Hall.

Decision By Graves

The great decision was to be made in 1927 by the late Gov. Bibb Graves and the associated State Superintendents John W. Abercrombie and Robert E. Tidwell. This great decision was to expand south of Thurman Street and to acquire a significant block of property on which the new college has been built and is now in congested circumstance. It was in 1927 that the General Education Board made another significant grant of $125,000 toward what ultimately became a half million dollar outlay for capital improvements. It was in this period that the present administration building (Paterson Hall) and the women's dormitory (Bibb Graves Hall) at the end of South Jackson Street were erected.

The depression years were also of advantage to the development at Alabama State College. The commodious gymnasium was built from three WPA grants along with supplemented college funds. The athletic field with its concrete wall and concrete seats represented another construction through WPA labor. The paving of the driveways, the conversion of the top floor of Paterson Hall from an attic to a library and other associated construction and remodelling improvements were also done by WPA.

The John W. Beverly Science Hall, erected just before 1940, was a WPA project through which the federal government granted approximately $50,000 and for which the remaining amount was at first financed by student amortization bonds.

Period Of Preparation

These two decades encompassed a five-year period of service of the late President George W. Trenholm for whom the library is named, and of the first 15 years of the service period of 28 years of the present president of the institution. Again this period was in preparation and in anticipation of what have been the most recent developments and the bright potentialities of a future service to the State of Alabama.

There has been transformation and completion of some major facilities during the past 10 years.

Again it was the World War II aftermath which led to the erection of five temporary buildings along with three other buildings erected by the college from donated and purchased war material.

There has been the completed construction of three major buildings in line with the site-plot plan and in accordance with the developing plans approved by the 1945 session of the state legislature. John W. Abercrombie Hall is a facility for the accommodation of 200 women. George W. Trenholm Memorial Library is a facility for 200 readers and 70,000 volumes. The new dining hall provides seating capacity of 600 students but line service to provide for more than 1,000 service at each meal and much larger numbers for certain occasions.

Site Expanded

There has been the utilization of a special appropriation of $200,000 for site acquisition for the extension of the east boundaries of the campus site as well as some additional south expansion. There has been the donation of the common stock and the associated operation responsibility for the John Brown Courts which comprise 32 two-bedroom apartments.

The college, through its alumni and friends and utilization of some funds, has been able to carry forward a further improvement. There is first use this fall, by student in physical education of a most modern swimming pool. There was expansion of facilities of the laboratory instruction units and the associated construction in some additional areas. There are improvements and additional temporary constructions at Mobile for the enlarged science and laboratory facilities as well as for an auditorium-gymnasium.

The next goal is the utilization of a grant of $100,000 from the General Education Board to be applied toward the cost of erection of a classroom and administration building. The State Legislature has just made appropriation of its required participation. However, this appropriation has necessarily been put in the "conditional category." There is thus the "hopeful wait" for the determination of available surplus out of which this appropriation may be paid on a two-year basis. This is the final grant from the General Education Board which terminates its operation next year. This is another opportunity for the State of Alabama and this college to have the addition of a facility which will probably cost more than $500,000.

Within the ranks of the Negro colleges of the nation, Alabama State stands at the top. Its average of 2,600 college students per quarter for each of the four quarters of the school year gives it the largest per quarter average enrollment of any Negro college in the nation.

Its 750 graduates annually constitute the largest number of bachelor degrees being conferred annually by any Negro college in the nation. Its summer quarter over the past 20 years has been the largest of any of the Negro colleges.

The Alabama State staff now numbers approximately 200 instructors, administrators and regular staff operational employes. There are now 11 persons on the staff who hold doctor's degree.

The campus load per current quarter here at Montgomery will total more than 2,700 students with the inclusion of the limited enrollment of the Campus Laboratory School.

The curriculum now provides for five degrees and 18 departments. The degrees are master of education, bachelor of arts, bachelor of science, bachelor of science in elementary education and bachelor of science in secondary education.

The 18 departments for a major and-or minor include art, commerce, education, English, foreign language, geography, history, industrial arts, library education, mathematics, music, health and physical education, science and social studies. There are designated pre-professional curricula as well as the prescribed sequences for those students preparing to teach in the schools of Alabama.

State Examiners Report—

Purchasing Policies Criticized At State College For Negroes

State examiners have disapproved of some financial practices of the State Department of Education and the State College for Negroes at Montgomery.

In fiscal year audit of the education department from Oct. 1, 1949, to Sept. 30, 1950, examiners said public school students lost $19,000 through "mismanagement" of a free textbook fund.

They said a $19,000 expenditure for printing and binding should not have been charged against the fund because governmental money earmarked for specific funds should not be diverted for other use.

Handling of some funds for crippled children, vocational rehabilitation and veterans education was also criticized.

Purchasing policies at the State College for Negroes caused concern in an audit for the fiscal year 1951-52.

The buying appeared to be "characterized by an apparent lack of regard for the principles of prudence and economy," the report declared, and "reasonable prudence" would result in substantial saving.

On buildings and grounds, the examiners said "enormous" quantities of janitor supplies were bought at prices that appeared to be the same as they would be at retail.

Dr. H. Councill Trenholm, college president, was quoted in the report as saying a purchasing agent was being trained.

The auditors also complained that the college failed to take advantage of cash discounts offered even though "at no time during the audit period has funds on hand been so low as to prevent prompt payment of claims subject to discount."

The auditors did not question the legality of the college being able to collect student fees for the retirement of a bond issue after the bonds had been paid off.

But they said it was their opinion that "revenue so derived should be expended for the purpose for which imposed and collected."

They also questioned the practices of advancing salaries to teachers.

Appraisal Ends Leadership Workshop At 'Bama State

The final session of the Workshop in Educational Leadership at Alabama State College on Friday featured an appraisal by the 31 participants representing the educational leadership of Alabama.

Dr. J. C. Blair, administrative director of the workshop, told of the background of the project which had its inception five years ago when representatives of the several State Departments of Education met and devised ways and means by which the leadership in the Negro Schools of the South might be improved.

Plans continued and last year a similar meeting was held at Tuskegee Institute to consider possibilities of such a program for all of the southern states.

Plans Laid Out

In Atlanta a few weeks ago the specific plans were laid and the program planned with the joint cooperation of the Southern Education Foundation and the Kellogg Foundation.

The workshop at Alabama State was thus jointly sponsored by these two agencies, by local institution, and by the state Department of Education. Dr. Blair paid a tribute to the college for the part which it has played in the whole area of improvement on all levels of teacher-training.

Dr. H. Councill Trenholm, in pointing out the setting and the purpose of the effort, recalled something of the history of the college and its place in the whole teacher-education effort in Alabama both in the area of pro-preparation and in-service training of teachers.

Negroes On Upswing

He recalled the upward swing of the Negro teachers toward Alabama's highest certificate, mentioning the fact that some 360 persons through Alabama State College have been able to acquire the State's Class A certificate through earning the M.Ed. degree at Alabama State College.

Two specific aspects of the setting were mentioned by Dr. Trenholm: (1) the persons enrolled are not motivated by a need for academic credit but by a desire for improving themselves; and (2) it is a cooperative venture, the spirit of which should not be minimized.

Purposes of Workshop

He listed two purposes of the workshop (1) to seek to improve the teaching and administrative service for Alabama schools, with due cognizance of what the changing scene is; and (2) to learn to use the techniques of the workshop experience not only to improve personal skills but also to the end that our resources may be more fully utilized.

Other program participants included O. J. Brooks, principal of Summerville Industrial School, Aliceville; John T. Smith, R. R. Moton High School, Leeds; J. B. Wiser, Jeanes supervisor Pickens County; M. M. Smith, principal, Cobb Avenue School, Anniston; Mrs. Bessie Estell, Jefferson County principal; Mrs. Maude Calhoun, principal Boykin School, Brewton; J. F. Kidd, Lower Peachtree; A. J. Rowser, principal U. S. Jones High, Demopolis; B. F. Garth, principal, Enterprise; Mrs. Hattie R. Palmer, principal Council School, Mobile and W. E. Morton, principal, J. W. Darden High, Opelika.

The following served as consultants: Walter Nelson, Gadsden; A. R. Stickney, principal, Calhoun School, and Dr. R. D. Crockett, administrative assistant to the president of Alabama State College.

Educators Presented

Dr. Robert C. Hatch, coordinator for the workshop, presented superintendents of education from the following counties: Bibb, Perry, Bullock, Madison along with city superintendents from Florence and Demopolis.

Other presons presented by Dr. Hatch included Dr. Elsie Wallace of Alabama A&M College; Mrs. Ethel Hardy Bell, Jeanes supervisor of Monroe County; Dr. S. E. Duncan, supervisor of education in North Carolina and currently a consultant in the workshop at Tuskegee Institute; C. D. Higgins, principal of the Higgins High School at Clarksdale, Miss., along with several representatives from the State Department of Education and other visitors and friends.

Negro College Art Festival Due July 30-31

Alabama State College will present its first Summer Arts Festival, including art exhibits, dramatic productions, and a series of musical attractions, July 30-31.

The college department of Music and Art, and the Dramatic Guild, will co-operate in presenting the variety of events of the festival.

The festival is under the direction of a planning committee, which includes Dr. F. D. Hall, music department chairman; Dr. Isaac S. Hathaway, ceramics instructor and internationally known sculptor; Hayward Oubre, chairman of the art department; and Mrs. Juanita Oubre, director of dramatics.

The calendar of events will extend over the two-day period, and the series of musical attractions will feature both faculty and out-of-town artists.

On July 30, an assembly will feature a lecture by an artist of national reputation. Later that day, the first gallery tour will be conducted in the Campus Center. A musical interlude will follow. Climaxing Thursday's activities will be a dramatic production at 8 p.m. in Tullibody Auditorium.

Friday's series of programs will begin with a morning musicale. This program will be a recital by a distinguished guest artist. Other events during the second day will include the seminar, at 3 p.m., on the subject, "The High School Choral Director"; and the second gallery tour at 5 p.m.

As the closing event of the festival, the Summer Concert Choir, under the direction of Dr. Hall, will present a concert, at 8 p.m., Friday, in Tullibody Auditorium.

H. 230, by Dawkins and others: Making a conditional appropriation in the amount of $175,000 for each of the fiscal years ending Sept. 30, 1954, and Sept. 30, 1955, for construction of an administration building at the Alabama State College for Negroes at Montgomery.

ALLEN UNIVERSITY

In Good Standing Again

Allen Univ. Off Probation List

COLUMBIA, S. C.—The Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools at its recent meeting in Memphis, Tenn., removed from probation Allen University and placed the college again on its fully accredited list.

It will be recalled that two years ago Allen was placed on probation and told to strengthen its faculty salaries, and secure $300,000 in endowment. The college was given two years to meet the endowment deadline, but after one year this stipulation has been practically met.

THE INSTITUTION was reinspected last spring by a committee from the association and every phase of the institution's program was carefully examined. The report of this special committee to the association's meeting in Memphis recently resulted in the dropping of the probationary status of Allen University and again giving the institution its full membership status.

This is perhaps the first instance in which an AME college has met such a huge endowment stipulation in the brief period of one year.

Bishop Frank Madison Reid, the episcopal head of the Seventh Epispocal District, comprising South Carolina, is receiving much praise for the almost miraculous achievement while Dr. S. R. Higgins is being lauded for the administrative success.

A. & M. Student Body Stands For Racial Equality

14 e (1) Okla

An editorial in the Daily O'Collegian, official organ of the student body at the A. & M. college, Stillwater, under date of March 25, is of deep significance, respecting issues connected with enrollment of Negro students in that institution.

Bench Bar Briefs p.5

Stating at the outset the student body looks forward to the day when racial equality shall be a reality on the campus, the editorial points out a debate looking toward that end will be staged on the night of the 25th in the student senate.

Among a number of questions raised is the point that undergraduate students are not permitted to attend school at the A. & M. college, an issue that has been constantly annoying to the Oklahoma Conference of Branches, NAACP, since the Ada Lois Sipuel decision several years ago. This is true also at the University of Oklahoma where a ruling has been made that one year of work must be taken at Langston university before a student can enroll. This requirement is insisted upon despite the fact that in many instances Langston does not offer preparatory courses leading up to a specific graduate level. This is especially true in the engineering field.

Dat. 4-4-53

There follows the editorial referred to, appearing in the columns of the O'Collegian:

"The following is a resolution drawn up by the student senate concerning race relations at Oklahoma A. & M. college. The resolution has not yet been voted on. Debate on the issue will take place in the Wednesday night senate meeting.

"'We, the student senate of Oklahoma A. & M. college, believing in the basic principles of equality of opportunity for all men, find the following conditions to be present on our campus:

"'1. Undergraduate Negroes do not attend school at Oklahoma A. & M.

"'2. Most fraternities, sororities, and other campus organizations have constitutional provisions prohibiting persons of the Negro race from membership.

"'3. There are persons on this campus who hold that the color of skin has some mysterious correlation to the quality or worth of the individual.

"'4. There is evidence of discrimination against students of other countries in this community, although our college is involved in a program of helping under-developed countries.

"'We, the student senate, look forward to the day when racial equality shall be a reality on our campus. Further, we wish to express our approval of all constructive measures to this end.'

"It would be well to know what individual student reaction is to the resolution. Varied opinions come out in over-coffee discussions, but the only way to make those opinions count is to make them known to your student senators."

While this writer was not in the meeting when this matter was discussed by the student senate at the A. & M. college, we know enough about the liberality and brotherhood existing in most American student bodies, to realize that the decision reached would be good advice to the current legislature and the attorney general of this state.

Many of the opinions rendered by Mac Q. Williamson since the Ada Lois Sipuel decision, having to do with implementation, are to the judgment of the Black Dispatch, senseless, and not in keeping with the intent and purpose of the supreme court decision.

A & M COLLEGE -SOUTH CAROLINA

At Least 5 Others Facing Dismissal

ORANGEBURG, S. C.—A controversy over a book and the expenditure of funds for athletics were labelled as the reasons here last week for the sudden ouster of a professor of history and the reported dismissal of a football coach from their jobs at South Carolina A. & M. College.

Dr. Lewis K. McMillan was curtly dismissed from the college staff and Coach Lawrence Simmons was reportedly fired, also, as President Benner C. Turner wielded the axe.

Informed sources at the school say that a total of five staff and faculty members will probably be out of jobs by the end of June, although Dr. McMillan's dismissal is the only case to have been confirmed.

DR. McMILLAN charges that his dismissal came about as the result of his publishing of a book which criticized the glaring inequities in this state's "separate but equal" segregated educational system.

Dr. McMillan had written a book entitled, "Negro Higher Education in South Carolina," which called attention to the fact that A. & M. College is governed by an all-white board of trustees and that Negroes have no voice in the running of the school.

He said, "the State of South Carolina is making a mere plaything of higher education for Negroes. Negroes constitute approximately 45 per cent of the states' normal population . . . The lengthened shadows of the effects of chattel slavery still cast over this Negro population the ghostly twilight of ignorance, poverty, and cruelly restricted opportunity."

Despite this population factor, the professor said that the inventory of land and buildings of the five white colleges amounts to $48,923,896.27 as compared to the $2,722,000 for the "Colored Normal Colleges."

IN A LETTER to the trustees board of A. and M. College asking for a review of the summary dismissal, Dr. McMillan said, "Gentlemen, I have tried to point up my case. 'Lewis K. McMillan is not on trial. Benner C. Turner is on trial. The trustees board is on trial. The 'Colored Normal College' is on trial.

"The State of South Carolina is on trial. My request is for a reconsideration of the action of the board of trustees whereby my case may be acted upon in line with rules established in the Southern Association of Colleges and the American Association of University Professors.

"And I challenge you to assume belatedly the full responsibility of helping to lift the level of life among South Carolina's neglected, but faithful and resourceful Negroes through the agency of this college."

McMILLAN had also declared that the school didn't even have an enrollment which entitled it to be considered as a standard college although, he said, "President Benner C. Turner has had introduced in the State Legislature a bill to the effect that the 'Colored Normal, Industrial, Agricultural and Mechanical College' will be given the fabulous name of 'South Carolina State University at Orangeburg.'"

The reported dismissal of Coach Simmons, according to an authoritative source, centered over the coach's expenditures for athletic necessities. The coach was reportedly on the coals because he "didn't always follow routine for purchases."

Simmons came to South Carolina A. and M. from Tennessee A. and I. where he had been serving as an assistant coach.

Baptists Ask Resignation Of Dr. Coggs

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.— (ANP) — Dr. T. W. Coggs, president for 15 years of Arkansas Baptist college, was asked to resign at an annual meeting of the Missouri State Baptist convention which met here last week.

Reported reason for seeking Dr. Coggs' resignation was discrepancies and irregularities in the management of the school.

The move to oust the head of the Baptist institute caused an uproar among the 1,000 delegates to the convention.

In other action taken at the confab, the Rev. F. T. Guy, president, and all other officers were re-elected by the organization.

A. & T. Bursar Dismissed; Board Names AU Graduate

GREENSBORO, N. C. — N. C. Webster, bursar at A. and T. College since 1928, has been dismissed from his position for "irregularities in the bursar's office."

The following statement was released to reporters at the close of the meeting held in the college's Dudley Hall at 4:30 p. m., on Monday: 'The Executive committee of A. & T. College met and dismissed N. C. Webster, bursar at the college. The action was taken due to irregularities in the bursar's office reported by the state auditor.

The action was arrived at the meeting of the committee which had in attendance: Judge Charles A. Hines, Greensboro, N. C., chairman of the college's board of trustees; Robert H. Frazier, Greensboro and H. A. Scott, Haw River, N. C., both members of the board.

Webster, 51, a native of Columbus, Kentucky, was employed at the college on June 28, 1923 as college bursar, the position he has held up to his release last week. In 1925 he was appointed faculty athletic manager and was elevated to the chairmanship of the college's athletic committee in 1930, a position he also held up to his firing.

The trustee board committee, simultaneously, announced the appointment of L. A. Wise who took charge of the office late Monday.

Wise came to the college in 1928 as head of the college's commercial department, a position which he has held since that time with the exception of an interruption of one year while he was on leave for further study. A native of Crisfield, Md., he is a graduate of New York University's School of Commerce, Accounts and Finance. He received his M. A. degree in commerce at Atlanta University, Atlanta, Ga., in 1943.

HENRY L. BRIDGES, state auditor, said, "There were irregularities in handling of funds and of records of funds."

Dr. F. D. Bluford, president of the college, declined to comment beyond the prepared statement.

Webster also refused to comment.

One college official who asked that his name be withheld told the Courier that the fund in question was not the athletic fund but another fund of which Mr. Webster is said to have had "exclusive responsibility for the collection."

Webster came to A. and T. College from Columbus, Ky., in 1923.

L. A. Wise, manager of the college bookstore, was named to succeed Webster. Wise, a native of Crisfield, Md., came to A. and T. in 1948 as head of the Commerce Department. He is a graduate of New York University and Atlanta University.

A & T College Has Building To Save Sweet Potatoes

RALEIGH, N. C. — (ANP- — Few North Carolinians have had sweet potatoes to go with their spare ribs after Christmas, and there's no good reason for it.

H. M. Covington, horticulture specialist for the State College Agricultural Extension service, says that an inexpensive sweet potato curing house can give you sweet potatoes 10 months out of the year. Demonstration models of the concrete block, electrically-heated buildings have been constructed at A. and T. college, Greensboro and three other places.

Covington, who is constructing the 60-bushel capacity buildings, quotes their cost at $100 to $130, exclusive of labor. Electricity to operate a building is about $10 a year, according to Covington.

Covington points out that just about every sweet potato has two broken ends, which lay it open to rot and other diseases. Curing for 10 days at 85 degrees heals the breaks. After curing, if you maintain the potatoes at 55 degrees they will last for 10 months or more.

The buildings are designed to give a farm family plenty of potatoes for home use, some for tenants and neighbors and enough left over for planting a 10-acre crop.

Eastern farmers can also use the insulated building to keep their Irish potatoes cool in the summer.

Social School Head Resigns

Dr. Washington Leaving Atlanta

CLEVELAND, Ohio—Dr. Forrester B. Washington, president of the Atlanta School of Social Work, announced here last week that he has officially resigned the presidency of the school after 27 years.

He said his resignation was "a routine matter which became automatic when I reached the age of 65."

"But by no means am I leaving the field of social work," he was quick to point out. "I have been in it too long to quit now. There are still too many things to be accomplished."

To Begin New Duties

Dr. Washington, who made the school the most outstanding colored institution of its kind, said that he will begin "new duties which will lie in a very closely related field" about the first of next year.

He said he could not divulge the exact nature of the new post at the moment, but admitted he had already accepted it.

"In fact," he said, "I am on a sort of leave of absence from the new duties right now. The School of Social Work has been very generous in permitting me to remain long enough to see my successor seated, which I hope will be no later than January."

Atlanta U. To Get Lincoln Collections

ATLANTA—In a convocation, commemorating the 144th anniversary of the birth of Abraham Lincoln, Atlanta university will formally receive the Anna Chittenden Thayer Lincoln Collection and will afterwards dedicate the new Lincoln Room at the Trevor Arnett Library which will house this Collection.

Mrs. Thayer, donor of this rare and valuable collection, lives in New York City. She will be present at formal presentation exercises to be held at 11:00 a.m., on Tuesday, Feb. 10, in Sisters Chapel, Spelman college campus. Students, faculties and friends of the colleges of the Atlanta University Center are cordially invited to attend.

Rare Collection

The collection of more than 350 items contains engravings, autographs, sculpture, letters, prints, photographs, newspapers, lithographs posters, books, programs, cartoons stamps, sheet music, pamphlets, paintings, poems and coins.

Of particular interest is a part of a log cabin in which Lincoln was born and a stone taken from the birthplace of the former President; an original program of the performance at Ford's Theatre in Washington, D. C., where the assassination took place; a campaign poster used in 1860; a deed for two slaves (considered unusual because the selling and buying of slaves was usually a cash transaction), and newspapers from all over the world carrying accounts of the President's assassination.

ATLANTA UNIVERSITY

Atlanta University Given Thayer-Lincoln Works

ATLANTA — Abraham Lincoln's greatness stemmed from deep religious convictions, Mrs. Anna Chittenden Thaver of NYC told a large audience at Atlanta University Tuesday at a convocation in which the valuable Thayer-Lincoln collection was presented to the university.

The more than 350 items that make up the collection include books, manuscripts, newspapers, photographs, lithographs, scrapbooks, coins, medals, sculpture, letters, china, a lock of President Lincoln's hair and a rock from the Lincoln farm in Illinois.

In Arnett Library

They have been set up in attractive quarters at the Trevor Arnett library of Atlanta University. Although a long - time friend of the university and of the late President Edward T. Ware, Mrs. Thayer made her first visit to the campus for the formal presentation.

She was accompanied by her son, Philip Thayer of Chapel Hill, N.C.

Following the exercises, held in Sisters Chapel on the Spelman college campus, the audience was invited to the library to witness the formal opening of the new Lincoln Room. The official cutting of the tape across the door of the room was done by Mrs. Thayer.

Collection Includes More Than 350 Items In New Lincoln Room

BY GEORGE COLEMAN

The priceless collection of Abraham Lincoln relics, given to the Atlanta University Library yesterday by a small elderly lady who spent more than 60 years gathering them, is probably the first monument to the advocator of abolition south of the Mason and Dixon line, a library official said Tuesday.

The collection was turned over to the library yesterday after a convocation commemorating the 144th anniversary of the birth of Lincoln. The Anna Chittenden Thayer Lincoln Collection was installed in the newly dedicated Lincoln Room at the Trevor Arnett Library which will house the gift.

Mrs. Thayer, who became a Lincoln admirer as a youngster after in Brooklyn, held the attention of studying under Miss Ethel Barrett university students for 40 minutes in which she related her years of gathering effects of the president often at extremely high prices.

The colorful speaker wept at the end of her talk and parted with the collection which she has nursed for more than half a century. The collection was more than a group of relics to her. To know Lincoln better, she met and held long talks with Robert Lincoln, son of the president.

She found and included in her collection European newspapers relating the account of his assassination a month later because the trans-Atlantic cable had not been completed.

She gathered copies of the program at the Ford Theatre on the night he was slain. She even included a tassle of his hair.

But she was not alone in her love for Lincoln. She proudly displayed her membership card in the Lincoln Farm Association. This a circus purchased the log cabin group came to life years ago wher in which Lincoln was born

Successor To Be Named

Forrester Washington Slated To Leave Social Work Post

Forrester B. Washington, Director of the Atlanta University School of Social Work who has been associated with the system for more than 27 years, said Wednesday that he will probably leave his post for a new position next January.

Mr. Washington said, in answer to reports that he had resigned from the system that under university regulations instructors are "automatically" retired at the age of 65.

"I didn't resign," Mr. Washington said.

The well known social worker said that the Board of Trustees, however, had voted to retain him at the school for an additional year, and that he was remaining until January 1, at "my own request" until a successor can be located.

NO SUCCESSOR

President Rufus E. Clement said that no successor had been chosen to take Dr. Washington's place when he leaves, and he has no idea when one will be named.

F. B. WASHINGTON

Mr. Washington said rumors of retirement started recently when the alumni association gave him a farewell party during their annual meeting in Cleveland, Ohio. This was done because he probably would not be present at the meeting next spring, he said.

Washington said that after January 1, he will move to his new appointment, which he refrained from naming except that it is "in my own field."

HIGH PRAISE

He had high praise for Dr. Clement, the school and Atlanta, and said that "everybody has been wonderful. Atlanta has been very good to me."

Dr. Clement, who was recently elected to public office in Atlanta is a member of the city's Board of Education, will attend the Oxford meeting as a delegate of the National Education Association.

EDUCATION

Bennett Receives Foundation Grant

Bennett College has received a grant from the Fund for the Advancement of Education, established by the Ford Foundation, to finance a study of its business management, Dr. David D. Jones, president, announced last night.

Dr. Jones said the college is negotiating with the firm of McCormack, Cresap and Paget to make the study which will begin next fall.

The firm, he said, has already begun a similar study of colleges in the Atlanta University system.

Bennett to honor men of vision

81st anniversary observance to be held on October 9-10

GREENSBORO, N.C. — October 9, will be Founders' Day at Bennett commemorating the 81th anniversary of the college which was founded in 1873 by a group of colored ministers.

The school named for Lyman Bennett of Troy, N.C., operated until 1926.

Twenty - seven years ago the trustees elected David Dallas Jones, son of a Greensboro cobbler, its president with instructions to make it a college for women.

Began With 10 Students

In the first year of 1926, the Jones family, the faculty and 10 students crowded into Kent Hall.

In taking stock, the president found the assets barely enough to keep the plant open: a run down building center with a 35-acre campus planted in turnips and corn.

In the meantime he set out to improve the rating of the college which was a very low "D." In 1930 the State raised the college rating to Class "A."

Gets In High Gear

In 1932, he persuaded the General Education Board to contribute $250,000 which was matched by Mrs. Henry Pfeiffer, a far seeing benefactor, and the development of Bennett got into high gear.

In a period of 27 years, Bennett has had a phenomenal growth.

Today, Bennett, a privately financed college, has an enrollment of over 400 students from 20 states and several foreign countries. The faculty, made up of whites, colored, Jews and gentiles, ranges from brown to 61, with a 42-acre beautifully landscaped campus, 31 American Colonial style buildings and assets of more than $4,000,000.

Two Basic Ideas

Two basic ideas at Bennett, according to Dr. Jones, is for Bennett to take each girl and use the resources of the school to develop her potential possibilities, and to "express itself in the form of a vigorous fight to abolish any sort of social stratification."

Many Bennett graduates with B. A. or B. S. degrees continued their graduate work while others became teachers, social workers, church and community workers, government service, medical fields, and numerous other professions.

Numerous organizations and individuals have honored and paid glowing tributes to Dr. Jones, the latest was on April 29, 1953, when the school board trustees of Greensboro, named a 12-room elementary school in his honor.

Two-Day Celebration

The celebration of the founding of Bennett will be held Oct. 9-10.

The principal speaker will be Bishop Edgar A. Love of Baltimore, Md. Others taking part in the program are: Dr. P. A. Taylor of New Orleans, Dr. Earl Tolley, Binghamton, N.Y., and Dr. Henry Hitt Crane of Detroit.

On Saturday, the highlight will be the laying of the cornerstone for the new nursery school on the campus with Mrs. J. N. Rodeheaver, chairman of the Woman's Division of Christian Service of the Methodist church, of Winona Lake, Ind., presiding.

NEW PRESIDENT'S HOME:

Bennett reports $2,792 added to endowment fund

GREENSBORO, N.C. — Announcement of the receipt of $2,792 in gifts for the endowment fund was made recently at Bennett college's Founders Day observance in the Annie Merner Pfeiffer chapel.

Of this sum, 431 undergraduates contributed $1,489 and 61 members of the faculty and staff contributed $1,302.50.

At a recent meeting of the trustees, David D. Jones, president, announced that Frederick D. Patterson, director of the Phelps - Stokes Fund of New York and a former president of Tuskegee Institute, had been elected a trustee. The board also voted to petition the next session of the North Carolina Legislature to raise the limit of property the college may hold from the present five million dollars to 25 million.

Wants Larger Endowment

Dr. Jones informed the trustees that during the past year the college's property had passed the four million dollar valuation, based on the costs of construction or acquisition rather than replacement. He recalled that the first charter had given the college permission to hold property up to $500,000 and that an amendment in 1935 raised the maximum limit to five million dollars.

Dr. Jones also informed the trustees that the present salaries of faculty and staff were inadequate and the pressing need of Bennett college is a greater endowment. "Bennett college now has in round figures $1,250,000 in endowments," he said "A minimum goal should be two million dollars."

Over the objections of Dr. Jones that other college projects should have priority, the trustees voted to build a new president's house on Gorrell St. to cost $65,000. The new house will be of brick, trimmed in white, and following the pattern of Georgian style of most of the buildings on the campus.

Student Ban Clause In Bethune-Cookman Charter Is Dropped

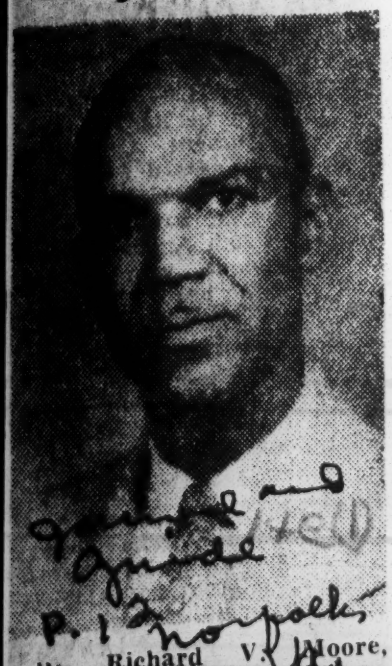
DAYTONA BEATH, Fla. — Bethune-Cookman College, last week, changed its charter to allow persons of all races to attend the college instead of colored students only.

The change was suggested by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and Mrs. Ruth D. Wilson, both members of the board of trustees, after several persons in New York charged that support of the United Negro College Fund sustains segregation.

Bethune-Cookman Ends Color Bar

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla.—The doors of Bethune-Cookman College were thrown open last week to persons of all races instead of only Negroes. A change in the charter which formerly allowed only Negroes to attend the college was suggested by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and Mrs. Ruth D. Wilson of New York City, both members of the board of trustees.

Director of Fla. College Fund Drive



Dr. Richard V. Moore, president of Bethune-Cookman College and Florida director of the United Negro College Fund, has begun laying plans for the annual College Fund drive through the state. The state is divided into seven areas consisting of Pensacola, Orlando, West Palm Beach, Miami, Jacksonville, Daytona Beach and Tampa for the drive.

Florida's goal is $25,000. Individual gifts will help 31 private colleges. Membership is limited to institutions which are private, fully accredited, four-year colleges or professional institutions.

Federated CLUBS

BY REBECCA STILES TAYLOR

In the month of March, 1954 Bethune Cookman College at Daytona Beach, Fla., will be 50 years old. The history of the college and the outstanding work it has done during those years are known to thousands at home and abroad.

The history of the founder of the college, the invincible and illustrious Mary McLeod Bethune, has done in the city of Daytona, the state of Florida, the United States of America couples with efforts to reach all peoples in the world, regardless of race, creed or color and imbue them with faith of God and love for humanity are equally well known.

Mrs. Taylor

Because of her life which she has so willingly laid upon the altar of service and because in the evening of that life it is fitting that any and all tangible recognition be given it — Henrine Ward Banks, social and civic leader, is calling to attention the friends and well-wisher of Bethune Cookman College and its founder to 50th anniversary gift of $50,000 to the college in honor of its founder.

Mrs. Banks is selecting key persons everywhere. It gives this columnist great pleasure to inform the public of Mrs. Banks' plans so that they may participate in this most worthy project, which will mean so much to generations yet unborn.

They can invest in lives, even as did Miss Crissman, who invested in the life of Mary McLeod Bethune years ago. Mrs. Banks writes as follows:

"On the day that Mary McLeod Bethune was given the Robert S. Abbott Award by the Chicago Defender, I got an idea for a birthday gift for this school from the women of America. Then I began to think about key women throughout the country who would push such a project to completion.

"I think the women of America who have faith in dreams would like to cooperate and give this school, which was originated from a dream and built to its present status on FAITH, a birthday gift of $50000.00 to aid this school in building better men and women in a world that grows closer together every day. I have selected 50 cities in the United States with a key woman in each of these cities who will raise at least $1,000 in her city and suggest that she get 10 other women in her city to raise $100 each. . . . . .

"Each of the hundred dollar women can ask 10 women or clubs to give $10 each. This will make the job easy for many people will contribute if they are asked. Let us not ask the people who are always asked to give, but ask the people who have little but want so much to share in this big gift."

Further information will be given later. Hold yourself in readiness to serve.

Synonymous with the name of Florida and especially Jackson ville, Fla., is the name of Eartha Mary Magdalene White, social worker and "Angel of the Lowly."

Outranking all others social and civic leaders of Florida, Miss White has given a life of service to the destitute and underprivileged people of color in the way of shelter, food, raiment, general and special care for almost half a centruy.

She is without doubt the foremost "Good Samaritan" of her city and is well known all over the state especially in its legislative halls where she intercedes for the less-fortunate of her group.

Space will not permit me to enumerate her many successful projects but the public knows of her good works throughout the country.

On November 8th, 1953 Eartha M.M. White was 77 years old and a special committee of outstanding citizens gave a celebration party at the Eartha White Museum at 4850 Moncrief Road, Jacksonville, Fla.

Gifts were in order and will be used toward liquidating the mortgage on the Clara White (Eartha's deceased mother) Mission Building which is a home for the homeless.

The committee sponsoring the party felt that Miss White would receive great pleasure for her greatest desire is to see that this indebtedness is paid while she lives. A birthday program was presented. The committee was as follows:

Mesdames Mamie Crowd, Amy S. Currie, E. Vaughn, Marie Singleton, Mae Kennedy, Florida Dwight, Messrs. Joe H. James, R. T. Thomas, D. W. Perkins, William Smith, A. E. Chrispin, Nathaniel Rogers, A. B. Wright, Leroy Washington, Eddie McLaughlin, W. A. Stewart, Mesdames Grant, Bateman, Ford, Lawson, and others.

Slate Special Teachers Exam At Bishop College, Named In Scandal

MARSHALL, Texas — Bishop college has made arrangements to have a special administration of the national teachers examinations on June 30, according to Bishop President M. K. Curry, jr.

Bishop is one of seven colleges named in a phony diploma and transcript scandal which rocked Texas a few weeks ago. Six persons were arrested in connection with the frauds.

State investigators said Bishop, Wiley, Butler, Texas Southern, Prairie View, Mary Allen and Texas college were not guilty as institutions.

Probers disclosed that forged diplomas and transcripts had been fed graduates of these colleges since 1949. Employees of Mary Allen, not identified, were revealed as the "feeders."

Dr. Curry said the special examinations are similar to those which were offered at the annual nationwide administration of February, 14.

He said the summer exams were arranged to meet the demands

Dr. Wright 4th Bluefield Prexy

BLUEFIELD, W. Va.—Dr. Stephen J. Wright, dean of the faculty at Hampton Institute, will assume the presidency of Bluefield State College July 1.

Dr. Wright will be the fourth president of Bluefield State College, which was established in 1895.

DR. AND MRS. S. J. WRIGHT

Dr. Wright Takes Helm At Bluefield College

BLUEFIELD, W. Va.—Dr. Stephen Junius Wright arrived on campus this week to take over the helm as president of Bluefield State college. Dr. Wright comes to the local institution from the deanship of Hampton institute.

He becomes the fourth administrative head of Bluefield State college, which was established in 1895. He follows Dr. H. L. Dickason who was retired in August, 1952. G. W. Whiting served as acting president and dean of the college from Sept. 1, 1952 to June 30, 1953.

Dr. Wright, a native of Dillon, S. C., received the bachelor's degree from Hampton institute in 1934 and the MA degree from Howard university in 1939. He holds the Ph.D. degree from New York university obtained in 1943. He also did advanced study in Columbia university and City College of New York.

The new Bluefield State college president's experience includes high school teaching positions in Centreville, Md., and Upper Marlboro, Md., where he served for a time as principal. He was director of student teaching, head of the department of education and acting dean of men in North Carolina college from 1939 to 1944.

Dr. Wright went to Hampton institute in 1944. He was elevated to the deanship in April 1945. He served in this position with distinction until he was elected to the presidency of Bluefield State college.

Dr. Wright belongs to several outstanding educational organizations including the Delta Kappa. He serves on the editorial board of the Journal of Educational Sociology. He is president of Alpha Kappa Mu National Honor society and the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools for Negroes. He is also a member of the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity.

Dr. and Mrs. Wright will reside temporarily in the home economics suite in Lewis hall on the college campus while the president's home is being readied for their occupancy. They were formally introduced to the faculty and staff on Thursday afternoon in Lewis Hall parlor.

Mrs. Rosalyn Person Wright, the president's wife, is a native of Franklinton, N. C. She holds the bachelor's degree from Shaw university and the master's degree from New York university. She has taught science in her home town for several years and has also taught in the Burley high school in Charlottesville, Va.

The Wrights have an adopted nephew, Robert W. Smith, who is in his second year in Virginia State college.

Dr. Wright's Call To Higher Responsibilities

LESS than twenty years after he took his first job in the field of education as a teacher, Dr. STEPHEN J. WRIGHT has been called to the presidency of Bluefield State College, one of the two state-supported colleges in West Virginia for Negroes. It is not the lot of many men of any race in any country to achieve a distinction of that character at the age of 42. But Dr. WRIGHT's career clearly indicates that he had exceptional talents and was recognized as a man ready for a call to high responsibilities.

From high school teaching in Maryland he went on to a principalship at another high school, then to the post of student teaching director at North Carolina College. Soon that institution advanced him to the chairmanship of the department of education. From Durham he went to Hampton Institute in 1944 as director of the division of education. That college the next year elected him dean of the faculty, a post second only to the presidency in educational administration.

Now Bluefield, from a final group of eight able and experienced men considered, has selected Dr. WRIGHT to direct its important contributions to the training of young men and women for useful careers. Only a few months earlier Dr. WRIGHT had been chosen president of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools for Negroes, a significant indication of the high regard in which he is held by his colleagues in the profession. Significantly, too, this election took place at Memphis, Tennessee, at the first joint meeting of the white and colored associations in this field of education.

His going to Bluefield will be a loss to Hampton Institute, which can take justifiable pride, however, in the call to higher service which has come to one of its key officials and a distinguished alumnus.

Dr. S. Wright To Bluefield College Helm

HAMPTON, Va. — Dr. Stephen J. Wright, faculty dean of Hampton Institute, has been named to succeed Dr. H. L. Dickason as president of Bluefield State college, Bluefield, W. Va.

The announcement was made this week by the West Virginia State Board of Education. Dr. Dickason retired as president in August.

Dr. Wright, 42, is a graduate of Hampton and has studied at Howard and New York universities.

He was named president of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools for Negroes in December.

A native of Dillon, S. C., he held his first teaching position in Kennard High school, Centerville, Md. in 1934.

He has been a member of the Hampton faculty since 1944. Dr. Wright came to Hampton as director of the division of education.

Hampton Honors Retiring Dean With Dinner, Gifts

HAMPTON, Va.—Dean Stephen J. Wright of Hampton Institute and newly-appointed president of Bluefield state college was honored at a banquet given by 200 friends and fellow-staff members on May 2.

Testimonials were brought by Collis H. Davis, dean of freshmen; Miss Caldoria E. Lewis, president of women's senate; Herbert A. Kitchin, president, student council, and T. Winder Diggs, roads and grounds;

Miss Grace Reeves, department of home economics; Rucker Crutchfield, division of technology; Miss Helen Seller, department of nurse education; Allie Felder, division of agriculture, and Miss Bernice O'Bryant, division of teacher education.

President Moron Speaks

President Alonzo G. Moron reviewed the years when he and Dean Wright were students at Hampton and paid tribute to the work Dean Wright did in connection with the new educational program introduced in 1949.

J. Saunders Redding, author and professor of English and Dr. Charles H. Nichols, professor of English, also paid tribute to Dr. Wright, while William H. Robinson, toastmaster, presented Dean and Mrs. Wright with a silver tray and a U.S. savings bond.

The committee on planning include William H. Robinson, chairman, W. Barton Beatty Jr., William Kearney, Dr. Charles Nichols, Angle Owens Jr., Mrs. Niza Randall, Miss Grace Reeves, Dr. Henry Switten and Mrs. Lena White.

BOOKER WASHINGTON INSTITUTE
MONROVIA, LIBERIA

Liberia Takes Over B. T. W. Institute

MONROVIA, Liberia, Aug. 3.—President Wm. V. S. Tubman of Liberia announced last week that the Liberian government has assumed control of the Booker Washington Institute, a trade school located at Kakata.

The President said that the Board of Trustees of BWI of New York City had entered into an agreement with Liberia whereby the Institute together with all lands, buildings and other physical properties had been transferred by deed to the Government which would assume responsibility for the administration, operation and any other liabilities of the institution as of July 1, 1953.

Booker Washington Institute was established a score of years ago through the cooperation of the Phelps-Stokes Fund of New York and a number of mission boards. Among its supporters have been the New York Colonization Society, the American Colonization Society, the Firestone Rubber Co., the Methodist, Lutheran and Episcopal Church mission boards in America.

In recent years the Liberian government has been contributing approximately half of the funds necessary for its support. William Robinson, treasurer of the Rockefeller Foundation and chairman of the trustee board, negotiated the transfer when in Liberia several months ago.

Former President C. D. B. King of Liberia and the late Dr. R. R. Moten of Tuskegee Institute were instrumental together with the late Thomas Jesse Jones of the Phelps-Stokes Fund in establishing the school which was modeled after Tuskegee.

by the Phelps-Stokes Fund, the American and New York Colonization Societies, the Mission Boards (Methodist, Lutheran and others), Harvey S. Firestone, Jr., and the Government of Liberia which granted 1,000 acres of land and has been contributing the major share of the operating expenses.

It was incorporated in New York and originally headed by James L. Sibley who is buried on the Institute's grounds. Its function is mainly that of an agricultural research and vocational study center.

Booker Washington Institute joins University of Liberia

MONROVIA — The Liberian Government has concluded an agreement with the American trustees of the Booker Washington Institute at Kakata, Liberia for conversion as the Agricultural and Industrial College of the University of Liberia. The Institute, established in 1928, was sponsored

Methodist Prexies Meet

Church Colleges Stress 'Freedom'

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Church-related colleges comprise one of the nation's chief "guarantees of freedom of thought," presidents of twelve Negro Methodist schools declared in a meeting here last week.

The presidents met with three of the Negro Bishops of the denomination at the headquarters of the Methodist Board of Education.

The Bishops were J. W. E. Bowen, Atlanta; Matthew W. Clair Jr., St. Louis, and Edgar A. Love, Baltimore. Dr. John O. Gross, executive secretary of the board's Division of Educational Institutions, and Associate Directors Myron F. Wicke and James S. Thomas presided.

STRESSING THE need for more Negro pastors, doctors, nurses, lawyers and teachers, the group said:

"Seventy-three per cent of college-age Negroes still live in the South, and 80 per cent of all students attend college in their home states. The rapidly and constantly increasing numbers of students seeking a college education indicate the necessity for strengthening the educational program of the church; and to provide more educational opportunities for Negroes to render service with a Christian attitude is a daring challenge to the church."

It was estimated that 6,000 Negroes are needed now as physicians in the South. The twelve Negro Methodist colleges have a current enrollment of 8,859. The twelve presidents at the meeting were:

Dr. A. W. Dent, Dillard University, New Orleans; Dr. James P. Brawley, Clark College, Atlanta; Dr. Harry V. Richardson, Gammon Theological Seminary, Atlanta; Dr. David D. Jones, Bennett College, Greensboro, N. C.; Dr. R. V. Moore, Bethune-Cookman College, Daytona Beach, Fla.; Dr. J. J. Seabrook, Claflin College, Orangeburg, S. C.; Dr. M. S. Davage, Huston-Tillotson College, Austin, Tex.; Dr. M. Lafayette Harris, Philander Smith College, Little Rock, Ark.; Dr. L. M. McCoy, Rust College, Holly Springs, Miss.; Dr. J. S. Scott, Wiley College, Marshall, Tex., and Dr. H. L. Dickason, Morristown College, Morristown, Tenn., and Dr. Harold D. West, Meharry Medical College, Nashville.

Lauds Catholics For Integrating Schools

NEW YORK — Catholic schools and colleges have proved that interracial education can work, Roy Wilkins, NAACP administrator, said last week.

Wilkins told a social action forum of the Catholic Interracial Council that "sharp and definite" action of Catholic bishops and school authorities in opening Catholic schools to Negroes and whites has paved the way for more integrated schools.

He cited the archdiocese of St. Louis where a "Negro Catholic youngster can go to school with other Catholic children from the kindergarten to the university and not be segregated on the basis of race or color."

DECISIONS AWAITED

The five school segregation cases now awaiting decision by the Supreme court are of vital concern to people interested in good [illegible] relations, Wilkins said.

"The segregated school is basic to the maintenance of segregation in other areas of life," Wilkins said.

Southern U 2nd Largest College In US

Southern University and A. & M. College, Baton Rouge, has become the country's second largest Negro higher institution in terms of enrollment, according to Circular No. 359 just released by the United States Office of Education, under the authorship of Herbert S. Conrad, who is chief of the Research and Statistical Standards Section of this unit of the Federal Security Agency.

Leading the enrollment parade is Howard University, Washington, D. C., a combination private and federally-supported institution. Howard's registration as of the current year is 3,598. Southern University, a land-grant and state institution only, had 2,626.

Of the 83 Negro colleges whose data were gathered by the United States Office of Education, approximately 58 per cent enrolled from less than 100 to 500 students; 20 per cent from 500 to 1,000 students; 12 per cent from 1,000 to 2,000 students; 10 per cent 2,000 to 2,626 students. Beyond these was one, Howard University.

Further trends revealed by Conrad's volume during the same period are: rapid increase in general enrollment, especially in Negro land-grant colleges; increase in the number of students attending college for the first time, decrease in number of World War II veterans, and gradual return of female enrollment to pre-war levels.

Howard tops the list of federally-supported institutions with an enrollment of 3,598 and Southern tops the list of state-supported institutions with 2,626.

Cites Statistics

The Conrad Volume, published as statistical circular number 359, was released at the close of the year after fall enrollment data had been gathered from 1,854 higher institutions of the U.S., including approximately 83 four-year colored colleges.

Trends revealed by the volume are general increases in enrollment, increase in the number of students attending college for the first time, decrease in World War II veterans increase in enrollment at public institutions and gradual return of female enrollment to pre-war levels.

WASHINGTON

Howard University of Washington, and Southern University, Baton Rouge, La., lead the country in college enrollments, according to a circular release by Herbert S. Conrad, chief, research and statistical standards section of the Office of Education of the Federal Security Agency.

61,252 Students Enrolled In 82 Negro Colleges

WASHINGTON—(ANP)— A total of 61,252 students are enrolled in 82 Negro colleges in the United States, according to a circular released by Herbert S. Conrad, chief, research and statistical standards section, office of education, Federal Security Agency.

Federally supported Howard University in Washington, D. C., is the nation's largest school of higher education with a total enrollment of 3,598 students, and state-supported Southern University of Baton Rouge, La., is the second largest with 2,626 students.

Of the 82 schools, 17 have enrollments of more than 1,000 students. Outside of Howard, Southern heads a list of seven state-supported colleges with more than 2,000 students. These schools are A and T (Agricultural and Technical College,) Greensboro, N. C.; Prairie View University, Texas; Virginia State College, Petersburg, Va.;

Florida A and M College, Tallahassee, Fla; Southern University, Houston, Texas; and Tennessee A and I University in Nashville.

The largest private Negro college is Tuskegee Institute in Alabama with 1,784 students. The second largest is Hampton with 1,217. Xavier is the only other private school with an enrollment of more than 1,000.

Included among the schools listed are junior colleges, unaccredited institutions and the recognized colleges.

The only Negro college operating entirely at a graduate level is Atlanta University with 427 students. Bennett College in Greensboro, N. C. with 421 enrolled and Spelman College with 415 enrolled are the only two all-girls colleges. The two all-male schools are Morehouse College in Atlanta with 495 and Lincoln University in Pennsylvania with 283.

Although the schools on the list are considered Negro, a number of them have students of other races in attendance. The figures are based on statistics from fall enrollments.

Xavier, a Roman Catholic institution, is the largest church-operated college with 1,040 students. Huston-Tillotson in Austin, Texas, and Virginia Union University in Richmond, Va., have 764 and 747 students respectively. Allen University with 645 students is the largest school run by the African Methodist Episcopal Church.

The smallest college is Southern Christian in Mississippi with 44 students and the smallest state school is Delaware State College with 121.

The Conrad volume is published as statistical circular number 359. It was released at the close of the year after fall enrollment data had been gathered from 1,854 higher institutions of the United States. Trends revealed by the volume are, general increases in enrollment, increase in the number of students attending college for the first time, decrease in World War II veterans, increase in enrollment at public institutions and gradual return of female enrollment to pre-war levels.

Enrollment In 82 Colleges Totals 61,252 Students

WASHINGTON (ANP) — A total of 61,252 students are enrolled in 82 Negro colleges in the United States, according to a circular released by Herbert S. Conrad, chief, research and statistical standards sction, office of education, Federal Security agency.

Federally supported Howard U., in Washington, D. C., is the nation's largest school of higher education with a total enrollment of 3,598 students, and state-supported Southern university of Baton Rouge, La., is the second largest with 2,626 students.

Of the 82 schools, 17 have enrollments of more than 1,000 students. Outside of Howard, Southern heads a list of seven state-supported colleges with more than 2,000 students. These schools are A & T (Agricultural and Technical college), Greensboro, N. C.; Prairie View university, Texas; Virginia State college, Petersburg, Virginia; Florida A & M college, Tallahassee, Fla.; Southern university, Houston, Tex., and Tennessee A & I university in Nashville.

The largest private Negro college is Tuskegee Institute in Alabama with 1,784 students. The second largest is Hampton with 1,217. Xavier is the only other private school with an enrollment of more than 1,000.

Included among the schools listed are junior colleges, unaccredited institutions and the recognized colleges.

The only Negro college operating entirely at a graduate level is Atlanta university with 427 students. Bennett college in Greensboro, N. C., with 421 enrolled and Spelman college with 415 enrolled are the only two all-girls colleges. The two-all-male schools are Morehouse college in Atlanta with 495 and Lincoln university in Pennsylvania with 283.

Although the schools on the list are considered Negro, a number of them have students of other races in attendance. The figures are based on statistics taken from fall enrollments.

Xavier, a Roman Catholic institution, is the largest church-operated college with 1,040 students. Huston-Tillotson in Austin, Texas, and Virginia Union university in Richmond, Va., have 764 and 747 students respectively. Allen university with 645 students is the largest school run by the African Methodist Episcopal Church.

The smallest college is Southern Christian in Mississippi with 44 students and the smallest state school is Delaware State college with 121.

The Conrad volume is published as statistical circular number 359. It was released at the close of the year after fall enrollment data had been gathered from 1,854 higher institutions of the United States. Trends revealed by the volume are, general increases in enrollment, increase in the number of students attending college for the first time, decrease in World War II veterans, increase in enrollment at public institution and gradual return of female enrollment to pre-war levels.

A breakdown in Negro college enrollment shows figures as follows:

Howard University (D. C.) 3,598; Southern University (La.) 2,626; Agricultural & Technica College (N. C.), 2,594; Prairie View University (Texas), 2,379; Virginia State College, 2,150; Florida A & M College, 2,093; Texas Southern University, 2,080; Tennessee A and I University, 2,003; Tuskegee Institute, 1,784; Morgan State College (Md.), 1,516; Grambling College (La.), 1,496; North Carolina College, 1,430; State Colored NIAM College (S.C.), 1,358; Hampton Institute (Va.), 1,217; Arkansas AM & N College, 1,194; Fort Valley State College (Ga.), 1,014; Savannah State College (Ga.) 924; West Virginia State College, 895; Central State College (Ohio), 842; Lincoln University Mo.), 811; Huston-Tillotson (Texas), 764; Virginia Union University, 747; Clark University (Ga.), 730; Winston-Salem Teachers College (N. Report College Enrollments At New High Unofficial reports to the Atlanta World listed enrollments in the colleges of the Atlanta University System reaching a new high with 2,755 students enrolled now as compared with an estimated 2,000 listed for the same period in the previous year.

FRESHMAN CLASSES

Virtually all of the four colleges, Atlanta University proper, and Gammon Theological Seminary showed increases in enrollments and huge freshman classes, resulting from stepped-up programs of student recruiting.

Gammon Theological Seminary listed two women among its enrollment for the current semester. One of these new entrants is pursuing the degree, Master of Religion, while the other is studying for the Bachelor of Divinity degree.

one of the largest freshman classes in many years, a situation which prevails in most of the affiliate colleges of the city.

DANIEL PAYNE COLLEGE

At Payne College festival—

Reach for higher education, Sen. Faulkner urges Negroes

Governor's Candidate James H Faulkner told a Birmingham Negro audience last night that Alabama can do "much more for its schools than it has done in the past."

He challenged Alabama's younger Negroes to work toward college degrees and advanced degrees. "Get wisdow and with all thy getting, get understanding," he quoted.

America's lasting line of defense, he said, is a well-educated citizenry.

Sen. Faulkner was guest lecturer for the 1953 Exposition of Progress and Music Festival staged annually at Daniel Payne College.

He told the audience that the progress of their race in the past 15 years "has been amazing." But he said, "I urge you to work with patience."

The 1954 gubernatorial candidate pledged an administration of "honesty, decency, a high degree of morality and ability; a sound progressive program fair to all people and all groups, and strong emphasis on better education and health facilities" if he is elected.

BRINGING GREETINGS during the "Exposition of Progress" program were Mrs. Ludie Dowdell, elementary supervisor for Jefferson County Negro schools; W. C. Patton, state president of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People; Principal J. S. Abrams of Dunbar High School at Bessemer; C. W. Hayes, director of Birmingham city Negro schools; Dean C. E. Matthews of Daniel Payne College.

J. King Chandler III, president of Daniel Payne, presided.

Presenting music for the program were the State Vocational Trade School choir, Rosedale High School choir, Talladega College choral ensemble, Miles College choir, and the Payne College choir. Soloists were Miss Ruth Hilson, senior at Morris Brown College, Atlanta, and Willie W. Felder, senior at Booker T. Washington Business College.

Suggest State College Close

Report Low Morale At Delaware State

DOVER, Del.—The student and faculty morale at Delaware State College is so low and the high cost per student to the taxpayer is so abnormally high that there have been suggestions that the school be closed, it was revealed last week at the State Senate Budget Committee hearings.

A ten - member committee, headed by Sen. Ernest R. Benger, conducted the hearings which lasted three days. The members did not seem inclined, however, towards the idea of completely abandoning the institution.

It was brought out, though, that the taxpayers are spending between $1,500 and $3,300 annually on each enrollee at the college which today is not even accredited.

In addition, Dr. Maurice E. Thomasson, acting president of the institution, has asked to be relieved of his duties in order to devote his time to teaching.

Dr. Thomasson told the senate committee that one of the problems at the institution is the "indecision" about the school's future and accounted this as a reason for the low faculty and student morale.

The committee, in a report which it made public last week, declared that operation of the school was uneconomical. It said the college has 79 students from Delaware and 31 from other states and the present cost to the state for each student is $2,600. This compares, according to the committee report, to an average cost of $600 a student at the University of Delaware at Newark.

In urging the closing of the college "in the interest of good education and for the advancement of Negroes in our community," it was planned that students now attending the school be permitted to enroll at the University of Delaware and other colleges under state subsidization.

The Defender learned from a reliable Dover source Saturday that some leaders and residents of the area want the school maintained. The college is not accredited and several departments are said to be greatly under par.

Under the committee plan, students who chose to attend the University of Delaware would be given scholarships to cover the deficit in the amount of tuition between the two schools. It is believed also that some qualified members of the Delaware state faculty might be absorbed at the University.

Delaware state has no president at the present time. The last head of the institution was Dr. Howard Chapman, an Air Force colonel who was recalled to active duty last year.

Delaware College May Close Doors

DOVER, Del. — Tiny Delaware State college at Dover may be closed at the end of the current semester.

A recommendation to abolish the state-maintained school for Negro students has been made by a committee appointed by Gov. J. Caleb Boggs.

GETS BUDGET APPROPRIATION:

Delaware State College To Continue Operations

DOVER, Del.—The continuation of Delaware State college was assured when Governor J. Caleb Boggs signed, the 1953-55 budget for the state. This budget contained an appropriation for the maintenance and operation of Delaware State college.

Prospects for the school year seem to be good since the number of high school graduates in 1953 is larger than it has ever been before.

The William M. Henry Comprehensive high school has just graduated its first class, which means that Delaware State now has a new feeder school from which to receive freshman students.

See Large Quotas

The Jason Comprehensive High school in Sussex County, is expected to provide, as it has done for each of the past two years, a quota of students. The comprehensive high school in New Castle County will soon graduate its first class.

Another important development is the completion of the new girls' dormitory. The building, will accommodate more than 100 students.

The activities of the 1953-54 school year will begin on September 14, when entering freshmen will arrive and begin their orientation program. The orientation of new students and the registration of both new and old students will occupy the remainder of the week. Classes will open on September 21.

Holland, an all-America football player at Cornell University later received his master's and doctorate degrees from the University of Pennsylvania, the Big Red's arch rival.

He is the first president named for the school since the dismissal of Dr. Oscar Chapman in July, 1951.

He succeeds Dr. Maurice E. Thomasson, named acting president in place of Dr. Chapman, who went into the Air Force. Dr. Thomasson left school last January.

Holland, a native of Auburn, N. Y., taught four years at Lincoln before going to the Shipyard from 1942 to 1946 as assistant director of employment and personnel in Chester, Pa.

In 1947 he joined the faculty at Tennessee until 1951 when he joined the Pew Memorial Foundation in Philadelphia as a social research consultant. He is presently on leave from that post.

Dr. Holland is taking over reins of the embattled Delaware college at a time when it is on 'extended' existence.

Dr. 'Brud' Holland Named Prexy Of Delaware State

DOVER, Del., July 27.—Dr. Jerome H. Holland, former head of the department of sociology at Tennessee State A. & I. College in Nashville and one time instructor and coach at Lincoln University, last week was named president of Delaware State College.

All-American End

Brud Holland Named Delaware State Prexy

DOVER, Del.—(ANP)—Dr. Jerome H. Holland has been named president of Delaware State college, according to a story in the Philadelphia Tribune.

Dr. Holland in 1938 and 1939 gained national fame as an All-American football end while he played for the Cornell university Big Red football team.

SUCCEEDS CHAPMAN

He succeeds Dr. Oscar Chapman, who was dismissed as head of Delaware State in July, 1951. Since that time Dr. Maurice E. Thomasson acted as president until last January.

A native of Auburn, N. Y., Dr. Holland was graduated from Cornell in 1939. He earned his master's and doctor's degrees from the University of Pennsylvania.

After graduation from Cornell, he taught four years at Lincoln (Pa.) university then worked from 1942-46 as assistant director of employment and personnel at the Sun Shipyard in Chester, Pa.

WORKED FOR FOUNDATION

In 1947, he became a faculty member at Tennessee State A. and I. college in Nashville, eventually becoming head of the department of sociology. In 1951, he left Tennessee State to work for the Pew Memorial Foundation in Philadelphia to become a social research consultant.

He is on leave from the foundation to take up duties at Delaware State.

Currently, the school is in the doubtful status because courts have ruled that Negroes in Delaware are not required to attend Jim Crow schools. As a result there is some doubt as to whether or not the state will continue to operate Delaware State. A number of Negroes have advocated that the school be closed.

Dillard Language Teacher Earns Doctorate

NEW ORLEANS, La. — (ANP) Jose Ferrer-Canales, assistant professor of Spanish at Dillard university, last week returned to the campus after a period of study and travel in Cuba and Mexico. In the latter country, he received his doctor en letras (doctor of Spanish literature) from the National University of Mexico.

While in Cuba, Dr. Ferrer was a guest speaker at Havana university, University of Santiago, Cuba, and the Havana society "Accion Cultrual." He also lectured at National University of Mexico.

On returning to Dillard, Dr. Ferrer commented on the interest of Spanish speaking peoples in America. Among other things, he said:

"Cubans, Mexicans, and in general all Spanish-Americans look with special interest to life in the United States, especially to human relations in this country".

Dillard Prexy Elected

Dent Heads Health Council

NEW YORK — Dr. Albert W. Dent, president of Dillard University, New Orleans, is the first member of his race to be elected president of the National Health Council.

Dr. Dent was chosen by the Council's board of directors to succeed Dr. Robin C. Buerki, director of the Henry Ford Hospital, Detroit, whose resignation for no stated reason, was accepted by the board of directors at a closed meeting in the Roosevelt Hotel.

Dr. Dent, who was chosen president-elect at the council's annual meeting here two months ago, is the first Negro to head the thirty-two-year-old council, now consisting of fourty-four national organizations.

DILLARD PREXY

The new council president is a graduate of Morehouse College, Atlanta, Ga., and is prominent in that college's alumni circles. He assumed the presidency of Dillard University in 1941 after six years as superintendent of the Flint-Goodridge Hospital connected with the University.

DR. A. W. DENT

Dr. Dent served as a delegate to the first World Health Assembly at Geneva in 1948 and was vice-president of the National Tuberculosis Association in 1949 and 1950.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

The Dillard president is a director of the Southern Regional Council and of the United Negro College Fund, and a member of the committee on faculty fellowships of the Ford Foundation for the Advancement of Education.

Dr. Dent told the directors: "I have great faith in the future of the National Health Council and a keen sense of the nation's need for such a coordinative organization in the health field.

"Membership in the council has more than doubled in the past five years. Such a spectacular increase proves the growing need felt by the various groups working in the health field for some means of better understanding of over-all problems, more effective cooperation and truer focus and balance in our efforts."

Dr. Albert Dent Lauded By New York Newspaper

NEW YORK — (ANP) — One of the nation's leading daily newspapers praised the recent appointment of Dr. Albert Dent, president of Dillard university, to head the National Health Council.

Among other things, the New York Times, in an editorial, pointed out that Dr. Dent is eminently qualified to be president of the health organization. The publication then cited his work with the Flint-Goodrich hospital in New Orleans and with the World Health Organization as examples of his competency for his present position.

The editorial said in part:

"The National Health Council will benefit by the knowledge, ability and experience which Dr. Dent has acquired during the past 22 years in the medical services field.

First Appointed

"The practical knowledge which he brings to this office will enable him to coordinate and organize the varied programs directed toward the improvement of the nation's health by the 44 national organizations which make up the council.

Dr. Dent is the first colored person elevated to the presidency of the 32-year-old council. In 1932 he was appointed superintendent of Flint-Goodridge hospital, and in 1948 he was a delegate to the initial meeting of the World Health Organization which met in Geneva.

Poll Shows Duke Students Favor Negro Admission

Durham, N. C. (ANP).—A recently conducted poll at Duke University by the school's student religious council showed that 62 per cent of the student body favors immediate admission of qualified Negro students. However, 30 per cent of that number favor entrance on a limited basis.

Results of the poll were reported by the Duke Chronicle, student newspaper. The paper said that of the 38 per cent opposing immediate admission, 25 per cent completely opposed the move, while 14 per cent voted for eventual admission. Voting among southern and non-southern students was as follows:

Southern students 56 per cent for immediate admission; 18 per cent opposed, and 11 per cent favoring eventual admission. Some 54 per cent of the student body was polled on the question.

per cent for immediately dropping the color barriers against applicants, only 3 per cent totally opposed and 14 per cent favoring eventual ending of the color ban.

Non - southerners, on the other hand, voted 71 per cent for immediate admission, 11 per cent for eventual admission and 18 per cent for an indefinite color bar.

According to the survey report, more than half, or 54 per cent, of the student bosy was polled in the survey.

HARMONY RULES:

President Says Elizabeth City Student Strike Over

ELIZABETH CITY, N.C. — "There's no strike here. My only statement is that everything is settled and harmony rules," President S. D. Williams of Elizabeth City State Teachers college told the AFRO Saturday when asked for a statement about a student strike at the school.

President Williams refused further comment on the strike which began last Monday and had been 99 per cent effective, according to members of the student grievance committee at the college, who denied that the action was in support of three top athletes suspended the previous week.

$328 Shortage Reported

The athletes involved were suspended for the remainder of the school semester, college officials said, following a faculty disciplinary committee investigation of alleged shortages in the book store accounts amounting to approximately $328.

Discounting the suspensions as secondary, strike leaders said the walkout was the outcropping of a large backlog of grievances that had been brushed aside and completely ignored by the administration.

'Backlog Of Grievances'

Included among this "back log" of grievances were: The lack of student representation on the disciplinary committee, lack of studen participation in the conduct of affairs of the school.

Although effective, according to reports, the strike was an orderly one throughout, striking students remaining in their rooms and conducting no demonstrations on the campus.

The suspended athletes were reported to be James Greer of Huntington, W. Va., Santiago Burrell of Norfolk, both football and basketball stars, and Ernest Davis of Petersburg, basketball great.

Students On Strike At Elizabeth City College

ELIZABETH CITY, N. C. — Members of the Student's Grievance Committee at Elizabeth City State Teacher's College declared Monday afternoon that a 99 percent effective student strike, which began at the school Monday morning was in no manner in support of three top athletes suspended last week

The three involved were suspended for the balance of the the school semester, according to President S. D. Williams, following a faculty disciplinary committee probe of shortages amounting to approximately $328 in the school book store.

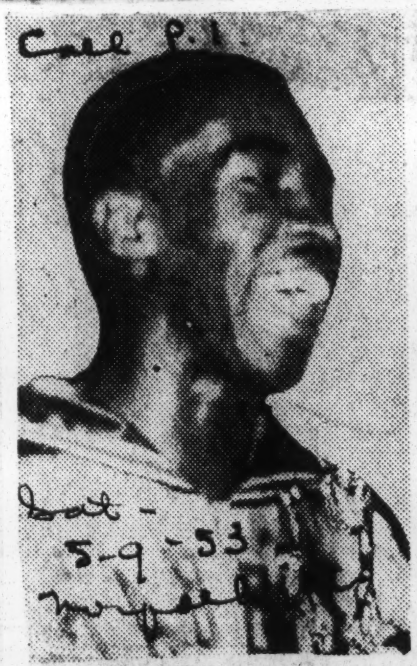
LEADERS OF THE student strike said it was the outgrowth of a long backlog of grievances which had received no hearing nor consideration by the administration.

Among these grievances was a lack of student representation on disciplinary committes, and participation in cnduct of school affairs.

IN THE CASE of the three suspended students it was claimed that the four-member disciplinary committee acted upon the wish of a single member, since the chairman is not a voting member of the committee and two other members abstained from voting.



ERNEST DAVIS

JAMES GREEN

President Williams made no comment concerning events leading up to the strike, but expressed belief from "reliable sources" within the student body that the strike would be called off following a student-faculty meeting held late Monday afternoon.

There was no disorder on the campus, which was conspicuously quiet in contrast to the usual bustle. Striking students were remaining in their rooms and had taken part in no demonstration up to Monday afternoon.

THE expelled students are reported to be Santiago Burrell, Ernest (Husky) Davis and James (Jim) Greer, three of the school's most outstanding athletes.

Burrell, who hails from Norfolk, Va., was a member of the Elizabeth City football and basketball squads. In football he captured a berth on the All-Eastern Intercollegiate Athletic Conference second-team and won honorable mention in basketball.

DAVIS, RATED by observers as one of the greatest cagers ever to represent Elizabeth City on the basketball court, was the sparkplug that paced the Pirates to the 1953 EIAC Cage championship and was an unanimous choice for the All-EIAC five. His hometown is Petersburg, Va.

Greer, a transfer student from W. Va., participated in football and basketball and showed his versatility by winning all-conferences honors in both football and basketball. He was named to a first-team post at end in football and a first-team post at forward in basketball. Greer's hometown is Huntington, W. Va. He and Burrell were also members of Elizabeth City's 1952 EIAC championship football team.

61,252 Students in 82 Negro Colleges

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (ANP) — A total of 61,252 students are enrolled in 82 Negro colleges in the United States, according to a circular released by Herbert S. Conrad, chief, research and statistical standards section, office of education, Federal Security agency.

College, Univ. Enrollments On Increase

WASHINGTON, D. C. —Enrollment in the Nation's colleges and universities has increased for the second consecutive year, Rall I. Grisby, Acting Commissioner of Education, U. S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare, announced today.

Reporting partial results from the Office of Education's annual fall enrollment survey, Acting Commissioner Grisby said:

"An estimate—based on returns from 7. 5 percent out of approximately 1900 institutions—shows a total enrollment for the fall of 1953 of approximately 2,215,000. This constitutes an increase of 3.1 per cent over the enrollment figure of approximately 2,148,000 for the fall of 1952. Since the rate of increase from 1951 to 1952 was 1.5 per cent, the present estimate would indicate that the rate of increase for total enrollment has been accelerated."

Although there is a considerable increase in the number of new students enrolled, the rate of increase for this group has declined. In 1952 the first year to show an increase since 1949—there were 537,000 students enrolling for the first time, an increase of 13.7 percent over the previous year. This fall's enrollment of new students totals 575,000 or an increase of 7.2 per cent above last year.

"The trend toward a larger enrollment in institutions of higher education was anticipated by the Office of Education," Dr. Grisby added. "The favorable economic conditions, educational benefits by Congress to World War II and Korean veterans, student deferment policies, and efforts by private institutions and groups have all tended to increase the number of college and university students."

Episcopalians Order Integration At All Church Institutions

P. Bernard Young Jr.

BOSTON, Mass. — Coinci- with the announcement a $100,000 grant to St. ul's Polytechnic Institute Lawrenceville, Va., by the erican Church Institute ...rday, it was authori- ...arned this week the Guide that the insti- ute has adopted a far-reach- ng policy of admitting stu- dents of any race to church- affiliated schools and col- eges of the Episcopal faith.

The seven institutions which derive support from the ACIN have not been racially inter- grated heretofore because of their location in the South and historic social customs.

ST. PAUL'S, ONE of the two largest affected institutions, has by recent unanimous vote of its board of trustees, complied with the church institute's mandate, adopted April 27th last, which reads:

"Resolved, that the board of trustees of the American Church Institute for Negroes affirms the policy that no prospective applicant for ad- mission to any institute school or other institution shall be denied such admission on the ground of color or race, and be it further Resolved, that this action shall be made known to all of the boards governing the schools and other institutions sponsored by the institute."

L. U. Exchanges Students With White College

LINCOLN UNIVERSITY, Pa. — (ANP) — As part of a trend toward more interracial activities by protestant churches, the Theological Seminary of Lincoln university and the Evangical and Reformed Seminary of Lancaster, Pa., have exchanged students this semester.

Studying at Lincoln is William Bador, of Allentown, Pa., a graduate of Franklin and Marshall college and a middler at Evangical and Reform. Lincoln's representative at Lancaster is Charles Thomas, of Jonesboro, Ark., also a middler. Both students will take regular courses.

10-10-52

In addition to a steady growth, Lincoln's Seminary has had an increasing number of white students who now make up one-third of the enrollment and came from Maryland, Colorado and Pennsylvania. The seminary is now fully interracial in faculty, student body and trustees.

FISK TO Bright High School Students To Get College Training

"Basic College Idea" Is Revolutionary Change In Education Adopted By Many Of Nation's Greatest Universities; Fisk Faculty Approves Plan, Following Recommendation of Pres. Chas. S. Johnson

A new Basic College curriculum, involving the most far-reaching changes made in the Fisk University program for more than 20 years, will go into effect next September in accordance with a recent vote of the Faculty. Two main features of the reorganized curriculum are the new integrated general education for all students in the freshman and sophomore years and the new Basic College three-year Honors Program for "Early Entrants," superior students who enter the University after completing the 10th or 11th grade.

The Basic College is a new educational unit opeen to qualified students who have completed the 10th, 11th, or 12th grade. Its program embraces the student's work through the sophomore year and prepares him for admission to the College of Higher Studies. He will then pursue specialized study in a major field. The three-year Honors Program offers training of unusual quality and breadth for superior students coming from the 10th grade and enables them to save a year in their progress toward the Bachelor's degree.

In the spring of 1951, President Charles S. Johnson formally proposed the Basic College idea to the Faculty, recommending that the University select a group of outstanding 10th and 11th grade high school students each year and give these students immediately the intensive academic training they need in order to reach distinctly high standards in their later college work

First Tried in 1951

This idea was implemented in the fall of 1951 aftr the Fund for the Advancement of Eudcation had made a grant of $120,000 to enable Fisk to add new teachers for the Basic College and to offer generous scholarships. The grant was made under the Fund's program for Early Admssion to College, sponsored in 12 colleges including Columbia, Yale, Oberlin, and the Univrsities of Chicago and Wisconsin. A new grant of $80,000 has recently been made to Fisk to support the Basic College and to finance further scholarship awards to Early Entrants over the next three years.

Three Principal Goals

In building the new program the university has been guided by three principal goals: (1) to raise decisively the standards of intellectual interest and achievement at Fisk (2) to provide more fully for individual placement, according to a student's preparation and capacity in a given subject; (3) to provide for acceleration, so that those outstanding students who show the capacity to move ahead more rapidly than others without sacrificing the high quality of their work may save time in their progress toward the degree.

The Basic College is primarily concerned with "general education" it will offer broad fundamental training in the Humanities (including literature and the Arts), in Mathematics and the Natural Sciences, in the Social Science, and in Modern Foreign Languages. The presnt program is enriched by new courses content in all areas, and by the addition of a required introductory course in Music or the Fine Arts, and by the requirement of two out of three general courses in Mathematics and the Natural Sciences, rather than one such course. The integrated Basic College curriculum is similar in its general principles of the curriculla general principles to th curiculla at the University of Chicago, the University of Wisconsin, Columbia, and Yale.

Those students now enrolled at Fisk University, except for the Ford Scholarship who are already in the Basic College Honors Program, will be expected to meet the old requirements for graduation. The freshmen who enter next fall in the class of 1957, and all following classes, will follow the new program of the Basic College. The planning of the new Basic College program has been done over the last year and a half by the Basic College Curriculum Committee, under the chairmanship of Dean George St. John, Jr.

The creation of the new curriculum followed a three-year Faculty self-survey of Fisk's goals, recourses, and courses, a survey which began in 1949. Consultants who participated in the self-survey through individual and group conferences on the campus and reports to the administration included Dr. Milton Burton, Professor of Chemistry at Notre Dame University; Dr. Harry J. Carman, Dean-emeritus of Columbia College; Dr. Stephen Duggan (now deceased) formerly Director, Institute of International Education; Dr. Stephen Freeman, Vice President of Middlebury College; Dr. J. Rudd Nielsen, Professor of Physics, University of Michigan, Dr. Janet Rioch, Psychiatrist, and Dr. John Dale Russell, U.S. Office of Education.

24th Observance Of Week Celebration Thrills Followers

University Launches Building Program And Elects Three Trustees; Dr. Henry Allen Boyd Added To Board; Famed Library Named For Late Erastus Milo Cravath, First President

The 24th Annual Festival of Music and Art at Fisk University, together with announcements of gifts of more than a Half Million Dollars for the university, plus an appropriation of $800,000 for new buildings on the Fisk campus; together with the election of three new trustees including Dr. Henry Allen Boyd, and a decision of the Board to name the Fisk Library for the late and eminent Erastus Milo Cravath, the first President of Fisk, highlighted last week's activities at the world-famous university on Jefferson Street.

Fisk really and truly closed its Music and Art Festival "in a blaze of glory" while the substantial appropriations for campus improvements elated the alumni and friends of the University as greatly as they elated Dr. Charles S. Johnson, the President.

Long has it been said of the Fisk Jubilee Singers that they "sang the fame of the Negro around the world." They did this with the famous Negro Spirituals—with such songs as "Swing Low Sweet Chariot," "Before I'd Be A Slave I'd Be Buried in My Grave," "Going to Shout All Over God's Heaven," and many others of the heart-warming songs that not only inspired a race that was in human bondage, but which in all of the subsequent years of freedom have been kept alive at the great university that pioneered in making the world respect them as the best of America's original music.

Kept Spirituals Alive

These songs now echo in concert halls and in churches all over the world. One of the pioneer members of the Fisk Jubilee Singers was the late John W. Work. He has passed on, but still at Fisk is John W. Work, Jr., equally as eminent as Chorus Conductor as his father, and carrying on in a great tradition.

Down through the years, Fisk University has specialized in t intellectual and musical training o. its students. It has sent them forth as ambassadors of good will for their university, imbued with a zeal for making a worthwhile contribution to the cultural progress of their nation. There is nothing else that Fisk does for its students more notable than the inspiration it gives them to be alumni always determined to let the world see the greatness of their Alma Mater in the service alumni render.

Music appreciation had gained notable headway in the colored schools of Nashville, largely as a result of promoting a Music and Art Festival for the children in the colored public schools. This fine addition to the cultural life of the city was the pioneer work of Mrs. Mattie Alice Battle Moore, a Fisk graduate and Mrs. Phyletta Baker Nellis, a graduate of Tennessee A. & I. State College who has done post-graduate work at Fisk. There was great public disappointment here at the beginning of the present school year when the authorities decided to break up the Music and Art Festival for the public school students and to give no reason for doing so.

But music lovers in Nashville and of the nation still are assured of a great treat annually as Fisk University continues to have its Music and Art Festival. This year as in the past, the press gave abundant praise of the festival—of the fine music and the fine art exhibits sponsored by Aaron Douglas, a brilliant painter, who is the Art Director at the University.

Ralph Ellison Spoke

Ralph Ellison, winner of the 1952 National Book Award for writing the novel, "Invisible Man" was a featured artist at this year's festival. He debunked the idea that there was special Negro Art, contending that Negroes were making a contribution to the culture of the world as writers and painters similar to those of other artists. Arna Bontemps noted Librarian at Fisk was Chairman of the seminar addressed by Ralph Ellison. Among students who contributed to the success of the festival were Miss Mary E. Witherspoon, a pianist and a Pearl High graduate: Miss Bethena S. White, organist; Miss Lilla J. Finch, pianist; Harvey Van Buren, pianist and organist and Miss Viola Brice, soprano soloist.

The thrilling art exhibit included 53 paintings, some of them being lent to the university by the New York City Metropolitan Museum of Art.

The final concert of the festival presented on Saturday, featured 100-voices and was a fitting climax to the splendid singing that was heard during the week. Also on the closing day, Saturday, Fisk players of the Ford Theater Guild, splendidly rendered "Our Town," the participants being students in the basic college department of the university. Fisk was the first of colored educational institutions to accept the provisions of the Ford Foundation for enrolling bright students of high school sophomore classes for college training.

At the opening of the festival, a spectacular Beaux Arts Ball was given, featuring various dances of the 1920's, at which time President Johnson crowned the King and Queen of the Festival. These were two seniors, Judson Roberts of Houston, Texas as king and Miss Joyce Johnson of Trentice, Miss., as queen. A complimentary children's theater, sponsored by President and Mrs. Johnson was given on Saturday.

Mrs. Gibbs Present

Among the notable visitors here for the Fisk festivities was Mrs. William Francis Gibbs of New York, daughter of the late Paul D. Cravath, whom she succeeded as Chairman of the Fisk Board or Trustees. The late Paul D. Cravath was the son of Fisk's first President. His daughter stated in a talk here that her father's last trip before his death was a visit to Fisk University. She made a gift from her father's estate of $300,000 to the university, and also announced a gift of $200,000 from the American Missionary Association. Another gift to Fisk that was announced was a $5,000 scholarship bequest from the late Bernard Fensterwald of Nashville, a former member of the Fisk Board of Trustees.

Three New Trustees

The three new trustees for Fisk, as announced by President Johnson, are Dr. Henry Allen Boyd of Nashville; Robert Winthrop Kean of Elizabethtown, N. J.; and Dr. William J. Zeigler, Chicago Dentist, and Fisk Alumnus.

Mr. Kean is a banker, a Director of the Consolidated Gas Company of New Jersey and son of Republican Congressman Robert W. Kean of the 12th District of New Jersey, who is the second ranking member of the House Ways and Means Committee in the present Congress.

Publisher and Banker Chosen

As is well known to Nashvillians and throughout the nation, Dr. Henry Allen Boyd, son of the late Richard H. Boyd, founder of the National Baptist Publishing Board, is the Secretary of that Board, President of the Citizens Savings Bank and Trust Company; President of the Nashville GLOBE Publishing Company and for more than forty years has directed the Annual Sessions of the Sunday School Congress of the National Baptist Convention of America. The most distinguished member of the Metoka Men's Bible Class of the Baptists, Dr. Boyd has for many years served as teacher of the Galedas, the Women's Bible Class of Mt. Olive Baptist church. Frequently this class of women has a larger attendance and offering than the powerful Mt. Olive Metokas

Dr. Boyd accepted the Fisk Trusteeship, in appreciation of the fact that his daughter, Mrs. Kathryn Boyd Roach of Cleveland, Ohio, and his wife, the late Mrs. Georgia Bradford Boyd, both were former students of Fisk University.

As a result of the substantial gifts and appropriations Fisk received this year, the university will erect a new women's dormitory, to be known as Scribner Hall and a new social science building, to be known as Park Hall.

$300,000 to Fisk

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Fisk University received a check for $300,000 during the annual trustees convocation, held April 24. The check was a bequest of the late Paul D. Cravath, son of the Rev. Erastus Milo Cravath, first president of the school.

INFRARED SPECTRA—

Fisk University is sponsoring an Infrared Spectroscopy Institute in Nashville, Tenn., Aug. 31 through Friday, Sept. 4. Scientists, particularly chemists and biochemists, will be introduced to infrared spectroscopy so that they may recognize its usefulness in research and teaching. Further information as well as application forms may be obtained by writing to Nelson Fuson, Infrared Spectroscopy Institute, Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn.

Fisk Receives UNCF Grant Of $127,110.00

NEW YORK — Fisk University received $127,110.00 from the United Negro College Fund's $25,000,000 five-year building campaign, known as the National Mobilization of Resources for the United Negro Colleges. The announcement was made by Dr. Charles S. Johnson, president of Fisk who stated that today's grant brought the total received by Fisk to $398,287.00 since the inception of the Fund's National Mobilization program two years ago.

President Johnson said that the three grants made to Fisk since July, 1952, will enable Fisk to proceed immediately with two buildings now in the planning stage, Scribner Hall, a dormitory for women and Park Hall, to house the social sciences and education departments.

Stressing the work that Fisk University has done over the years, Dr. Johnson said that the university has grown until it is now serving students from 34 states and 14 foreign countries. In the past 10 years the university has graduated 1,673 students who are serving today in every part of the United States and many foreign countries as teachers and nurses, social service workers and doctors, lawyers and ministers.

President Johnson said that the Fund's National Mobilization Program is headed by Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of the United College Fund, and a seven-man board including such well-known businessmen and industrialists as Harvey, S. Firestone, Jr.; Devereaux C. Josephs; Richard K. Mellon; John D. Rockefeller, Jr.; Alfred P. Sloan, Jr.; Robert E. Wilson, and Robert W. Woodruff.

Fisk U. To Erect Three New Buildings

Fisk University received $127,110.00 today from the United Negro College Fund's $25,000,000.00 five-year building campaign, known as the National Mobilization of Resources for the United Negro Colleges. The announcement was made by Dr. Charles S. Johnson, president of Fisk who stated that today's grant brought the total received by Fisk to $398,278.00 since the inception of the Fund's National Mobilization program two years ago.

President Johnson said that the three grants made to Fisk since July, 1952, will enable Fisk to proceed immediately with two buildings now in the planning stage, Scribner Hall, a dormitory for women and Park Hall, to house the social sciences and education departments.

Stressing the work that Fisk University has done over the years, Dr. Johnson said that the university has grown until it is now serving studetns from thirty-four states and fourteen foreign countries. In the past ten years the university has graduated 1673 students who are serving today in every part of the United States and in many foreign countries as teachers and nurses, social service workers and doctors, lawyers and ministers.

President Johnson said that the Fund's National Mobilization Program is headed by Dr. F. D. Patterson, president of the United College Fund, and a seven-man board including such well-known businessmen and industrialists as Harvey S. Firestone, Jr.; Devereux C. Joseph; Richard K. Mellon; John D. Rockefeller, Jr.; Alfred P. Sloan, Jr.; Robert E. Wilson, and Robert W. Woodruff.

Visiting Professor At Fisk University

Dr. Ernest M. Linton of Bloomington, Ill., former professor of government at Illinois University, will be visiting professor of government at Fisk University for the academic year 1953-54 it was announced by Fisk president, Dr. Charles S. Johnson.

Dr. Linton is coming to Fisk on the program of the John Hay Whitney Foundation and the New York Foundation which finances retired professors, through salary and travel support, who are willing to continue their work in the teaching field by taking residence at small liberal arts colleges throughout the United States.

In announcing this year's appointments, David M. Heyman, president of the New York Foundation which recently entered the program said, "We believe this program is fostering a new and practical way of adding to our intellectual capital. Brilliant teachers are among our nation's greatest assest. Anything we can do to conserve these assets and strengthen our colleges today is of great importance."

Dr. Linton is one of six additional appointees to the program which began in 1952. He taught for thirty years at Illinois University, before his retirement. Although his speciality has been in the international filed he taught a wide range of subjects, from comparative government to American political ideas.

Nashville Florist Leaves Fisk University $130,000

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — (SNS) — Fisk University received $130,000.00 from the estate of the late Joseph Browne when Mr. Marvin W. Sory, Assistant treasurer of the Nashville Trust Company, turned over the registered securities and stocks bonds and cash to Fisk president, Dr. Charles S. Johnson. The money is to be used for scholarships.

In making the announcement, Dr Johnson said, "this gift represents the largest grant ever left Fisk by a Negro, and to my knowledge, the largest ever given any educational institution by a Negro."

Joe Browne was owner until his death in 1917 of the Lischey Nurseries and greenhouse. The Lischey Nursery had been established by a Frenchman, Louis Lischey in 1854. Joe Browne had worked in the nursery for many years and at the time of the Frenchman's death was his oldest employee. Because of his long years of devoted service to the business, Lischey willed the entire nursery, which consisted of twenty acres of land and twelve greenhouses, to Joe Browne.

The nursery, one of the oldest established businesses in the City of Nashville, continued to grow under Joe Browne's direction. Browne became one of the best-known landscape garderners in the area, making a speciality of furnishing potted plants and palms to hotels. In 1917, the year of Joe Browne's death, the Southern Florist, a highly respected professional journal, carried an extensive article on Joe Browne and his nursery in which it referred to him as "one of the outstanding landscape florists in the South." Joe Browne was given credit by the Southern Florist for introducing and cultivating roses in Nashville, then a rare flower for nurseries.

Interest in Fisk University began early for Joe Browne and his petite wife, Callie. Their only child, Daisy the present Mrs T M. Brumfield of Nashville, entered the old Fisk Normal School where she graduated in 1901. Family interest in Fisk continued and all four of the Browne grand children attended college there. Three granddaughters, Miss Marguerite Washington, a social case worker with the Los Angeles County Hospital, California; Mrs. Horace M. Bond, wife of president Bond of Lincoln University in Pennsylvania; and Mrs. Joe Browne Jones who is committed with the public school system in Jackson, Mississippi, hold degrees from Fisk. A grandson, Dr. Henry Alvin Washington, a well-known physician in Syracuse, New York, received his basic training at Fisk and then attended Howard University in Washington, D. C., where he got his medical degree.

Even after all of her grandchildren had left Fisk, Mrs. Joe Browne continued her active interest in the school, for she supplied the flowers to decorate the Fisk Chapel at commencement time every year until her death June 6 at the age of 94. She also maintained an active interest in the Fisk Union Church where she was a member.

The Browne's only daughter, Daisey who with her husband, Rev Thomas M. Brumfield, professor emeritus of religion Fisk, lives on the Fisk campus said that the gift was one of the fondest dreams of her parents come true.

Fisk Professor Appointed To Resource Group

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Dr. S. O. Roberts, chairman of the Fisk psychology department and director of its Program in Child Life and Development has recently been appointed to membership on the Council of Psychologist Resources in the South. The Council's goal is to deal with regional needs for psychological services and with programs directed towards the provision of more psychologists, research and increased community psychological services. This group, of which Dr. Nicholas Hobbs of Peabody is chairman, has been established as a result of a conference concerned with these issues. This conference was held in Atlanta last January under the sponsorship of the Southern Regional Education Board and the National Institute of Mental Health of the U. S. Public Health Service.

Fisk Univ. Gets Student On Integration Project

NASHVILLE — The first student to come to Fisk under the "two-way integration project" launched this year by the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students will be Joan Arlene Wood, a junior from Portland, Ore., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gerald Rockwell Wood of 609 N. E. Simpson St., Portland, Oregon.

Miss Wood has been a student at Lewis and Clark College in Portland, but decided to come to Fisk this summer while she was attending an Interracial Institute where she met Dr. Herman Long of Fisk's Race Relations Department. She was strongly encouraged in her decision by her father, a letter carrier, and mother who have been instrumental in promoting integration in the Mallory Avenue Christian Church of Portland, where they are members.

While at Fisk, Joan will continue her work in elementary education which she plans to use to promote inter-racial understanding through teaching. On the side, Joan has an interest in music and drama and has had the experience of playing for four years in the Jefferson High School (Portland) orchestra.

Mr. Cecil D. Halliburton, registrar and director of admissions, said, "We are happy to have Miss Wood with us at Fisk. She comes highly recommended as an excellent personality and sincere Christian worker by the civic leaders of Portland. Her academic record is promising and we are sure her work at Fisk will be a success, profitable for both her and the school."

University Status Askec For Fla. A&M

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — (INS) — The 1953 session of the Florida legislature convened Tuesday at Tallahassee and heard Gov. Dan McCarthy suggest that Florida A. and M. College be classified as a university.

McCarty was not able to deliver the address before the joint houses because of a recent heart attack. The message was read by Secretary of State R. A. Gray.

After suggesting that Florida A. and M. be classified as a university, the governor opposed the consolidation of Florida State university and the University at Gainesville. The latter two institutions are white.

Florida A & M A University!

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—Florida A. & M. College was officially elevated to university status here last week by the Florida State Legislature. The official name of the institution is now Florida Agricultural and Mechanical University.

Dr. George William Gore Jr. is president of the university.

Florida A. and M. Now a University

Florida A. and M. College at Tallahassee is now a university. The Florida legislature elevated the school to this status and gave it the name of Florida Agricultural and Mechanical University. Is this progress? Or, is it what is known in football as the "hidden play"—a move to keep Negroes out of the so-called white universities?

Governor Signs Bill Upping Florida A & M To University

TALLAHASSEE — Governor Dan McCarty has signed a bill upping Florida A. and M. College for Negroes to the status of a university.

The measure becomes effective September 1, and makes the state-supported institution Florida Agriculture and Mechanical University.

With a change in one letter the new abbreviation for the institution becomes FAMU. Reports from the campus are that there is some worry about the use of the word Famu in the place of Famce in the school song.

Raising the college status of a university is one of the campaign promises of Governor Dan McCarty and the first one he has kept insofar as Negroes are concerned.

On the other hand the governor's raising the college's status to that of a university is viewed by many with skepticism. Some see the move as an attempt to sidetrack the issue of Negro students entering the University of Florida.

It is widely discussed subject and members close to the officialdom of the NAACP have indicated that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People will continue to wage its fight for the entry of Negro students in the state-supported colleges.

Florida A & M Closes Workshop On Economics

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — An average of 75 persons attended daily sessions of the three-week economic education workshop which closed at the Florida A and M college June 26.

The workshop was under the sponsorship of the Joint Council on Economic Education of New York and the Florida A and M college through its divisions of social sciences and education.

Twenty-two persons were recipients of scholarships awarded by the Afro - American Life Insurance Company of Jackson-ville, the Central Life Insurance Company of Tampa, and the JCOEE.

Other Workshops

The workshop, one of three held in colored institutions and one of 34 held in this country and Hawaii, was designed to give an understanding and appreciation of our economy and to awaken interest in the use and conservation of resources in Florida.

One of the workshop's highlights was a field trip to the Elberta Crate and Box Company, one of the world's largest manufactuers of crating materials. Jack Simmons, company president, conducted a tour of the plant which is staffed primarily by college employees.

Walter Austin, head of the A and M economics department, and A. S. Parks, assistant professor of history, served as workshop co-cordinators, and J. W. Riley, history department chairman, headed the resource use education features of the workshop. A. L. Kidd is director of the social sciences division and Dr. M. O. Alston is director of the division of education.

Inaugural Planned

Gala Celebration Next Week on Tallahassee Campus

By CHARLES J. SMITH III
(Special to the Courier)

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Governor Dan McCarty has been invited by President George W. Gore Jr. to participate in the first university convocation which will officially inaugurate the 1953-54 school year of the Florida Agricultural and Mechanical University on Monday, Sept. 21.

This announcement by President Gore also disclosed that two other high state officials, the presidents of the other state-supported institutions of higher learning, the presidents of two private colleges and two junior colleges, the president of the General Alumni Association, and representatives of the faculty and student body will participate in the program.

The calendar of events for the convocation observance reveals that on Sunday evening, Sept. 20, the freshman choir will sing in vespers. And on Monday evening, the president's reception will be held in Sunshine Manor between the hours of 7:30 and 9. Also, a student social hour will be observed in the university gymnasium between 9 and 10:30, with the initial lighting of the university torch to be held at 10:45 in the Quadrangle. Presentation of the staff and faculty at chapel, on Wednesday, will mark the end of the convocation observance.

THE FAMED university band will lead the academic processional on Monday, which will be one of the most colorful in the sixty-six-year-old history of the institution.

Governor McCarty and Atty. Hollis Rinehart, chairman of the Board of Control, and Thomas Bailey, state superintendent of public instruction, are expected to make official statements concerning the elevation of the institution to its university status, which became effective on Sept. 1.

DR. GEORGE W. GORE JR.
. . . set for big day

The following persons are to extend greetings and felicitations: Dr. Doak S. Campbell, president, Florida State University; Dr. J. Hillis Miller, president, University of Florida; Dr. H. D. Goode, president, General Alumni Association; Dr. R. V. Moore, president, Bethune-Cookman College; Dr. R. W. Puryear, president, Florida N. I. and N. College; Dr. W. B. Stewart, president, Edward Waters College, and Dr. G. T. Wiggins, head of Booker T. Washington High School and Washington Junior College.

Famcee, as the institution has been known for wears, was established in 1887 as the Colored Normal School. At the time of its organization, the school's faculty consisted of two persons, the principal and the assistant principal.

THE VALIDITY of the investments in physical expansion and developments has been justified by a significant record of educational growth, reflected to some extent in the development of the curriculum, the increase in student enrollment and a corresponding increase in staff.

The initial necessity to increase the offerings of the institution coincided with the physical expansion as evidenced by the enlargement of the original teacher-training curriculum to include normal training, manual training and music when the school was but four years old.

At the turn of the century, work was still being offered exclusively on the two-year level, although the institution had begun to mature academically. It was attracting better-trained teachers and receiving a higher degree of academic recognition and respect. State approval and recognition of the role and scope of this institution, increasing its responsibility in and for the educational structure of Florida, occurred in 1905 and 1908, respectively.

The direct management was transferred from the State Board of Education to the State Board of Control, a step which indicated that the school was one of the institutions of higher learning in the state.

SINCE THE YEAR of 1909, when the name was changed for the initial time, the scope of the institution has broadened to include the following schools and colleges:

College of arts and sciences, school of agriculture and home economics, school of education, graduate school, school of engineering and mechanic arts, college of law, school of nurs- pharmacy.

And keeping in pace, the program of physical expansion. Currently, some $3,500,000 is being expended on buildings, and contracts have been let for architects to design approximately $3,000,000 more.

Buildings now under construction include the science-pharmacy building, the home economics-agriculture wing, the ROTC wing, the guest house and the law school wing. Construction is expected to begin shortly on the men's dormitory. On the drawing board are designs for a student center, demonstration school, home economics-agriculture building, ROTC building and an addition to the dining hall.

Florida A&M Becomes Nation's Newest University

Nearly 2,000 Watch Ceremonies as Gov. Gives His Blessings

By ROBERT M. RATCLIFFE
(Courier's National News Editor)

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—Picturesque Florida A. and M. became the nation's newest university last week.

Ceremonies marking the official transformation took place on the moss-draped campus located atop the highest of this city's seven hills.

The university's first convocation, presided over by Florida A. and M.'s able and enthusiastic president, Dr. George W. Gore Jr., was conducted in Lee Auditorium and was witnessed by a crowd of nearly two thousand.

It had all the pomp and splendor of a historic occasion and received the blessings of Florida's Gov. Dan McCarty.

SIXTY-SIX-YEAR-OLD Florida A. and M., known nationally because of its great football teams coached by Jake (Mr. Football) Gaither, and because of its spectacular bands, under the direction of Roland Haines, is definitely on its way as a university.

A $6,500,000 building program, already under way, will raise the value of the university to approximately $13,000,000 by the end of 1955.

During the convocation, the old college shield was rolled from the rostrum and dramatically replaced by a new, giant-sized shield bearing the name of Florida Agriculture and Mechanical University.

Governor McCarty was unable to attend the event but sent his blessings through his personal representative, Senator LeRoy Collins of Tallahassee. Senator Collins, considered by many the man to succeed McCarty as Governor of Florida, was loud in his praise of the new university.

EARLIER, President Gore read the Senate bill which changed Florida A. and M. from a college to a university.

Atty. Hollis Rinehart, chairman of the Board of Control, and Thomas Bailey, superintendent of Florida public instruction, followed Senator Collins as speakers.

"Today, you are being honored and recognized for all you have accomplished in the past," said Attorney Rinehart.

Hundreds of students and well-wishers lined the campus as the colorful processional began moving into the auditorium for the historic event. Florida A. and M.'s great band and fast-stepping ROTC added additional color to the occasion.

Earlier, President Gore held a press conference for visiting reporters and editors. Members of the press were shown every courtesy by the university's energetic public relations director, Charles (Chuck) Smth and his staff.

THREE EVENTS were on the evening program, two social affairs and a candlelighting ceremony. The latter, a very touching affair and conducted by Dr. Gore, was a tribute to the school's sixty-six years of progress.

One social affair was held for the students and another on the lawn of the president's home for faculty, staff members and visiting friends. The president's charming wife, Pearl M. Gore, and her aides were kept busy entertaining nearly five hundred persons invited to Sunshine Manor.

Presidents of other Florida colleges and universities and some of the state's top educators were among those gracing the platform during the convocation held in Lee Auditorium.

SHORT BUT TIMELY speeches praising Dr. Gore and the rise of Florida A. and M. from a college to university status were made by Dr. Doak S. Campbell, president, Florida State University; Dr. John S. Allen, vice president, University of Florida; Dr. R. V. Moore, president, Bethune-Cookman College; Dr. R. W. Puryear, president, Florida Normal College; Dr. W. B. Stewart, president, Edward Waters College; Dr. G. T. Wiggins, dean, Washington Junior College; Dr. H. D. Goode, president, Florida A. and M. Alumni Association; Mrs. L. B. Clarke, representing the A. and M. faculty, and C. Wendell Austin, student representative.

AME Bishop C. A. Gibbs delivered the benediction.

One of the highlights of the convocation was the offerings of Colonious Davis on the university's new $62,000 organ.

Dr. Puryear Attends Meet At Atlanta U.

SAINT AUGUSTINE — Dr. R. W. Puryear, President of Florida Normal and Industrial Memorial College attended a very important conference of the Presidents of Negro Baptist Colleges, held at Atlanta University October 28-29.

Others attending the conference were: Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, President of Morehouse College; Dr. J. H. Owens, President of LeMoyne College; Dr. R. V. Wells, Director of the Board of Education and Publication, American Baptist Convention, and Dr. M. C. Ballenger from the Department of Schools of the American Baptist Convention.

The main speaker for the occasion was Dr. Lynn Leaverworth, Director, Department of Theological Education of the Board of Education, American Baptist Association.

Fisk, Morehouse To Share 1954 Scholarship Fund

NEW YORK — (ANP) Fisk university and Morehouse college are among 11 American colleges supported by the Fund for the Advancement of Education which next year will award 300 scholarships to male and female students under the fund's "Early Admissions Program."

The program, originated in 1951 as a pre-induction experiment to give high school sophomores and juniors a chance to complete two years of college before entering military service, is available to students of high scholastic achievement. For next year's scholarships, students must have completed their sophomore year of high school by June, 1954. Average age of these students will be tween 15 and 16 at the time of their ntrance into college.

The scholarship pays up to $1,725 for the 1954-55 academic year and is partially or wholly renewable at each of the cooperating colleges.

Eligibility is based on the applicant's high school record, recommendation of the high school principal, rating in examinations administered by the member college and emotional stability and personal performance.

Gammon builds apts. for married students

ATLANTA, Ga. (ANP) — An eight - apartment building, designed to house married student families, now being erected on the campus of Gammon Theological seminary here, is scheduled to be ready for occupancy by Sept. 22.

Modernistic, each apartment will have three rooms and a private both, be completely furnished, and include a play space for the children. The fireproff building is part of Gammon's program to modernize student accommodations. Funds of the building came from the United Negro college fund.

Gammon Builds Apartments For Married Students

ATLANTA, Ga. — (ANP) —An eight apartment building designed to house married student families, now is being erected on the campus of Gammon Theological seminary here. It is scheduled to be ready for occupancy by Sept. 22.

Modernistic, each apartment will have three rooms and a private bath, completely furnished, each apartment also will have a play space for the children. The building is fire proof.

The new building is part of Gammon's program to modernize student accommodations and to provide more space or married students.

Funds for the building came from the United Negro College Fund of which Gammon is a member.

Besides the building under construction, Gamon has five cottages for married student which now are being renovated and redecorated. Plans call for the furnishing of these cottages.

Despite the new buildings, Gammon may not be able to accommodate all the students who want to matriculate at the theological seminary. Commenting on this, Harry V. Richardson, president of the school, said:

"Almost all of the apartments and cottages already have been assigned. Even with the new building, we shall hardly have enough living quarters for our married students.

"Our enrollment of new students for the coming year is more than 100 per cent greater than that of last vear. It may be necessary to build additional facilities in the near future, if the increase continues."

Trend Toward Non-Segregation

(The Lanett Valley Daily Timse-News)

The Associated College Press has conducted a poll among college students throughout the nation which reflects the trend among this group toward favoring non-segregation in the higher institutions of learning.

Among all students polled, 75% opposed segregation. Among southern college students called, 53% voted against segregation.

It would be interesting to know what percentage of southern students polled are natives of the South. More and more, large numbers of northern and eastern students are enrolling in our southern colleges and universities. These students, if they attended grammar and high schools where non-segregation existed naturally would be more likely to vote against segregation.

Unquestionably, however, there is a marked trend among native southern college students favoring non-segregation. Such an attitude is something for the present-day leaders to think about.

Regardless of what action may be taken now or in the near future regarding this controversial problem, the current straws in the wind indicate that the next southern generation of southerners will look far more favorably on non-segregation than does the present.

Bearing this in mind, most probably the United States Supreme Court will wait to see what happens through normal, evolutionary, democratic processes, before making a ruling on non-segregation in the schools.

Integration In Colleges Will Be Two-Way Process

IN THE College Edition supplement comprising part of this issue of the JOURNAL AND GUIDE, DR. AMBROSE CALIVER of the U. S. Office of Education underscores a point previously made in these columns—that the Negro colleges need have no fears about their fate as a consequence of the trend toward integration in education.

Dr. CALIVER observes: "The trend toward integration will likely influence an increase in college enrollment among Negroes . . . The transition from a segregated to an integrated pattern of education will in most cases be a gradual process. Moreover, it will be a two-way process. Negro students will enroll in institutions predominantly attended by white students and white students will gradually enroll in the better institutions predominantly attended by Negroes."

As a matter of fact, almost every Negro college of real standing is receiving every year an increasing number of applications from white youths. A program of exchanging students with white colleges has been underway for several years by a number of Negro colleges. In a fewer number of the latter, there are now some independently enrolled white students.

The National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students is implementing now its third objective, assistance to white students in enrolling and securing scholarships at colored colleges. Initially, it concentrated on getting worthy students from the segregated South into interracial colleges and prep schools.

It is a fact that some white people of good will, as well as some Negroes, have been concerned about supporting Negro colleges as such when nowadays the objective is to do away with segregated education, particularly on the higher levels. The answer to that problem is for the traditionally Negro colleges to remove in theory and eventually in fact all restrictions to unlimited enrollments. They have been themselves segregated colleges by force of circumstances — the mores and laws of the states in which they are located. They were born out of a need to give Negroes a chance for education which they would not have had otherwise. And they've served magnificently.

They can continue that service, but their traditional enrollment solely of Negro students need be practiced only so long as it is required of them by factors beyond their control.

From the moment these colleges enroll their first white student, they are in fact themselves integrated and no qualms need exist that support of them constitutes support of segregation.

Educator Tells of Testing Role And Accomplishments On Negro Campuses

By GLADYS E. GRAHAM

NEW YORK, (ANP) — Dr. Walter S. Daniel, specialist for higher education for the Division of Higher Education in the United States Department of Education has noted the co-operative Intercollegiate Examination program developed by 13 Negro colleges, who have united in an effort to solve some of the problems connected with securing a student body competent to do college work.

Dr. Daniel relates that these private colleges which co-operated in the testing of high school students for college, believe that a pre-admission testing program will help to provide a more objective measure of student selection. The participating colleges shared in the administration of tests and the financing of costs. Experimentation and evaluation were deemed important aspects in the operation of the program during the first year of operation.

Colleges or initial sponsors of the Co-operative Intercollegiate Examination program were: Bishop (Texas), Clark (Georgia), Dillard university (Louisiana), Fisk university (Nashville, Tenn.), Knoxville, LeMoyne (Memphis), Lincoln university (Penn.), Morris Brown, Spelman and Morehouse (all in Georgia) Johnson C. Smith (North Carolina), Talladega (Ala.) and Tougaloo college (Miss.).

Six advantages were found according to the Dr. Daniel study. It revealed that the testing program above all leads to scientific possibilities in establishing a set of the best qualified students for scholarships and awards. It also aids the college to sift out in advance non-collegiate material.

The examinations were administered without cost to students and without restrictions as to race since four of the institutions associated with the plan are developing inter-racial student bodies.

NO BIG SHIFT SEEN IN NEGRO STUDENTS

Dr. Clement Says They Would Not Rush From Own Colleges When Segregation Ended

In the event of a Supreme Court decision declaring racial segregation in education unconstitutional Negro private colleges will survive only if they are of the highest caliber, according to Dr. Rufus E. Clement, president of Atlanta University.

Dr. Clement, who is the first Negro ever elected to the Board of Education in Atlanta, said there was no indication that removal of racial barriers would result in an immediate rush of Negroes to schools attended by white students.

Speaking yesterday at the second of three meetings of the United Negro College Forum at the Cosmopolitan Club, 189 East Sixty-fifth Street, Dr. Clement predicted that within ten to fifteen years all outstanding colleges that now limit their students to Negroes because of state laws would become interracial, but he did not expect that white enrollment would be more than 5 or 10 per cent. And he thought Negroes entering other colleges would not exceed 5 per cent of their total enrollment.

Concerning public schools and the fear in some quarters that they might be "overrun," Dr. Clement declared that urban patterns of residence and districting would obviate a large intermixture of the races.

Ambrose D. Caliver, assistant to the United States Commissioner of Education and a specialist in the field of higher education for Negroes, said that in states maintaining separate schools Negroes lagged far behind white students. He held that the gap in educational opportunity in the South would eventually be closed and noted that the process had been hastened by suits brought by Negroes against discriminatory practices.

"It will require many years to bring about qualitative coordination between the races but any attempt to do so on a separate but equal basis will cost many more billions of dollars a year than are now being spent," he added.

The sponsors of the Forum were the New York clubs of eleven Eastern women's colleges, the New York branch of the American Association of University Women and the United Negro College Fund. The moderator was William Trent Jr., executive director of the fund.

The panel included Kenneth B. Clark, Associate Professor of Psychology at City College; Mildred McAfee Horton, president of the National Social Welfare Assemsociation and Mark McCloskey, dibly; Margaret S. Lewisohn, chairrector of the Bureau of Commuman of the Public Education Asnity Education of the city's Board of Education.

224 Schools Are Sharing in Giant Integration Project

They Want a Million—Regional chairmen, board and staff members of the NAACP met in New York to devise ways and means of raising a million dollars a year for complete Emancipation by 1963. Seated at the speakers' table, left to right, are Thurgood Marshall, special counsel; Roy Wilkins, administrator; Arthur B. Spingarn, president; Dr. Channing H. Tobias, chairman, board of directors; Walter White, executive secretary; Henry Lee Moon, public relations director, and Clarence Mitchell, Washington Bureau. Others include Dr. Joseph R. Stephens, Dr. Ulysses S. Wiggins, Messrs. Gloster B. Current, Joseph Kennedy, James Ivy, Benson C. Jennings and Ina Hope Henriques. Also, Messrs. Harold L. Oram, James A. Crumlin, William Cratic, James Stewart, Rufus Smith, Herbert Hill, Julia E. Baxter, Lucille Black and Bobbie Branche.

NEW YORK—Admission of nineteen Negro and white students, under a "two-way integration" project, to eleven Southern colleges whose student bodies are predominantly and, until recently, exclusively of the other race, was announced this week in his fifth annual report by Dr. Harry J. Carman, chairman of the Board of Directors of the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students, Inc., 31 West 110th Street.

His report also revealed that the agency had provided $24,000 in scholarship awards this year to seventy-two Negro undergraduate students attending interracial colleges.

In addition, 474 students counselled by the agency were admitted to 224 interracial colleges with $197,000 worth of scholarship assistance.

A HIGHLIGHT of the coming year's program, the report continued, will be a South-wide "talent search" carried out under a $170,000 grant from the Fund for the Advancement of Education of the Ford Foundation.

Under the program, seventy-five high schools in forty-five Southern cities will be visited in a systematic effort to discover able Negro youth adequately prepared for college and to counsel and assist them in gaining college admission.

Funds are available to provide supplementary scholarship aid to two freshman classes of 150 students each in the next two years.

Dr. Carman observed that "the work of the National Scholarship Service, carried on by no other agency, is an expression of the need to equalize educational opportunities for all Americans in accordance with their abilities and aspirations.

"THE SUCCESS of the program proves that to believe in 'integration' in education is not enough. The need for financial aid, and for special counselling, in order to bring together the qualified student and the many available opportunities, is great.

"For every student helped by the agency this year, there were many more waiting at the door for whom our limited funds could not provide."

The agency was created to broaden opportunities for Negro students to obtain higher education in an interracial environment. In its five years of operation, it has helped 2,300 Negro students to enter 280 different interracial colleges with $450,000 worth of college scholarships and other awards. Of this sum $60,000 was in the form of direct supplementary aid from the National Scholarship Service.

DECREASE IS FOUND IN BIAS IN SCHOOLS

American Jewish Committee Says 'Good Sense of People' Rejects Hate Mongering

EDUCATIONAL GAINS CITED

Liberalized College Admissions Reported—'Checkmating of Bigots' in Nation Hailed

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

CHICAGO, Oct. 23—An "encouraging decrease" in bias in schools throughout the country is indicated in a report that will be read tomorrow at a meeting of the American Jewish Committee's executive committee.

The executive committee will be holding its first session of a two-day meeting concurrently with the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith and the Joint Defense Appeal, the fund-raising group for both the committee and the league. One hundred leaders of American Jewry are expected to attend the committee meeting.

The report, based on a twelve-month nationwide study, was prepared by Irving M. Engel, New York attorney and chairman of the committee, who said that "the good sense of the American people is responsible for the current rejection (in the schools) of the crude and primitive hatemongering and bigotry." He added:

"It is heartening to report that we are approaching the time when all Americans will be able to recognize a bigot who tries to market his bigotry behind pseudo patriotism and nationalism."

Student Action Praised

Mr. Engel, former member of the President's Committee on Government Contract Compliance during the Truman Administration, listed these gains in the educational fields:

"Considerable progress in decreasing bias in college admissions in many sections of the United States, with the brightest spots in the Northeast and Far West, and substantial progress in the Midwest.

"Checkmating of a small group of bigots in their reckless attacks on public schools in various sections of the United States, including Scarsdale, N. Y.; Englewood, N. J.; Pasadena, Calif., and Battle Creek, Mich.

"Liberalization of admission policies in professional schools, particularly in colleges of medicine, toward the applications of students from minority groups.

"The forthright position taken by the trustees of the University of the State of New York in banning discriminatory practices by fraternities and sororities on campuses of state colleges.

"Action by student groups, including Columbia University students, in voting to ban any fraternity practicing discrimination."

Commenting on discrimination relating to college admissions by means of assigning set quotas to applicants of religious or racial minorities, Mr. Engel said:

"The wave of discriminatory admissions practices of the colleges and professional schools of our country gathered increased momentum during the Nineteen Thirties, reaching a peak immediately after the end of World War II. This trend is now clearly downward, with the decline more rapid in some sections than in others."

State Supported Negro Colleges To Be Revamped

The annual report of the Georgia Board of Regents indicated yesterday that the curricula of the three state colleges for Negroes will be revamped in the "near future."

The report did not indicate the extent of the reorganization but noted:

"The faculties of these three institutions are expected in the near future to approve certain comprehensive plans of curricular organization that have been worked out by their committees."

The Regents said that Fort Valley has given up work in business education, chemistry, mathematics, English and history and established a "new major program in botany in support of its work in the field of agriculture."

Albany and Savannah State will concentrate in the fields abandoned by Fort Valley State, the report said.

According to the report, Fort Valley State pays the highest average salary $3,455 to faculty members. Albany State followed with $3,454. The average salary at the University of Georgia was $4,379 and $4,001 at Valdosta State College.

Five persons on the Fort Valley State faculty have the Ph. D. degree or equivalent as compared with three persons each at Albany State and Savannah State college.

The report covers the fiscal year 1951-52.

Deny Swim Pool To Ga. College

ATLANTA —(NNPA)— The Board of Regents of the University System of Georgia last Thursday denied the request of Albany State college that a $75,000 swimming pool be added to a proposed new gymnasium and physical education building.

Albany State college has an enrollment of 372 students. The other two colored colleges in the university system have enrollments as follows: Fort Valley State college, 864, and Savannah State college, 910.

Reveal 1,358 Negroes Got $120,718 In State Support

BY LERONE BENNETT, JR.

The Georgia Board of Regents revealed yesterday that 1358 Negroes received $120,718 during the fiscal year 1951-52 to pursue courses that are not offered at the three state schools for Negroes.

The board's report indicated that 868 women and 490 men received grants. A total of $39,850 was granted to 841 students who attended Atlanta university.

These students did work in 41 different fields of study. The largest single field was teacher education.

The report noted that:

"The Board has continued its policy of assisting Negro students to secure in institutions outside the the system graduate and professional training that is offered in University System institutions for white students but that is not offered in any one of the three University System institutions for Negro students."

One student who refused out-of state aid has a case pending in Federal court. The regents offered scholarship aid to Horace Ward who applied to the University of Georgia Law School.

The report listed grants to 857 persons in education, 33 in English, 61 in home economics, 48 in agriculture; 23 in medicine, 13 in law, 12 in biology, 17 in business administration, 8 in engineering, 5 in journalism, 8 in history, 1 in industrial art and 3 in art.

Thirty students attended Howard university; 108, Columbia university; 114, New York university; 96, Tuskegee; 10, Hampton institute; 2, Fisk, and 3, Florida A. and M.

Seventeen persons attended Morehouse college on state scholarship aid. Nine of these were pursuing course in pre-med which at that time were not available at the three state schools.

Of the students attending Atlanta university, 617 did work in education. Thirty-two were in library science and 22 in social work.

Friends of college founder celebrate his 80th birthday

GRAMBLING, La. — Charles P. Adams, founder of Grambling college, is 80-ears old.

The gray-thatched educator was honored at a birthday party Thursday where his lawyer-like reserve was completely rubbed off by the salutatory "happy birthday" coup de main.

Approximately 40 guests attended the party held at his home. They all shared the huge birthday cake, brought gifts and talked nostalgically of the past.

Fifty-two years have passed since the first school-bell rang in 1901, but the founder still retains many of the old - time characteristics that excited the fondness of his students.

When he retired in 1936, the school had an admirably trained faculty, pleasant surroundings, and a full program of supervised activities.

Founder Of Grambling Reaches 80

By COLLIE J. NICHOLSON

GRAMBLING, La. — Charles P. Adams, founder of Grambling college, is 80 years old.

The grey-thatched educator was honored at a birthday party Thursday. Approximately 40 guests attended the fete held at his home.

The ex-school master and his wife greeted acquaintances and talked enthusiastically about the progress of the college they started. Fifty-two years have passed since the first school bell rang in 1901 but the founder still retains many of the old-time characteristics that excited the fondness of his students.

During the early years, he led a hydra-headed existence that would have tried the strength, patience and compassion of a dozen men.

Through drudgery and the tireless effort of sweat and toil, the founder and his wife steered the development of Grambling from a meager beginning — a privately supported one-room shack — to a two-year-college supported by the state.

When he retired in 1936, the school had an admirably trained faculty, pleasant surroundings and a full program of supervised activities.

Hampton Is Given $77,200 To Help Virgin Islands

Special To The Herald

MAMPTON, Va. — Gov. Morris F. de Castro, of the Virgin Islands ,and Alonzo G. Moron, president of Hampton Institute announced this week receipt of a grant to Hampton Institute from the Ford Fund for the Advancement of Education to support a program designed to improve the quality of teaching in the Virgin Islands. This initial grant of $77,200 will enable Hampton Institute to begin a five-year program of teacher training for promising graduates of the Virgin Islands high schools who plan to teach in the Islands.

Under the terms of the grant, Hampton Institute will administer an in-service training program for teachers in the Virgin Islands school system during the school term and the Summer recess. The college will also administer a program of scholarships and fellowships for high school graduates and for the more promising teachers now employed in the Islands who have not had undergraduate training for teaching and for those who qualify for assistance in getting graduate training in a subject matter field or phase of school administration.

Beginning in September of this year, members of the Hampton Institute faculty will conduct late afternoon and evening classes in the Islands and during the Summer of 1954 a Summer session will be operated in Charlotte Amalie for the Virgin Islands teachers.

At the same time selected students from the Virgin Islands and from United States will begin an experimental teacher training program at Hampton Institute. In this program the students who plan to teach will take a four-year liberal arts course and a fifth year of practice teaching and seminars in teaching methods.

Hampton Man To Lecture In Japan

Special To The Herald

HAMPTON, Va.—Dr. Hugh M. Gloster, chairman of the communications center and director of the Summer session at Hampton Institute, was recently notified of his appointment to serve as a Fulbright lecturer in Japan during the school year 1953-54. This appointment involves lecturing and teaching at the university level in the field of English and American literature.

The purpose of the Fulbright educational exchange program in which Dr. Gloster will participate is to further goodwill and understanding between the United States and other countries through the exchange of lecturers, teachers, research scholars, specialists, and students.

Dr. Gloster came to Hampton Institute in 1946 as professor of English and chairman of the Communications Center (Department of Language and Literature). Before coming to Hampton, he was in charge of U. S. O. services to Negroes in Southeastern United States for three years. Prior to that he taught English at LeMoyne College and at Morehouse College.

An honor graduate of Morehouse College, Atlanta, the professor received the M. A. degree from Atlanta University and the Ph. D. degree from New York University, where he was guest professor in the Summer or 1949.

Hamptonites In Exchange Deal

HAMPTON, Va. — (ANP) — Six students at Hampton Institute here last week began preparing for matriculation at other colleges in the country in line with an exchange program between Hampton and the schools.

Those selected for participation in the program next semester are:

Miss Joy Schutterbrandt, Grinnell college (Iowa); Miss Margueryte Bates, Denison university, (Ohio); Arthur Braxton, Oberlin university (Ohio); Miss Virginia Dickerson and Miss Lucy Harris, Willimantic State Teachers college (Connecticut), and Miss Gwendolyn A. Finney, Heidelberg College (Ohio).

Students Protest As Hampton Fires Dean

HAMPTON, Va. — A group of Hampton institute students formally protested the "dismissal" of Miss E. Estelle Thomas, dean of women at the college since 1948, whose contract, it was announced, would not be renewed at the end of the school year.

President Alonzo G. Moron of the college met with the students and told them Miss Thomas' contract was not to be continued because of the "quality of her work."

The college president stated that Miss Thomas has the right to appeal to a special faculty committee or to the board of trustees for a review of her work at Hampton Institute.

Miss Thomas intimated that she will appeal.

A Hampton Institute graduate of 1933, Miss Thomas was made dean of women in 1948. She received her M.A. degree from Columbia University. From 1934-40 she served as associate dean of women. From 1943-47 Miss Thomas was U. S. O. consultant for interracial matters and then served as executive director of a YWCA in Newark, N. J., for one year.

Dean Thomas Dismissed, Hampton Students Riot

HAMPTON INSTITUTE, Va.— Dismissal of the dean of women, Miss E. Estelle Thomas, caused a riot of protesting students here over the week end.

The disturbance was brought to an end Monday when President Alonzo Moron received a group of students, who lodged a formal protest over Miss Thomas' ouster.

President Moron met with the students and told them Miss Thomas' contract was not to be continued at the end of the school year because of the quality of her work.

Right To Appeal

The college president stated that Miss Thomas has the right to appeal to a special faculty committee or the Board of Trustees for a review of her work at Hampton Institute.

Miss Thomas intimated that she will appeal.

A Hampton Institute graduate of 1933, Miss Thomas was made dean of women in 1948. She received her M.A. degree from Columbia University. From 1934-40 she served as associate dean of women.

From 1943-47 Miss Thomas was USO consultant for interracial matters and then served as executive director of a YWCA in Newark, N.J. for one year.

HOWARD UNIVERSITY

Accreditation Is Not On Same Basis At Present Report

Say Howard University Has Only Accredited Engineering School But Captains of Industry Have Jobs Ready For All Graduates of Institutions Giving Good Training For Technical Positions

What about this thing called "accreditation?"

That is, what effect does it have on college and high school graduates that come from schools and colleges that ARE accredited and those that are not?

What are the necessary "ingredients" that get one college accredited and does not get another school or college, "turning out" graduates who are just good by nature and sometimes better by practice, than graduates of the accredited schools, acclaimed as worthy of a seat at the first table?

Well, accreditation seems to be something that has been worked out by the top brass in education, and any disposition upon the part of "lesser breeds" to question what the educators have decided are the necessary ingredients for accreditation, just naturally renders the inquirer fit for being designated as hopelessly ignorant.

But there is one possible escape from being called ignorant for questioning the wisdom of the accrediting grants. It is to have and hold enough money like the big foundations to tell colleges you have a nice donation to give a school if it will relax a little on the requirements for graduation.

Just recently, it will be remembered the Ford Foundation let it be known it would pay the board and keep of a "gang" of young people in colleges—young people who had done no more than finish the sophomore class in high school—the Tenth Grade, that is—if the colleges would relax on their rule that only students who had finished four years of high school could get into college.

Many colleges, white and colored, did relax and they now have enrolled a number of bright young people— high school sophomores—going to some of the best colleges in the nation. Maybe that violates some of the accreditation rules, but you have got to admit that it brings to the colleges some powerfully big sums of money for operation expenses.

Just a week or so ago, the Presidents of the colored land-grant colleges held their annual meeting in Washington. Naturally these gentlemen had "resolutions" on their agenda. They "made" the newspapers better with what they said in their resolutions than with anything else they had to say. They had a resolution on engineering. In it they said that whereas Howard University is the one and only colored college that has an "accredited" engineering school, eight other colored land-grant colleges are offering engineering courses. Now that would seem to put these unaccredited colleges—like A&ISU in Nashville and FAMU in Tallahassee, Florida, off bounds. That is their graduates, as a result of their schools not being accredited, are supposed to be unfit for any Big Money jobs in engineering.

O. K. With Industrialists

But that isn't the way it is happening. The biggest industrialists in the country are sending their experts to all colored schools of engineering. Some have come to Nashville and inspected the "unaccredited" A & I S U engineering school and promptly have said they have good jobs for each and every boy and girl, the engineering school graduates.

And so it looks like accreditation is about to get a rating something like that the Apostle Paul gave circumcision. He said that under certain circumstances neither circumcision nor uncircumcision meant very much, or words to that effect, as found in Galatians 6:15. Under circumstances like the "present emergency" it looks like the eight land-grant colleges that have not had their engineering schools accredited, don't need to worry about it since the big industrialists are calling for their graduates just about as fast as they call for the graduates from Howard University.

It would seem therefore that the Presidents of the landgrant colleges that do not have engineering schools are ducking under some plain technicalities to avoid giving their students the practical education in engineering for which good money is being paid these days by the greatest industrialists in the country.

Speaking further on this matter of accreditation, despite all that the professors of our colored colleges have been saying in high appraisal of how notably their schools have met the tests for accreditation, it is now disclosed that accreditation of Negro schools in the past has not been based on the same standards as set for white schools and colleges.

Who says this, you ask?

Well, read the following from the 1952 Annual Report of the General Education Board, found on Page 19, which is from the report on the accrediting agency known as the "Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools:"

"A General Education Board grant of $45,000 was given in 1952 to the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools in Atlanta, Georgia, for a study of ways of revising the association's accreditation procedures for Negro colleges.

"As the Agency which sets standards and accredits schools and colleges in 11 Southern States, the association has a membership of 150 colleges and about 1,300 secondary schools. Since 1927, through the work of a special committee, the association has accredited approximately 40 Negro colleges and 150 secondary schools, but its standards for Negro institutions have been different from those applied to white institutions. The association is now trying to bring the Negro institutions more fully into the organization and to do that it has decided that hereafter Negro schools and colleges are to be serviced and accredited through the same procedures and on the same basis as white institutions. It accordingly has authorized its Commission on Colleges and Universities to make a thorough study prior to re-rating 58 Negro colleges and universities.

Well, maybe you can say that accreditation has not greatly interfered with colored college graduates getting good jobs, if along with their degrees, they also had good character, which a dwindling few Boards of Education are also requiring of persons they employ to teach. Certainly it has not interfered with the few students recently graduating from engineering schools getting good jobs. This has been because the industrialists have not been as finical about accreditation as the top brass in education.

But nevertheless and notwithstanding, the time is near at hand when the rascally white educators and equally rascally colored educators, who got together to palm off on colored folk a lower standard for accrediting their colleges and high schools than the white schools had to meet, are going to get the law book containing the 14th Amendment thrown at them by the Supreme Court of these United States, and no fooling.

Representation In A Time Of Crisis

REPRESENTATIVE ADAM CLAYTON POWELL (Dem.) of New York, rendered this Nation an invaluable service during the latter days of May when he organized and led to some degree of success a struggle against a Republican action that would have emasculated Howard University's undergraduate work, deferred plans for putting the university's graduate schools on a sounder basis, and reduced Freedmen's Hospital to a second-rate clinic.

The Republican dominated sub-committee on appropriations had voted to cut $295,000 from that part of the Howard budget which covered salaries of teachers and other operating fixed charges. Altogether, including the freezing of some $7,000,000 already appropriated for needed buildings for graduate schools, including medicine, the committee had singled out Howard University, one of the educational institutions aided by the Federal government for a budget cut of 54 percent, while it cut the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, which has the "say-so" over Howard, 4.9 percent, out of which Howard's 54 percent had to come.

Freedmen's is the only hospital in Washington where colored indigent cases of the District and surrounding counties of Virginia and Maryland may be admitted and may receive free treatment in an emergency. The committee cut $446,000 from its budget item for salaries and expenses—the expenses covering largely free medical care.

In a courageous and almost unprecedented effort, in which he was aided by Representative CHURCH (Mrs. MARGARET STITT CHURCH), of Illinois; Minority Leader RAYBURN, of Texas; Representative HAYS, of Arkansas; Representative BAILEY, of West Virginia, and others, Mr. POWELL was successful in persuading the committee to restore the $295,000 to Howard and the $446,000 to Freedmen's. It is one of the best services he has rendered during the five terms he has served in Congress. It points up impressively the value of able representation in the government when and where it is needed.

Howard Gives $82,000 To High School Grads

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Undergraduate scholarships totaling $82,000 have been awarded to high school graduates who will enter Howard university as freshmen in September, 1953, Otto McClarrin, director of public relations at Howard, announced last week.

The scholarships, which were awarded on the basis of scores made on the university's national competitive scholarship examination, will go to 46 students from 16 states and the District of Columbia. The examinations were conducted earlier this year by a team of eight Howard University staff members who tested some 1935 students representing 226 high schools in 32 states and the district of Columbia.

The national competitive scholarship examination, which was inaugurated at Howard in 1941, is one of the features of the university's extensive precollege guidance and recruitment program.

According to Dr. Armour J. Blackburn, dean of students at Howard, the examination program makes it possible for the university to locate and provide financial assistance to outstanding high school graduates who wish to attend Howard.

Dr. Blackburn pointed out that the number of students receiving grants and the amount of financial aid being offered for the 1953-54 school year are far greater than in any year during the 12-year history of the program. He added, however, that the results of the examination showed that there are many students graduating from high schools today whose scores are sufficiently high to make them eligible for awards, but that the university's scholarship fund was inadequate to meet their financial need.

"The effort of friends and graduates of Howard university to meet this need in part through contributions has been encouraging," Dr. Blackburn said, "However, a far greater amount of money is needed if we are to assist the large number of students whose scores indicate that they are of exceptional caliber.'

The scholarship recipients will be eligible to enroll in any of the university's four undergraduate schools — the College of Liberal Arts, the School of Music, the College of Pharmacy, and the School of Engineering and architecture.

The state of Ohio, with seven scholarship recipients, will send the largest representation to Howard as a result of the examination. Six students will come from New York and four each from Maryland and Virginia. The District of Columbia, Illinois, Kentucky, Missouri, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania each had three winners; while one student was selected from each of the following states: Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Massachusetts, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Tennessee.

Ten scholarships valued at $1,000 per year, for four years, were awarded to the following students: LaBonnie A. Bianchi, Washington, D. C. (Dunbar high school); Joyce M. Green, Philadelphia; (Overbrook high school); Walter D. Greene, Chicago; (U. of Chicago high school); James E. Harris, Mount Vernon, N. Y. (Davis high school); Lucille T. Sayles of Buffalo, N. Y. (Fosdick-Masten high school; William M. Scott of Tampa, Fla. (Middleton high school); Barbara A. Stewart of Washington, D. C. (Dunbar high school); Irma C. Wright of 20 Irving Street, East Orange, N. J. (E. Orange high school); Norma G. Walker of 1134 N. Fulton Ave., Baltimore, Md. (Douglass high school); and Thomas V. Wright of Cinncinati, Ohio (Walnut Hills high school).

Recipients of $1,000 scholarships for one year included Barbara A. Brown of Clyde Street, Marshallton Del., (Howard high school); Frank A. DaCosta, Jr. of State college, Orangeburg, S. C. (Wilkinson high school); Ruth L. Fuller of Corona, L. I., N. Y. (Newton high school); Albert Huggins of Louisville, Ky. (Central high school); Louis C. Jones of Lexington, Ky. (Dunbar high school); Rodney N. Powell of Philadelphia, (Bartram high school); Luther H. Robinson of Cleveland, Ohio (Adams high school); James M. Schooler of Durham, N. C. (Hillside high school); Leonard S. Slaughter, of Montclair, N. J. (Montclair high school); and Thomas N. Walker of Cinncinati, Walnut Hills high school).

Thirteen students received scholarships worth $500 per year, for four years. They are Tony Adona of Salisbury, Md. (Salisbury high school); Arlene A. Berry of Youngstown, Ohio (East high school); Yvonne F. Brown of Chicago, (Fenger high school); Bessie J. Chapman of Macon, Ga., (Ballard-Hudson high school); Miriam E. Costner of Falls Church, Va. (Dunbar high school); Herbert Crippen of Absecon, N. J. (Pleasantville high school); Shirley Hampton of Philadelphia; (Bartram high school); Michel A. W. Kildare of Boston. (Technical high school); Stewart Moss of Cleveland, Ohio (E. Tech high school); and Henry Thornton of Louisville, Ky. (Central high school)

Winners of $500 scholarships for one year were Robert Baldwin of Memphis, (Melrose high school); Frances D. Bates of Chicago, Ill. (Englewood high school); Johnny M. Brooks of Baltimore, Md. (Dunbar high school); Delores Grisham of Toledo, Ohio (Scott high school); James A. Hayes of Norfolk, Va. (Washington high school); Areathea McGarrah of Buffalo, N. Y. (Fosdick-Masten high school); Elizabeth L. Mitchell of Washington, D. C. (Dunbar high school); Richard H. Smith of Box 20 Lothian, Md. (Bates high school); and Edward Taylor of Brooklyn, N. Y. (Music and Art high school).

Three students who will complete their high school work in January, 1954 have been awarded second-semester scholarships at Howard. A $500 award goes to Henry T. Smith of Portsmouth Va. (Norcum high school. Grants of $250 go to Constance Pryor of 2604 Euclid Street, St. Louis, Mo. (Sumner high school) and Peggy A. Thomas of 4597 Evans Street, St. Louis, Mo. (Sumner high school).

Howard Profs. Knighted In Panama City

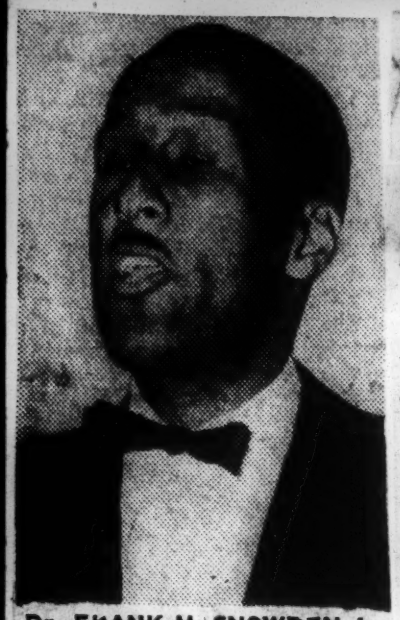
PANAMA CITY, RP. — This country lavished honors on five North Americans last week, with Howard University of Washington D. C. coming in for the lion's share.

Lt. General Kiel, retiring commander of the Caribbean Air Force, and Commander Koepke, retiring commandant of the Coco Solo, Canal Zone Naval Base were awarded the Vasco Nunez de Balboa medals with the rank of commanders.

The three civilians for whom the decorations were ordered, according to a decree issued last week, are all from Howard university. Each was distinguished with membership in the Panamanian Order of Vasco Nunez de Balboa in the grade of knight.

Dr. Mordecai Johnson, President of Howard university and two staff — Dr. V. B. Spratlin and Dr. Gustav Auzenne, jr., — were the famed educators honored by the Government of Panama.

Dr. Spratlin is head of the Department of Romance Languages; and Dr. Auzenne, chairman of the Department of Business Administration.



Dr. FRANK M. SNOWDEN Jr.

Snowden Ends Foreign Tour

WASHINGTON

Dr. Frank M. Snowden Jr., professor of classics and director of the summer school at Howard university, has returned to Washington following a four-month tour of Africa and southern Europe.

The tour, which was sponsored by the International Information Administration of the U.S. Department of State, covered some 26,000 miles.

Among the countries visited by Dr. Snowden were Dakar, Gold Coast, Nigeria, Tripoli, Italy, Greece, and Austria. The Howard professor delivered about 80 lectures, several were delivered in French and Italian.

Harvard Graduate

Dr. Snowden, who lives at 1227 Girard st., ne, is a three-time graduate of Harvard university. He received his bachelor of arts degree at Harvard in 1932, his master of arts degree in 1933, and his doctor of philosophy degree in 1944. He has been a member of the college of liberal arts faculty at Howard since 1940.

Howard University Gets Budget Following Fight

WASHINGTON — Tentative restorations of $354,000 and $295,000 were made in the budgets of Howard University and Freedman's Hospital last week following a floor fight in the House of Representatives led by Congressman Adam Clayton Powell (D., N.Y.).

Among those supporting Powell was Congressman Melvin Price (D., Ill.), who decried the action of the appropriations committee in cutting the two budgets so drastically.

Powell charged the committee with flagrant discrimination declaring "This bill is discrimination at its worst. It is anti-democratic, anti-education, anti-public health, anti-Negro, anti-President Eisenhower, anti-Mrs. Hobby and anti-common sense."

Price said, "There is no justification for the committee's action in cutting the appropriations for Freedmen's Hospital and for Howard University, just as there was no justification for President Eisenhower's new Budget Director to reduce the figures which the administration of President Truman proposed as a minimum on which these two fine institutions could be operated in the next fiscal year . . ."

Powell reminded the committee that President Eisenhower had recommended the committee allow funds for a new boiler at Howard. On the same day, two men died in a tunnel on Howard's campus as a result of substandard pipes.

An amendment offered by Congresswoman Marguerite Stitt Church of Illinois, was finally passed by a vote of 82 to 70. Later an amendment was adopted to increase the funds for Freedman's Hospital and to delete provisions requiring advance arrangements before admission of non-resident patients of the District of Columbia.

WE ARE pleased to see the great interest that Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby, secretary of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, has taken in Howard University and Freedman's Hospital in Washington, D. C.

In order to insure that these two institutions and three others of somewhat similar character are not neglected, she has added to her staff a special consultant, to see that they get the needed money and materials to improve their services to the people.

Naturally Negroes are most interested in Howard and Freedman's, not only for their traditions and past services, but for what they are doing today, and for the larger tasks they have before them.

Mrs. Hobby has not only visited these institutions but has worked out plans to facilitate their administration and expansion.

She needs the strong backing of the nation's colored community to see that Congress does not fall down on passing the needed funds for Howard and Freedman's growth.

Eighty-seven Years Young

NOV. 20 marked the eighty-seventh anniversary of the founding of Howard University in Washington, D. C., the famous institution of higher learning having been launched on that date in 1866.

Not only is it the leading institution of higher education for Negroes in this country but in any other country.

Nowhere else on the globe has any Government spent so much over so long a period of years on the university training of the youth of a minority group.

Of course, strictly speaking, Howard University is not absolutely restricted to Negro students, but the overwhelming majority of its student body always has consisted of colored men and women.

There is a temptation to refer to Howard as being eighty-seven years old, but it is more accurate to say that it is eighty-seven years young, because of the vigor and vision with which it has been administered.

It is truly the capstone of Negro education; but what is more, it has demonstrated the quality of the Negro genius by becoming one of the world's great institutions of learning.

That the importance of this university is generally recognized is indicated by the progressively increasing sums which successive Administrations have voted for its support and expansion.

House Committee Cut Funds When Enrollment Went Down

14 ed(1)

(NNPA)
WASHINGTON

The Federal Budget for the fiscal year beginning July 1, next, sent to Congress by President Truman Wednesday, carried a Federal contribution of $2,750,000 toward the total budget of $5,167,764 for Howard University.

The estimate of $2,750,000 in funds to be appropriated represents an increase of $75,000 as compared with the appropriation for the current fiscal year. The principal increases are proposed for (1) repairs to the boilers in the heat, light and power plant which serves the university and Freedmen's Hospital, and (2) installation of wiring equipment and transformer vaults for conversion of electric current furnished Freedmen's Hospital.

The estimate for salaries and expenses for the university in the next fiscal year is $2,750,000, as compared with an appropriation of $2,675,000 for the current fiscal year.

President Made Plea

Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, president of Howard University, a year ago pleaded with the House Appropriations Committee not to cut the 1953 estimate of $2,890,000 for salaries and expenses so as not to force a reduction in the teaching staff. He said the university was understaffed both in the number of full-time teachers and in the number and ratio of full-time teachers of mature professional caliber.

The committee, however, cut the item for salaries and expenses by $134,000 on the basis of reduction in enrollment.

The enrollment of the university in the autumn, 1950, quarter was 4,172. In the autumn of 1951, it was 3,838, a decrease of 334 students. But in the second quarter of the 1950-51 school year it was 3,786 as compared with 3,522 in the second quarter of 1951-52.

List Full-time Students

The Federal Budget discloses that during the school year 1951-52, an equivalent of 3,440 full-time students attended the university. Full-time equivalent enrollments for 1952-53 and 1953-54 are estimated at 3,140.

The Budget also recommends an appropriation of $55,000 for the preparation of plans and specifications for (1) construction, under the superivision of the General Services Administration, on the campus of the university of a preclinical medical building, and (2) extension of utilities, including engineer and architectural services.

The sum of $60,000 was requested for plans and specifications in the fiscal year 1953, but Congress appropriated only $30,000 for this purpose.

Of thirteen projects authorized, plans for ten have been completed. The three remaining projects to be completed are the auditorium - fine arts building, men's dormitory, and preclinical medical building.

The plans and specifications for these are scheduled as follows: The auditorium - fine arts building to be completed by July, the men's dormitory by November, and the preclinical medical building by March, 1954.

The budget estimate provides funds to complete plans for the preclinical medical building. In addition, it includes funds for advanced planning of utilities services, which are necessary to the program of construction now authorized.

$170,000 For Construction

For construction of buildings, the budget recommends an appropriation of $170,000 as compared with an appropriation for the current fiscal year of $280,221. The item of $170,000 is for alteration and improvement of the power plant facilities.

Appropriated funds or contract authorizations have been made available for nine buildings and two alteration projects.

Of the nine building projects, two have been completed (engineering building and women's dormitory), and one (dental building) is under construction with completion due by March, 1954. Of the remaining building four are due to start this March. These are the pharmacy building, administration building, law school, and biology-greenhouse.

Power Plant Installed

Of the two alteration projects one, the power plant installation, is completed, and the other, alterations to science hall, is due to start in July.

The budget estimate includes $20,000 for a vacuum pump in the present steam distribution system serving Freedmen's Hospital as well as the university plant, and $150,000 for a turbo-generator to meet electrical power requirements.

The budget also includes $1,900,000 to liquidate obligations to be made for the law school and administration buildings. If Congress appropriates this sum, this will leave $3,970,827 in unfinanced contract authorization.

GRANTS BY RUNYON FUND

14 Totaling $113,000 Are Made for Cancer Research

Dec. 2-7-53

Fourteen grants totaling $113,600 have been made by the Damon Runyon Memorial Fund for Cancer Research, Inc., to medical institutions and to six universities over the country, Dan Parker, president of the fund, announced yesterday. Two of the grants were made to institutions in this city.

Harlem Hospital received $15,000 to support the Harlem Hospital Research Foundation for the fourth year. The Strang Cancer Prevention Clinic at Memorial Center got $13,000. Other recipients include: Howard University College of Medicine, Washington, $5,400; Stanford University School of Medicine, San Francisco, $9,700; University of Kansas Medical Center, Kansas City, Kan., $10,000; University of Chicago, $12,000.

Charges Revealed Against Jackson

CIAA Code Violation Said Among Causes For Dismissal

WASHINGTON

Legal action loomed following the Howard University Board of Trustees decision, Tuesday upholding the dismissal of Edward L. Jackson, former coach and head of the department of physical education for men.

Harry Wender, after conferring with George A. Parker and Barrington D. Parker, attorneys who are associated with him in the case, said Wednesday they have recommended that the ousted coach take the case to court. They will ask the court to direct the university to grant him a hearing before the board of trustees.

Afro-American.

Neither the dismissed coach nor his attorneys were permitted to enter the six and a half-hour conference held by the board of trustees, beginning at 8 p.m., Monday, and ending at 1:30 am., on Tuesday, Jan. 27, Mr. Wender said.

P. 17

Trustees Listed

The members of the board of trustees which upheld the dismissal of the coach according to the statement included Archie Alexander, Miss Pearl Buck, James B. Carey, Eleanor Roosevelt, Fabune E. Defrantz, Dorothy Fosdick, Charles H. Garvin, Dr. Richard W. Hale Jr., George E.C. Hayes, attorney; Dr. Guy B. Johnson, Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, Lorimer D. Milton, chairman of the board; Dr. James W. Parker Sr., Judge Myles A. Paige, Mrs. Juanita Howard Thomas and Dr. P. Bernard Young.

For the first time, specific charges though not clarified at length, were revealed against the dismissed coach. The charges, leading to his firing the board said, were:

Pittsburgh Courier
Dec. 2-7-53

"That by his own admission for a period of five years, he grossly violated the athletic code of Howard University, the athletic code of the CIAA, the rules and regulations governing the award of scholarship and student aid:

Charges Against Coach

"That in pursuit of these ends, he deliberately evaded the university regulations regarding the solicitation of funds, regarding the receipt and deposit of funds, regarding the expenditure of funds, and regarding the accounting of funds.

"That quite apart from the unlawful use of the funds in his hands in violation of the athletic code of the university and the associations of which the university was a member, his manner of handling these funds was a series of acts involving gross moral delinquency and conduct incompatible with the welfare of the university."

The university further charged that the violations by coach Jackson covered a period of five years, and that documentary evidence indicates a continuation of the violations up until the very day of his discharge on Dec. 1.

Jackson Defends Self

By the action of the board of trustees, Coach Jackson's pay ended as of midnight Jan. 30, 1953.

Defending himself against the charges made public by the university, the ousted coach, speaking from his home at 556 Varnum st., nw., said:

"I think the decision reached by the board of trustees was not in keeping with democratic procedures. I believe that in this country every individual is due a hearing, no matter what the charges are against him.

"It doesn't matter how fair a board thinks it is when it flatly refuses to hear an individual.

Knew Charges In 1950

"They knew about these charges two years ago, and didn't fire me then. I am unaware of what they are talking about when they accuse me of violation of the university regulations up to the time of my dismissal.

"Many of the things the officials have charged me with, the university is guilty also, particularly in reference to the CIAA and NCAA rules.

"There is part-time employment under my jurisdiction for students. This was approved by the university, and has been going on for years," he concluded.

Aided Some Students

Coach Jackson said that aid was provided by him to about eight or 10 students a year.

However, he said that aiding of athletes was known among the school's officials as far back as 1946. He had no connection with this aid, he said, yet the university failed to voice any opposition to the practice then.

Otto McClarrin, director of public relations and assistant to the President at Howard, said that the various divisions in the school employed students, but payment for their services was made through regular channels, that is the finance office.

Budget Set Up

He stated that a budget was set up for the expenditures which each office would incure, and the payments were handled through one central organization.

There is no arrangement on the campus whereby the university permits any individual to make payments ouside the regular channels.

In reference to future employment, Coach Jackson said that he has been in contact with several schools in and out of the CIAA. Most of the jobs have been offered are director of physical education since the coaching jobs for the most part are filled.

He wouldn't identify any one school which had made overtures to him, but it is no secret that Lincoln University and Morgan want him. There is a possibility that coach Jackson may return to Johnson C. Smith, or replace coach William Bell at A. and T. college since the latter is subject to a call to the service any time, according to a reliable source.—By FRED LEIGH.

H. U. President Unafraid Of Congressional Probe

WASHINGTON

Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, president of Howard University, declared Saturday that he has no fear of a possible Congressional investigation of his institution.

Recalling his long fight for academic freedom at the school, Dr. Johnson expressed the hope that the faculty would not be turned into a "group of frightened sheep" by the threat of an investigation.

The statements were made during the closing session of the four-day Conference on Academic Freedom held at Howard, under the sponsorship of the school's division of social sciences and chapter of the American Association of University Professors.

Asks Fairness

In making his announcement of his confidence in his faculty members, Dr. Johnson also pointed out that a large number of colored instructors were interested in groups which offered equality, and that they should not be condemned for their association.

Dr. Johnson also asked the government to confine the investigating committees to their original purposes and not allow them to destroy the reputation of innocent people.

During the previous three days of the conference, a number of distinguished educators, legislators and writers, had made a series of dramatic pleas for the continuation of academic freedom in the nation's schools.

Completed Conference

Saturday's session completed the conference as a declaration on the principles of academic freedom, prepared by Wallace W. Culver, Winston K. McAllister and Harold O. Lewis of the social science division, was adopted.

The declaration said in part:

"Most laymen view it (academic freedom) as the concern only of the professor and scholar, not realizing that this is a process which must be defended by every individual in the country if the democratic way of life is to be preserved.

"If academic freedom in its positive essence is abrogated or even partially abridged, then all our freedoms will disappear. All significant intellectual advances are made on the basis of the scientific approach, which means freedom of research, freedom of inquiry and the knowledge that truth is naver final, absolute.

Outlines Opinions

After outlining the various schools of thought on what constitutes academic freedom, the declaration says:

"The three schools . . are all definitely in agreement on one thing: fear and apprehension concerning some of the methods, tendencies and attitudes of certain members of Congress, and other individuals, and groups which, are currently making investigations into or bringing pressures against, the schools.

Save Funds For Howard, Freedman's

WASHINGTON— A floor fight led by Reps. Adam Clayton Powell, New York, and Marguerite Stitt Church and Purratt O'Hara, Illinois, restored $295,000 to the Howard University fund and $354,000 to the Freedmen's hospital budget in the House of Representatives last week.

The same day two university employes were killed by steam leaking from a substandard pipe in a university tunnel.

Mrs. Smith the next day introduced an amendment raising the university fund to $2,535,000. It passed 82 to 70.

National GRAPEVINE

Powell Strikes Victory Gong

Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D. N. Y.) struck the gong of victory right squarely on the nose during the recent House debate on appropriations for Howard university and Freedmen's hospital. The thing that did the trick was his warning to the Republican controlled congress that the Negro vote would put the Democrats back in control next year, if the House of Representatives agreed to cut the appropriations for Howard university by 54 percent and the budget for Freedmen's hospital by 18 percent.

This statement caused the economic minded GOP Representatives to begin putting their heads together and coming up with amendments to restore the funds to the two Negro institutions.

Floods of oratory began to pour in from both sides of the aisle when the New York Representative charged the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee with perpetrating "flagrant acts of discrimination" by proposing that the budget be cut for these important and necessary institutions.

"Our first line of defense is public health, our second line of defense is public education," argued Powell. "We are squandering money everywhere else if we do not provide enough for those two lines of defense first."

The real pay-off for the Democratic debate came with the calamity which took place at Howard university simultaneously with the Congressional argument.

They Gave Their Lives For The Cause

It was a sad coincidence when two faithful Howard university employees lost their lives in a tunnel on the campus due to a faulty steam pipe. Their charred bodies were brought from the tunnel, which housed steam and electric pipes, even while Congressman Powell was begging the Representatives to appropriate funds for a heating boiler and for a new turbogenerator to produce electric power. He had just informed his colleagues that failure to repair the boiler at the university would result in cancelling the insurance.

It was, without a doubt, this accident that caused the GOP law makers to lay aside for awhile their dollar theory and vote to restore the funds requested for Howard and Freedmen.

Medics Speak Their Piece

Just prior to House action on the appropriations for Freedmen's hospital, the Medico-Chirurgical Society of the District of Columbia sent a resolution to Congress and constituent health agencies asking for their assistance in the continuation of the established programs in health, education and welfare.

The resolution was unanimously adopted by the Society's Board of Governors representing the Executive Branch of the Society composed of 250 physicians.

The resolution severely protested the House Committee on Appropriations' action in drastically reducing the budgetary estimates of Freedmen's hospital and restricting the admission of needy patients requiring hospitalization and medical care.

Powell Wins Fight For Howard Funds

WASHINGTON

Rep. Adam Clayton Powell Jr. (D., N.Y.) won his fight here Friday to restore $354,000 cut from Freedmen's Hospital budget and $295,000 chopped from the Howard University fund.

Thursday, speaking in debate on the Labor, Health, Education and Welfare Department's Appropriation bill, Mr. Powell strongly attacked the cuts on the house floor.

"In my nine years in Congress," he stated, "I have not seen such an act of discrimination as that perpetrated by the Subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations in cutting the budget of Howard Universiy by 54 percent and the budget of Freedmen's Hospital by 18 per cent."

Hits Special Language

Mr. Powell aimed a special attack at restrictive language which would curtail the right of Freedmen's hospital to treat emergency patients, which are:

"Legal residents of areas outside the District of Columbia shall be given care and treatment only if arrangements are made in advance for such persons, or the government agency having full responsibility for such persons to reimburse Freedmen's Hospital in full for the cost of such care and treatment."

"Freedmen's is the only hospital said that treats colored people without any cost," Mr. Powell said. The rule proposed in the bill does not apply to any other hospital.

Would Have To Wait

"If I were hit by a car in front of the Capitol I would have to stay there until the State of New York arranged to pay the hospital," Powell charged.

The committee backed down and agreed to delete the language and finally to restore the funds requested by the Eisenhower administration.

In the budget for Howard, the house approved a total of $2,535,000 on an amendment proposed by Congresswoman Church (R., Ill.). The vote was 110 to 101.

Cites White Hospital

In his argument Powel charged the proposed cuts from the local colored institutions smacked of discrimination since St. Eizabeth's Hospital was reduced only 10 percent.

Mr. Powell was backed by former Speaker Sam Rayburn (D., Texas), Rep. Edna F. Kelly (D., N.Y.) and Rep. Chet Holifield (D., Calif..

In her argument Mrs. Church called attention to the tragedy Thursday at Howard in which two employees were scalded to death while making repairs on steam pipes and warned that the cut in funds would prevent further repairs in these same pipes.

Howard Elected Chief Justice

WASHINGTON

Charles P. Howard, jr., a second-year law student, has been elected chief justice of the court of Peers at the Howard University school of law.

The court of peers is the student governing body at the law school. It was organized in 1932 and its first Chief Justice was Thurgood Marshall, chief counsel for the legal department of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Mr. Howard, who, will serve as head of the organization during the 1953-54 school year, lives at 1136 W. 14th st., Des Moines, Iowa.

World War II Veteran

He is a veteran of World War II and a graduate of the college of liberal arts, at Howard. While an undergraduate, he studied in England and Finland under fellowships awarded by the American Friends Service Committee and the Experiment in International Living, Inc.

Active in the American Law School Association, Mr. Howard was recently elected executive vice-president of the 11th Juricial Circuit, which comprises the seven law schools in the District.

Immanuel College Ends 50 Years

Greensboro Lutheran School Completes 50 Years Of Service With June Finals

By CARRYE HILL KELLEY

GREENSBORO, N. C.—This year's commencement season at Immanuel Lutheran College of Greensboro, N. C., marked its half century of service to Lutheranism and to this city.

Neither the establishment nor the selection of a permanent location for the College was accidental. It was through the foresight of the Rev. Mr. Niels J. Bakke in charge of the Alpha Synod with headquarters in Concord, N. C. where the normal department was opened on March 2, 1903, that the location was changed.

GREENSBORO with its central location in the state, its healthful climate, its network of railways and its 20,000 inhabitants in 1903 seemed to Reverend Mr. Bakke the ideal location for the establishment of one of the Colleges originated to serve Negro Lutherans. The other, Alabama Lutheran College in Selma, Ala., was established in 1922.

Enjoying the financial support of the Evangelical Lutheran Synodical Conference of North America, the 50-year-old has fostered a thoroughgoing program for the training of youth rarely excelled by any other college in the state.

So far reaching was the vision of the founding fathers, that today, the school's philosophy is not only basically the same, but has required through the years only slight revisions to maintain its high standards.

IN THE YEARS when modern means of travel and communication were in their infancy, only men divinely endowed would undertake the training of Negro youth in an area still unsettled by the social upheaval caused by the Civil War.

Hence it was that three of the four original teachers were also the first administrators: Rev. Mr. N. J. Bakke, president; Rev. Mr. Lochner, secretay; Rev. Fred Wahlers, treasurer; and Rev. Henry Gross, teacher.

TODAY, THE COLLEGE operates a theological seminary, a coeducational junior college and normal department, and a high school.

The Theological Seminary is opened only to confirmed male members of the Lutheran Church, who are preparing for the office of the ministry in congregations affiliated with the Lutheran Synodical Conference.

However, the junior college, the normal department and the high school are all fully approved and accredited by the North Carolina Department of Education. The high school is also approved by the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. All of these departments are opened alike to Lutherans and non-Lutherans.

THROUGH ITS half century of development, the Institution has been led by the Reverend Mr. Bakke who served as president from 1903 to 1911, the Reverend Frederick Berg from 1911 to 1919; the Rev. John Phillip Smith from 1919 to 1925, and Dr. Henry Nau who served from 1925 to 1949 when he took one year's leave of absence to organize a missionary program among the Moslems of India.

After serving as acting president during Dr. Nau's absence in May, 1949, the Rev. William H. Kampschmidt, who had been resident professor since 1924, was elected president and was installed in the office in September, 1951.

"REGARDLESS OF the number of opportunities presented me in other fields of the Lutheran work, I believe the great one, to practice, to live and to train others in spiritual living is here at Immanuel Lutheran College," said President Kampschmidt.

HIGHLIGHTING THE commencement activities this year was the annual musical presented in the college chapel by the members of the college choir directed by Mrs. Geraldine Westerband.

On Sunday, May 31, the Rev. R. F. Jenkins, a 1933 graduate of the school's hteological department and pastor of the St. Andrews Evangelical Lutheran church or Charlotte, N. C., delivered the baccalaureate address to the graduates at the Grace-Lutheran Memorial church, Chicago, Ill.

Special services will be given this fall commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the college.

Three graduates of the theological seminary received their Bachelor of Divinity degrees; twelve junior college students was delivered June 1 by Dr. M. high school youths received di N. Carter, pastor of the Saint plomas. Phillips Lutheran Church of Chi-

JACKSON COLLEGE

HISTORY OF JACKSON COLLEGE

Dr. B. Baldwin Dansby, who served several terms as its president and is now a member of the faculty, has written a very interesting history of Jackson College, well known Negro educational institution in the Southwestern suburbs of Jackson, taken over several years ago since as a state-owned college.

Dr. Dansby writes with authority on the subject. He has known all presidents of the college since its founding by Dr. Charles Ayer. First location was at Natchez, where Dr. Ayer started the school on October 23rd, 1877. It was then known as Natchez Seminary and occupied a building that had been used as a hospital during the War Between the States, and then owned by the Federal government.

Dr. Ayer was a native of upstate New York, born in 1823, a man of culture, courage and determination. He came to Mississippi as a representative of the American Baptist Home Mission Society and his pioneering venture was financed by that organization.

Dr. Ayer served as head of the institution for seventeen years. He met with some opposition, of course, for the civil war fires were still smouldering, but the citizens of Natchez, generally speaking, were cooperative.

In 1883 it became evident the school was handicapped by its remote location and it was decided to move to Jackson. Arrangements were made for the purchase of the old Campbell mansion and 52 acres of land in the northern suburbs of Jackson. The price paid was ridiculous — only $5,000. The property, incidentaly, is now the campus of Millsaps College.

In 1894 President Ayer retired and his position was taken over by Rev. Luther G. Barrett who is still fondly remembered by the older generation in Jackson. Dr. Barrett was a native of Massachusetts, a B. A. graduate of Harvard and it was during the early part of his administration that it was decided to move the institution to the southwestern suburbs. The Campbell property site was sold to Maj. R. W. Millsaps, for $40,000 and donated by him to the Methodist church as the site for Millsaps College.

Although supported by the American Baptist Missionary Society in the best manner its meagre means would permit, Jackson College had a hard struggle throughout its career, and the group of buildings purchased and turned over to the state a few years ago represented much sacrifice by the Negro citizens of Mississippi.

Dr. Dansby's facile pen has produced a story replete with interest. It covers the early history of the college and also the administrations of all its Presidents, including his own. Men who served as Presidents were Dr. Charles Sker, Dr. Luther Barrett, Dr. Z. T. Hubert, Dr. B. Baldwin Dansby, and the present head, Dr. Jacob L. Reddix.

Jackson College has been in existence 75 years. During that period it has been a good citizen of Jackson and has accomplished much for the spread of culture and education among the young people of the colored race. It has furnished many preachers, teachers and community leaders. Dr. Dansby no doubt labored many months carefully compiling the material used in the book and putting it in proper form. The author can truthfully say concerning the upbuilding of the college, "much of which I saw," "part of which I was," for he has consecrated his entire life to the college. He is the founder and first editor of The Mississippi Educational Journal, a monthly magazine now serving 6,000 Negro teachers in the school rooms of Misaissippi. Born during the reconstruction period in a home where means were meagre, he battled hard to obtain an education, and the citizens of Jackson, both white and colored, have always held him in the highest esteem.

Students Strike At Kentucky State

450 Out Of 463 Take Part In Class Walkout

By ALICE A. DUNNIGAN

FRANKFORT, Ky. (ANP)—The student body at Kentucky State college staged a half-day "walkout" last week protesting the dismissal of a fellow student for disciplinary reasons.

Elvin Eady, 22, freshman of Springfield, Mass., was expelled by President Rufus B. Atwood upon recommendation of two faculty members of the discipline committee without considering the vote of the one student member of the committee.

Approximately 450 students, out of a total enrollment of 463, participated in the strike, refusing to attend all classes Monday between 8 a.m. and 12 noon.

The incident started, according to President Atwood, when a pay-station telephone was taken from the wall and robbed at McCullin hall, the junior and senior boys' domitory, several weeks ago necessitating an investigation by state police.

Later a pay-station phone was torn from the wall and change taken at Atwood hall, the freshmen and sophomore boys' dormitory, and state police were again called in.

Two Confess

Next, three coin - operated washing machines were robbed. Then Robert L. Reed, a freshman from Horse Cave, Ky., reported a portable typewriter being taken from his room.

After a thorough investigation two detectives succeeded in obtaining a signed admission from Edgar Powell, 18, Baltimore, and James R. Pritchett, 19 of Greenville both freshmen. The boys were released on $1,000 bonds awaiting hearings before Franklin County Judge John D. Dalhell.

Eady came into the picture when Powell claimed that he split 60 cents taken from the washing machine with him.

Denying that he had anything to do with the robbery, Eady said he dropped a dime into the washing machine for use. When it failed to operate, he struck the machine several times in hope of retrieving his dime and 60 cents dropped to the floor. He said he picked up the change and divided it with Powell.

Rebuilding Finished

Kittrell College Reopening Set For September 14

By ALMA A. POLK

KITTRELL COLLEGE, N. C.—Workmen have written "finis" to the major $100,000 rebuilding program at Kittrell College and the school is expected to open on Monday, Sept. 14, with the largest student body enrollment in years, according to an announcement made by the Rt. Rev. L. H. Hemmingway, Bishop of the Second Episcopal District of the AME Church.

In addressing nearly 800 laymen, ministers, missionary women and young people who attended the recent District Retreat at the college, the Bishop said:

"I closed the college because it was in a dilapidated condition. The buildings were crumbling; the roads leading to the college were mud and dirt, and the water situation was unbearable.

"You not only have modern buildings, with new furnishings valued at more than $25,000, but you have a new $7,000 heating plant in the Hemingway Hotel; $3,600 in linens, an improved water supply and a swimming pool."

THE BISHOP stressed that all the improvements made had been accomplished on a pay-as-you-go basis.

"Even the campus has been landscaped," Bishop Hemingway said.

THE MISSIONARY Retreat, under the capable direction of Mrs. Catherine C. Hemingway, supervisor of the district, was the first one held in the history of the district.

General theme was: "Working Toward Missionary Goals."

Mrs. Gladys Wisner, district president and wife of Mr. Wisner, president of Kittrell College, and Mrs. Dorothy Swann, youth director of the district, were in charge of the missionary and youth programs.

Program participants included Mmes. Fredericka Hilderbrand, Inez B. Bowyer, Edith Bryant, Mary Gantt, Lucille E. Dale, Roxy Arnold, Rebecca Glover, Frances Enzlow, A. L. Burgin, Georgia Mitchell, I. F. Davis, Anne Mitchell, Irene Johnson, Mary V. Brawner, Rebecca Glover, Ella Price, W. L. Hinsley, Lillie Gruman, Pearl Burley and Mrs. Hattie Young.

Youth participants included Miss Wyona Mitchell, Miss Gloria Ford, Miss Ruth Cooper and Miss Mayme Tilghman.

ONE OF THE high spots of the Missionary Retreat was the Sacrifical Tea Wednesday afternoon.

The opening message was delivered by Bishop Frank Madison Reid of the Seventh Episcopal District; and the closing sermon on Friday was delivered by Bishop D. Ward Nichols of the First Episcopal District.

The Rev. J. Haskell Mayo, pastor of Ward Memorial AME Church, Washington, D. C., and Mrs. Alma A. Polk, connectional director of the YPD of the Women's Missionary Society of the AME Church, spoke on Thursday night.

Ministers who had charge of the seminar were the Rev. H. J. Bryant and the Rev. S. Dewey Robinson. The ministerial roundup was in charge of Dr. C. L. Stephens, presiding elder of the Wilmington District.

Younger ministers of the district who assisted were the Revs. Leroy W. Walker, pastor of Embry AME Church, Lakeland, Md.; M. Arthur Camper, pastor of Ebenezer AME Church, Roanoke, Va.; Luther F. McNair, pastor of St. James AME Church, Kinston, N. C.; L. T. Woolfolk, Oak Grove AME Church, Portsmouth, Va., and the Rev. Samuel A. Beard, pastor of Allen AME Church, Staunton, Va.

Attending the conference from Washington, D. C., were Mmes. Emma Humphries, Leona Harris and I. A. Miller; from North Carolina, we spotted Mmes. Sadie B. Hooper, B. E. Leonard, E. C. Scott, Rovenia Wilkins, Beatrice Smith, Mary Shepherd, Lucille Cook and Goldie Hargett;

From Baltimore and other parts of the district were Mmes. Emma V. Ford, Ruby M. Powell, J. Ruth Reid, Bertha Caldwell, A. L. Burgin, Irene Johnson, Celeste Duckette and Mrs. W. K. Greene, one of the conference branch youth directors. Mrs. Clara Harris, one of the officials of the Women's Missionary Society, and Mrs. Rachael Valentine, assisted Mrs. Hemingway.

78-Year-Old Institution Headed by Dr. James A. Colston

Students From 22 States at Knoxville College

KNOXVILLE, Tenn.—Nestled at the foot of the Great Smoky Mountains is the proud city of Knoxville, and one of her proudest possessions is Knoxville College, the 78-year-old institutions that boasts of students from twenty-two states and several foreign countries. Courier

In addition to an excellent educational program with an "A" rating by the Tennessee State Department of Education, Knoxville College also maintains fine interracial relations in the city and with the University of Tennessee.

One-third of the faculty at Knoxville is white, and there is absolutely no friction because of this, according to Dr. James A. Colston, president of the college. Integration under Negro leadership is accepted by the Knoxville community. Students from Knoxville and Tennessee meet regularly to exchange ideas in all phases of college and civic life.

KNOXVILLE COLLEGE is operated under the auspices of the Board of Missions of the United Presbyterian Church of North America. P. 12

Today, Knoxville College reports the highest registration in its history. President Colston explains, "The veteran returning from the war looks to schools with lower tuitions. Knoxville maintains a low fee for young people who need it most. We like to call it high-quality education at low cost."

While Knoxville is outstanding for its music school, the college also rates high in teaching medicine, law, chemistry, plus being understandably proud of its liberal arts program.

Among the many buildings on the Knoxville campus are the Administration Building, Pressnell Chapel, Carnegie Library, Science Hall, Griffen-Alumni Memorial Gymnasium, Elnathan Hall, Wallace Hall, McCulloch Hall and the newly completed Young Memorial Fine Arts Building, all well equipped. The Knoxville Bulldogs football squad is the athletic pride of the school. The Aurora is the student publication, issued six times a year. Then there is the vaunted KC band.

Staff members of the college include Dr. James A. Colston, president; David K. Cherry, dean of the college; Herbert H. Gunn, business manager; Frances E. Clark, registrar; Rea Whetstone, librarian; Paul L. Redden, dean of men; Mozelle Robinson, dean of women; Jonas E. Bender, public relations director; Newell C. Fitzpatrick, director of music, and Julian Ball, director of athletics. Pittsburgh Courier Oct. 31-53

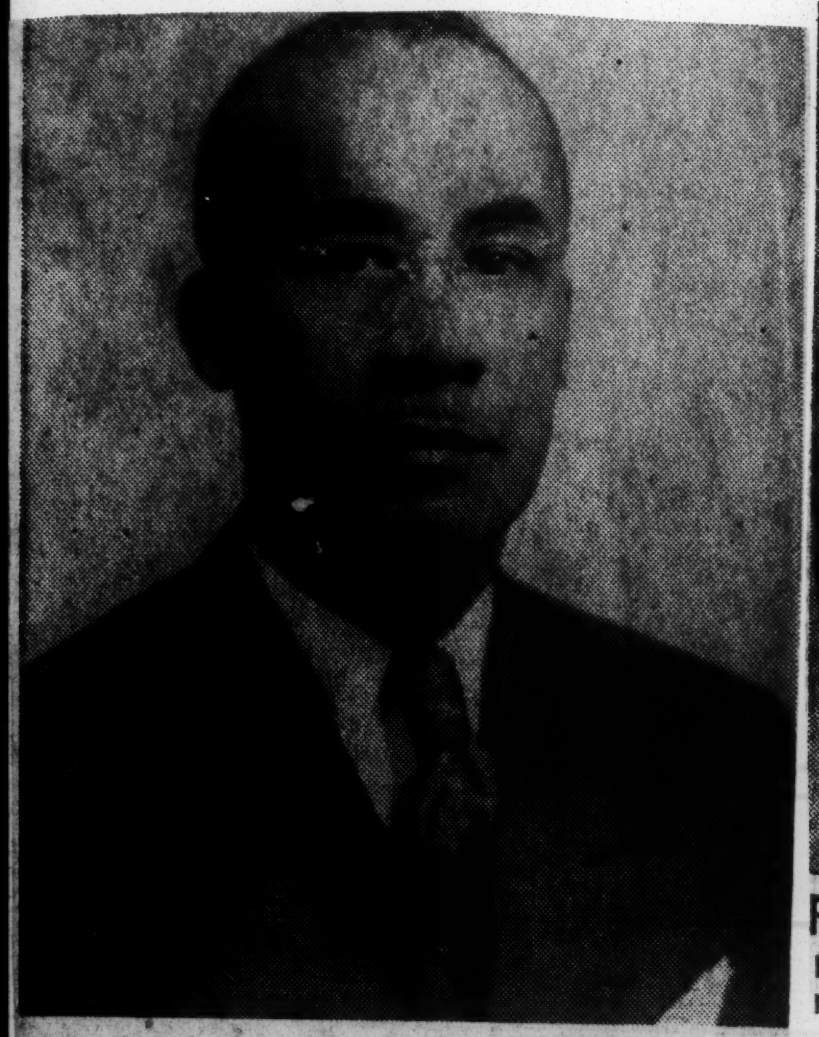
The annual Homecoming brings graduates from all over the country to the campus where they renew memories of college life. Many outstanding men and women "come back home" for a bit of fun and frolic and to rehash the d... events of long ago and to sing the college hymn:

Close to our hearts, dear old KC,
Shall ever by thy memory.
We love thy dear old halls.
We love thy trees and verdant hills,
Thy deep-toned bells who music thrills,
Thy consecrated walls.

For Fine Arts— This structure on Knoxville College's campus is the Young Memorial Fine Arts Building, which includes an auditorium, practice rooms for piano and bands, plus a lounge and kitchentette.

Heart of KC— The Administration Building at Knoxville College houses classrooms, all administrative offices and a chapel seating 300 persons.

Faculty Building— This building contains apartments for married members of Knoxville College's faculty and single rooms for unmarried members.



President— James A. Colston is in his third year as president of Knoxville College at Knoxville, Tenn. Enrollment for the 1953-54 school year is at an all-time high for KC, now in its seventy-ninth year.

Royalty— "Miss KC" (Lula Price, Lockland, Ohio) and her attendants, Aldorothy Lewis, left, Knoxville, and Bertha Ousley, Gadsden, Ala., made a pretty picture for homecoming ceremonies.

'Miss KC' Crowned— William Johnson of Pittsburgh, Pa., president of KC Student Council, crowns Lula Price of Lockland, Ohio, as "Miss KC" at Knoxville College homecoming. LAND GRANT COLLEGES

Segregated Land Grant Schools Get Less Funds

By LOUIS LAUTIER
For the NNPA News Service

If there were any doubt about the inequality of educational opportunity for colored and white students in segregated institutions, comparative income of land-grant institutions for colored and white students would completely dispel that doubt.

The land-grant colleges and schools which received U.S. aid under the Morrill (land grant) Acts of 1862 and 1890. They are so called because the original law granted public lands to each state for the support of at least one college teaching such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and mechanic arts.

There are a total of 69 land-grant institutions in the continental United States, Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico. Of that number, 35 admit both white and colored students. The segregated land-grant colleges are in the southern states.

Funds Received in '51

The 52 predominantly white land-grant colleges received a total of $5,030,000 in federal funds for instruction and facilities for instruction in the fiscal year 1951, the latest available figures, as compared with a total of $478,822 received by the 17 colored land-grant colleges.

While the amount received by the white land-grant colleges represented only 1.54 percent of the total amount they spent for administration and general expenses, resident instruction, libraries, and plant operation and maintenance, the amount received by the colored land-grant colleges represented 3.03 percent of what they expended for such purposes.

This means that the states are appropriating less proportionately for the education of colored students in colored land-grant institutions, although, theoretically, the per capital cost should be higher in the colored land-grant colleges because of smaller enrollments.

LAND GRANT COLLEGE PRESIDENTS DROP ALL FORMS OF GRADUATE TRAINING IN ALL-NEGRO SCHOOLS

Lack of Instructional Equipment Cited As Reason Load Should Be Shifted to White Schools

VIRGINIA PRESIDENT HEADS ORGANIZATION

(By Alice A. Dunnigan)

WASHINGTON — (ANP) — Negro Land Grant College presidents, meeting in a three-day conference here last week, directed their attention to the great need for a more effective program in the field of engineering and technical education and asked that the Negro designation assigned by the U. S. office of education be dropped.

Realizing that technical education is a relatively new field for Negro students, and that the installment of sufficient equipment for training in engineering is rather expensive, the college presidents concluded that it would be more practical to encourage Negro students to seek such training in white universities than to try to maintain adequate facilities in their own institutions.

They, therefore, went on record as agreeing that the institutions wouldn't encourage the establishment, development and expansion of programs in engineering education unless circumstances indicate that these institutions would be assured adequate physical facilities, equipment and proper qualified teachers for the training.

It was suggested, however, that the Land Grant colleges should adopt courses in pre-engineering to give their students a sound r colleges re-evaluate their chnical education programs for e purpose of clearly differentiat- g any curricula which may be fered for craftsmen, or technicians, or engineers; and that ear differentials be indicated for rograms in industrial education, dustrial arts, mechanic arts, rades and industries, and engineering."

The conference also urged the ffice of education to drop the ymbol used in its directory opposite the name of their schools o indicate that they are "attended predominantly by Negroes."

There is no useful purpose for uch distinction now, the resolution stated, due to the rapidly hanging social pattern in education throughout the country.

The conference further expressed a renewed interest in the problem of illiteracy. It recognized the fact that 10,000,000 adults in the nation are still unctionally illiterate in spite of he attack which has been made on this problem by various agencies and institutions.

In view of this situation, the presidents adopted a resolution stating that the member institutions appraise their faculty, students and clientele of the magnitude and seriousness of the problem and request hearings during he next session of congress on he literacy education bills.

It was further agreed that the conference reactivate its special committee concerned with this problem and authorize it to work out a specific program of action for the colleges and conferences, and to promote cooperative arrangements with national state and local agencies concerned with the program.

Dr. R. P. Daniels, president of Virginia State college was elected president of the conference; Pres. B. C. Turner of South Carolina State college, vice president; Pres. R. B. Atwood of Kentucky State college, secretary; Pres. C. V. Troup of Fort Valley State college, assistant secretary; Pres. F. G. Clark of Southern university, Baton Rouge, La., treasurer.

New member elected to the executive committee was Dr. R. E. Clement, president of Atlanta university and outgoing president of the conference. Members reelected were G. L. Harrison of Langston university, Oklahoma, and S. D. Scruggs of Lincoln university in Missouri.

LANGSTON UNIVERSITY

Is Negro Youth Prepared For Freedom?

Langston university students last Wednesday did not take too kindly to the idea they were not ready for integration, and slammed some very pertinent questions at this writer during the course of a seminar last Wednesday afternoon.

During the course of an address in the auditorium Wednesday morning, we told the students we were not afraid of the opportunities that were going to present themselves to Negro youth in the immediate years ahead, but we were afraid Negro youth was not prepared for these opportunities.

While at dinner awaiting the seminar, the students quite evidently decided we had told them in so many words they were not ready for integration because of latent deficiencies, so when the seminar hour arrived they had blood in their eyes.

"I don't think I said it just as you are putting it," we told one spirited questioner when he insisted we had said Negro students were not ready for integration. "But in order that we can explore fully the objection you have to such indictment, let me spell out the charge in just that language. I'll take the position the average Negro student is not yet ready to enter the field of integration and mingle on a plane of equality with white youth. I'll illustrate what I am talking about.

"If you and these other students were enslaved and the courts and the NAACP freed you and you immediately elected to jump back into slavery, would you feel you were ready for integration?" we asked the student.

"Well, here's a case in point. A young Negro girl when she landed down at the University of Oklahoma and had looked around, surveyed the various campus organizations recognized by the school, and then after thinking the matter over fully, she went to university authorities and sought to have an all-Negro sorority recognized. Still another group, when a big name colored orchestra came to the university, immediately sought an opportunity to sit and look and hear the orchestra. They were omitting the right to dance because they were Negroes, but wanted the limited opportunity to do everything else other than the central purpose of the affair.

"Is there anyone here who believes this Negro girl who went to the university campus, where she was absolutely free, and who decided she wanted to voluntarily organize a jim crow sorority, was ready for integration, and do you assume the girls and boys who thought they were entitled to a limited rather than a full right to participate at a dance had caught complete vision of freedom?"

We then gave the students another picture relating to the inhibitions they suffer because of the cramped atmosphere in which they have lived all their lives. We told them of a white girl in the Oklahoma university cafeteria who came over to a Negro girl seated at another table and asked for a match. The Negro girl supplied the match and the white girl then offered her a cigarette, which the Negro girl accepted. The coffee the two girls had ordered arrived and the white girl sat down with the colored girl, and as the conversation warmed up the white girl said:

"You're the first one of the colored students I've had an opportunity to talk to. For the past two months you students have been down here I have tried my level best to pick up an acquaintanceship, but apparently every one of them have run away from me whenever I sought conversation with them."

Now there are thousands of white people desirous of forming more friendly relationship with blacks, but what are they to think when they make advances and observe such apparent anti-social attitudes among the mass of Negroes. It is admitted a few Negroes meet the challenge, but do you think the many Negro students at the University of Oklahoma, who are aptly described by this white girl who is developing sisterhood are ready for integration when they physically and spiritually flee from the friendly approach of white youth?

We have ridden on trains all over the nation and observed the conduct of the average Negro traveler. A white person is not going to walk up to a train seat where a Negro rides without making inquiry respecting the vacant seat. Most invariably he questions, "Is this seat taken?" before he sits down.

And most invariably the Negro in the seat immediately takes lockjaw. He seldom ever speaks. He just looks up and shakes his head, and as the white traveler sits down, the black man turns his back and looks out the train window for the next 500 miles. We doubt seriously the Negro, who is so full of prejudice or fear he overlooks the valuable opportunity to expose his personality and intelligence during train travel, is entirely ready for integration, and surely those who still insist they are more comfortable in the jim crow coach, are not contributing in thinking or action to a program of equality. No Negro who in anywise clings to virtues he still assumes to find in jim crow is completely ready for integration.

In order the youth at Langston could readily see what we were talking about, we told them during the seminar this story of the goldfish we heard a long time ago. It runs like this:

There was once a family who had a goldfish in the living room almost as old as the children in the home. They had arrived at the conclusion the goldfish had about reached the end of the trail and was soon going to die. A family counsel was held and decision reached as to the appropriate thing to do for the family pet in his last hours. One member of the family decided since the home of the goldfish was in the ocean that it would be ideal to let the goldfish die at home, and the suggestion seemed to strike a sentimental chord in the hearts of the entire brood.

On a certain day the father secured a motor boat and with the goldfish in his traditional jar the family, living as they did near the coast, sped out into the ocean some ten miles for the last ceremonies. Solemnly the father lifted up the bowl at the appropriate moment, and as his family looked on he deposited the goldfish in the ocean.

Much, however, to their astonishment, the goldfish, as they looked on, offered an unusual example of what happens to people in life. As the family gazed down at their darling they noted despite the fact the goldfish was now in water a thousand fathoms deep and a thousand leagues across, the goldfish was, before their very eyes, executing only a little of such observation will be to destroy in white and black the cramped circle he had for years patterned in the jar.

Suddenly they discovered their goldfish had been in the little jar too long. Distance, depth, breadth and height meant nothing to him. He was blinded to freedom, victimized by the environment in which he had lived practically all of his days.

Now that is a clear and true picture of the Negro today as he is cast in the sea of integration. The elderly unit of white the race, even in the environment of freedom will perhaps die executing the same little circumscribed circle in which they, like the goldfish have been confined all of their days. But this younger generation, the boys and girls who are at the University of Oklahoma and the A. & M. college: they may not know in the moment what to do in the society of freedom. But one learns to do by doing. Just a few short months in an integrated atmosphere and the young Negroes are going to make some shocking and astonishing discoveries. Their first discoveries will be revealed in the total abolition of the myth of color. Side by side with white youth in the classroom with whites they will learn that some whites are dumb just as some blacks are dumb. Some are mentally alert just as some blacks are mentally alert. The sum total of such observation will be to destroy in white and black the theory of white supremance. This will be good for both groups.

There was just one other viewpoint regarding which the students at Langston seemed to be a bit confused following the morning talk. In discussing the lags thrust into the Negro course of education here in the Southland, some of the students seemed inclined to assume this writer feels the teachers are superior to Negro teachers. There is in our observation or experience which leads us to any such conclusion. The Negro student is finally the teacher and we would have first to assume the Negro is lacking in mentality, understanding and vision to the Negro teacher is inferior to the white.

The fact is, so far as the letter is concerned, the Negro is better trained than the whites. Governor Murray, when he recently was endeavoring to frighten Negro teachers, supplied this information to us, and the superintendent of schools in North Carolina told this writer the same thing some ten years ago.

What we intended to convey at Langston and what we say now is that in our dictated educational system the Negro instructor is prohibited from teaching Negro students educational "know how." All of the high school courses are abbreviated to a point where it leaves the Negro boy and girl swinging in mid air. The Negro youth is lifted high enough and to a point where he hates the ditch, but not high enough in the ethereal realm of skilled arts where he can enter into competition with white union labor. As a matter of fact, Negro teachers, graduating from Negro colleges, are themselves deprived of educational "know how" as taught in white colleges, and of course it is axiomatic, "I cannot give you a dollar unless I have one."

The seminar at Langston university last Wednesday was valuable in that it exposed fully there are students there who do not know that they need preparation for integration, and any human being is in a pretty bad fix when he does not know, and does not know that he doesn't know.

We are going to close this lengthy statement with one more last piece of convincing evidence that Negro youth needs some additional conditioning before perfect integration takes place.

An Oklahoma City teacher enrolled at the University of Oklahoma shortly following the victory in the courts by the NAACP in the Sipuel case. Her hearing being impaired from childhood, this young colored woman did what she had always done in all the schools she had attended. She selected a front row seat where she could hear more easily.

This young woman has also had considerable experience in an integrated atmosphere, so that when her white instructor each day ended his discourse saying, "Any question or comments from the class?" she immediately arose and made a contribution.

In that same class with this young woman were about eight other Negroes who filed in each morning and took rear seats. Not at any time during that first week did these eight blacks move out of their seats or utter a word. Much to the surprise of the young lady whose hearing is impaired, the Saturday of the first week, as she was wending her way to the bus station, one of the colored ladies who had sat silently in the rear, rushed up and handed her a note, and as speedily rushed away.

The note read substantially as follows: "We Negroes wish you would cease embarrassing us the way you are doing in the class." Flushed with anger and resentment, this young woman rushed to the note-passer, who was rapidly vanishing and heatedly requested, "In what way am I embarrassing you and your associates?"

"Sitting up there in front and getting up talking all the time" was the quick response she was given.

But the next Monday morning a different picture was drawn for these Negro students just integrated into Oklahoma university life. Immediately following the opening of their class work the instructor told the assembled students she was going to organize them into committees and that each committee was to select a chairman. This chairman was to preside over his discussion group while they pondered the subjects he had given them.

Much to the surprise of the young lady whose hearing is impaired, when her group, all white but her, repaired to their corner to organize, she was the immediate choice by her entire group of some fifty students as chairman. When she demurred, two white students arose to their feet and said, "We selected you because you seem to be the only person in our class who has ideas and executive ability."

Note the estimate placed on this young colored girl, based upon her willingness to stand up in front among white folk and talk intelligently, as contrasted with the summary of her acts by those who were still spiritually enslaved.

In her note to her traducers this young woman asked them this question: "If you were at Langston university would you sit up front and talk?" and then the young lady concluded, "I'm acting just as I would act if I were at Langston or anywhere else on earth."

Establish Honor Society Chapter At Langston U.

LANGSTON, Okla. — Eta Sigma chapter of Kappa Delta Pi honorary society, was set up on the campus of Langston university last week. The installing officer was Dr. Frank L. Wright, executive president. Dr. Wright was assisted by two members of the university faculty who were already members of the honor society.

They were Mrs. Elmyra Davis, university librarian who was initiated at Alpha chapter, and Mrs. Gwendolyn B. Glover, instructor in English, who is a member of Lambda chapter. Also assisting was Mrs. Dorothy M. Harrison, wife of Langston's president and a member of Lambda chapter.

Initiates were ten students and three faculty members: The students initiated were; W. B. Abram, John Algee, Mrs. Maye F. Edmods, Willetta L. Gladney, Norma Jean Kimble, Addie B. Reynolds, Nathella Tucker, Senora Ward, Mrs. Martha W. Washington and Margarett Younger. The three faculty members were Mrs. Gladys D. Martin, Dr. William H. Martin and Mrs. Theresia B. Moore. After the close of the initiation, a meeting was held at which time the following officers were elected:

President Mrs. Martha W. Washington; vice president, Mrs. Maye F. Edmonds; secretary, Addye B. Reynolds; treasurer, Mrs. Theresia B. Moore; recorder-reporter, Senora Ward; chapter counsellor, Dr. William H. Martin.

Following the meeting a buffet uncheon was held at the palatial home of President and Mrs. G. Lamar Harrison. Mrs. Harrison acted as toastmistress.

As a part of the program Dr. Harrison expressed his delight in having a chapter of Kappa Delta Pi installed on the campus. Moreover, he said he felt that such an organization should stimulate students to strive for higher standards of scholarship. Mrs. Martha W. Washington made a statement on behalf of the students. Representatives from other honor societies who gave expressions were: Dean John Coleman, Pi Gamma Mu; Professor I. E. Glover, Sigma Xi; Dr. A. C. Shropshire, Phi Delta Kappa.

Dr. Frank L. Wright, executive president, gave the keynote address. He called attention to the challenge of the teaching profession. Admonishing those present to develop a defensible philosophy of life, he suggested that we must "take time to live."

Journalism School To Be Named For Editor

Argus

St. Louis, Mo.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — The School of Jouralism of Lincoln University will be named after Mr. J. E. Mitchell, the late managing editor of the St. Louis Argus.

5-1

A formal ceremony has been planned at the university here on Sunday, [illegible] at 3:30 p.m. Various city and state officials are expected to participate.

The school is being named only thirteen months after the passing of the widely known editor. He was always interested in educational development in the state and at his death was serving on the State Board of Education.

Complete details of the event will be announced later by the University.

Is Lincoln U. Expendable?

We have got to be consistent in this matter of segregation. We cannot have our cake and eat it too. Either we want no part of segregation in any form or fashion or we are satisfied with a "separate" status so long as it is reasonably "equal." There is no middle ground.

At a recent committee hearing in Jefferson City, one legislator persisted in asking why the state should continue to maintain Lincoln university if Negro students were admitted to all other colleges and universities in the state. One witness told the committee that even though all racial barriers were lowered in the state colleges, there would still be a need for Lincoln to take care of the psychological and social needs of the vast majority of Negro students in Missouri.

The implication was that Negro students have been so limited and proscribed in their pre-college days that they are not emotionally secure enough to attend "white" schools. The result, the witness said, would be a decrease in the total number of Negro students attending college. Of the 800 now enrolled in Lincoln university, he predicted, only about 200 would attend the white schools, leaving 600 out of school altogether. Lincoln university should continue to exist, he thought, to fulfill the needs of the 600. He also felt that when integration comes, Lincoln also should be integrated, accepting any student of any race who desired to enter.

The witness who gave that testimony wants to "eat his cake and have it too." He wants integrated schools in Missouri but he also wants to keep Lincoln—to serve a large number of Negro students and a few white students who might find it convenient to attend there.

Lincoln university has so long been a part of the life of Negroes in Missouri that naturally they have a sentimental attachment to it. Some of us find it hard to give up. But in the interest of progress, we must prepare ourselves for the eventual sacrifice of our "Negro college."

When integration comes, and it may come this year at the college level, the problem of what becomes of Lincoln U. will be warmly debated. Some will want it continued on an integrated basis. The more economy-minded will say that there is no need for it because it is just a few miles from the University of Missouri.

What to do with the teachers at Lincoln also will be a problem. Our stock answer to those who argue against integrated schools because Negro teachers will lose their jobs" has been that if the teacher is well prepared he can obtain a job in the integrated system and that if he is not qualified to teach in the mixed school, then he has no business teaching in the "Negro" school.

Lincoln U. has an unusually well-trained faculty. While the 800 students at Lincoln could easily be absorbed at the University of Missouri and the five state teacher colleges, the entire Lincoln U. faculty could not be quite so easily merged. There would not be the need for such a large number of teachers. Some Lincoln faculty members could be retained, but a large number would have to seek jobs elsewhere. Is that too great a sacrifice to pay for integration and a beginning toward real democratic living?

Lincoln would not be closed at once, but gradually over a period of years. The Missouri State Association of Negro Teachers, after many years of existence, merged with the Missouri Teachers Association to the mutual benefit of both white and Negro teachers.

We are willing to give up Lincoln in the struggle for full participation in American life. We will learn to be full citizens only by practicing full citizenship.—Kansas City Call.

Harry Truman "Steals Show" At Lincoln U.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — Former President Harry S. Truman surprised the campus of Lincoln University last week by making a surprise visit and stealing the show from a group of professional and business leaders who had come from all over the state to the First University Career Conference.

Mr. Truman had come to Jefferson City to address a joint session of the Missouri state legislature. He was escorted to the campus by J. McKinley Neal, representative from Kansas City.

He then addressed students and career conference leaders in an open—air session. An honor guard for the former chief executive was formed by the ROTC students.

After things quieted down a bit, the career conference continued for its two-day meeting in which the keynote address was delivered by Sidney Lawrence, director of the Community Relations Bureau of the Jewish Federation and Council of Greater Kansas City. Dr. [illegible] man D. Scruggs, president of the school, presided over the conference.

The New Lincoln U.

Lincoln University has supplied the answer to those who oppose the United Negro College Fund on the grounds that it tends to perpetuate segregated schools.

The announcement that our oldest institution of higher learning will open its classes to all students, regardless of race, is indeed a historic step in the right direction.

Lewis M. Stevens, president of Lincoln's board of trustees, announced:

"The new purpose of Lincoln should be the development of a completely interracial university.

"If successful, it should be a leader in the natural course of the removal of all artificial barriers in all educational institutions."

We find ourselves in whole-hearted agreement.

Lincoln, which next year will observe its 100th anniversary, has moved step by step toward the announced goal of complete integration.

When it was founded, it had a white president; it was governed by an all-white board of trustees and its faculty was composed of only white instructors.

Integration became the pattern several years ago in the board of trustees and later in the faculty.

White students on Lincoln's campus will be no novelty. Traditionally a number have enrolled each year and the school has a number of white alumni.

The decision, therefore, to become a fully integrated school follows a natural course of events.

It is to be hoped that Lincoln's new policy will set the pattern of the future for the other 30 members of the United Negro College Fund.

Suggest Closing Of Both

Say Money Could Be Better Spent On Undergraduates

JEFFERSON CITY. — (Special) —The Alumni association of Lincoln university passed a resolution during the homecoming celebration here recently recommending the closing of the university's two graduate schools of law and journalism.

The action was taken at the annual meeting of the association of which N. A. Sweets, of St. Louis is the president.

The reason given for demanding the discontinuation of the two schools was that the operation of them is "untenable, costly and damaging to all participants."

"These two jim crow departments," said Sweets, "were created after the U. S. Supreme court rendered the Gaines decision against the University of Missouri in 1938. They were an attempt to offer "equal" facilities.

But five years ago, the Supreme court handed down new decisions in the Texas and Oklahoma cases that nearly stamped these separate graduate schools as inferior and illegal. However, the two Lincoln U. schools were kept going at a cost to the taxpayers of over a million dollars."

The action of the alumni, Sweets said, "is a movement to redeem Lincoln U. and the state of Missouri from both the flaunting of the law and the waste of school funds."

The resolution states that money now spent on the two graduate schools should be used to strengthen the undergraduate college.

The resolution in full:

"Whereas, the general alumni associations of Lincoln university of Missouri, meeting in regular session on the campus, October 24, 1953, having fully discussed the present status of the university with respect to the operation of the professional schools, School of Law, St. Louis, Missouri, and School of Journalism, Jefferson City, Missouri.

"Hereby takes the position that since the act of segregation as it applies to the educational facilities under consideration is untenable, costly, and damaging to all participants in the program, we, therefore, take the position that these units should be discontinued in favor of a strong college by whatever authority has the power to take such action.

The alumni association passed another resolution requesting the board of curators to provide suitable quarters on the campus for the use of the General Alumni association "in which the transaction of business necessary to the successful promotion and operation of alumni affairs may be centered."

Truman 'Steals Show' at L. U. Career Conference

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — Ex-President Harry S. Truman paid a surprise visit to the Lincoln university campus here Tuesday, May 12, and "stole the show" from top business and professional leaders who had gathered from all over the state for the First All-University Career Conference which opened that day.

Here to address a joint session of the Missouri state legislature, the former president, fresh and rested from his visit to Hawaii, was escorted to the Lincoln U. campus by J. McKinley Neal, representative from Kansas City.

Mr. Truman, private citizen, addressed students and Career conference leaders out of doors in front of the building. Lincoln R.O.T.C. students formed an honor guard for the former chief executive.

The two-day Career conference opened Tuesday morning under the joint sponsorship of the university and the Urban Leagues of Kansas City and St. Louis.

At the opening session, Governor Phil M. Donnelly extended greetings to the students and the 85 consultants from 14 different major employment fields who came to the campus to guide students in their various interest areas.

Dr. Sherman D. Scruggs, president of the university, presided at the opening assembly. The Rev. Lawrence A. Parker, pastor of the Quinn Chapel A.M.E. church, gave the invocation. The university choir, under the direction of O. Anderson Fuller, rendered a selection and A. Lawrence Kimbrough played an organ prelude.

The keynote address of the conference was delivered by Sidney Lawrence, director of the Community Relations Bureau of the Jewish Federation and Council of Greater Kansas City.

Selecting as his subject, "Change, Totality and Cooperation," Mr. Lawrence said that: "In industry, the question is no longer cooperation between labor and management. Government has its role and the community plays its part. An industry trying to attract workers must think of health, educational and cultural facilities the community can offer.

"Chambers of Commerce can no longer plan a city in terms of industrial plants but must consult with educators, social workers, professionals in human relations. More and more success and promotion on a job depend not only on skills of production but also they carry with it references to change, totality and cooperation. How well a man can get along with his fellow workers and in his community—how adept he is at adjusting himself as well as creating new rhythms of cooperation."

A special tour of the campus was arranged for the consultants. A special display of occupational aids was on exhibit in the gymnasium. The exhibit, designed to help the student select an occupation, included poster on the Menharry Medical school of nursing U.S. Army and Navy physical education, dress making and health.

The National Urban League poster, "Developing Skills for Careers," illustrated individual and group guidance, assistance to schools and colleges, occupational information and community organization.

The first panel session was held in the auditorium Tuesday afternoon on "Occupational Trends." The panel members agreed that many job opportunities are available and that job seekers should select their vocation carefully and be well prepared for it.

Members of the panel included: J. Alvin Prejean, industrial relations secretary, Akron, Ohio, Urban League, presiding; Clinton Johnson, regional office, U. S. Department of Labor, Kansas City, Mo.; Cornell Hewson, director of Job Opportunity program of American Friends Service committee, Kansas City; William Gremley, executive director, Mayor's commission on Human relations, Kansas City; J. J. Feigenspan, division of employment security, Missouri State department of Labor and Industrial relations.

A question and answer period followed.

The visiting counselors came from universities, industries, businesses, social and recreation agencies, governmental offices and some from their own enterprises.

The second day called for both general and summary sessions, two-hour student interest group sessions, an Armed Forces session, and a consultants-senior "get-together." The second day closed with a student dance.

Consultants signed for the two-day conference at Lincoln were: Herbert E. Wilson, president, Emery, Bird, Thayer, Kansas City, Mo., George H. Nicholson, tendent of Service, Remington Arms, Independence, Mo.; Perrin McElroy, secretary-treasurer, Central Trades Council, Kansas City, Mo.; George H. icholson, industrial relations director, Westinghouse Electric Corp., Kansas City, Mo.; John A. Morgan, general manager, Butler Manufacturing Co., Kansas City, Mo.; Miss Bernice Bish, executive director, Family Service, Kansas City, Mo.; Anthony P. Nugert, Jr., lawyer, Kansas City, Mo.; Miss Aase George, department of sociology, University of Kansas; William Gremley, executive director, Human Relations Commission, Kansas City, Mo.

Cornell Hewson, executive director, American Friends Service committee, Kansas City, Mo.; Dr. Leonard Warker, head, department of pathology, Menorah hospital, Kansas City, Mo.; Miss Julia Alsberg, director, Vocational Guidance Service, St. Louis; P. Carothers, sales manager, Krey Packing Co., St. Louis; Dukes Durrd, executive director, St. Louis Council for Human Relations; Lucian Erskine, Gradwohl Laboratories, St. Louis; Miss Marjorie Elmore, executive secretary Missouri State Nursing Association, Jefferson City, Mo.

Dr. Moyer Fleisher, Jewish Hospital, St. Louis, Mo.; Mrs. Pauline Garrett, department of home economics, University of Missouri; Mrs. Harold Gruenberg, professor economics, St. Louis University; Miss Helen Hayden, professor of social work, Washington University, St. Louis; Dean Arlien Johnson, School of Social Work, University of Missouri; Douglas Hansen, Department of Fine Arts, University of Missouri; Miss Capitolia Jones, librarian, Lincoln branch library, Kansas City, Mo.;

Frank Jones, sales representative, Seagrams Distilleries, St. Louis; E. J. Lumbur, Sr., stock broker, Dempsey, Tegler Co., St Louis; Mrs. Lillian Mosee, supervisor, Family and Children's Service, St. Louis; H. M. Morgan, owner of a chain of barber colleges, Tyler, Texas; J. W. Mitchell, field agent, U. S. Department of Agriculture; Miss Marjorie Momeyer, department of home economics, Stephens College; Dr. Helen Nash, St. Louis; Paxton Price, state librarian, Jefferson City, Mo.; John Pletz, Missouri State Department of Health and Welfare, Jefferson City, Mo.; Dr. Jerry Rhodes, Rhodes Medical Supply, St. Louis; Dr. Irving Sobel, professor of economics, Washington University, St. Louis; Rev. A. H. Scheller, director, School of Social Work, St. Louis University; William Stix, lawyer, St. Louis; Wayman F. Smith, businessman, St. Louis; Charles Shaw, Watchtower Life Insurance Co., Houston, Texas; Meredith Wiley, director of personnel, Gardner Advertising Co., St. Louis; John Hicks, reporter, St. Louis Post-Dispatch; Benjamin Sanderson, director of personnel, General Cable Co., St. Louis; William Wood, assistant librarian, St. Louis Public Library; Mrs. Olivia M. Collins, St. Louis; Louis P. Hancock, chief instructor, Sun Electric Corp., Chicago; and Fred A. Miller, educational director, National Association of Manufacturers, Chicago.

Lincoln U Will Be 100 In '54

OXFORD, Pa.—Athough Lincoln University will not celebrate her centennial until 1954, the Pennsylvania School is already "preparing for this gala occasion," according to a Christmas letter from the school's president, Dr. Horace Mann Bond.

The first history of Lincoln and a new edition of the alumni directory are planned for appearance during the Centennial year. "Before that time we should have the new wing to our library and a new dormitory, and the Ladies Auxiliary's new Guest House is expected to be completed before the end of 1953," Dr. Bond says.

"Prominent men and women from many walks of life will join us in our celebration, and we are inviting outstanding colleges and universities of the nation to help us observe the 'coming of age' of the oldest institution founded for the education of colored youth.

"We take great pride, however, in our interracial faculty, trustee board, and student body, one indication that we have come a long way in our almost 100 years of existence," Dr. Bond observed.

Almost Half Lincoln Alumni Enter Grad School

LINCOLN UNIVERSITY, Pa.—(ANP) — Despite demands of the Armed Forces, nearly 200 out of a total of 423 Lincoln (Pa.) university graduates have entered graduate schools during the past five years, according to a recent survey.

The survey also revealed that an increasing number of Lincoln men are studying at universities in Canada and in Europe. Alumni of the famed school now are attending the University of Amsterdam, Holland; Oxford and the University of London, England; Queens university, Ireland; University of Ontaria, Canada; University of Brussels, Belgium; University of Geneva, Switzerland; the Sorbonne (University of Paris) France, and the University of Munich, Germany.

In all, Lincoln men are enrolled at some 53 universities and professional schools here and abroad.

NEGRO UNIVERSITY TO BE INTERRACIAL

Trustees of Lincoln Authorize Larger Faculty and Plant, Plan 1,000 Enrollment

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

OXFORD, Pa., April 22—Plans were announced today for changing Lincoln University, the first institution in the world to give collegiate degrees to Negroes, into a completely interracial university.

Lewis M. Stevens, president of the Board of Trustees, said the trustees had approved the major change of purpose for the university, now in the midst of preparations for celebrating its centennial next year.

"The day of usefulness for Lincoln is primarily a Negro college is coming to a close," Mr. Stevens said, adding:

"Therefore, the new purpose of Lincoln should be the development of a completely interracial university, which will conserve the rich heritage of Lincoln, and if successful, be a leader in the natural course of the removal of all artificial barriers in all educational institutions."

Authorize Expansion

Mr. Stevens, an attorney and member of City Council in Philadelphia, forty-six miles northeast of here, also announced that the trustees had authorized the modernization and expansion of the existing plant to help carry out the new purpose of the institution.

The six-point program laid down by the trustees called for construction of a new $450,000 dormitory, an enlarged and improved faculty, a careful selection of new members of the trustees "to the end that the new objective can be furthered," a revised and enlarged curriculum to include a Department of African Affairs, a goal of 1,000 students and a further study of whether the "new university should be co-educational."

Dr. Horace Mann Bond, president since 1946 and the first Negro to hold that post, hailed the new policy as a forward step in the advancement of race relations and democracy.

"Lincoln's first 100 years have been largely concerned with seeking basic educational opportunities for its students to whom most of these were denied for reasoss of race," he said.

Today, with the extension by the courts of the rights of all Americans to obtain the best possible education in institutions throughout the country it must be remembered that discrimination is a two-way street, he emphasized.

"Those of us who are on the other side of the fence must now extend a welcoming hand to men of goodwill of all races," Dr. Bond asserted.

The current enrollment, including students from Africa, India and other foreign countries, is about 390. Traditionally, Lincoln has had several white students as well as an interracial faculty and Board of Trustees. Among the trustees are Dr. Ralph Bunche, director of the Trusteeship Department of the United Nations; Owen J. Roberts, former Supreme Court justice; Julius Rosenwald and Dr. William Hallock Johnson, a former president of Lincoln.

Founded in 1854

Lincoln University was founded in 1854 as Ashmun Institute for the purpose of "giving the advantages of Christian education to colored youth of the male sex." Most of the students during the early years of the school were former slaves. The original effort was supported largely by the Presbyterian Church but for some time all of the work of the institution, which became Lincoln University in 1865, has been non-sectarian.

Last winter, while on a trip to the African Gold Coast, where Lincoln has many distinguished alumni, Dr. Bond reported that he found conclusive proof for Lincoln's claim that it was the first school to grant higher degrees to Negroes.

Though there are three older colleges—Fourah Bay and Akropong Presbyterian, in West Africa, and Codrington, at Jamaica, founded in 1710—none of them granted degress until 1875, Dr. Bond learned.

The original effort was supported largely by the Presbyterian Church but for some time all of the work of the institution, which became Lincoln University in 1865, has been non-sectarian.

Last winter, while on a trip to the African Gold Coast, where Lincoln has many distinguished alumni, Dr. Bond reported that he found conclusive proof for Lincoln's claim that it was the first school to grant higher degrees to Negroes.

Though there are three older colleges—Fourah Bay and Akropong Presbyterian, in West Africa, and Codrington, at Jamaica, founded in 1710—none of them granted degrees until 1875, Dr. Bond learned.

FIRST WOMAN GRADUATE.—Judge Herbert E. Millen of Philadelphia, vice president of the board of trustees of Lincoln university, Pa., is shown congratulating Mrs. Ruth W. Fales, upon her recent graduation from the Chester county institution. Mrs. Fales who is the widow of Dr. Walter Fales, former professor of philosophy at Lincoln, is the first woman to be graduated from Lincoln in the 99-year history. She majored in psychology and is a native of Germany.

as a Rosenwald Fellow under Dr. T. K. Lawless of Chicago, nationally-known dermatologist.

Dr. Goss, a Chicago dentist, was elected by the General Alumni association as general treasurer. He is also regional director of the Centennial Drive.

Archivist Gets Doctorate Here

WASHINGTON

Harold T. Pinkett, the first and highest ranking colored archivist here at the National Archives, will receive the Ph. D. degree in history and archival administration from American University. He will be the first colored scholar to receive the doctorate study in these combined fields.

PINKETT

Mr. Pinkett graduated from Morgan college summa cum laude and received the Master of Arts degree from the University of Pennsylvania.

A former teacher at Douglass High school in Baltimore and professor of history at Livingstone College, he has been an archivist at the National Archives since 1942.

He is the author of four official publications issued by this federal agency and is a frequent contributor to historical journals.

Lincoln (Pa.) Cites Chicago Dermatologist

LINCOLN UNIVERSITY, Pa.—Plans to make Lincoln university a coeducational institution at some future date were outlined here June 2 in a report by Julius Rosenwald II, a member of the school's trustee board.

Rosenwald, speaking at the commencement exercises, said a new and complete interracial program will take effect at Lincoln next September, when the institution begins observance of its 100th year. The enlarged program includes plans to make Lincoln coeducational at a later date, Rosenwald added.

Other notables who addressed the Lincoln graduates, alumni and guests were Pearl S. Buck, noted author, who was commencement speaker, and Gov. Fine of Pennsylvania.

Two Chicagoans, Dr. Paul P. Boswell and Dr. Henry Goss, were honored by the General Alumni of Lincoln.

Dr. Boswell, noted dermatologist, and a graduate of the Class of 1930, received the alumni award for 1952-53 for his outstanding achievements in the medical profession.

A practicing dermatologist for 12 years, Dr. Boswell is an instructor at the University of Illinois Medical school, and a staff member of Michael Reese and Provident hospitals in Chicago. He distinguished himself from 1941-1944

"Build Or Close Up"

The 1951 Alabama State Teachers Association year book lists ten Negro-identified colleges in Alabama. Counting Birmingham Baptist College, there are eleven such institutions.

Currently there is a campaign to raise $200,000 for building purposes at Lomax-Hannon College at Greenville, Alabama. The college is sponsored and owned by the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church but it serves more widely than this.

Slogan for the fund-raising campaign is "We must build up or close up." This battle cry for building funds points up the urgent needs for money for expansion. There are too many persons who recognize the importance of independent, freedom-inspiring, leadership-building institutions like Lomax-Hannon College to let this campaign fail.

Bishop James Clair Tyalor, presiding AME Zion prelate of the Sixth Episcopal District, is serving as general chairman of the funds drive. Naturally he has President T. M. Patton of the college and the church officers and leaders of this district to support him. Yet this is a campaign in which the services of all of those interested in free education should be mobilized. LomaxHannon College has had a struggle to survive. It is located in the Black Belt where a goodly number of Negro citizens live.

Business men of the group, in particular, should, we think, assert themselves in such campaigns. Those among the group who have plenty should give in big chunks. Big things can be built with big gifts.

The smaller colleges like Lomax-Hannon deserve to live because of the need for them. A contribution from you will help to assure the long life of this institution.

All State Colleges To Offer Pre-Professional Courses

14e(1)

During the testimony given in the case of A. P. Tureaud Jr., Tuesday which was argued before United States District Court Judge J. Skelly Wright, it was revealed that at a state board of education meeting held in Baton Rouge on August 7, a resolution was introduced requiring all state colleges and institutions of higher learning under jurisdiction of the state to provide pre-professional curricular in the school of arts and sciences. The resolution was signed by Shelby Jackson, state superintendent of education.

Defense attorneys who argued against the admittance of Tureaud Jr. to Louisiana State University's undergraduate school of arts and sciences, produced excerpts from the minutes of the board meeting, which read:

"Whereas, it is the desire of the Board that the curricula and standards at the colleges and institutions of higher learning under the Board be uniform, and it develops that they are not uniform in connection with granting of degrees after pre-professional study,

"Therefore Be It Resolved, That all state colleges and institutions of higher learning under the jurisdiction of the State Board of Education shall provide pre-professional curricula in the School of Arts and Sciences to include the subjects required for entrance into accredited dental, law or medical schools, and those students who successfully complete the three-year pre-professional required course for entrance into approved accredited dental, law or medical schools shall be granted the degree of Bachelor of Arts or Bachelor of Science by the institution at which the students have finished the three-year required curricula, provided that they subsequently satisfactorily complete the first year of work in an accredited dental, law or medical school, maintaining the required academic standards.

"Be It Further Resolved, That this resolution shall apply to the following colleges and institutions of higher learning:

"Northwestern State College, Louisiana Polytechnic Institute, McNeese State College, Northeast Louisiana State College, Southwestern Louisiana Institute, Southeastern Louisiana College, Southern University, and Grambling College."

Louisiana School Case To Become Complex Litigation

Regardless of the decision the U. S. Fifth District Court of Appeals makes on an appeal it heard from Louisiana lawyers asking stay of an injunction which has admitted the first Negro student to the undergraduate division of the heretofore all-white Louisiana State University, the certainty remains that the Tureaud vs. the State of Louisiana case will go down in the annals of civil rights litigations as one of the most complex ever to arise.

As the situation now stands, the three-judge Fifth District Appeals Court must hand in a decision at New Orleans next month declaring whether or not it intends to set aside a ruling by U. S. District Judge J. Skelley Wright ordering Louisiana to cease and desist from discriminating against admissions of students on the basis of color and race.

Judge Wright ruled last month that LSU's Board of Supervisors was compelled to admit Alexander P. Tureaud, Jr., and any other qualified Negro to the arts and sciences school. This ruling is what made it necessary for the District Appeals Court to enter the deliberations on the subject.

Louisiana lawyers, appearing before the Appeals Court here Tuesday indicated a belief that Judge Wright had no jurisdiction to rule in any manner. They felt that the ruling that Judge Wright handed down making it possible for young Tureaud to enter LSU as a freshman on September 18, should have been handed down—or not been handed down—by a three-judge tribunal.

The matter of questioned jurisdiction is merely one of the complexities which have entered the cases, however.

AGE AN ISSUE

The construction of the action, in a sense, complex. In the initial action, Civil rights Attorney Alexander Tureaud, Sr., acting as father and nearest friend of the plaintiff, Tureaud, Jr., sought admission for his son to LSU. This process of initiating action was taken because of the younger Tureaud's prohibitive age of 17.

Louisiana officials, as late as last Tuesday's hearing, attempted to make use of the prohibitive age by pointing out the fact that Louisiana guarantees free education for all persons in the state from the ages of 6 through 18 years. This decision is guaranteed on a purely racial basis, however.

DON'T MIND GRAD STUDENTS

A further complication is that Louisiana State University officials conceded the fact that young Tureaud or any other Negro students might be admitted to the University as a graduate student in view of rulings in other college-level segregation cases. The surmission, then, is given that the State of Louisiana currently is unwilling to admit colored students only to undergraduate classes at state-controlled institutions.

In keeping with this concession a spokesman for the state told the District Appeals Court Tuesday that Tureaud would have been admitted to the University law school without question if he had completed three years of pre-graduate work at Southern University (a Negro institution) before seeking admission to LSU.

To gain the combination A. B. and LL. D. degrees he seeks, Tureaud must attend LSU six full years. If he had chosen to combine training at Southern with subsequent training at LSU, he would be eligible for graduation with the two degrees in a period of five years, a State spokesman averred.

"UNWRITTEN" ISSUE

Tuesday's hearing before the Appeals Court further pointed out a fallacy in the recognized "separate but equal" doctrine which has long been the dominant educational principle in the South.

Neither the constitution nor statutes of Louisiana carry an "equal" clause along with separation clauses. The absence of the "equal" part of the "separate, but equal" clause has been noted in constitutions and statutes of other states as well.

OTHER CASES NOTED

Complexities may be noted not only in the Tureaud case, but other cases in which Negroes have sought admission to state controlled colleges and universities.

In the Sweatt case in Texas, a forerunner of the series, the state of Texas was obliged to set up a "law school" at a colored institution in an effort to offset suit for admission to the state's white university.

This action failed, however, and the grad schools of Texas University were opened to Negro students. Just the opposite of the Texas situation came to force in North Carolina, where students at an already-organized and accredited Negro law school sought admission to the University of North Carolina (white) with the argument that the Negro school was not equal to the white one.

A federal district judge agreed with this contention so far as physical aspects were concerned, but failed to go along with the race students in their contention that certain intangible qualities could be termed indicative of inequality.

In the Louisiana action, state officials are also attempting to discount claims of inequality because of intangible qualities. Attempts were made also to declare the Southern University equal to LSU because the two institutions were founded within a few years of each other and because the president of Southern University declared that the offerings listed on the one page of the LSU catalog, with a single exception, were offered at Southern.

In addition, Louisiana officials are basing their arguments on equality on belief that "raw statistics" are unreliable in that the offerings listed in the LSU catalog may not be available at the University.

NAACP SPOKESMAN

Robert Carter of the NAACP national office legal staff was spokesman for the Tureaud, Jr. cause here Tuesday. Attorney A. P. Tureaud, Sr., father of the youth, was also present.

Somewhat assured of a victory in the Louisiana case, NAACP lawyers point to the fact that through their efforts Negroes have been admitted to heretofore white graduate schools in Oklahoma, Tennessee, Texas, North Carolina, Virginia and several other states. In addition, they point out the fact that equalization of schools on the secondary and elementary levels has been undertaken in several Southern and border states as result of decisions handed down in federal courts.

And—to date—the NAACP has been victorious in the Louisiana case. Young Tureaud is now pursuing courses at LSU, has been assigned living quarters on the Baton Rouge institution's campus, and has taken part in traditional LSU activities, one of which includes attendance at the university's first home football game clad in pajamas.

Says LSU Must Admit Negro To Combined Course

NEW ORLEANS, La. (INS) A New Orleans federal district court has ruled that Louisiana State university must admit qualified Negroes to its combined arts and sciences and law courses.

Judge J. Skelly Wright pointed out in his opinion that the court has already issued injunctions on three other occasions against LSU requiring the admission of Negroes to the schools of law and medicine and the graduate school.

The newest opinion was issued in a case in which A. P. Tureaud, Jr., 17-year-old New Orleans Negro, sought admission to the combined arts and sciences and law courses.

Tureaud maintained that he could not get a course equal to LSU's at Southern university, Louisiana's Negro school.

Skelly held that it "is the opinion that the denial of admission of the plaintiff to the junior division of LSU . . . solely because of his race and color denies a right guaranteed to the plaintiff under the 14th amendment."

Windows of Negro home on LSU campus broken

BATON ROUGE, La., Feb. 4—(AP)—Two windows in the home of a Negro student couple living in student houses at Louisiana State University were broken by thrown stones.

A spokesman for LSU today confirmed reports of the incident, which happened earlier this week.

The university promptly repaired the windows.

The LSU spokesman said the stone throwing is under investigation. Witness reported a single unidentified person was responsible.

"IT WAS AN unfortunate and inexcusable incident," the spokesman said, "but it is a tribute to the 6000 students here that only one person should see fit to do such a thing."

Under a Federal Court ruling, Negroes are entitled to register as graduate students at the big state school here.

The Negro couple was identified by university authorities as Lionel James and his wife. They reside in one of a series of small white frame houses on the campus for married students.

LSU Enrolls First Negro Undergrad

BATON ROUGE, La., Sept. 18. (AP)—The segregation barrier in Southern white undergraduate colleges was cracked today when a young Negro enrolled at Louisiana State University.

The student, A. P. Tureaud Jr., quietly began the paper work that will make him the first of his race to gain admission to any of the South's white undergraduate schools.

Son of a New Orleans lawyer, the youth gained admission through a series of court battles.

Registrar John A. Hunter said Tureaud's resignation was being handled in a "routine manner."

Tureaud expressed a preference for Air Force basic ROTC training and will be housed with Squadron C of the LSU Air Force wing in the stadium dormitory.

Undergrad Race Bar Lowered

NEW ORLEANS—Judge J. Skelly Wright of the Federal District Court Friday ordered the State Board of Supervisors of Louisiana State University in Baton Rouge to admit 17-year-old A. P. Tureaud Jr., son of a prominent Louisiana lawyer, to the undergraduate school of the university.

Young Tureaud had previously been denied admission to the combined liberal arts and sciences - law curriculum on grounds of race and color as well as tradition in Louisiana.

This means that other Negroes may apply for admission to the LSU undergraduate schools because facilities are not equal in state institutions for Negroes.

Judge Wright said denying Tureaud's admission to the university solely because of race and color denied him a right guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment of the U. S. Constitution.

Negroes attend the LSU graduate schools. Handling young Tureaud's case were Attys. Robert L. Carter of New York and A. P. Tureaud Sr., of New Orleans, both NAACP representatives.

He was assigned a room in the football stadium which houses freshmen ROTC cadets.

As a land grant college, LSU requires all freshmen except veterans and co-eds to enroll in the ROTC program. Tureaud chose the Air Corps.

LSU Registrar Dr. John A. Hunter said, "He will be on the same as anyone else. He'll be able to eat in any cafeteria available to freshmen, attend football games and have all other privileges."

TUREAUD'S REGISTRATION was held up until Friday because LSU defense counsel, headed by Leander Perez, sought to have U. S. Fifth Circuit Appeals Judge Joseph Hutcheson, Houston, Tex., set aside the lower court's order.

Judge Hutcheson denied LSU's request Thursday and Tureaud enrolled Friday without incident.

Court Fight Over LSU Enrolls 1st Negro Undergrad

BATON ROUGE — Alexander Pierre Tureaud Jr. registered shortly after noon Friday as the first Negro undergraduate student in the history of Louisiana State University.

Student Enrolls At Louisiana State University

BATON ROUGE, La.—(NNPA)—Alexander P. Tureaud, Jr., enrolled at Louisiana State University last Friday after his admission had been ordered by the Federal District Court. He is the first colored student to be admitted to the undergraduate college.

Mr. Tureaud, whose father is a New Orleans lawyer, expressed a preference for Air Force basic ROTC training and is being housed with Squadron C of the LSU Air Force unit.

AIR FORCE ROTC

Air Force officers said he will have the same rights and privileges as any other student in the Air Force ROTC. They said he will share dormitory facilities with other ROTC students, but "for the present time" would not have a roommate.

Tureaud won admission to the undergraduate college in a series of legal battles. LSU attorneys lost in their efforts to get an order staying the injunction ordering Mr. Tureaud's admission last Thursday. Judge Joseph C. Hutcheson, chief judge of the Fifth United States Circuit Court of Appeals refused to hold the stay order.

Dr. John A. Hunter, registrar, said Mr. Tureaud's registration was handled in a "normal routine manner."

School must admit youth to undergraduate classes

NEW ORLEANS. (ANP) — A 17-year-old colored student last week earned legal right to enroll in the undergraduate school at Louisiana State university.

Judge J. Skelly Wright of the US Dist. Court for the eastern division of Louisiana issued an injunction restraining the university from further refusing to register and enroll Alexander P. Tureaud Jr., as a regular student in the freshman class in the college of arts and sciences.

Judge Wright issued the injunction on grounds that a comparable program sought by young Tureaud could not be obtained at Southern University, the state - supported university for colored persons.

Acting in Tureaud's behalf were A. P. Tureaud Att'y, his father; Robert Carter, New York, and U. Simpson Tate of Dallas, Tex., southwest regional council for the NAACP.

To Receive Degrees

Tureaud will enter the junior division of the college, and after completing his freshman year will enter the combination course for two years. At the end of his third year in the law school, he will receive a B.A. and two years later a law degree.

It is this combination course—which will enable thim to earn two degrees in six years — that Tureaud could not get at Southern university.

The university admitted that it has pursued a policy of exclusing colored student from the undergraduate divisions on the basis of race, that the practice was applied only to colored applicants, but contended that the applicant could receive substantially the same educational advantages at Southern.

However, testimony revealed that Southern has a combination course on paper, but that actually no student has ever graduated from the course and that credits earned in the course at Southern are not transferable to LSU.

Offering defense for LSU were some 21 lawyers from New Orlans, Baton Rouge and Alexandria. The group attempted to show that Southern offered substantially equal courses as those at LSU. The group also predicted dire consequences if colored persons were admitted to the university.

John A. Hunter, registrar at LSU, pointed out in his affidavit that the faculties of the two institutions were equal concerning proficiency since both universities are accredited by the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

However, he did not tell that LSU operates on an annual budget of $12,000,000 or $1,875 per student, while SU is operating on an annual budget of $2,000,000 or $689.65 per student.

Negro Undergraduate Admitted Louisiana U. Without Commotion

BATON ROUGE, La. — (INS)— The first Negro undergraduate student in the school's history failed to cause any unusual stir at Louisiana State university as he registered and said that "everything is fine."

A. P. Tureaud Jr., a 17-year-old youth from New Orleans, was granted admission to the school last week following a U. S. court order issued in New Orleans ordering LSU to admit Tureaud.

Tureaud maintained, through his father, Atty. A. P. Tureaud Sr., that he could complete a law and arts course in six years at LSU, while it would take seven years for the same course at the state-supported Negro school, Southern university.

Tureaud Jr., registered Friday and white students waiting in line to register, offered no reaction nor made Tureaud seem uncomfortable.

"We'll treat him the same as anyone else," Dr. John Hunter, LSU registrar said of Tureaud. "He'll be able to eat in any cafeteria available to freshmen, attend football games and have all the other privileges."

Tureaud is living by himself in a room in the football stadium, which also houses freshmen ROTC cadets.

The young Tureaud has enrolled in the Air Corps ROTC since as a land-grant college, LSU requires all freshmen, with the exception of veterans and co-eds, to enroll in ROTC.

Tureaud said Saturday that "everything is fine so far" and that he has been treated well.

Tureaud's father, who fought the case for the boy to a successful conclusion, his mother and a teenaged cousin, accompanied him during the registration procedure.

J. Skelly Wright, judge of U. S. District court, recently issued a temporary injunction ordering LSU to enroll the 17-year-old Tureaud. However, he followed this up with a stay order when attorneys for the state filed a motion for a new trial.

Judge Wright denied the motion for a new trial and refused to grant a stay of execution of his injunction, asserting that he could not do otherwise in light of the U. S. Supreme court decisions in the Sweatt and McLaurin cases. But he did grant an appeal to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals.

In seeking the new trial, some 21 prominent attorneys for the state charged there were three errors of analysis in the case that convened for the trial and that the boy is too young to be represented in the suit.

Young Tureaud is seeking to enter LSU on grounds that Southern university, the state's school for Negroes, does not have facilities to offer a combined liberal arts and law course he desires. Only LSU of the state schools offers this combined course.

In attempting to prevent Tureaud from entering the white institution, attorneys for the state argued that equal facilities were offered at Southern and that his admission would violate the state's segregation laws.

But Judge Wright upheld attorneys for the plaintiff and ruled that equal facilities were not available at Southern. He therefore, issued the temporary injunction ordering the admission of Tureaud.

In his opinion he held that the youthful aspirant was denied admission "solely because of his race and color." This, he said violated the 14 Amendment to the U. S. Constitution.

Tureaud had attempted to enroll at the university this week However, when he went to Baton Rouge, he was denied admission because of the motion for the new trial.

Representing young Tureaud were Atty. A. P. Tureaud, his father; Robert Carter, New York, and U. Simpson Tate, southwest regional council for the NAACP, Dallas, Texas.

Negro Student Enters L. S. U.

BATON ROUGE, La., Sept. 18 (AP).—The segregation barrier in Southern white undergraduate colleges was cracked today when a young Negro enrolled at Louisiana State University.

The student, A. P. Tureaud jr., quietly began the paper work that will make him the first of his race to gain admission to any of the South's white undergraduate schools. Son of a New Orleans lawyer, he gained admission through a series of court battles. Registrar Dr. John A. Hunter said Mr. Turdeaud's registration was being handled in a "normal, routine manner."

Mr. Tureaud expressed a preference for Air Force basic R. O. T. C. training and will be housed with Squadron C of the L. S. U. Air Force wing in the stadinum dormitory. Military officials said he will have the "rights and privileges of anyone else in the military department." They said he would share dormitory facilities with other R. O. T. C. students but "for the present time" would not have a roommate.

L. S. U. attorneys lost in their attempt to get a stay order setting aside the injunction ordering Mr. Tureaud's admittance yesterday. Judge Joseph C. Hutcheson, chief judge of the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals, turned down the stay order. He set Oct. 5 as the date for a court hearing on the appeal which was granted to L. S. U. attorneys by United States District Judge J. Skelly Wright.

LSU Fights Entry Case In U. S. Court

Louisiana State University made an attempt here yesterday to nullify the federal court decision which admitted a Negro, A. P. Tureaud, Jr., to its undergraduate college. The University's Board of Supervisors appeared before the United States Court of Appeals in session here yesterday.

Among the lawyers here representing young Tureaud are his father, Alexander P. Tureaud, Sr., and Daniel Byrd, both noted lawyers of New Orleans. Young Tureaud is currently attending classes at the University following the ruling of the Federal District Court in New Orleans which ruled that the University must admit him and any other qualified Negro applicant.

A student in the University's combined arts & sciences and law preparation course, Tureaud maintained that there was no comparable instruction available to him at the Negro state-supported institution, Southern University

MARY ALLEN SENIOR COLLEGE

Two Local People Named In Charge

CROCKETT—An alleged "degree mill" at Mary Allen Senior College has been broken with the indictment here of at least three persons prominent in the teaching field, according to reliable information.

The three are: Mrs. E. V. Holmes, former registrar of Mary Allen College; W.A. Perry, former dean of the school; and Mrs. Crezette King, who until the time of her arrest was employed as a teacher at Phillis Wheatley High School in Houston.

The reports state that the Texas Department of Public Safety caused the indictments to be returned after an investigation of the alleged practices involving the issuance of illegal degrees.

Among other persons alleged to have been questioned by the Department of Public Safety are:

W. M. Henry, dean of Mary Allen until September, 1952, and former principal of Ralph J. Bunche High School in Crockett:

Rev. G. L. Prince, titular head of Mary Allen, and president of the National Baptist Convention.

Henry is said to have been picked up by agents of the Department of Public Safety as he was leaving the funeral of Rev. S. A. Leasants on April 9. He was questioned and released.

While the extent of the illegal practice is not known, reports indicate that a large number of people were questioned.

The three persons who were indicted are charged with having been involved in causing degrees to be conferred illegally by the State Department of Education at Austin through credits issued at Mary Allen College in Crockett.

It is stated that Mrs. Holmes, in her position as registrar, was able to issue false credits, thus enabling persons to receive degrees which they had not earned.

NAMES OF PERSONS receiving such degrees and the sums paid were not immediately available.

Mrs. Holmes was recently relieved of her position at the college, but is reported to still maintain residence on the campus at Crockett.

Mrs. Crezette King was allegedly the outside contact for the "degree mill," rounding up prospects for the bootleg degrees.

She was arrested on her job at Phillis Wheatley High School in Houston and allegedly taken to Austin where she was charged and later released on bond.

It is rumored that the case came to the attention of authorities when a woman, who had fallen out with Mrs. King, tipped off the officials.

One rumor states that a woman in Nacogdoches, who had been sold a degree by Mrs. King was brought to Crockett by agents of the Department of Public Safety. This version says that Mrs. King was re-arrested.

W. A. PERRY, the other person who was indicated, left Mary Allen approximately two years ago and is now employed by the Watchtower Insurance Company a supervisor of the Houston District.

The INFORMER had been unable to contact Mr. Perry at presstime.

Questioning of Rev. G. L. Prince centered around the fact that his signature appears on all degrees issued by Mary Allen. He was not reported as having had knowledge of the illegal practices.

The INFORMER Tuesday attempted unsuccessfully to contact Rev. Prince and Rev. L. H. Simpson, chairman of the Baptist Committee on Education which is responsible for the school.

Jim Crow Scholars

A recent newspaper item indicates that Alabama is spending $37,500 annually at Meharry Medical College in Nashville, Tenn. to provide out-of-state fees for 25 "Jim Crow Scholars" attending school at Meharry.. For each student who accepts the Jim Crow handout the state pays $1500. This money is being spent to induce Negro students who lack the courage to apply for admission at the Alabama Medical College to help keep the state-supported medical school lily-white.

This is an unbelievable story in view of the work of the NAACP in clearing the way through court action for Negro students to win admission by legal efforts to professional and graduate schools in the South. Some organizations other than the NAACP have promised to give financial assistance to qualified students who are willing to attend the tax-supported medical school located here in Birmingham.

Alabama is trying to find ways to get additional funds for education. Yet this state is spending enormous sums to keep Negro students from getting training in the professions within the state. Here both the state and the "Jim Crow Scholars" depart from the "cast down your bucket where you are" educational philosophy of Booker T. Washington. We think it high time for Negro medically-inclined students to "cast down your bucket" at the tax-provided Alabama Medical College.

Meharry Notified Of Awards to Help In Research Work

Notification has been received from the National Institute of Health and the Surgeon General of the approval of awards for two new research grants and the renewal of two others. The sums involved in the awards are, however, contingent upon the action of Congress in appropriating the necessary funds for the fiscal year 1953-54. Of the new grants, one is in the amount of $18,528 for the first year of a five-year study to be conducted by Dr. E. Perry Crump on the anatomical and physiological growth of Negro infants, with an approval of $18,428 per year for each of the following four years. The other new grant is in the amount of $10,000 for the first year of a three year study to be conducted by Dr. Horace Goldie. This project is entitled: "Incidence and Distribution of Metastases from Mouse Tumors of Various Strains, Under Various Experimental Conditions and after Treatment with Radioactive and Chemical Agents." The work will be carried out in a new research unit which is directed by Dr. Goldie and which consists of the former laboratory for Experimental Surgery and attached animal rooms on the same floor. Grants which have been approved for renewal are one in the amount of $4,000 for a continuing investigation by Dr. H. D. West of the metabolism of diphenyl and an undergraduate psychiatric training grant in the amount of $7,550— Three additional papers from the Cancer Research Laboratories have recently been accepted for publication: "Distribution and Pathology Resulting from the Interacerebral and Intraventricular Injection of Radioactive Gold and Silver-Coated Radiogold Colloids" by C. C. McClure, E. L. Carothers and P. F. Hahn, in the American Journal of Roentgenology and Radium Therapy; "Synergistic Effect of Internal Irradiation and Phlebotomy on the Production of Cirrhosis and Ascites in Dogs" by Paul F. Hahn, E. L. Carothers and Huston Brummitt, in the American Journal of Physiology; and "The Tolerance in Humans of Intrabronchially Administered Raioactive Silver-Coated Gold Colloids" by Paul F. Hahn, G. W. Hilliard and E. L. Carothers, in the British Journal of Radiology.

At the first meeting of the Meharry-Community Council, held in the college library, Dr. H. D. West delivered a brief report on the state of the college and the following officers were elected: Mr. Calvin McKissack, Chairman; Dr. H. A. Bowen, Vice-Chairman; and Mrs. Laurie M. Gunter, Secretary.

Concerning Negroes—

Miles College Opens Fall Quarter Sunday With Faculty Meeting

BY W. ARNETT BRYANT
Telephone 56-4418

The annual Miles College pre-registration faculty meeting, Sunday, in the college library will officially open the Fall quarter of the 1953-54 academic year.

Freshman week will begin at 9 o'clock Monday morning.

The pre-registration faculty meeting is held each year as an orientation period for new faculty members and to provide an opportunity for instructors and administrators to discuss faculty activities, curriculum changes and general plans for the school year.

Faculty and student representatives will be on hand Monday morning to welcome new students to begin freshman week. Dr. W. A. Bell, president, will address the freshmen at an assembly in the auditorium at 9 a.m. Following the president's address, division heads and student representatives will take over for an orientation period.

Placement examinations will be administered Monday and Tuesday. Registration for freshmen will take place on Wednesday.

Upper classmen will register Thursday and Friday with classes beginning Monday morning, Sept. 21.

Approximately 13 new members of the faculty and administration, including three professors from Birmingham - Southern College, will be on duty when the college opens its Fall quarter.

Dr. Bell announced these additions to the faculty:

Otha H. Brown, who holds an A.B. degree from the University of Louisville and an M.S. from Indiana University, will offer courses in secondary education.

James C. Gates, holding an A.B. degree from Morehouse College an M.A. degree from Atlanta University, will offer courses in French.

Theodore H. Goodin will teach courses in English. He hold an A.B. degree from Johnson C. Smith College and an M.S. degree from Boston University and is a candidate for the Ph.D. degree from Boston University for the Summer of 1953.

Courses in economics and accounting will be taught by Robert F. Jones who holds a B.S. degree from Miles College and an M.B.A. from Atlanta University.

Music will be taught by Walter T. Locke who holds bachelor of music degree from Howard University.

Leon J. Martin will join the faculty in the field of chemistry. He holds the B.S. degree from Morehouse College and the M.S. degree from Atlanta University.

Miss Eva E. Mobley with a B.S. degree from South Carolina College and an M.L.S. from Atlanta University will serve as assistant librarian.

Conducting courses in mathematics will be Morris E. Mosley with a B.S. degree from Alabama State College and an M.S. degree from Atlanta University. Harry Washington, A.B., Talladega College and an M.A. degree from New York University.

MILLSAPS COLLEGE (Jackson,Mississippi)

Millsaps Vote On Segregation Has Surprises

14e(1)

Ninety-seven per cent of Millsaps College students voted in favor of equal college opportunities for Negro and white students in an opinion poll released today by Eddie Gossard, editor of the student newspaper, Purple and White.

In an opinion poll that took a "representative" sampling of every third name listed alphabetically in the student directory, the students were asked five questions regarding segregation in high education.

The poll showed that 59 per cent of those sampled said they would attend a college or university which admits Negro students to its student body. On the other hand, only 24 per cent of those sampled said they thought Millsaps College should admit Negroes.

Forty-eight per cent voted in favor of attending classes with Negro students at Millsaps, but only 19 per cent voted in favor of accepting Negroes socially at Millsaps in such activities as dormitory living, eating and recreation.

The five questions asked in the poll and the results were:

1. Do you think Negro students should have college or university educational opportunities equal to those of white students? Yes, 97 percent; no, less than 1 percent; undecided 2 percent.

2. Would you attend a college or university which admits Negro students to its student body? Yes, 59 percent; no, 28 percent; undecided, 13 percent.

3. Do you think Millsaps College should admit Negroes to its student body? Yes, 24 percent; no, 58 percent; undecided, 18 percent.

4. Would you attend classes at Millsaps College with Negro students? Yes, 48 percent; no 41 percent; undecided, 11 percent.

5. Would you accept Negro students socially at Millsaps College in such activities as dormitory living, eating, and recreation? Yes, 19 percent, no, 63 percent; undecided, 18 percent.

MINER TEACHERS COLLEGE

Dr. Whitehead Named Prexy Of Miner College

WASHINGTON— (ANP) — Dr. Matthew J. Whitehead last week was named to succeed Dr. Eugene A. Clark as president of Miner Teachers' College here.

The board of education selected Dr. Whitehead, a member of the Miner faculty since last year, to replace Dr. Clark who retired.

Prior to coming to Miner, the newly elected president was assistant registrar at Howard University, also of this city.

He also taught at North Carolina State Teachers' College and New York University, where he earned his doctorate degree.

A native of Rocky Mount, N. C , he is married and the father of two children.

In other action taken by the board, two other teachers at Miner were promoted. They are Miss Hope Lyons, dean of students, who was acting president for several months, and Mrs. Catherine A. Gardiner, assistant professor.

Both were promoted to associate professorships.

Graduate Study Programs At Jackson, Alcorn Negro Colleges To Be Considered

By PHIL STROUPE

Requests from two Mississippi Negro colleges to establish courses in graduate study will be considered by the Board of Trustees of Institutions of Higher Learning, Feb. 26.

E. R. Jobe, executive secretary, said the board will decide on a request from Jackson College for graduate study in education of teachers in the summer session of this year, and a request from Alcorn Agricultural and Mechanical College at Alcorn for graduate work in agriculture and [illegible] work.

The Jackson College requests will affect a large number of Negro school principals who will need graduate degrees in the event the equalization of public schools is adopted in the state.

Jobe said the board has previously determined that graduate work will be complementary to existing programs.

"There will be no duplication or competition with existing graduate schools," he said.

The action of the board late this month will be the end result of several years of study and preparation for granting this graduate program to Negroes.

"If the graduate program meets with approval of the board," Jobe said, "it will mean that an expansion of library facilities will be necessary at both Jackson and Alcorn colleges. Present libraries at these institutions are not adequate for graduate research and study."

Educational levels of the faculties of both schools will also need improvement under the graduate program, Jobe said. Both Alcorn and Jackson colleges now have two faculty members each with doctor's degrees. Four additional faculty members with doctor's degree—who will have to be recruited from outside Mississippi—will be added to the teaching staff of each institution under the expanded program.

Graduate work in engineering and law will be pursued by Negro students on the regional basis, Jobe said. Adequate schools exist in Alabama, South Carolina and Texas where Negro students can perform graduate study in engineering and law.

Thet program of regional education where several southern states pool their resources to afford better opportunities for graduate and professional study has been under study by the governors of southern states for several years.

Financing the new graduate program for Negroes will be covered through a method already adopted by the State Building Commission, Jobe said.

"In 1951 the General Board of Education allocated $500,000 to three state-supported Negro colleges which was applied to a two million dollar building program," Jobe said.

The construction program for Negro institutions has advanced considerably under this fund. At Alcorn College projects either completed or now under contract total $818,440 and include a dining hall, laundry, dormitory and an abattoir (slaughterhouse). Tentative allocations have been set at $300,000 for a home economics building at Alcorn College.

At Jackson College, work has been completed or contracts have been let for $250,000 for a dining hall and tentative allocations of $400,000 for a science building.

At Mississippi Vocational College at Itta Bena work completed or under construction totals $602,979, including a shop assembly, faculty, and home economics buildings.

Tentative allocations for the Itta Bena school have been made in the amount of $200,000 for teacher education and a classroom annex.

GRADUATE WORK HIT BY NEGRO TEACHERS

Commercial

'Quick, Easy Credit Mills' Is Mississippi Charge

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss. Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., April 11. — The Mississippi Negro Teachers Association, through its legislative committee, Saturday branded scheduled summer graduate courses at two of the state's senior Negro colleges "quick, easy credit mills." It accused some Negro leaders of approving the courses" in order to secure better salaries."

Under a plan to be inaugurated at Jackson College and Alcorn College by the Board of Trustees of state institutions of higher learning, graduate training is offered teachers, school principals and those majoring in vocational education.

Despite the association's position, Dr. E. R. Jobe, executive secretary of the college board, said "There is no question as to the quality of the work to be given."

The Negro Teachers Association deplored "The attempt of state educational authorities to establish makeshift and psuedo-graduate training at Jackson and Alcorn colleges, schools which have met minimum standards only for undergraduate work."

"In view of the fact there is not a college for Negroes in Mississippi equipped and in position to offer graduate work, we condemn the idea of graduate study at either Jackson College or Alcorn College for credit," the statement said.

"But," it added, "we do approve the idea of workshops, without graduate credit, for in-service training of principals."

The association asserted that "better-trained principals can be secured by giving more generous graduate aid for study in out of state accredited universities."

"More liberal financial aid for such study should be the policy until such time the State can provide graduate training within our state for Negroes commensurate with that of the state universities for whites," the Negro teachers said.

Mississippi now provides funds for out-of-state graduate work for Negroes because of segregation within the state.

ITTA BENA, Miss., April 11. (Special) — The three-year-old Mississippi Vocational College for Negroes has been accredited and approved as a four-year bachelor degree institution, President J. H. White announced Saturday. Official notification of the accreditation was received from the College Accrediting Association.

All college and terminal courses offered at Mississippi Vocational College are now fully recognized," President White said.

The college awards the regular four-year B. S. degree as well as diplomas and certificates in trades and practical nursing.

Miss. Property Owners Oppose Baptist Seminary

JACKSON (ANP)—Plans for a colored Baptist seminary received a jolt last week when white property owners began signing petitions opposing establishing the seminary on Delta Drive.

State Baptists recently purchased a five-acre site for the seminary. Situated on the site are buildings which formerly housed a nursery. Costing some $28,500, the property was to be improved at an additional cost of $200,000.

However, as soon as it was announced that the group had purchased the area with intentions of converting it into a seminary, white property owners arose in opposition to it.

Hold Mass Meeting

A mass meeting was held, resulting in the election of P. F. Flowers as chairman and Robert Morris as secretary, to halt the movement. Flowers announced that some 300 property owners had signed the petition.

In spearheading the move against the seminary, Flowers said: "Not that I am prejudiced against colored people, but there is sufficient colored property for their seminary. We think they should stay in their own backyard."

Committee Votes Out School Bill

(SPECIAL TO ARGUS)

JEFFERSON CITY — The House Committee on Public Schools has voted out favorably, House Bill 112, following a public hearing here Thursday morning.

The vote was 12 yea's with one present and not voting. The bill, which would outlaw segregation in higher education in the state, now comes to the floor of the House for a vote. It was introduced by Representative Leroy Tyus (Dem.) of St. Louis and Clifford Jones, also a Democrat.

The vote came after the committee went into executive session following the hearing where no one appeared against the measure.

The Committee action was greeted with elation in quarters where controversial measures are usually bottled up in committee indefinitely.

Henry Von Avery, director of community organizations for the St. Louis Urban League, appearing before the committee, pointed out that the bill not only expands and legalizes a practice now in existence, but also opens the doors of all state-supported schools to Negroes.

The University and Rolla School of Mines accept applications from Negroes for courses not offered at Lincoln University. Under the civil rights measure, all qualified persons meeting entrance requirements would be admitted to any state-supported school regardless of race, color or religion.

St. Louis University and Washington University admit Negroes in all departments.

Von Avery said, "our private institutions have done the pioneering in opening educational doors to all who qualify — the state which should have led can do no

Using a chart based on the 1950 census, von Avery showed that of 159,400 Missourians with college training, only 6,015 of them are Negroes. He told the committee that these figures "point up the fact that the State of Missouri has not made education available in an equitable manner to all of its citizens who qualify for such".

Joe Ames, representing Teamsters Local 688, pointed out the positive effects that the abolition of segregation within the rank and file of the Union has had on his organization.

Mrs. Carl Moore, state chairman of the League of Women Voters, appeared before the committee on behalf of the education bill.

A number of organizations throughout the state sent statements to the Education Committtee advocating passage of the measure. They include the Missouri Association of Social Welfare, the St. Louis Jewish Community Relations Council, the Urban League of Kansas City and the State NAACP Board.

Education Bill Passes Mo. House

JEFFERSON CITY — A bill to open state-supported schools to Negro students was passed by the Missouri House Tuesday and sent to the Senate. It was sponsored by Rep. Leroy Tyus, Democrat, St. Louis, and A. Clifford Jones, Republican, St. Louis County.

The bill would open all courses at the University of Missouri and five state colleges to Negroes. At present, only those courses not offered at Lincoln University here are open at the state university in Columbia.

The bill passed by a vote of 80 for, 23 against and 21 present, but not voting. At least 79 votes for were needed for passage.

Representatives from "Little Dixie" and the "bootheel" area were the main opponents.

NEAL SPEAKS

James McKinley Neal, Democrat, Kansas City, spoke in favor of the bill stating that "knowledge, Equality, Justice . . . is all we ask." He said he had always felt that investment in education is one of the best investments we can make.

"If we can be on an equal basis to pay taxes, to fight for the principles of our country, I think we should be on an equal educational basis," he declared.

ST. LOUIS VOTE

Representatives from St. Louis voted as follows:

For—Democrats: Paul Berra, Daniel Curran, John W. Green, Walter V. Lay, Leroy Tyus, Joseph W. Martino, Harry Raiffie, Robert Uxa, Eugene P. Walsh, Mrs. Jennie Walsh. Republican: Francis M. O'Brien.

Against:—None.

Present-Not-Voting: Frank E. Kostron, Democrat; and William Siefert, Republican.

Absent—Democrat: Joseph W. Beckerle, John Griffin, John M. Lavin, John P. O'Reilly, Thomas A. Walsh.

BELIEVES IN RIGHTS

Jones, in a statement to the Argus this week, pointed out that he had sponsored the bill because he "firmly believes in a state civil rights program." He said that he has no more than 20 or 30 Negroes in his district, and that he is aware that his support costs him votes there.

"I think that the moral issue transcends political expediency," Jones said, adding that "Republicans in the legislature have consistently favored civil rights programs. I hope that you have occasion to check the voting records in this session and in the past sessions," Jones declared.

"Such a check would undoubtedly lead to the conclusion that the Republican Party is the progressive party of this state and that the Democratic Party is the party of southern reaction," Jones asserted.

Mixed School Bill Passed

Mo. House Votes To Open Colleges

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo.—The Missouri House, by a 80-23 vote, passed a bill Tuesday to open state - supported schools to colored students. The bill now goes before the Senate for consideration.

The measure would open all courses at the University of Missouri and five state colleges to colored students. At present, only those courses not offered at Lincoln University here are open at the state university in Columbia.

The bill was sponsored in the House by Rep. Leroy Tyus (D., St. Louis) and A. Clifford Jones (Rep., St. Louis County). Twenty-one representatives present at the time the bill was considered did not vote. At least 79 votes were needed for passage.

Representative Jones said this week in co- sponsored the bill because he "firmly believes in a state civil rights program." He said that he has no more than 20 or 30 colored families in his district and that he is aware that his support cost him votes there.

Opponents to the bill came mostly from sections called "Little Dixie" and the "boot-heel" area of the state.

Bill 112 And Lincoln U.

The presentation in the State Legislature of an economy measure that would open all courses at the University of Missouri and other state schools to Negro students has sparked a wave of anxiety and speculation among many Negro citizens.

There has suddenly been a rash of anti-segregated school bills in the state Legislature, probably in anticipation of the United States Supreme Court's decision, and their appearance has alarmed the hesitant proponents of integrated schools.

From somewhere has come the fear that if the economy measure goes through it will mean the end of Lincoln university, the state supported school for Negroes.

In the midst of the noise it might be wise to adjust our sights more reasonably lest we fly in the wrong direction for no cause. There is no measure before the Legislature that would abolish Lincoln university. The proposal being considered would merely open all state schools to Negroes, simply that.

It is generally known that this consideration arose as an economy move. Since Governor Donnelly entered office he has sought diligently to curb the state budget. House Bill 112 was introduced with that aim in mind. It has nothing to do with Lincoln university.

With that thought we encounter the argument from school teachers and professors that as surely as the measure goes through Lincoln will be closed and they will lose their jobs.

We repeat, there has been no action or indication in the direction of closing Lincoln university. However, if such should develop we could not allow Lincoln university to stand in the way of integrated schools.

In other words, at this point it is necessary to contemplate that the abolishment of segregation in the state schools does not come out of any moral qualms that might be had by majority group legislators. We are at the threshold, or at least the consideration of erasing segregation from our schools only because we have at last felt the pinch of the ridiculous outlay of money required to maintain a dual, segregated system.

Negro professors know that this business of gaining first class citizenship in the United States has been a tediously progressive process. We hate the word that implies gradualism, but in facing reality we can't get around the fact that any progress we have made in getting what belongs to us, employment included, has been a step by step affair. Further, it was the economic significance to the majority group in many instances that provided the atmosphere for change.

If Lincoln university should be the object of a bill to close the institution Negro professors would have cause for anxiety. It is a logical and reasonable assumption under our presently striving democratic system. Yet we wouldn't want to see their anxiety match the feeling of die-hard southerners in this struggle. Nor can we envision qualified Negro teachers becoming extinct.

In all probability, should Lincoln university be abolished, an employment problem resulting from discrimination would arise. Events in Kansas right now support this contention.

Nonetheless, since the birth of the State of Missouri, this is the first time such an opportunity has arisen to wipe out segregated schools on any definite level. It should not be met with fear.

An employment problem, should it arise, is another fight and one that must be faced with as much vigor as has been exercised in getting the schools open, but if Lincoln is to be the price, there can be no hesitation in payment, unemployed teachers notwithstanding.

Certainly there are a number of Negro teachers who realize the handicaps their children suffer in a segregated system and many of them would sacrifice their present positions to give their children what they deserve. This still is not to say Negro teachers should not as readily be moved into an integrated system.

Fair employment is and always has been of great concern to us. We have never let up in the fight to gain it. So long as an industry employs a Negro citizen on the basis of ability and qualification that is as it should be and we are not concerned if the employer must get rid of less qualified white personnel to do so

The same thinking applies in this case with respect to Negro teachers and Missouri state schools. Actually, we would like to see all Negro and white teachers employed who are qualified and we definitely want to see Negro teachers in integrated classrooms. We have first, however, to see integrated classrooms.

At this stage it would seem that current fears are premature. If they are not, we cannot bluntly turn the whole business aside as an unacceptable bargain prolonging the criminal effects of segregation on our children.

Exc. 5-1-53

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo.—House bill No. 112, which would open all state colleges and universities to Negroes, is stymied in the senate committee on education. The committee refused for the third time last Wednesday to act on the measure which already has passed the house.

The committee has by-passed the bill now for several weeks. The measure was introduced by Leroy Tyus, Democrat of St. Louis and A. Clifford Jones, Republican of St. Louis county.

Tyus and Jones last week urged all persons interested in the passage of the bill to write or wire Senator Frank L. Wilkinson of Kansas City, chairman of the committee on education.

OPEN TODAY FOR INSPECTION — Morehouse College will hold "Open House" from three to four P. M. today in its new $600,000 chemistry building which was recently opened for classes. The structure is located east of the old science building and has the most modern equipment for the teaching of chemistry. The public is invited by President Benjamin Mays to inspect the building.

New Laboratory at Morehouse To Detect Radioactive Compounds

Morehouse College department of biology has opened a laboratory for the detection of radioactive compounds, and a grant of $8,000 from the U. S. Public Health Service has financed the purchase of radiological equipment.

Morehouse's first research project employing radioactive tracer compounds involves study of "the effect of posterior pituitary hormone on sodium and potassium excretion."

The research is being conducted by Dr. James H. Birnie, chairman of the Morehouse department of biology; Prof. George Ferguson, Clark College; and Dr. Samuel M. Nabrit, Atlanta University.

A second project employing radioactive iodine in the study of thyroid function in embryos has been started under Dr. Everett Mapp of Morehouse.

AEC Grant Awarded To Morehouse

The Atomic Energy Commission has awarded the Biology department of Morehouse College a research grant of $5,395. Dr. James H. Birnie, chairman of the department, announced yesterday.

Dr. Birnie said members of the department will study the function of the thyroid gland by the use of radioactive iodine. Dr. Birnie, Dr. Everett Mapp, and Dr. S. M. Nabrit will conduct the investigation.

During this investigation an attempt will be made to determine the stage of embryonic development at which the thyroid gland attains functional status. Dr. Birnie said the significance of the study is reflected in the great number of clinical cases involving thyroid diseases which are discovered each year.

The Morehouse College Biology department has recently installed equipment for the handling and detection of radioactive compounds that will be used in the research project.

The thyroid gland is an important ductless gland in the neck of vertebrates that affects growth and metabolism.

NEW MORRIS BROWN PRESIDENT INAUGURATED

L-R: Dr. Lewis, Prof. A. J. Lockhart, Bishop Greene

Representatives of more than 200 colleges and universities participated in all-day services on the Morris Brown campus.

Dr. Lewis, eighth president of the 67-year-old Methodist-supported institution, succeeds Dr. W. A. Fountain, Jr., who died Wednesday in Nashville.

At the Thursday afternoon inaugural convocation, Dr. Lewis was installed by Bishop Sherman L. Greene, chairman of the Morris Brown board of trustees, who presided at the investiture.

Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College; Dr. C. L. Harper, executive secretary of the Georgia Teachers and Education Association; Dr. Philip Weltner, director of the Emily and Ernest Woodruff Foundation, and R. L. Cousins, director of Negro education, State Department of Education, also participated in the installation.

Dr. Francis Carr Stifler, secretary of public relations for the American Bible Society made the inaugural address.

Dr. Carr termed education "a world task and nothing less," adding:

"Men are living in an interrelated world which can only go on successfully if individual selfishness yields to the guidance of social principles. . . . By a hundred modern forms of propaganda the people of the world are being unified either on God's side or against him."

DR. JOHN H. LEWIS

"You have been selected by the Board of Trustees of Morris Brown College as its president because it believes that you possess those qualities of character and leadership which fit you to lead Morris Brown College to a fuller realization of its historic ideals."

With these words Bishop Sherman L. Greene, chancellor and presiding Bishop of the Sixth Episcopal District of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, installed Dr. John H. Lewis as the eighth president of Morris Brown College.

The impressive inaugural ceremonies, one of the highlights of a history making two-day convocation held at the College on April 8 and 9, was witnessed by an assemblage of distinguished churchmen, educators, alumni, laymen and more than 200 official representatives of colleges, universities and learned societies.

In his inaugural address, President Lewis who previously headed the institution from 1920 to 1928, expressed his profound gratitude to Bishop Greene for the faith, the confidence he expressed and pledged to hold as a sacred trust the authority officially invested in him. The outstanding educator and minister also acknowledged his debt of gratitude to the Board of Trustees, hundreds of thousands of loyal members of the African Methodist Episcopal Church in Georgia and many sustaining friends for their moral and financial support of the institution in the past.

"It is with a sense of deep humility that I stand before you today. The presence of our many distinguished colleagues and friends, the greetings and expressions of goodwill fill me with hope and mingled emotions. This occasion, on which we dedicate ourselves to the unfinished task which lies before us will live ever in my memory. I assume this responsibility with the conviction that God in His goodness makes available strength in proportion to the needs of the hour," he said.

"WE SHALL MOVE FORWARD"

Morristown College Keeps Mrs. Boyd As Prexy

MORRISTOWN, Tenn. — Mrs. Miller W. Boyd, widow of the former president of Morristown College, will continue as acting president of the institution for another year.

The announcement was made at recent commencement exercises in Swift chapel by Dr. Dennis Branch, board of trustees member.

Mrs. Boyd was named to finish out the school year following the sudden death of her husband last December. Under her guidance, the 72-year-old Methodist junior college made such progress, the board of trustees extended her tenure.

Honors Awarded

Dr. M. F. Wicke, member of the general board of education of the Methodist church, Nashville, was commencement speaker. The following students graduated with honors:

From the college department George M'Cravy and Dorothy Blevins;

From the high school—Eliva Blevins, Aster Harrell, Robert Dickason, Odell Colvin, Delores M'Mhan, Theresa Herring and Christine Cardwell.

Scholarships were won by Mrs. W. W. Manning, Christine Cardwell, Clayton M'Cravy, Carolyn Crawford, Geneva Porter, Eddie Bramlett, George M'Cravy and Clyde Bishop.

kes 10-Point Report On '52-53 Activities

10 Trustees

DURHAM, N.C.—History was made at the May meeting of the trustees of the North Caro- college last week when a colored person presided over the group for the first time.

Dr. R. M. Hendrick, Asheville dentist who is vice chairman of the group, substituted for R. M. Gantt, ailing Durham lawyer, who is chairman of the board, but who was unable to attend.

The trustee passed a resolution wishing Gantt "a speedy recovery" and praising him for "unselfish service to the college as exemplified in his recent appearance before the State Legislature when the college presented its case before the Joint Appropriations Committee."

$1,800,000 Plan

During Dr. Hendrick's stint as acting chairman the trustees considered plans for adding $1,800,000 in permanent improvements in the form of three new $600,000 building to house the departments of biology, commerce and education.

The board also received the resignation of one of its members, Spencer Murphy of Salisbury. Murphy, a Salisbury newspaperman, said his service on the board had been "a happy and enlightening experience."

Prior to the regular meeting of the full trustee board, the building committee, composed of Bascom Baynes and Dr. J. M. Hubbard of Durham and Fred Smith, Zebulon, met in President Elder's office.

For 3 New Buildings

The committee was told $1,800,000 had been appropriated by the legislature for permanent improvements as follows: Education Building, $600,000; Commerce Building, $600,000, and Biology Building, $600,000.

The committee also was advised that State Assistant Budget Director D. S. Coltrane had notified local architects, George W. Carr, Raymond Weeks and H. A. Ham "that contracts could not be made until after the sale of the bonds."

Coltrane has advised the architects that "the funds should be available by September or October."

10 Point Report

President Elder made a 10-point report to the trustees that included these highlights:

(1) Commencement speakers will be Dr. Archibald J. Carey of Chicago as baccalaureate speaker and Dr. J. Curtis Dixon, executive director of the Southern Education Foundation, graduation speaker.

(2) Total enrollment during 1952-53 included 2,539 students. Some 1,661 students were enrolled in the regular session and an additional 878 in the summer session.

(3) The calendar for the 1953-54 school year was detailed. Freshman week will be observed Sept. 16-22. Classwork for the fall quarter starts Sept. 24.

(4) Recommendation was made for the removal of the campus's old wooden buildings to pave the way for three modern structures.

Recommendation

(5) Recommendation for the continuation of present policies permitting NCC's president and Dr. Charles Carroll to act for the board "on questions relating to the eligibility of applicants and amounts of grants" for out-of-state aid.

(6) Discussion of the $1,800,000 permanent improvements program.

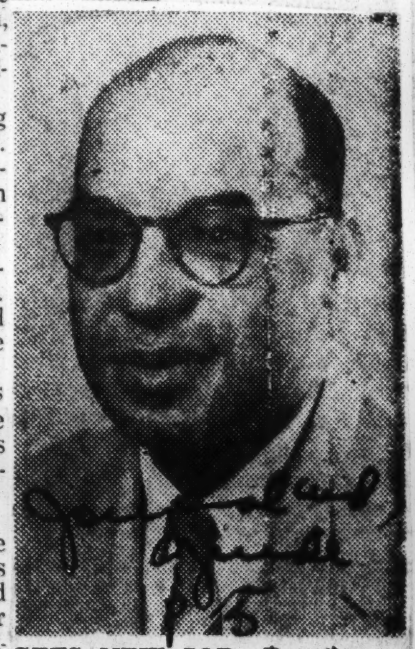
(7) Discussion of the college's maintenance budget.

(8) Announced recommendations contained in a report adopted by the Appropriations Committee of the General Assembly "that the tuition charged out-of-state students at A. and T. and Norh Carolina Colleges be increased to $360, which is identical to the figure for the University of North Carolina, State College, and Woman's College at Greensboro.

(9) Announced 32 full-time appointments to the faculty and clerical staff between Jan. 31, 1952 and Jan. 31, 1953.

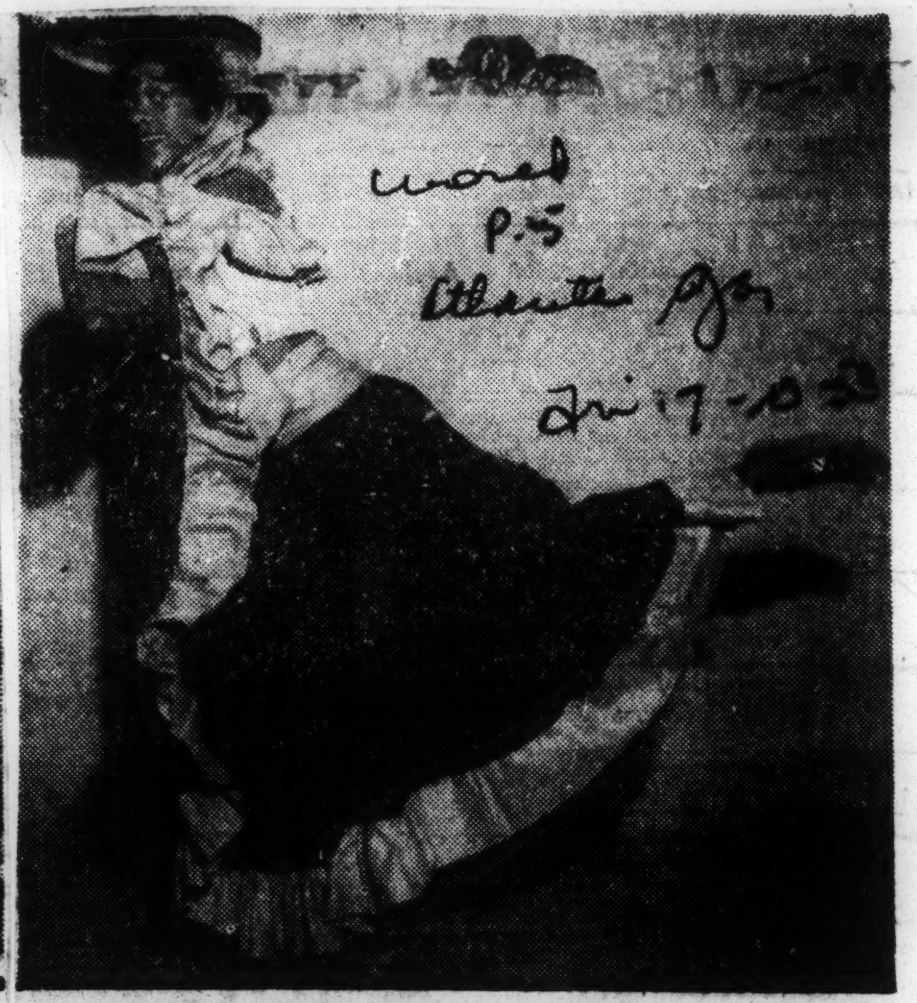
(10) Recommended the appointment of Dr. G. T. Kyle, professor and head of the department of psychology to succeed Dr. Albert E. Manley as dean of the undergraduate college of arts and sciences. Dr. Kyle's appointment was approved and he will assume his new duties on July 1.

The board appointed a special committee to study plans to buy land for the college's expansion and paid special recognition to two new members, Dr. Carroll and A. H. Bryant, Rocky Mount businessman.



GETS NEW JOB—Dr. George T. Kyle, professor of psychology and vice chairman of the North Carolina College Graduate Council in Durham, N. C., will become dean of the North Carolina College undergraduate school July 1.

Dr. Alfonso Elder named Dr. Kyle to succeed Dean Albert E. Manley, who will leave the college July 1 to become the president of Spelman College in Atlanta, Ga.



NCC DANSEUSE PLANS CONCERT IN DURHAM ON WEDNESDAY JULY 15 FOR SUMMER SCHOOL

DURHAM, N. C. - MISS ALAVETA HUTSON, chairman of the Dance department of the North Carolina College at Durham, will appear in the college's Duke Auditorium on Wednesday night, July 15. The concert, a special presentation of the NCC Summer School, will be open to the general public without charge. Miss Huston formerly danced professionally with the Katherine Dunham Dance group. She has been enthusiastically received in several recent recitals in Eastern dance circles.

2 Negroes Admitted by N. C. State

14e(1)

RALEIGH, N. C., Sept. 16 (U.P.)—North Carolina State College here accepted today applications for admission from two Negroes to study for master's degrees in science.

Robert C. Clemmons of Durham and Hardy Liston Jr. of Greensboro became the first Negro students to have applications for admission to the school approved.

Previously, however, several Negroes were admitted to the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill for graduate studies. Both schools are divisions of the Consolidated University of North Carolina.

Dr. D. B. Anderson, associate dean of the Graduate School of the university, announced acceptance of the applications today at a general faculty meeting at the college here.

He said Clemmons and Liston fulfilled all qualifications for admission of Negroes to the college. Those qualifications require that they be native of North Carolina, that there be no graduate facilities available for them in their special fields at existing Negro institutions in the state, and that they have completed all their pre-requisite training for the gradu-

RALEIGH, N.C. — North Carolina State college accepted its first colored graduate students last Wednesday, and announced that they are expected to report for classes this week.

Robert L. Clemons, 43, of Durham, and Hardy Liston Jr., 33, of Greensboro, are the two men who have been admitted. Mr. Clemons will be seeking his master's degree in electrical engineering, while Mr. Liston will study for his master's in mechanical engineering.

Announcement of acceptance was accompanied with a statement by the trustees that the men met all entrance requirements.

1. That they be natives of the state. 2. That facilities for the studies they seek are not available at colored institutions in the state. 3. That they complete all pre-requisite training before applying for admittance.

First In Raleigh

Last year several colored students were admitted to graduate schools at the university's unit at Chapel Hill, but the two men will be the first to attend the Raleigh school.

Mr. Clemons is a 1952 graduate of A and T college at Greensboro, finishing with highest hon ors with a B. S. in electrical engineering.

Mr. Liston holds a B. S. in mechanical engineering from Howard and is an instructor on the A and T college staff.

STUDENT SENATE AT A. & M. COLLEGE PASSES RESOLUTION DEMANDING RACIAL EQUALITY

Four-Point Resolution Adopted Following Stirring Debate Respecting Bias

CAREER DAY SCHEDULED APRIL 17

STILLWATER. — The student senate passed a resolution last Wednesday night, following heated debate, endorsing the principle of equality of opportunity for all men, and particularly directed to inequalities visited upon Negro students of the A. & M. campus.

The resolution passed by a 7-3 vote is as follows:

The student senate passed a minority resolution at its weekly meeting Wednesday night after a heated debate on the issue.

The resolution passed by a 7-3 vote reads:

We the student senate of Oklahoma A&M college believing in the basic principle of equality of opportunity for all men find the following conditions to be present on our campus:

1. Undergraduate Negroes do not attend school of Oklahoma A&M.

2. Many campus organizations have constitutional provisions prohibiting persons of the Negro race from membership.

3. There are persons on this campus who hold that the color of skin has some mysterious correlation to the quality or worth of the individual.

4. There is evidence of discrimination against students of other countries in this community, although our college is involved in a program of helping underprivileged countries.

We, the student senate, look forward to the day when racial equality shall be a reality on our campus. Further, we wish to express our approval of all constructive measures to this end.

In other action, the student senate unanimously approved the change in the anti-secret organization bylaw.

The change was to delete the phrase "I have not been" from the present by-law which now read: "I understand fully that swearing to this statement falsely will be considered perjury; I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I am not now; and I will not be in the future; associated in any way with Theta Nu Epsilon or any other secret organization whose existence, membership or purposes are withheld from the Student association."

Career Carnival was selected as the name for the High School Senior Career day to be held April 17. Jim Innis was awarded the $5 prize in the name contest.

Constitutions were granted to the A&M chapter of the American Meteorological society and Pokey Oakies club.

Plans were made for the senate's radio program to be held April 7 at 8:30 p. m. over KVRO.

The minority resolution and the Junior-Senior prom will be the topics of discussion. Panel members will be Ed White and Don Hutchison with Morris Thurman serving as moderator.

18 Receive Master's At Oklahoma A&M

STILLWATER, Okla. (ANP) —Some eighteen Negroes were among the 210 graduates who were conferred the master's degree by President Oliver S. Willham during the fifty-eighth commencement of Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College.

The following Oklahoma Negroes received advanced degrees:

Mrs. Annie Laurie Coleman, Cudjoe, Oklahoma City; Mrs. Susie Sears Garrett, Bristow; Elrena Gibson, Tulsa; Jessie L. Greene, Okmulgee; Mrs. Euela Hopkins, Okmulgee; Miss Katherine Johnson, Tulsa; Elesta Elliott Jones, Langston;

Mrs. Grace Tilford Jones, Langston; Richard Donald Jones, Langston; Miss Rosella Musgrove, Tulsa; Mrs. Grace Steward Shropshire, Langston; Kylie Spencer, Langston;

Lou Dennia Taylor, Ardmore; Mrs. Gladys McKerson Thompson, Ardmore; Mrs. Hazel Alene Tunley, Okmulgee; Mrs. Mayola B. Vance, Okmulgee; Mrs. Gladys A. Waldron, Okmulgee.

With the exception of Miss Johnson, who did her undergraduate work at Tillotson College and Mrs. Shropshire, who did her undergraduate work at Stowe Teachers College, the remaining students did their undergraduate study at Langston University.

Admitted To Oklahoma Medical School

14ea)

Miss Doresta Jones, a candidate for graduation at Langston University, Oklahoma, has been notified by authorities at the Oklahoma Medical School that her application for admission has been accepted. Hence she will become the first Negro woman to be admitted to this medical school which currently has three Negro male students enrolled, one a sophomore and two freshmen.

However, in Alabama, Georgia, Florida and Mississippi, there are not yet any Negro students studying in any of the state-supported professional schools. However, in Georgia and in Alabama Negro students have made application for admission. Yet it would seem that not enough Negro students are trying to enter such institutions.

In Birmingham, there is a growing medical center pivoted by the Alabama Medical College. A number of Negro students are studying in medical schools outside of Alabama with the assistance of the so-called out-of-state scholarships.

Which means that the great decisions won in court by the NAACP are going unused in these four states. The NAACP cannot make application to enter these universities. In many instances Negro citizens have only themselves to blame for their conditions.

Oklahoma Medical School Admits 1st Colored Woman

LANGSTON, Okla. (ANP) — Miss Doresta Jones has been accepted as a student at Oklahoma University's School of Medicine.

While there are a number of young men studying at this institution, Miss Jones is the first colored woman to receive acceptance.

She is secretary of the graduating class at Langston University.

Change Name of Saint Helena Island's Penn Normal School

ST. HELENA ISLAND, S. C. —At a historic meetin on St. Helena Island, the Board of Trustees of Penn Normal, Industrial and Agricultural School took final steps for amending its charter and changing the institution's name to Penn Community Services, Inc.

The board at its meeting elected new officers, naming Paul W. Brown Jr. of Downingtown, Pa., formerly treasurer, as chairman, succeeding William E. Cadbury, of Philadelphia, Pa.

During the last three years Penn School has been developing a self-help community program among the Negroes of St. Helena, with Courtney Siceloff as director. At last week's meeting, reports were heard of the Rossa Cooley Health Center, the nursery-kindergarten, community library, farmers' study group and Sales House for used clothing. The board reviewed plans for developing the Penn property as a community and conference center.

Other officers named were Mr. Cadbury, vice chairman; Dr. William R. Valentine of New York as secretary and R. Ogden Purves, treasurer.

Courtney Siceloff, who became director when the community program was inaugurated in 1950, was educated at Southwestern University in Texas and at Haverford College, where he received the master's degree in sociology. Previous to taking up his work at Penn, he served with the American Friends Service Committee in France and Mexico.

Attending the meeting were the following members of the board of trustees: Dr. George H. Aull of Clemson College, S. C.; B. Tartt Bell, Greensboro, N. C.; George A. Buchanan Jr. of Columbia, S. C.; Paul W. Brown Jr.; William E. Cadbury, Dr. J. Curtis Dixon, Atlanta, Ga.; Harold Evans, Philadelphia; Grace B. House, Long Island, N. Y.; Robert Ogden Purves, New York City; Dr. Ira DeA. Reid, Haverford, Pa.; Mrs. Edward Sanders, St. Helena Island; Mrs. Eugene H. Spearman, Columbia, S. C.; Dr. William R. Valentine, Joseph Wright, Beaufort, S. C., and the Hon. Marion A. Wright of Linville Falls, N. C. Mrs. Y. W. Bailey of St. Helena Island and J. Nelson Frierson of Charleston, S. C., were present as members of the advisory Board members unable to be present included Miss Isabella Curtis, Boston, Mass.; Mrs. Horace H. Jenks, Wilton, Conn.; Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, Atlanta, Ga.; Mrs. John F. Moors, Brookline, Mass.; Mrs. William A. Shurcliff, Cambridge, Mass.; John A. Silver, Mishawake, Ind.; Mrs. William W. Smith II, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; L. Hollingsworth Wood, Mont Kisco, N. Y., and Paul Kellogg of New York.

Private School To Close Doors

FROGMORE, S. C. — After ninety years of service as a privately supported school for Negro boys and girls, here on Sea Island, St. Helena, the Penn School for Negroes will close its doors as an educational institution and concentrate on community services. The pupils will attend a county school which is being built nearby.

Prof. Sues Student at Phil. Smith

LITTLE ROCK, Ark.—Frederick Griffin, 32, mathematics professor at Philander Smith College, filed a "defamation of character" suit here last week against a student at the college.

Professor Griffin, a member of the college faculty for the past four years, alleged that a statement made by Cleo Johnson, July 21, had added to a "constant rumor around the campus" and had caused Griffin's reputation to be "irreparably damaged."

The complaint was filed by Atty. Thad D. Williams, and it asked for $1,000 damages.

Smith takes blonde coed

First accepted by Arkansas school

LITTLE ROCK (ANP) —Supporters of integration in the nation's schools last week received a boost from an unexpected source when a white southern woman enrolled at Philander Smith college here.

She is Miss Dorothy Martin, of Mabelvale, Ark., a 31-year-old divorcee who probably is the first white person to study as a regular student in the Methodist institute.

The slim Miss Martin said her enrollment was not done for sensationalism but simply because of a life - long belief that there should be no segregation. She pointed out that Philander Smith had the courses she wanted and she saw no reason why she should not attend. She is majoring in social science and intends to be a social worker.

Room Difficulty

Commenting on her reception by the other students, she said: "I get along fine with them — why shouldn't I?" ....

Her only difficulty since enrolling at the school has been that of housing. She at first applied for a room at the dormitory, but was told none was available, she said. She now lives with a white family in the city, but soon may lose her room.

"I may lose the place I am staying in now," she said. "My landlady told me she didn't want any publicity about me in the newspapers. If I'm put out, I don't know where I'll go."

Miss Martin first attended Hendrix college. It was there that she was told that Philander Smith would accept white students. When she applied for admission, Dr. M. Lafayette Harris, president of the school, said he definitely could not turn her down.

PRIVATE COLLEGES

Bishop Reid Proclaims Importance Of Private Colleges, Universities

COLUMBIA, S.C.—Bishop Frank Madison Reid who opened the Peidmont Conference, fifth of the 1953 annual conferences of the Seventh Episcopal District of the African Methodist Church, proclaimed the importance of private institutions in our nation and praised the press for the news coverage given the proceedings of the 1953 annual conferences.

At the Columbia Township Audiorium where 5,000 ministers, communicants and visitors had gathered, Bishop Reid, in thanking those who had given support to the $300,000 Allen University endowment drive said:

"We are mindful of the fact that the hour still demands a place for private institutions of our nation to foster our hopes and ideals that bring about a great university of purpose, and so I want to thank those who are giving support not alone to Allen University but to all private schools that must depend upon the generosity of the public."

WILL REACH QUOTA

In thanking contributors to the Allen University endowment drive Bishop Reid stated that "We now have $279,000 endowment today. We have $21,000 to raise before the middle of December and we are so aware of the fact that the good people, the good Christians and the good friends are going to give us that $21,000 that we have already set up our plans for the celebration of the $300,000 thus raised to perpetuated Christian education.

Commending the good people of South Carolina Bishop Reid said "I want to thank God for the great spirit of our state of South Carolina. I say over and over again that some of the most beloved, most gracious and some of the greatest moving spirits in the human machinery of our nation among our people of both races are found in South Carolina."

URGES ALL TO VOTE

In closing his remarks Bishop Reid urged his hearers to register and vote and stated that 'If you have something and do not use it you will lose it. This is a univeral law. Anything you do not use you you do not use this right and privlege of registering and voting. If you do not use this right and priv ilage we will lost it. Old, and young as fast as you get 21 should regiter and vote."

The annual session of the Piedmont Conference opened Wednesday at St. James church. Abbeville, Rev. A. B. King, entertaining pastor. The conference will close with the reading of appointments Sunday afternoon.

FINANCIAL SUPPORT for interracial education came from more than 1,000 persons who attended the Salute to Roosevelt College dinner in Chicago Saturday at which Walter Reuther, president of the CIO was principal speaker. Left to right, Dr. Edward J. Sparling, president of the college; Robert R. Taylor, dinner chairman and head of the Illinois Federal Savings and Loan association; Rev. Archibald Carey, Chicago alderman and candidate for AME bishopric and Reuther. At three such dinners more than $75,000 has been raised for the school.

Catholic Girls College Drops Racial Bars

Grand Coteau, La. (Special) — Unlike Louisiana State University, the tax-supported state institution which was sued four weeks ago by a 17-year-old New Orleans high school graduate before he was admitted, Sacred Heart College, pride of Catholics in Southwestern Louisiana, broke southern tradition this week and dropped its racial bar and admitted two Negro high school girl graduates for the first time in the history of the school.

Mother Erskine, president of the school, identified the two co-eds as Misses Emily Guzeman of Grand Coteau and Erna Lemelle of Opelousas.

Both of the co-eds at Sacred Heart are graduates of St. Peter Academy of this city.

The new policy at Sacred Heart follows pattern of Catholics in the South who in recent weeks have announced publicly the prohibiting of segregation and other forms of racial bias in its churches and other places of gathering.

Savannah State Dorm Contract Let

ATLANTA, Ga.—The University Building Authority last week let a contract to Byck-Worrell Company, Savannah, for construction of a dormitory at Savannah State College for $328,779.

At the same time, the authority rejected as too high four bids for housing and other buildings at Fort Valley, Albany and Savannah State Colleges.

Savannah State College Into Its Biggest Building Program In Yrs.

SAVANNAH — Traveling around the campus of Savannah State College, Georgia's largest institution of higher education for Negroes, one can see a dream coming true, five construction projects already initiated. The ground has already been broken and land being leveled for the annex to the famous Willcox Gymnasium.

This annex will make it possible for a larger and better Health and Physical Education program. It will supplement the gymnasium facilities and make it possible for more modern gymnastic operaters and a better gym for intra-mural as well as inter-collegiate competition. The Shafter Construction Company of Hinesville, has already set-up their office on the campus and construction is proceeding as rapidly as humanly possible.

The Century Heating Plant, located between Camilla Hubert Hall and Meldrim Auditorium, the Administration building, is nearer completion, with pipes being laid connecting the plant with the numerous campus buildings. This will enable Savannah State College to have a uniform heating system and equipped with modern heating machineries. Thomas Brittingham and company of Augusta is constructing the heating plant.

WORK PROGRESSING

The work on the New Men's Dormitory, opposite Hill Hall, is progressing very rapidly. The foundation and pillows for three floors have already been completed. Byck-Worrell Construction Company is building the New Men's Dormitory. This new dormitory will help supplement the dormitory facilities at Savannah State College and will be equipped with modern furniture, making the Men's Dormitory more home-like and convenient.

The annex to Hammon Hall has already taken form. This construction is being directed by the Office of Buildings and Grounds at Savannah State College and will enable the Home Economics Department to initiate a program which will well equip men and women to manage various types of institutions.

The Sewage Disposal Plant, connecting Savannah State College's sewage system with the City of Savannah, is nearly completed with Espy Construction and Paving Company of Savannah directing the works.

BIGGEST PROGRAM

There can be no question about Savannah State College being engaged in its greatest building program in the history of the institution.

There are five major constructions already initiated with the necessary buildings being constructed. Visiting Savannah State College now is like visiting a big industrial center, with buildings being directed simultaneously, with Dr. W. K. Payne as its shepherd. The flock at Georgia's largest institution for higher education Negroes is covering grounds with its construction program.

Famed Educational Institutions Have Adopted New Rules

Both Schools Have Begun Integrating Young Colored Women For Training As Christian Workers; Exclusion Policy At Episcopalian Sewanee Is Shunned By Two Methodist Colleges

To what extent will famed Vanderbilt University of this city go in for admitting colored young men and women to its student body, became a burning question in Nashville and in the nation last week, when it was disclosed that Scarritt College for Christian Workers and Vanderbilt University have consented to schedule a few colored students for enrollment in both institutions.

This has became quite a debatable question among persons not "in the know" as to the attitude of both institutions, but it is generally admitted that the beginning with even a few students represents progress in line with what has taken place in many parts of the South—the admission of colored students to educational courses not available to them in colored educational institutions.

The matter of admission of colored studeints to Scarritt and to Vanderbilt, both of which are educational institutions founded by the Methodist denomination, came to light largely as a result of an episode at the University of the South, located at Sewanee, Tennessee, and maintained by the Episcopal Church. Last year members of the faculty of "Sewanee" announced that they would resign from the teaching force in protest against the refusal of the University to admit colored students to attend it and study to be Episcopal ministers. Trustees of "Sewanee" were adamant in their refusal to accept colored students.

The news of the decision of "Sewanee's" trustees caused a famous Episcopal minister of New York to cancel his engagement to deliver the baccalaureate address at "Sewanee" this year. The noted minister is Dr. James A. Pike, dean of the Cathedral of St. John Divine. This happens to be the great religious institution of New York, in the process of being built over a long period of years and when completed will be the largest place of worship in the world.

Dr. Pike, in cancelling his engagement to speak at "Sewanee" stated that he learned Vanderbilt University had opened its doors to colored students.

Soon after this news was published, the matter of accepting colored students, which had been carried out by Scarritt and Vanderbilt without publicity, was made public by President Hugh C. Stuntz of Scarritt and Chancellor Harvie Branscob of Vanderbilt. Both advised that the trustees of their institutions had voted to stick to an agreement they had made to exchange students. Scarritt had asked Vanderbilt to accept two colored students. Their names were not published, but it is understood both are young women, taking training at Scarritt.

SELMA UNIVERSITY

To Dedicate $45,000 Dining Hall at Commencement

Selma College Abolishes Old 'Wholesale D.D.' Honoring

14e(1)

SELMA, Ala.—The board of trustees of Selma University has formulated a five-point program which abolishes the "wholesaling awards of D.D. degrees . . . as bait for votes" of board members.

The announcement said, "We are proud to announce that a new $45,000 dining hall will be dedicated at commencement time.

The National Alumni Association has machinery in motion to build a gymnasium on the campus. These factors will cause Selma University to come to the front and play a leading ie in our society."

Items adopted by the board were:

1. That the trustee board will continue its $50,000 campaign for the purpose of starting an endowment for the school; this campaign has been on all this year.
2. That machinery will be put into operation to get the college accredited.
3. That before the beginning of the school year 1953-'54 the secretary of the board of trustees will have in his possession a statement of academic qualification of each faculty member from the institution from which they were graduated.
4. That there will be no wholesaling awards of D.D. degrees. This will prevent the temptation to trade degrees for votes. For it is feared that an unscrupulous official may use D.D. degrees as bait for votes.
5. That as nearly as possible, the best qualified faculty members will head educational departments of the school.

Dr. C. Lopez McAllister is president of the institution.

SOUTH CAROLINA STATE COLLEGE

S. C. State Fires McMillan, Coach

14e(1)

ORANGEBURG, S.C. — Because he dared to criticize [illegible] State college and other colleges in the state in a recent book, Dr. Lewis K. McMillan, professor of history at State, has been fired.

Dr. McMillan

Dr. McMillan was notified of his dismissal last week in a letter from Dr. Benner C. Turner, president of the college. Fired at the same time was Lawrence Simmons, [illegible] coach.

In February of this year Dr. McMillan published the book, "Negro Higher Education For the State Of South Carolina," and [illegible] received by the public and given good reviews in state and national publications.

One daily recommended it as a "must" for every school and public library, home and all who are interested in educational facilities in the state.

Dr. Turner did not state the reason for Dr. McMillan and Coach Simmons firing because in this state heads of public schools are not required to give reasons for dismissals of their personnel.

Pat 5-23-53

The feud between Dr. Turner and Coach Simmons is said to stem from the fact that the coach did not always follow routine in making purchases for the athletic department.

There Since 1947

Dr. McMillan has been at state since 1947. Neither has immediate job prospects.

According to reports, Dr. Turner had a conference with Dr. McMillan just before the book was published in which he warned the history professor that if the book contained anything that was critical of the college, he would have the trustee board act upon the case.

Faculty Afraid To Think

He stated: "Under no condition will the administration allow any staff member to villify the college or any sister college in the state."

One faculty member upon hearing of the firings said that all of the faculty members who want to keep their jobs are afraid to say anything against the college policies, in fact they are even afraid to think.

SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN INSTITUTE
Edwards, Mississippi

Sou. Christian Inst. Closes After 78 Years

EDWARDS, Miss., Sept. 8—Southern Christian Institute after 78 years providing educational opportunities for Negro youth will not open this year, it was officially announced this week by Dr. John Long, superintendent of the school.

The school is closing because public school facilities have improved to a point "where the church can do more good by concentrating on something different," Dr. Long said."

The school was operated by the Disciples of Christ of the Association of Christian Churches. Founded 78 years ago the school offered high school and junior college level work.

Dr. Lee Pierce, pastor of the First Christian church of Jackson said several proposals for the use of campus and buildings at the Institute have been made but no final decision had been made.

He said that one proposal was that the facilities be used to provide better educational opportunities for exceptional Negroes.

The program would be jointly sponsored by the Disciples of Christ and the Congregational Christian churches, sponsors of Tougaloo College for Negroes. Dr. Pierce said the Edwards school might be used as an extension center for the new program. It would be adminsitered from Tougaloo.

He said that no definite plans had been made as they want to be sure they're making the best possible use of building and money before final action is taken.

SOUTHERN UNIVERSITY

Southern U Prexy Rejects Offer To Head Foreign U.

Baton Rouge, La. (ANP).—Worldly honors were spurned here last week by Dr. Felton G. Clark, president of Southern university, as he refused to accept the post as president of a great foreign university.

Bonnie J. Cole, university director of public contacts, said that Dr. Clark "after long deliberation" and a personal conference at United Nations headquarters in New York had written a letter declining the position.

Cole said that the country is still seeking a man for the position, and because of that he would not name it specifically.

In his letter of non-acceptance, Dr. Clark wrote in part:

"I believe that there are definite signs that Louisiana, like such progressive states as Texas, Florida, North Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia has decided to make adequate appropriations to her Negro land grant colleges that it may meet the challenge that an inevitable destiny has flung in her lap.

"For at least six or eight years, these states are proudly, literally appropriating annually, several millions of dollars to their Negro land grant colleges for capital construction and equally supporting millions for maintenance and operation.

"They are doing it primarily because they have concluded that the new South needs its resource development that the concerned one-third of her population, her Negro citizenry, will bring her.

"I am certain there are true signs that Louisiana too will be a part of this parade; especially since her state school, Southern university, is the largest completely publicly supported college for Negro people in the country.

"If I did not have this faith, I should have telegraphed you an immediate acceptance of the great honor which your country has bestowed upon me."

It is to be recalled that three years ago Dr. Clark spurned the opportunity to become senior specialist in higher education for the United States office of education.

Lecturer Dismissed

ames Firing n 'Politics'

JOHN E. ROUSSEAU

NEW ORLEANS—Atty. Louis ...rry of New Orleans and Alex... La., told the Courier last ... he had been fired from ... position as lecturer in the ...uthern University Law School, ...stensibly because of "politi... activity."

Questioned by the Courier, Dr. ...ston L. Clark, president of the ...iversity, gave a general state...ent but did not mention Berry's ...me.

Several weeks ago a report was circulated which said Berry had been dropped from the Southern University faculty for political activity. The Courier wrote Dr. Clark on Sept. 16 and asked:

"Will you please inform us if Mr. Berry has been dropped from the faculty, and, is so, the reasons therefor?"

* * *

THE COURIER'S letter stated further that Berry denied having been notified officially of being dismissed, but admitted that he had not signed a contract for the current term.

Replying on Sept. 18, Dr. Clark stated, in part:

"A practie in all, or most, law schools is to invite from time to time and from the place in which the school is domiciled, a lawyer or lawyers to give specific supplementation where needed and when needed to the regular formal class instruction.

"For reasons which should be obvious, the few existing Negro law schools might find it exceedingly difficult if they would expect occasional outside help from special lecturers under this pattern of idealism.

"More specifically, this year, we have decided to give no lecturers contracts. We have further decided that those who will be good enough to come to us in this supplementary way will be called in as needed, with due regard for conditioning factors as pertinency of the legal issue being taught, availability of personnel, the need for special assistance and the like.

"All persons who have served on our lecture panels in previous years have been apprized of these facts. They also obviously know that nobody is to receive a contract; conditions would necessarily preclude so doing. Very probably, herein lies the basis for the misunderstanding and the rumor resulting therefrom—the subject of your letter."

THURSDAY, SEPT. 24, however, Attorney Berry told the Courier in a signed statement, quoted in part:

"I feel that there is a duty upon me to issue this statement in order to protect myself from adverse inferences and conclusions, and to dispel any cloud or suspicious circumstances under which my services at Southern University were terminated.

"I received my notice of dismissal from Dean A. A. Lenoir on Monday, Sept. 21, by a long-distance telephone call in which he advised me that the president of Southern University was not in favor of retaining my services for the coming semester at the law school.

The dean did not state at that time any reasons why the decision was made.

"I WAS dismissed from Southern University Law School because of political reasons, and specifically because the state administration lost an election for the House of Representatives last spring between Atty. Lloyd George Tekell and Mrs. Catherine Eubanks.

"Mr. Tekell was supported by an overwhelming number of Negroes and the Long machine, while on the other hand, Mrs. Eubanks was strongly supported by the state administration.

"As president of the Rapides Parish Voters League, I was contacted by various persons prior to the election for the purpose of getting me to throw the political support of the Rapides Voters League to Mrs. Eubanks. I refused to do this and frankly stated that the executive board of the league had voted to support Mr. Tekell . . .

"I was called into the office ... the (S. U.) president shortly b... fore the election and was told b... him that certain representative... of the state administration ha... contacted him about my politica... activities . . . in connection with the run-off between Tekell and Mrs. Eubanks.

"I WAS told that the state administration was anxious to win this election.

"I took the position, and predicted, that the great majority of Negroes in Rapides Parish would not support Mrs. Eubanks because they felt that her late husband, Rep. James Eubanks, believed in white supremacy . . .

"I was told by the president that opposition to my remaining on the faculty had developed and that he was being told to employ someone locally in my place. I was then advised that I would be contacted later about this matter."

Mesdames and Misses Jacqueline Larkins, Barbara Yancey, Vivian Stoghill, Bernice Byron, Lennie Greene, Juanita Sellers, Marcus Williams, Lawrence Weaver and Johnson Hubert.

Mrs. Murphy, Chairman

Mrs. Josephine D. Murphy, president of the Atlanta University Alumni Association, served as general chairman on arrangements. Co-chairman was Mrs. Ernestine E. Brazeal, president of the Spelman College Alumni Association. Committee chairmen for the reception included the Misses Ella Mae Tate and Florence Harris and Mrs. Thelda Jackson.

NEW SPELMAN DEAN
Miss Ruth G. Rush

N. C. Teacher Named Dean At Spellman

Miss Ruth G. Rush, native Atlantan and long-time member of the faculty of North Carolina College in Durham, has been appointed dean of women at Spelman College.

A graduate of Clark College here, Miss Rush took a master's degree in education at Harvard University and studied personnel administration at Columbia University.

She taught mathematics and Latin for several years at North Carolina College and then served for many years in the dual capacity of dean of women and professor of education. Since 1948 she has been professor of education there.

Miss Rush will take up her duties at Spelman Sept. 1. She served for seven years as president of the North Carolina Federation of Negro Women's Clubs and was chairman of the Advisory Board for Correctional Institutions Among Negroes in North Carolina and a member of the Educational Committee of the Lincoln Hospital School of Nursing.

Manley First Of Race To Head Spelman

(Special to Journal and Guide)

ATLANTA, Ga. — Dr. Albert E. Manley, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences of North Carolina College, Durham, N. C., has been elected president of Spelman College here to succeed Dr. Florence M. Read who will retire at the end of the present college year, Trevor Arnett, chairman of the Spelman College Board of Trustees, announced last week from his Winter residence in Claremont, Calif.

Dr. Manley becomes the first man and the first Negro to head the famed Georgia woman's college.

He has a broad educational background. He was graduated from Johnson C. Smith University, cum laude, in 1930. His fields of concentration in college were physics and mathematics. He holds the master's degree from Teachers College, Columbia University, and a doctor's degree in education conferred by Stanford University in 1946. While a student at Stanford University, he became the first Negro to be inducted into the university's national education honor society, Phi Delta Kappa Fraternity.

DR. MANLEY, who is 45 years old, has been engaged in educational work for the past 21 years, first as high school teacher and principal in Asheville, N. C., and later as state inspector of Negro high schools under th North Carolina State Department of Public Instruction.

After his leave of absence in 1943 to pursue work toward the doctorate, under a grant from the General Education Board, he accepted a position at North Carolina College in 1946, as dean of the college of arts and sciences and professor of education. Following the death of the late president, Dr. James E. Shepard, in November, 1947, Dr. Manley was named chairman of a three-member committee that administered the affairs of the college until Dr. Shepard's successor was named.

IN 1943, DR. Manley married Dorothy Shepard, of Durham, daughter of Mrs. Charlotte E. Shepard and the late Dr. Charles H. Shepard, the former superintendent of Lincoln Hospital. Mrs. Manley is a graduate of Fisk University and of the Hampton Institute Library School. She is active in civic organizations of Durham, and at present is branch chairman of the Harriet Tubman Branch of the Young Women's Christian Association.

Miss Read, who will retire on June 30, 1953, will have served as president of Spelman College for 26 years. During her administration, the college has made remarkable progress, Mr. Arnett stated, with reference to academic standards, financial resources, and physical plant. In the last five years, additional land has been acquired: a new health and recreation building with an up-to-date swimming pool has been erected; and a dormitory, beautiful in design and equipment, built in memory of Mrs. Abby Aldrich Rockefeller, has just been completed.

Young Rockefeller dedicates Spelman memorial to mother

ATLANTA — Service of dedication of the new Abby Aldrich Rockefeller Hall at Spelman college, built with a Rockefeller donation, featured Laurance Spelman Rockefeller, middle son of Mr. and Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Jr. He told the audience of more than 1,000 that "The Rockefeller family is proud of its association with Spelman (since 1881) which now extends into the fifth generation," and he presented to the College a portrait of his mother, the late Mrs. Abby Aldrich Rockefeller. "No member of the family," said young Rockefeller, "was more concerned about equal opportunity for everyone than Mother. She always believed in and found the best in other people. She was a specialist in people which grew out of a genuine interest in them, and she had friends everywhere. In presenting to you this portrait of Mother, I do so with the hope that you will always think of her as a person who cared for people. Her love of and her enthusiasm for people was her strength and happiness. And the lives of her people were illumined by her affection and her faith in them. She found her life by giving it to others." Mr. Rockefeller was accompanied to Atlanta by his wife, the former Mary French, who is an active member of the Spelman Board of Trustees.

Founders Day speaker, Dr. Rosemary Park, President of Connecticut College, cited the danger of becoming a member or a unit of a "neutralist" group by surrendering one's individualism. She also called attention to the increase in vulgarity which is becoming more widespread throughout the country.

The responsibility for doing something about these evils. Dr. Park told the students, was theirs as educated women. Whatever field women go into, whether in the home or a profession, society is so organized that they set the tone and establish the atmosphere of the home or office, and whatever they think about these dangers is of tremendous importance, said Dr. Park. Educated women, she said, can help the baffled individual who does not know his own place and wants to find an answer, by doing all they can (1) to revive the vanishing art of reading (2) by cherishing the fun and stimulus of conversation and (3) by having an abiding faith in a living God.

RETIRING EDUCATOR

Dr. Florence M. Read

Read Retires As Spelman President

Educators "need to get their feet on the rung of reality."

Dr. Florence M. Read, brisk and bright-eyed retiring president of Spelman College, holds that firm belief.

A white educator who has had a profound impact on Negro schooling in this area, Dr. Read has developed a philosophy of education that stresses practical aspects since her graduation from Mount Holyoke College.

Outspokenly scornful of "imitation, novelty, material equipment and over-emphasis on the machinery of education—the superficialities of education," the native New Yorker ended a 26-year period as president of Spelman Tuesday.

In one of her last lectures here before her retirement she summed up that philosophy:

"Fine buildings, costly equipment, and record systems cannot equal excellent teaching."

Dr. Read will be succeeded at Spelman by Dr. Albert E. Manley, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences of North Carolina College. The incoming Spelman president, who holds a doctor's degree in education from Stanford, was the first Negro to be inducted into Stanford's national education honor society, Phi Delta Kappa.

Associates at Spelman declare Dr. Read "will leave a lasting impression on our college." The retiring president took a leading part in affiliation of Spelman, Morehouse College and Atlanta University in a university plan. Trevor Anett, chairman of the Spelman College board of trustees, lauded "remarkable progress" of Spelman under Dr. Read's administration.

Dr. Read served as secretary of Reed College in Portland, Ore., before coming to Spelman. Looking back over her career as an educator, she urges students and teachers to "seek the objectives of scholarship and culture."

"The eternal things have not changed," she declared, "and neither have the purposes of life. We can learn to discriminate by reading good books, by having an appreciation for beauty, and by associating with noble and brave people in all levels of society."

Miss Florence Read Bows Out

Proud queen of the ages blest,
Pattern of womanhood,
For you there can be no rest,
You march on with the good
That their frontiers do not yield;
And pitch at nightfall never
Their camping tents, they take the field
To strut their hour forever.

The state and Atlanta will feel the keen loss of Miss Florence M. Read, retiring president of Spelman who bows out to settle in a permanent home elsewhere. President Read came to Spelman some twenty six years ago to head that fine school for girls. Soon in her career, it was found that a worthy soul was to follow in the footsteps of the lamented Packards, Harriet E. Giles and other illustrous personages, gone before.

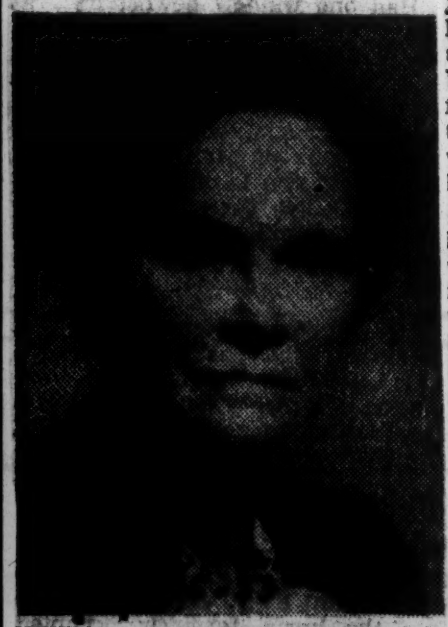
So great a character as Miss Read was soon to gather around her those kindred spirits so much devoted to the cause she espoused. This venture was to bear fruit, and all over the land may be found her testimony in the wealth of honorable womanhood.

The tributes paid Miss Read upon her retiring, the newspaper stories and editorials are but mild expressions of the admiration in which she is held.

She has made her contribution; she belongs now to history, and she marches along with others of note who gave their last full measure of devation to their generation. Her place is with the immortals.

Atlantans Pay Respect To Spelman's Retiring Prexy

More than 1,000 Atlantans turned out Tuesday evening at the Atlanta University Dormitories to pay their respects to retiring President Florence M. Read of Spelman College on the last day of her active administration.



MISS FLORENCE READ

The affair was a formal reception, sponsored by President and Mrs. Rufus E. Clement of Atlanta University and by President and Mrs. Benjamin E. Mays of Morehouse College. Among the invited guests were alumni of the colleges of the Atlanta University System, members of the faculty and staffs of these institutions, colleagues in the Atlanta University Center and citizens of Atlanta.

The setting for the affair at the Dormitories was the spacious and well-appointed lounge which opened into the beautiful dining room and the music room. Adding grace and beauty to the occasion were the hand floral arrangements of yellow gladioli, calla lilies and roses created by Mrs. Virginia Akridge and her committee which included Mrs. Benjamin F. Bullock, Mrs. Juanita Burney, Mrs. A. B. McCoy and Mrs. H. H. Anderson. The orchid corsages adorning the shoulders of the guests of honor, Mrs. Clement and Mrs. Mays were also created by Mrs. Akridge and her committee.

Musical selections throughout the evening were provided by a choral group and soloists under the direction of Professor Willis Laurence James of the Spelman College department of music. Serving on this committee were the Misses and Mesdames Rebecca Jackson, Nell Henry, Maybelle Miller, Chrystine King, Barbara Jones, Lillian Mitchell, Theodora James, Jacqueline Larkins, Barbara Yancey, Vivian Stoghill, Bernice Byron, Lennie Greene, Juanita Sellers and Marcus Williams, Lawrence Weaver and Johnson Hubert.

General Chairman for the reception was Mrs. Josephine D. Murphy. Her Committee Chairmen included Miss Ella Mae Cone, Miss Florence Harris, Mrs. Menelik Jackson and Charles W. Greene. Mrs. Ernestine Brazeal was a Co-Chairman with Mrs. Murphy in the arrangements.

Assisting the hosts and hostesses were faculty and alumni of Atlanta University, Morehouse College and Spelman College. Among the assistants were Mesdames and Misses Bazoline E. Usher, Charles W. Greene, T. W. Curry, Ida Jones Curry, Camilla Howard, Frankie V. Adams, Edward A. Jones, Elma Tharpe, Vaughnzeil Burch, Alphonse Hunnicutt, S. M. President Read's Long And Useful Career At Spelman

The retirement of President Florence Matilda Read, slated for this June, closes one of the most brilliant chapters in the annals of Negro education in this country. It breaks a golden chain of fine New England women who have come South through the years for the education of Negro women.

Among these we might name are the Packard Sisters and Harriet E. Giles, whose names were passwords in another generation in thousands of homes and communities where their contribution in fine young women was made in teachers, home-makers and leaders.

Miss Read came to Atlanta a generation ago to head Spelman an old established institution doing business in the field of female education.

During that long tenure, Miss Read has brought much worthwhile recognition to Spelman, the Negro and the South. Not only has she labored in building a great Spelman and fine womanhood, she has been interested in the civic and religious movement in this community. She has been felt as one of those unselfish persons, taking part in forward movements in the field of liberal education.

She was one of the leaders in the establishment of an affiliation of the Negro colleges in Atlanta and the Graduate school known as the Atlanta University System.

She has attracted many notables to the South and gained many fine friends for our group in the field of philantrophy.

Not soon will such a character among us be duplicated and it is with burning regret that she is to be given up in this area. We know that her interest will be with us and that her efforts will never wane in the area of gaining new and firm friends for her Spelman. We cannot appraise her worth; time and history will. She belongs to the immortals.

Looking Back 26 Years

Spelman President Will Retire With Pleasant Memories

BY LERONE BENNETT, JR.

Looking back on twenty-six years of service to Negro education, Miss Florence M. Read revealed yesterday that she will retire on July 1 with many "pleasant" memories and with the satisfaction of knowing that Spelman has developed into a college with recognized high standards in scholarship and character."

Miss Read was interviewed yesterday at her home on the campus of Spelman College. She spoke modestly of the accomplishments of her administration, of co-ed colleges versus all-girl schools and of the part that she played in the development of the Atlanta university system.

When Dr. Albert E. Manley becomes president of the college on July 1, Miss Read will become president emeritus. After that, Miss Read said, "my plans are indefinite." She added:

"I don't plan to stay in Atlanta."

LISTS CONTRIBUTIONS

Miss Read said that she will spend some time with a cousin in California. She was asked to point out the significant contributions her administration made to Spelman College and the Atlanta University system. Pausing momentarily Miss Read pointed to:

1. The high academic standards of the college, the records of Spelman college graduates in graduate and professional schools and "the service they (graduates) are rendering to the family, church, community and the nation."
2. The development in the physical plant of the college and the increase in its endowment.
3. The part her administration played in "helping to promote the affiliation of Spelman, Morehouse and Atlanta University" and the association of Clark, Morris Brown and Gammon in the Atlanta University system.

EX-A. U. PRESIDENT

For more than a year, Miss Read served as president of Atlanta university. She was lavish in her praise of the Atlanta University system and pointed out that it is one of the most important educational centers for Negroes in the South.

"It has great potentialities," she said, "even without regard to race."

She was queried on the "difficulties" of her administration. A twinkle lit in her eye, whisked away and she replied, with a smile:

"In retrospect, one doesn't remember the difficulties."

And the pleasant memories?

"There have been many pleasant memories, too numerous to mention," she replied.

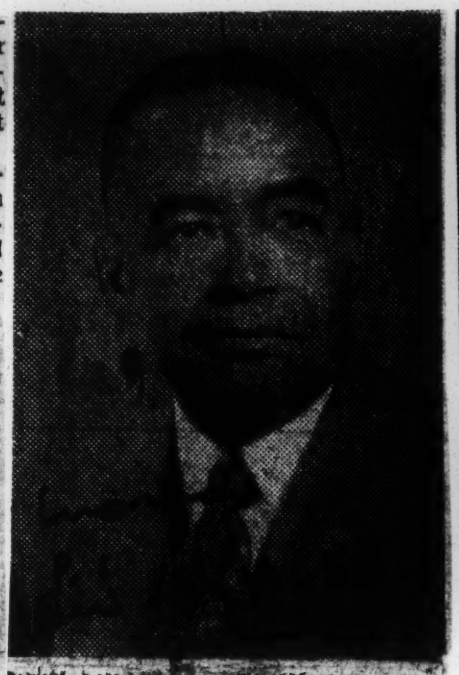
CONFERS WITH SUCCESSOR

The Spelman college president said she and her successor, Doctor Manley "conferred with reference to such plans that need to be made before the end of the year." She said that Dr. Manley will visit the college this spring.

Turning to the question of all-girl colleges, Miss Read observed:

Spelman as a college for women.

"I believe in colleges for women. There is an important place for And there is a place for co-educational schools, too."



NEW SPELMAN PREXY — Doctor Albert E. Manley, dean of North Carolina College, has been named president of Spelman College to succeed Dr. Florence M. Read who will retire in June.

The retiring president said that all-girl schools develop (1) self-reliance and (2) a "professional attitude that they (students) are not so likely to get in a co-ed school."

Miss Read concluded:

"The records of graduates who have gone on to graduate and professional study indicate the high quality of academic work offered by the college and the service they are rendering to family, church, community and nation is a matter of pride to the college."
